produced before him by the accused is quite different from that prescribed in regard to evidence not produced before him but what the accused desires him to obtain by issue of process. There is no duty cast on an accused person to disclose his defence in the course of a preliminary inquiry and no inference can be drawn against the accused for non-disclosure of his defence, 23 Cr. L. J. 611 at 614=102 Ind. Cas. 899. An accused cannot delay asking for process against witnesses until the last moment, and a Magistrate is under no duty to issue summons merely because the accused asks for it, if in his opinion there are no sufficient grounds to grant the application, 36 M. 321; 42 C. 603 where 25 A. 177 is not followed. Where the Magistrate for reasons recorded by him refuses to issue process to compel the attendance of defence witnesses, it cannot be held that he acted illegally and commitment is bad. The High Court is not concerned whether the reasons given by the Magistrate would have appealed to any other person or not, but has only to see whether the provisions of the section have been complied with or not, 6 Pat. 329, but the Bombay High Court in 31 Bom. L.R. 523 took the view differing from the view expressed in 6 Pat. 327 that the reasons recorded by the Magistrate should be such as the High Court would regard them as valid and acceptable and the High Court can interfere if the reasons appear on the face of it to be illegal or untenable. It is submitted that the latter view is more reasonable. Where a Magistrate after recording the evidence for the prosecution, had summoned the witnesses for the defence, and had consented to make a local inspection also, but committed the accused without examining the defence witnesses without making a local inspection merely on a direction of the Sessions Court, it was held that the commitment was bad in law, 1905 A.W. N. 306=4 Cr. L.J. 452.

Unless for reasons to be recorded he deems it unnecessary.—The Magistrate is to record his reasons for refusing process for the production of further evidence. The accused has a right to adduce his evidence and the Magistrate cannot refuse process and take down his evidence without recording sufficient reasons, Ratanlal 100; 39 M.L.T. 14=27 Cr. L.J. 1327=98 Ind. Cas. 399.

Sub-section (4).—Curiously in this sub-section it is enacted that Presidency Magistrates need not record reasons for refusing process. The reason for this distinction is not at all clear. Presidency Magistrates enjoy several such privileges, e.g., (1) Sec. S. 213, infra, which enacts that they need not record reasons for commitment for trial. (2) Also under S. 362 (4) they are not bound to record evidence or frame a charge in non-appealable cases. (3) Under S. 373, infra, when convicting an accused and passing a non-appealable sentence they need not write a judgment and need not record reasons for conviction. (4) Under S. 441, infra, they may send up along with the records called for by the High Court in the exercise of its Revisional Jurisdiction a judgment setting forth reasons for the conviction.

209. (1) When the evidence referred to in section 208, sub-sections (1) and (3) has been taken, and he has (if necessary) examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, such Magistrate shall, if he finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, record his reasons and discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

When accused person to be discharged.

Scope of the section.—The object of the law in providing that the inquiry shall be held by a Magistrate before the accused had to undergo a trial in the Court of Session is to prevent the commitment of cases in which there is no reasonable ground for conviction. The provision of law is calculated, on the one hand to save the subjects from prolonged anxiety of undergoing trials for offences not brought home to them, and, on the other hand to save the time of the Court of Session being wasted in cases in which the charge is not obviously supported by such evidence as would justify a conviction, 5 A. 181. This section empowers a Magistrate holding an inquiry preparatory to commitment to discharge the accused if he finds that there are no sufficient grounds for committing. Compare S. 253 (2) with regard to the discharge in warrant cases.

When evidence.....has been taken.—The evidence referred to here is the evidence produced in support of the prosecution and on behalf of the accused or as may be called by the Magistrate. A commitment made without a preliminary inquiry under this Chapter is illegal, 17 Bom. L.R. 910=16 Cr. L.J. 747=31 Ind. Cas. 347. A commitment must depend on the evidence actually before the Court and not on evidence that may be given in the future, 16 Cr. L.J. 5=25 Ind. Cas. 309.

When the Magistrate has, if necessary, examined the accused.—The words "if necessary" have been introduced in the Code of 1893. The examination of the accused prior to commitment, is in the discretion of the Magistrate. He only examines the accused when he thinks it necessary to enable him to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him. If the accused is unwilling to make a statement, it is sufficient for him to make a note of that fact and record it as a reason for not examining the accused, 18 Cr. L.J. 913=42 Ind. Cas. 143. There is no duty cast on an accused person to disclose his defence in the course of the preliminary inquiry and no inference can be drawn against him from his non-disclosure of his defence at that stage, 28 Cr. L.J. 611=102 Ind. Cas. 899. It is not absolutely necessary that the Magistrate should examine the accused in every case. The Magistrate is not bound to examine the accused if he makes up his mind to discharge the accused, but he is bound to examine him if he means to commit. It is the duty of the Magistrate before committing the accused persons for trial to have them examined for the purpose of enabling them to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against them. The effect of this section is that it is not left to the discretion of the Magistrate who intends to commit, to examine the accused person. He is bound to examine them and if he makes an order of commitment without examining them the order is irregular, 23 M. 636 at 637.

For enabling him to explain any circumstances against him.—See S. 842, infra, which deals with power to examine the accused at any stage of any inquiry or trial. The purpose is there also to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him. The real object of the law in allowing the accused to be examined, is to enable the Judge to ascertain from time to time from a prisoner, particularly if he is undetained, what explanation he may desire to offer regarding any fact stated by the witnesses or after the close of the case how he can meet what the Judge may consider to be damning evidence against him, 6 C. 98 at 102. The discretionary power given by this section should be used to ascertain from the prisoner how he may explain facts appearing in evidence against him so that these facts should not stand against him unexplained, but not to drive him to make self-criminating statement, 1 M.H.C.R. 199; 10 M. 295 at p. 315; 5 A. 233; 30 A. 540; 1 C.L.R. 435; 5 C.L.R. 431; 6 C. 279. Statements obtained from the accused by such examination should not be used to remedy gaps in the prosecution case, 27 M. 238; 39 M. 770, 26 C. 49; 23 C. 689, and the accused should not be examined when there was nothing for him to explain, 5 M.L.T. 216, 10 W.R. (Cr.) 25; 39 M. 770. A Magistrate has no power to direct an accused person to file a written statement in proceedings under this Chapter, but it is not competent to the Court to refuse to allow the accused to make a statement, Weir II, 255.

If he finds there are no sufficient grounds for committing.—A prima facie case should be made out to justify a commitment to the Court of Session, 15 M. 59. A

Magistrate should not treat a grave offence beyond his jurisdiction as a less grave one to bring it within his jurisdiction and he should not ordinarily go into the defence in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session when a prima facie case for committal has been made out. To do so would be to take upon himself the function of a superior Court, (1910) M.W.N. 852-9 M.L.T. 71=12 Cr. L.J. 23=8 Ind. Cas. 1103. The duty of the committing Magistrate is only to see whether there is evidence which, if believed, would warrant a conviction. It is not his function to consider the probabilities and to weigh the evidence as if he is a trying Court, 38 M.L.T. 135=23 Cr. L.J. 120 (1)=99 Ind. Cas. 323 (1). The words "sufficient ground for committing" which occurred previously in the section have been explained to mean in 27 B. 81 not ground for convicting, but where the evidence is sufficient to put the accused on his trial, and such a case arises when credible witnesses made statements, which, if believed, would sustain conviction. The weighing of their testimonies with regard to improbabilities and apparent discrepancies is more properly a function of the Court having jurisdiction to try the case. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should satisfy himself fully of the guilt of the accused before making a commitment. It is his duty to commit when the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the accused, and he exercises a wrong discretion if he takes upon himself to discharge an accused in the face of evidence which might justify a conviction, (1913) M.W.N. 728 at 733=14 M.L.T. 200=14 Cr. L.J. 529=21 Ind. Cas. 129. The section provides that if a Magistrate finds that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial he may discharge him. It is not merely therefore that the Magistrate in the case put is empowered to discharge the accused; he is bound to do so. What then is the case put? It is the case where the Magistrate finds that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial. He may so find either because there is no evidence whatever, or because the evidence tendered for the prosecution appears to him to be totally unworthy of credit. But in this latter case, equally with the former case, it would be his duty under the section to discharge the accused since the grounds relied on for a commitment would, in his opinion, be insufficient. That is the construction which the words of the section suggest to us and which we understood was accepted in 9 Bom. L.R. 225. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that where the Magistrate entertains any real doubt as to the weight or quality of the evidence the task of resolving that doubt and assessing the evidence should be left to the Court of Session, 35 B. 163; 4 Lah. 69. Except in cases where the charge is found to be groundless, in other words where the evidence on record is of such a nature, that no tribunal, judge or jury would ever convict the accused on that evidence, the Inquiring Magistrate is bound to commit to the Court of Session for trial. What the Inquiring Magistrate has to determine is not whether a case has been made out, but only whether there is a case to be sent up for trial to the Sessions Court. Where the Magistrate discharged the accused because he considered that no case has been made out against the accused it was held that the order of discharge was based on a mistaken notion of the function of the Inquiring Magistrate and therefore should not be allowed to stand. The intention of the Legislature is to make a distinction between grounds for conviction and grounds for committing for trial which mean satisfactory evidence to go to trial which must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial, 43 M. 874 at 881. It is the duty of the Magistrate merely to record the evidence and leave it to the jury at the Sessions to decide as to the credibility of the evidence. The Magistrate acts wrongly in expressing his opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses who are before him. But according to the decisions of the various High Courts it is open to the Magistrate to form his opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses called before him but it is not his duty to closely criticize their evidence. If a prima facie case is made out he should clearly leave it to the jury at the Sessions to form their own view as to the credibility of the evidence. But, if, after hearing the evidence he is satisfied that it is not trustworthy and that a conviction will not result, then he is entitled to record a finding that the witnesses who speak to the charge cannot be believed and that a conviction will not result with an order of discharge in such a case, the District Magistrate will not be justified in interfering and when he does interfere the High Court in Revision will set aside the order of further inquiry and uphold the order of discharge, 51 C. 649; 27 Cr. L.J. 509=93 Ind. Cas. 973. Although a Magistrate has large power of discharging the accused he should only exercise it when he is clearly of opinion that the evidence for the prosecution is untrustworthy. If it is a matter of weighing probabilities he would be well advised in leaving the case to the Court which alone is empowered to try it and should not discharge the accused because in his opinion the accused ought to be given the benefit of doubt, 26 A. 564; 13 A.L.J. 111=16 Cr. L.J. 139=27 Ind. Cas. 203; 38 M.L.T. 135=23 Cr. L.J. 120 (1)=99 Ind. Cas. 329 (1). Ordinarily speaking when the evidence for the prosecution tends to show that a grave offence exclusively triable by the Sessions Court say under S. 302, I.P.C., has been committed, it is not for the Magistrate to weigh the evidence but it is better for him to commit the case to the Court of Session and leave it to the Sessions Court to decide upon the value of the evidence, 30 Cr. L.J. 234=114 Ind. Cas. 58. There are certainly authorities which can be cited in support of the view that credibility of prosecution witnesses in a charge which is beyond the jurisdiction of a Magistrate is a question which can at any rate be properly be placed before the higher tribunal which has jurisdiction and it cannot be said that in law the Magistrate who says that he will not merely act upon his appreciation of the evidence but will leave such appreciation to a higher tribunal is in error, 30 Bom. L.R. 639 at 641 following 1 Ran. 526. When a committing Magistrate pronounces upon evidence, merely because it does not commend itself to his mind he is really trying the case and not merely considering whether there are sufficient grounds for committing an accused for trial, 1904 A.W.N. 5. The existence of a possible ground of defence is not a sufficient reason for a Magistrate to refuse to commit a person for trial against whom a prima facie case is made out. It is ordinarily for the Court that has to try the case, not for the Magistrate who makes the preliminary inquiry, to determine having regard to all the facts and probabilities whether the guilt is brought home to the accused, (1913) M.W.N. 725 at 732=14 M.L.T. 200=21 Ind. Cas. 129. In the case of offences exclusively triable by a Court of Session the committing Magistrate cannot be considered to have the power to proceed to the trial of the accused in the inquiry and the chief business of the Magistrate is to see whether the prosecution has adduced such evidence as is not on the face of it absolutely incredible on every ingredient of the offence that is charged, (1915) M.W.N. 233=16 Cr. L.J. 307=28 Ind. Cas. 643. A Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry under Chapter XVIII of the Code into an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session is entitled to discharge the accused if the evidence tendered by the prosecution appears to him to be totally unworthy of credit but if there is evidence as to some material facts deposed to by credible witnesses on which facts a Court of Session or a jury may not unreasonably find the accused guilty, that is a case in which the accused should be put on his trial before the Sessions Court leaving it to the Judge and jury as the case may be, to find the accused's guilt proved or not proved on these facts, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 375. See 42 M.L.J. 49=16 L. R. 463, where it was held that when the evidence is untrustworthy in the Magistrate's opinion he is not bound to commit; to hold otherwise is to make preliminary inquiry a mere matter of form. Where a Magistrate has heard the evidence for the prosecution with entire disbelief when he considers himself in a position to show that the prosecution witnesses are totally unworthy of credit and a fortiori where, after examining certain witnesses named on behalf of the accused he comes to the conclusion that the evidence given by them is reliable and disproves that given by the prosecution witnesses, he is well within his discretion in discharging the accused and not committing him to the Sessions, 37 A. 355 followed in 44 A. 67; 21 A. 266; 5 A. 161; 70 W.N. 77; 12 C.W.N. 117; 26 Cr. L.J. 117=83 Ind. Cas. 677; 11 Cr. L.J. 18=4 Ind. Cas. 612; 12 A.L.J. 150=14 Cr. L.J. 431=20 Ind. Cas. 747; 49 A. 443. Having regard to the previous wording of the section a Magistrate can hardly be said to be satisfied that sufficient grounds for committing are supplied by the evidence of witnesses if he himself is unable to believe those witnesses. Before he can be so satisfied it is manifest that all grounds for discrediting them must be taken as excluding all cases in which the alleged grounds for commitment appear insufficient, whatever the reason for this insufficiency may be, and is not limited as to the essentials of the alleged offence, 9 Bom. L.R. 225. For consideration which should weigh with a Court in committing the case to the Sessions, see 42 B. 172. The test which should be applied to decide whether a commitment ought or ought not to be made on the facts is—assuming that whole of the evidence telling against the accused is true, is there a case which a Judge at a trial could leave to a jury? If the evidence is such that a Judge would have been bound to rule that there was no evidence on which a jury could convict, then a committal ought not to have been made. If there was any evidence which called for an answer, however great the preponderance in favour of the prisoner might be, then the committal was proper, 9 C.W.N. 829 at 839 not approved of in 37 A. 335 at 357. It is now settled law that if a Magistrate is satisfied that the charge is without foundation and that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he is entitled, and indeed it is his duty to discharge him, 46 A. 537 at 538, where 26 A. 564; 12 A.L.J. 150; 37 A. 335; 44 A. 57 are followed; 27 Cr. L.J. 274-92 Ind. Cas. 450. It is well established that if a Magistrate hearing a charge triable by a Court of Session comes to the conclusion that the evidence before him is totally unworthy of credit and there is no reasonable possibility of the case resulting in a conviction he is entitled and it is his duty to discharge the accused under this section. The same result follows if he comes to a similar conclusion after hearing witnesses for the defence under S. 213 (2), after framing a charge. Of course the discretion is to be exercised carefully and whenever there is possibility that different Courts might take different views of the evidence, the Magistrate even though he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for conviction, should leave it to the Sessions Court to decide, 24 A.L.J. 133 at 134=27 Cr. L.J. 2-91 Ind. Cas. 34; see also 51 C. 819; 25 Cr. L.J. 1089=81 Ind. Cas. 913; 4 Lah. 69. A distinction must be made between a case where the Magistrate discharges the accused under this section refusing to commit him and one where in fact he has directed a commitment although he disbelieves the main prosecution evidence. In the former case the rulings in 35 B. 163 and 17 Bom. L.R. 910 would be very strong authorities in favour of the High Court not interfering with the order of discharge but in a case where the Magistrate has been satisfied that there are sufficient reasons for committing the accused in spite of his disbelief of the prosecution evidence, the commitment is valid and cannot be interfered with, 30 Bom. L.R. 639-29 Cr. L.J. 987=112 Ind. Cas. 107. A Magistrate is not compelled to commit to the Sessions any case in which he considers the conviction to be impossible. But he must however exercise a proper discretion in discharging an accused charged with an offence triable by a Court of Session. It is not enough for him merely to doubt some portions of the prosecution evidence. He must be satisfied that the prosecution will fail and rightly fail in the Sessions Court, 25 Cr. L.J. 1189=82 Ind. Cas. 53; 51 C. 849. It is impossible to lay down any general rule or rules which must be applied in every case and it is extremely difficult to arrive at a formula which will be of assistance in all circumstances. But the general result of decided cases may be expressed shortly as follows: (1) that a Magistrate is competent to consider the credibility and weigh the probabilities of the evidence. This is clearly and reasonably contemplated by statute. Unless this is so his duty will merely be to record evidence and then commit every case for trial. (2) In this consideration, his discretion is limited. In a matter of reasonable doubt he must not rely on his own opinion; in fact he must not encroach on the functions of a Court of trial, (3) he must keep before him the question whether there are fair grounds for concluding the accused to be guilty, i.e., where there is a prima facie case upon the evidence reasonably credible by a court of trial, he must commit, 4 Ran. 471.

Record his reasons.—Reasons are to be recorded for making the order of committal, but a Presidency Magistrate need not record reasons, S. 213 (1). Reasons are to be recorded to enable the Court of Revision to exercise its powers effectively under Ss. 435 to 439, infra.

Unless it appears such person should be tried before himself, etc.—This proviso applies to a case which according to sch. II, Col. (8) may be triable by the Court of Session as well as the Magistrate. See 10 C. 85.

Shall proceed accordingly.—That is, try the case under the provisions of Chapters XX to XXII, infra.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section relieves the Magistrate from the necessity of going on with an inquiry when he is reasonably convinced it will serve no useful purpose and empowers him to discharge the accused before complying with the procedure laid down in

S. 208 (1) or (3) and the examination of the accused if he considers the charge to be groundless. Before he does so he must record his reasons. See S. 253 (2) infra, as to discharge in warrant-cases. This sub-section empowers a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry to see whether the case is to be committed. It does not preclude him from trying the case if he thinks that only an offence within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate has been committed, and when he does so he acts within his jurisdiction, 10 C. 89 at 86.

Revision.—The remedy in cases of erroneous and improper discharge is provided by ss. 436 and 437, infra. S. 437 refers to cases of discharge of offence exclusively triable by Court of Session. In such cases the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may direct a commitment to the Court of Session instead of ordering a further inquiry contemplated by S. 436, infra. But in considering whether an accused person has been improperly discharged within the terms of S. 437, infra, a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is bound to consider all the grounds upon which the discharge has been passed including the evidence which has not been disbelieved or held to be sufficient to establish a prima facie case, 7 C.W.N. 77; 27 M. 55; 14 M. 334; 12 C.W.N. 117. The High Court will go into questions of fact in such cases, 30 M. 224; 3 Cr. L. Rev. 375=15 Cr. L.J. 373=23 Ind. Cas. 744. S. 436, infra, contemplates a further inquiry into the case where an improper or illegal discharge is made.

210. (1) When, upon such evidence being taken and such examination (if any) being made, the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he shall frame a charge under his hand, declaring with what offence the accused is charged.

When charge is to be framed.

Charge to be explained, and copy furnished, to accused.

(2) As soon as such charge has been framed, it shall be read and explained to the accused, and a copy thereof shall, if he so requires, be given to him free of cost.

Object of the Section.—The provision of law is calculated on the one hand to save the time of the Court of Session being wasted over cases in which the charge is obviously not supported by evidence which would justify a conviction as also to save the subjects from prolonged anxiety of undergoing trials for offences not brought home to them, 5 A. 161.

Upon such evidence being taken.—"Such evidence" refers to evidence taken under S. 208, supra. But a Magistrate need not record evidence of witnesses whom he deemed unnecessary to summon under S. 203 (3), supra, 36 M. 321. It is imperative on a Magistrate to record evidence in a preliminary inquiry which results in a committal. A Magistrate inquiring into a case for this Chapter is not empowered to frame a charge or make out an order for commitment until he has such evidence as the accused may produce before him, 20 A. 264; 28 A. 177. It is doubtful whether S. 347, infra, applies to preliminary inquiries, 36 M. 321 at 322. This section empowers a Magistrate to commit at any stage of the proceedings.

against the accused and there is nothing to rebut or weaken the force of those allegations. But difficulty will be felt where, as often happens, there are counter allegations and opposing circumstances. The requirement that the grounds for committing the case should be sufficient, must be taken as excluding all cases in which the alleged grounds for commitment appear insufficient whatever the reasons for the insufficiency may be, and is not limited to a requirement for merely formal allegations, whether credible or not as to the essentials of the alleged offence, 9 Bom. L.R. 225=5 Cr. L.J. 213; see also 45 A. 837. A Magistrate in considering the sufficiency of grounds may take into account whether on the evidence before him it is probable that a conviction will be arrived at, 7 C.W.N. 77; see 37 A. 353; 26 A. 564; 21 A. 265; 35 B. 163; 27 B. 84; 17 Bom. L.R. 910; 12 Bom. L.R. 923; (1915) M.W.N. 233; Weir II, 263; 44 A. 57; 13 A.L.J. 111; 9 C.W.N. 829; 4 Lah. 69. The duty of a committing officer is to ascertain by the evidence for the prosecution whether a prima facie case is made out against the accused. Magistrates are apt to suppose that it is incumbent on them to satisfy themselves fully of the guilt of the accused before making a commitment. This idea is erroneous, 3 N.W.P.H.C.R. 27; 15 M. 39; Weir II, 542. In a charge exclusively triable by a Court of Session if there is some evidence in support of the charge, it is not obligatory for the Magistrate to commit in all cases. He should exercise his discretion and see the facts in true proportion and decide whether or not he should try the case himself, 37 C.L.J. 34.

He shall frame a charge.—The duty of framing a charge rests primarily with the Magistrate and with the prosecutor and the charge is to be framed in accordance with the offence disclosed by the evidence recorded by the Magistrate, and a Magistrate is not restricted to the sections or offences named by the complainant in his original complaint, 12 W.R. (Cr.) 40; 26 C. 785. The drawing up of the charge must always follow the determination of the Magistrate to commit the case, but the mere framing of a charge against the accused is distinct from and does not amount to an order of commitment which has to be made under S. 213, infra, 12 Bom. L.R. 521=11 Cr. L.J. 435=7 Ind. Cas. 430; 15 Cr. L.J. 16=22 Ind. Cas. 160. After framing a charge the Magistrate can allow the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses and as a result of such cross-examination cancel the charge, 39 C. 885, where 5 C.W.N. 110 is referred to.

Sub-section (2).—This makes it imperative on the Magistrate to read and explain to the accused the charge he has framed. Mere reading of the charge is not sufficient. It must also be explained to the accused so that he may have sufficient notice of what is imputed to him. Where in a case of murder the meaning of "murder" was not explained to the accused as required by this section and the accused pleaded killing the deceased, it was held that it was not an admission of murder which could be acted upon, 9 M. 81. A copy of the charge shall, if the accused requires the same, be given to him free of cost.

211. (1) The accused shall be required at once to give in, orally or in writing, a list of the persons (if any) whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial.

List of witnesses for defence on trial.

(2) The Magistrate may, in his discretion, allow the accused to give in any further list of witnesses at a subsequent time and, where the accused is committed for trial before the High Court, nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude the accused from giving, at any time before his trial, to the Clerk of the Crown a further list of the persons whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on such trial.

Further list.

The accused shall be required at once to give in a list—A duty upon the Magistrate to call upon the accused at once to give a list of persons whom to be summoned to give evidence on his behalf. The question "Have you evidence?"

ambiguous and is not a sufficient compliance with the section. The Magistrate is bound to call upon the accused to give a list of witnesses he desires to call, 7 Bom. L.R. 723 but, a Magistrate cannot force the accused to disclose either the names of his intended witnesses or what those witnesses would prove. An accused person may reserve his defence and also refuse to give a list of his witnesses but in that case he will have to bring his witnesses and cannot have the assistance of the Court to compel their attendance, 14 A. 242; 19 A 502. The accused is entitled as of right to have any witness named in the list filed by him to be summoned and examined, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 56; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 7; 3 W.R. (Cr.) 36. But there is nothing in the section which prevents a Magistrate from allowing an accused person to reserve his defence for the Court of Session, 14 B.L.R. (Appx.) 1. An accused is not entitled as of right to have his witnesses not named by him before the Magistrate, summoned at the Sessions trial. But there is no reason to refuse an application by an accused person for summons simply because a large number of witnesses is mentioned in his list. 11 C. 762 at 766.

Sub-section (2). provides for giving a further list of witnesses at any subsequent time. See Ss. 216, 231 and 291, infra.

Power of Magistrate to examine such witnesses.

212. The Magistrate may, in his discretion, summon and examine any witness named in any list given in to him under section 211.

The object of the section.—The object of the section is to prevent concoction of evidence by the accused after his commitment. This section gives a discretion to the Magistrate to summon and examine any defence witness named in the list furnished by the accused under the last section, but the discretion should be used very sparingly as such a course may seriously prejudice the accused person in his defence. But such examination may result in the benefit of the accused in some cases, for, if after examining any such witness the Magistrate is satisfied there is no sufficient ground for his committal, the Magistrate may act under S. 213 (2), cancel the charge and discharge the accused. This section did not exist in the Code of 1861. It appeared for the first time in the Code of 1873 on account of two conflicting decisions of the Calcutta High Court reported in 4 B.L.R. (Appx.) 1 and 15 W.R. (Cr.) 16. With these cases before them the Legislature inserted a new S. 200 in Act X of 1872 and retained it as S. 212 in Act X of 1882. That section gave the Magistrate the widest possible discretion to summon and examine any witness in any list given to him under S. 211. With that discretion the High Court cannot interfere, nor do we see how any line could be drawn limiting it one way or another. The Code does not require a Magistrate to record his reasons for acting or refusing to act under the section and the High Court cannot lay down a direction that before exercising his powers he should record reasons. He is given a discretion which he may be trusted to use properly and it will be for a person impugning his order to satisfy the High Court that a judicial discretion has not been used before that order under this section could be interfered with. We need not go into or state any reason why it is necessary that this section should appear in the Statute Book. It is there; and as it is there, it is the duty of every Magistrate who considers that the use of it is necessary and expedient in the interests of justice to make use of it to the fullest extent necessary in the interests of justice. If he does not do so, he neglects an obvious duty, 18 A. 380 at 381—382.

May summon and examine.—It is not imperative on the Magistrate to summon and examine any defence witnesses after reaching the stage of framing a charge under S. 210, supra. The fact that the Magistrate had already issued summonses to the defence witnesses named in the list put in by the accused and had examined some of them before he made up his mind to commit, does not prevent his stopping proceedings under S. 317, infra, as his power under this section is unqualified, 17 M.L.T. 83=15 Cr. L.J. 701=26 Ind. Cas. 152, but it was held in 1906 A.W.N. 306 that a commitment made by a Magistrate was bad where a Magistrate after recording the prosecution evidence had summoned certain defence witnesses and had consented to make a local inspection at the request of the accused, but committed the accused without examining the defence witnesses summoned, and without making the local inspection. A Committing Magistrate is not justified either in law or in common fairness in enforcing the accused to disclose the names of his intended witnesses or what those witnesses would be called on to prove, or when they attend, to threaten them with penalties unless they are giving wilfully false evidence or persistently refuse to give facts within their knowledge, 14 A. 212.

213. (1) When the accused, on being required to give in a list under section 211, has declined to do so, or when he has given in such list and the witnesses (if any) included therein whom the Magistrate desires to examine have been summoned and examined under section 212, the Magistrate may make an order committing the accused for trial by the High Court or the Court of Session, (as the case may be) and (unless the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate) shall also record briefly the reasons for such commitment.

(2) If the Magistrate, after hearing the witnesses for the defence is satisfied that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused he may cancel the charge and discharge the accused.

May make an order committing accused for trial by the High Court or the Court of Session.—If a Mufassal Magistrate commits a case to the High Court Sessions, he should communicate with the Commissioner of Police, Madras, immediately in order that the latter officer, may depute a responsible officer to be in charge of the case. G. O. No 654 dated 10-4-1907. According to this section a Magistrate may make an order mean the Court of Session having jurisdiction to try the case under S. 177, supra. S. 63 of Act X of 1872 provided that Magistrates shall ordinarily commit to the Court of Session for the Sessions division in which the district to which they are appointed is situated. But the Code of 1898 contained no similar provision. The Bombay High Court in 8 B. 312 held that the commitment should be to the Court empowered to try the case under S. 177, supra, and held the commitment in a similar case bad, but instead of quashing the illegal commitment directed the transfer of the case to the Court having jurisdiction. By such a course, the express ruling of the Privy Council in 9 A. 191 to the effect that a transfer from a Court having no jurisdiction would not render the proceedings legal, was lost sight of.

Shall record briefly reasons for commitment.—The law requires that reasons for the commitment shall be recorded, and failure to give reasons is more than an irregularity, but an illegality vitiating the commitment, 38 B. 114; 11 Bom. L.R. 18=9 Cr. L.J. 163=5 M.L.T. 225; 24 C. 429; 6 A.L.J. 939. In a case where the trial may either be by the Magistrate himself or by the Court of Session, the reasons for the commitment which the Magistrate is bound to record under this section must include also special reasons for sending the accused before the Court of Session and when he does not do so there is a failure to comply with the law. This no doubt would amount to no more than an irregularity if the case were one which ought to be committed to the Sessions, but when the case is not one which ought to have been committed then to commit without giving reasons is more than an irregularity and it is an illegality, 38 B. 114.

Unless he is a Presidency Magistrate.—A Presidency Magistrate enjoys the privilege of committing without stating reasons. For similar instances see note at P. 327,

Under the Code a Court of Session has no power to withdraw a case from the jury. The power of quashing commitment, in other words, withdrawing the case from the jury is specially given to the High Court which has to consider whether there is a point of law, 5 C.W.N. 411 at 413. But if the Sessions Court finds the commitment illegal the procedure to be followed is to make a reference to the High Court under S. 433, infra. The words "on a point of law" occurring in this section have been the subject of a liberal as well as a narrow and literal construction by various High Courts. In the case of offences either exclusively or not at all triable by the Court of Session under Col. 8 of Sch. II of the Code no difficulty arises. But in the case of offences triable either by the Court of Session or by a first class Magistrate whether an improper exercise of judicial discretion in committing is not a point of law, is a question on which there is difference of opinion. The Madras High Court in 42 M. 83 is in favour of a narrow and literal construction of the words as also the Bombay High Court in 13 Bom. L.R. 201=12 Cr. L.J. 236=10 Ind. Cas. 802. If this interpretation is adopted it is difficult to say how any point of law can possibly arise in the case of offences triable either by a Court of Session or Magistrate. In 4 Bom. L.R. 85; 38 B. 114; 42 B. 172; 24 C. 429 the broader interpretation was adopted, 28 Bom. L.R. 293=27 Cr. L.J. 479=93 Ind. Cas. 703.

Or by a civil or revenue court under S. 478.—The words were introduced in the Code of 1898.

• Can be quashed by the High Court only on a point of law.—The expression "The High Court" occurring herein is to be construed as defined in S. 266, infra, and so the Judge presiding over the Criminal Sessions of the High Court and exercising ordinary original criminal jurisdiction can quash a commitment made to the High Court Sessions on a point of law, 56 C. 785 following 36 C. 48, but in 42 M. 83 the Criminal Bench dealt with the objection. The use of the word "only" is significant and imposes an important restriction on the powers of the High Court. The High Court alone is competent to quash a commitment once made. The High Court when acting under this section has no concern with the credibility of the evidence when there is in fact, some evidence on the committal record which would justify the Sessions Judge leaving the question of guilt or innocence to the jury. If the Committing Magistrate says he has some doubt about the evidence but he thinks it better that the case should go before the jury, it cannot possibly be said that in so doing he committed an error of law which could justify the High Court in quashing the commitment under this section. The High Court must be satisfied from the record that there was an illegality in the committal order. The test in a matter of this nature is to see from the order what the Magistrate's findings are on the evidence and whether those findings are capable prima facie of sustaining the charges he has framed and on which the committal is made. A question of misjoinder is for the Sessions Court to determine and may be urged in that Court and not in the High Court in an application under this section to quash commitment, 31 Bom. L.R. 523 at 524. In 4 A. 150, it was held that even in a compoundable case, viz., adultery, a Magistrate who had committed the accused to the Court of Session had no power to discharge the accused subsequently when the offence was compounded and the fact made known to the Magistrate. See also 16 M.L.J. 525; Weir II, 262. A doubt was raised in 36 C. 48 at 50 whether the High Court in exercising its ordinary appellate jurisdiction could quash a commitment made to it by a Presidency Magistrate for trial under its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction and it was suggested that the practice in somewhat similar cases had been to apply to the Judge exercising ordinary original criminal jurisdiction of the Court, but the Court did not decide the point but dealt with the case on the merits as the application was urgent, See 42 M. 83. Commitment can be quashed at any stage of the case, 6 C. 554. But where the prisoner is put on his trial and has pleaded to the charge the commitment is not to be quashed, 12 C.L.R. 120.

A commitment can be quashed only on a point of law, 36 A. 4. The order may be inconvenient or it may be indiscreet but it cannot be quashed unless it is illegal, 13 Bom. L.R. 201=12 Cr. L.J. 236=10 Ind. Cas. 802; 18 Cr. L.J. 64=22 Ind. Cas. 335; 13 Cr. L.J. 270=23 Ind. Cas. 478; 26 Cr. L.J. 1015=87 Ind. Cas. 965; 37 M.L.J. 632; 11 A.L.J. 439; 14 Cr. L.J. 304=19 Ind. Cas. 960; 49 A. 181. A question of jurisdiction is a point of law, 15 Cr. L.J. 270=23 Ind. Cas. 478; Weir II, 235, it cannot be quashed on the ground that there is no evidence to justify a commitment, 27 M. L.J. 593 and 13 Bom. L.R. 201=12 Cr. L.J. 256=10 Ind. Cas. 802. It can be quashed on the ground that the facts did not necessarily establish the offence charged, 2 C.L.J. 467=2 Cr. L.J. 383; 23 Cr. L.J. 187=99 Ind. Cas. 335 but see 6 A. 98; 9 C.W.N. 529, which took a different view, or on the ground that the evidence is of a doubtful character, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 167. An unnecessary commitment was held to be an error of law, 26 Cr. L.J. 148 at 151=53 Ind. Cas. 708; 15 Bom. L.R. 999=15 Cr. L.J. 657=21 Ind. Cas. 897. Insufficiency of evidence has never been treated as a ground for quashing a commitment. 1 W.R. (Cr.) 8, but the absence of evidence to warrant a commitment is a point of law and may furnish a good ground for quashing the commitment, 5 C.W.N. 411; 30 Cr. L.J. 519=115 Ind. Cas. 692, but as pointed out in 27 M. L.J. 593=15 Cr. L.J. 663=25 Ind. Cas. 993 and 13 Bom. L.R. 201=12 Cr. L.J. 256=10 Ind. Cas. 802, the result of quashing commitment on the ground of absence of evidence may not be to the benefit of the accused as he may be charged again with the offence, but if the committal were allowed to stand the Court of Session will have to acquit him on the ground that there is no evidence against him. A commitment made of some of the accused while others have not yet been arrested is no ground for quashing the commitment, 7 M.L.T. 187=11 Cr. L.J. 383=5 Ind. Cas. 933. The test which should be applied to decide whether a committal might or might not be made on the facts is this assuming that the whole of the evidence against the accused is true, is there a case fit to go to the jury? If the answer is 'No,' then a committal is improper and ought not to be made, 9 C.W.N. 529. There is a conflict of opinion among the different High Courts as to its powers to quash a commitment on the ground that there is no evidence (apart from the question of credibility) to support a conviction. But there is a clear consensus of opinion in the High Courts that they have no power to quash a commitment merely because of doubts as to the credibility of the evidence for the prosecution if there is, in fact some evidence which would justify the Sessions Judge in leaving the decision of guilt or innocence to the jury. The High Court in such cases has no concern with the question of credibility of the evidence when there is in fact some evidence on record, 1 Ran. 526; 30 Cr. L.J. 519=115 Ind. Cas. 692; 25 Cr. L.J. 261=76 Ind. Cas. 821. The real test in deciding as to whether there is evidence which could fairly be acted upon, is to see whether a Judge at a trial held with the aid of jurymen could say that there was no evidence to go to the jury. Whether a witness is to be believed or an accomplice's evidence is corroborated is a matter for decision at the trial. The High Court as a Court of Revision is not to decide whether a particular piece of evidence is to be believed or not and its function as a Court of Revision is not to sit on judgment over the order of the Magistrate committing the case to the Court of Session, 49 A. 181. A commitment made without exercising a judicial discretion but merely acting on the suggestion of the District Magistrate was quashed by the High Court, 15 M. 39. A commitment made to the High Court when the Magistrate himself could try the offence but thinks it is a proper case to be dealt with by the Sessions Court is good, 42 M. 83, when a Magistrate commits holding that he cannot adequately punish the accused, the commitment is legal and cannot be quashed, 11 A.L.J. 439=14 Cr. L.J. 304=19 Ind. Cas. 959 but see 26 Cr. L.J. 148=53 Ind. Cas. 708. A commitment made when the Magistrate has been satisfied that there are sufficient reasons for doing so in spite of his disbelief of the prosecution evidence is valid and cannot be quashed, 30 Bom. L.R. 639 following 1 Ran. 526 and distinguishing 35 B. 163 and 17 Bom. L.R. 910. A distinction must be made between a case under S. 209, supra, where the Magistrate refuses to commit a case and one in which he commits, although he has disbelieved the prosecution evidence in the main. In the former case undoubtedly there is strong authority in favour of the High Court not interfering with the order of discharge but in the latter case where the Magistrate in spite of his disbelieving the prosecution evidence thought fit to commit, he has exercised his discretion and it cannot be said therefore he has by so committing, committed an error of law, which would justify the High Court's interference by quashing the commitment, 30 Bom. A commitment made on evidence recorded in the absence of the accused was held bad, Weir II, 259; 5 C.W.N. 110, but discovery of fresh evidence after commitment is no ground for quashing a commitment already made, 1885 A.W.N. 53, or that the Committing Magistrate had no territorial jurisdiction, 17 M. 402; 3 Cr. L. Rev. 167. A Magistrate is bound to state reasons for commitment, 38 B. 114; 11 Bom. L. R. 18=9 Cr. L.J. 163=1 Ind. Cas. 104=5 M.L.T. 225.

When an order of committal made by a District Magistrate under S. 437, infra, is illegal because the offence is not triable exclusively by the Court of Session, is referred to the High Court for orders the best course for the High Court is to set aside the order of committal and take up the case in revision, set aside the order of discharge by the first Court, direct the Magistrate to frame a charge and then commit the accused to the Court of Session, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 117. A commitment made is liable to be quashed when an alteration in the charge was made by the Magistrate at a very late stage in the inquiry and the accused committed to the sessions without affording him an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and to adduce his defence evidence in respect of the altered charge, 22 A.L.J. 239=25 Cr. L.J. 798=81 Ind. Cas. 318.

See S. 532 which validates irregular commitments made. The principle of S. 537, infra, applies to orders of commitment which ought not to be quashed unless prejudice is clearly shown, 12 Cr. L. J. 320=10 Ind. Cas. 616; no appeal lies against an order of commitment under S. 478 by a Judge sitting on the Original Side of High Court in the course of the trial of a suit. The provisions of this section control the general provisions of S. 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court. The remedy is under this section to apply to quash the commitment 43 M. 361.

216. When the accused has given in any list of witnesses under section 211 and has been committed for trial, the Magistrate shall summon such of the witnesses included in the list, as have not appeared before himself, to appear before the Court to which the accused has been committed :

Provided that, where the accused has been committed to the High Court, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, leave such witnesses to be summoned by the Clerk of the Crown, and such witnesses may be summoned accordingly :

Provided, also, that if the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay, or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate may require the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witness is material, and if he is not so satisfied, may refuse to summon the witness (recording his reasons for such refusal), or may before summoning him require such sum to be deposited as such Magistrate thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness and all other proper expenses.

Refusal to summon unnecessary witness unless deposit made.
The Magistrate shall summon.—An accused is entitled as a matter of right to have any witness named in the list he delivers, summoned and examined, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 56; 6 B.L.R., Appx. 88; 2 W.R. (Cr.) 6; 3 W.R. (Cr.) 36. A Magistrate cannot refuse to summon the witnesses on the ground that the evidence appears to him not to be material or reliable, Weir II, 263. It is not open to a Magistrate to decide on the credit to be attached to the evidence of a witness before he had an opportunity of hearing him. By so doing he exceeds the discretion given to him by law, 19 M 375; 6 B L.R. (Ap.) 65=15 W.R. Cr. 7.

As have not appeared before himself.—The next section provides for the procedure to be followed when the witnesses had appeared before the Magistrate; the witnesses shall execute before the Magistrate bonds binding themselves to be in attendance when called upon at the Court of Session or High Court.

First Proviso—The summoning of witnesses in cases of commitment to the High Court may be left at the discretion of the Magistrate to the Clerk of the Crown.

Second Proviso.—This proviso is not intended to enable a Magistrate to inquire generally into what the defence of the accused person is to be, and to consider whether, on learning the nature of the defence he is absolutely to abstain from summoning all the witnesses cited by the accused. There is no warrant for the exercise of such sweeping authority, 3 C. 373. This proviso is clearly inapplicable where a witness though once summoned failed to appear on the day fixed on account of some delay in the service of the summons. In such a case the Magistrate was bound to make a further attempt to secure the attendance of the absent witness, 4 A. 53.

For the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating ends of justice.—The same words occur in S. 257 (1), infra, which refers to summoning of witnesses in warrant-cases. It is only on these grounds the Magistrate is entitled to refuse to summon the witnesses tendered by the accused and if he refuses on these grounds then he is further required to ask the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witnesses is material and if he is not satisfied, then he may refuse to summon, 16 C. 714; when a Magistrate asked the accused who was about to be committed why he desired to summon the witnesses named in the list and the accused refused to give reasons, the Magistrate was at liberty to refuse to summon these witnesses, 4 M.H.C.R. 81; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 14.

Record his reasons for such refusal.—When a Magistrate refuses to summon witnesses for the defence, he is bound to record his reason for such refusal. The power should not be lightly exercised. He must show in his order of refusal that he had satisfactory ground that the evidence was not material, 8 A. 665. When an accused gives a list of witnesses he wishes to summon after the case is committed to the Court of Session, it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to exercise his discretion on the point. By returning the list of witnesses filed by the accused and passing no orders upon it he acted illegally. He was bound distinctly to state whether he would summon the witnesses or not and he ought to state his reasons for so doing. He should consider the reasons given by the accused for the delay in giving the list and whether they were sufficient or not, 15 W.R. (Cr.) 14.

Before summoning require such sum to be deposited.—Even in a case the Magistrate refused to summon the witnesses on the ground that the accused when called upon to state his reasons for summoning the persons named in his list, the Magistrate was bound to have fixed the amount which he considered necessary to defray the cost of attendance of the witnesses and intimated to the accused his readiness to issue summons on the amount being deposited, 4 M.H.C.R. 81. Although a Magistrate is entitled to refuse summoning witnesses for the defence unless the expenses for their attendance is deposited by the accused, yet such orders should be made very sparingly. It is an improper order in a case where the accused is unable or unwilling to deposit the expenses and the result is that he is convicted without his witnesses being examined especially when a severe sentence is passed on him, 1893 P.R. (Gr.J.) 7.

And all other Expenses.—These words were introduced in the Code of 1893.

217. (1) Complainants and witnesses for the prosecution and defence, whose attendance before the Court of Session or High Court is necessary, and who appear before the Magistrate, shall execute before him bonds binding themselves to be in attendance when called upon at the Court of Session or High Court to prosecute or to give evidence, as the case may be.

Bond of complainants and witnesses.

(2) If any complainant or witness refuses to attend before the Court of Session or High Court, or execute the bond above directed, the Magistrate may detain him in custody until he executes such bond, or until his attendance at the Court of Session or High Court is required, when the Magistrate shall send him in custody to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

Whose attendance is necessary.—These words are important. It is not every witness whom the Magistrate is required to bind over but only these witnesses whose evidence is material to the case. It is always open to the accused or to the Sessions Judge to secure the attendance of the prosecution witnesses who had been examined at the preliminary inquiry when they fail to appear at the trial in the Sessions Court, 1883 A.W.N. 37. See S. 509 infra, as to medical witnesses whose deposition taken and attested by a Magistrate in the presence of the accused or taken on commission may be used as evidence without calling them as witnesses in the Sessions Court.

A complainant is not at liberty to withdraw from the prosecution after commitment. If he does so, he will forfeit his recognizance, 2 W.R. (Gr.) 57.

218. (1) When the accused is committed for trial, the Magistrate shall issue an order to such person as may be appointed by the Local Government, in this behalf, notifying the commitment, and stating the offence in the same form as the charge, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such person is already aware of the commitment and the form of the charge;

Commitment when to be notified.

obviously in order that the Jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of having together of such a number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to the Judge and accused. It is likely to cause confusion and to interfere with the definite proof of a distinct offence which it is the object of all Criminal Procedure to obtain. The policy of such a provision is manifest and the necessity of a system of written accusation specifying a definite criminal offence is of the essence of Criminal Procedure. When the mischief sought to be averted by the statute has been done as evident from the verdict of the Jury and the acceptance of it by the learned Judge the effect cannot be averted by dissecting the verdict and appropriating the verdict of guilty only to such parts of the written accusation as ought to have been submitted to the Jury. 52 C. 253 at 269-69. Young and inexperienced Judges and Magistrates get so excited at the evidence of roguery that they miss the main consideration at the trial which is to prove the specific charge against an accused person, 27 A.L.J. 592.

Charge to state offence.

221. (1) Every charge under this Code shall state the offence with which the accused is charged.

Specific name of offence sufficient description.

(2) If the law which creates the offence gives it any specific name, the offence may be described in the charge by that name only.

How stated where offence has no specific name.

(3) If the law which creates the offence does not give it any specific name, so much of the definition of the offence must be stated as to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(4) The law and section of the law against which the offence is said to have been committed shall be mentioned in the charge.

What implied in charge.

(5) The fact that the charge is made is equivalent to a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case.

Language of charge.

(6) In the presidency-towns the charge shall be written in English; elsewhere it shall be written either in English or in the language of the Court.

Previous conviction when to be set out.

(7) If the accused having been previously convicted of any offence, is liable, by reason of such previous conviction, to enhanced punishment, or to punishment of a different kind, for a subsequent offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court may think fit to award for the subsequent offence, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction, shall be stated in the charge. If such statement has been omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged with the murder of B. This is equivalent to a statement that A's act fell within the definition of murder given in Ss. 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code; that it did not fall within any of the general exceptions of that it did not

Sessions trial, he is empowered by this section before the commencement of the Sessions trial to examine supplementary witnesses and bind them over to appear at the Sessions trial. See Rafanlal 842.

If he thinks fit.—These words were introduced in the Code of 1893.

After commitment and before commencement of trial.—Power is given to the Magistrate to record evidence after commitment and before the commencement of the trial, S. C. 713. and with the commencement of the trial the Magistrate's authority ceases. 1893 P.R. (Cr. J.) 29. If additional evidence is recorded under this section, it goes without saying that the accused should be given an opportunity of meeting such evidence if he so desires.

Copy of evidence shall be given to accused free of Cost.—See notification under S. 95 of the Court Fees Act VII of 1870 which exempts from Court fees copies of evidence of witnesses given to the accused under this section.

220. Until and during the trial, the Magistrate shall, subject to the provisions of this Code, regarding the taking of Custody of accused pending trial. the provisions of this Code, regarding the taking of bail, commit the accused, by warrant, to custody.

See S. 541 as to place of custody of accused pending trial.

Provisions regarding the taking of bail.—See Chapter XXXIX dealing with bail. If the offence is bailable the Magistrate should admit the accused to bail; if the offence is non-bailable the accused should not be released on bail if there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life and in other cases of non-bailable offences the Magistrate is to use his discretion in granting bail. By the new amendment the power to grant bail is further extended in the case of any person under 15 years of age or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of non-bailable offences. The High Court or Court of Session may however direct that any person may be released on bail in any case under S. 498, infra.

Commit by warrant to custody.—The warrant referred to herein is a written order to a Jailor to receive the accused who is refused bail in a non-bailable offence or who fails to offer bail in a bailable offence, into his custody and produce him before the Court for trial when required. This presupposes that the accused is present before the Magistrate.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE CHARGE.

The provisions of this Chapter relating to charge are intended to provide that the charge shall give the accused full notice of the offences charged against him, but that the only result of any defect in the charge shall be an amendment in terms as to delay, or a new trial if the accused seems to have been misled, S. B. 200 at 213. The charge corresponds to the English indictment and it is very much more than a mere form. An accused person is entitled to know with the greatest precision what acts he is said to have committed and under what sections of the Penal Code these acts fall, 27 Cr. L.J. 62-91 Ind. Cas. 238. The charge is a notice to the prisoner of the matter whereof he is accused and it must convey to him with sufficient clearness and certainty that which the prosecution intends to prove against him and of which he will have to clear himself. It is also an information to the Court which is to try the accused of the matters to which evidence is to be directed, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 72; 19 C.W.N. 972. The validity of an indictment depends not upon the facts found at the trial but on the circumstances alleged before the trial commences, 85 C. 838. The importance and necessity of precision in the framing of a charge was pointed out in the following passage in the judgment in 23 M. 61 (P.C.) at 97 by their Lordships of the Privy Council. "The reason for such a provision, is obviously in order that the Jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of having together of such a number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to the Judge and accused. It is likely to cause confusion and to interfere with the definite proof of a distinct offence which it is the object of all Criminal Procedure to obtain. The policy of such a provision is manifest and the necessity of a system of written accusation specifying a definite criminal offence is of the essence of Criminal Procedure." When the mischief sought to be averted by the statute has been done as evident from the verdict of the Jury and the acceptance of it by the learned Judge the effect cannot be averted by dissecting the verdict and appropriating the verdict of guilty only to such parts of the written accusation as ought to have been submitted to the Jury. 52 C. 253 at 263 69. Young and inexperienced Judges and Magistrates get so excited at the evidence of roguery that they miss the main consideration at the trial which is to prove the specific charge against an accused person, 27 A.L.J. 592.

Charge to state offence.

221. (1) Every charge under this Code shall state the offence with which the accused is charged.

Specific name of offence sufficient description.

(2) If the law which creates the offence gives it any specific name, the offence may be described in the charge by that name only.

How stated where offence has no specific name.

(3) If the law which creates the offence does not give it any specific name, so much of the definition of the offence must be stated as to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(4) The law and section of the law against which the offence is said to have been committed shall be mentioned in the charge.

What implied in charge.

(5) The fact that the charge is made is equivalent to a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case.

Language of charge.

(6) In the presidency-towns the charge shall be written in English; elsewhere it shall be written either in English or in the language of the Court.

Previous conviction when to be set out.

(7) If the accused having been previously convicted of any offence, is liable, by reason of such previous conviction, to enhanced punishment, or to punishment of a different kind, for a subsequent offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court may think fit to award for the subsequent offence, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction, shall be stated in the charge. If such statement has been omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged with the murder of B. This is equivalent to a statement that A's act fell within the definition of murder given in Ss. 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code; that it did not fall within any of the general exceptions of the same Code; and that it did not fall within any of the five exceptions to section 800, or that, if it did fall within Exception J, one or other of the three provisos to that exception apply to it.

(b) A is charged, under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code, with voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B by means of an instrument for shooting. This is equivalent to a statement that the case was not provided for by section 335 of the Penal Code, and that the general exceptions did not apply to it.

(c) A is accused of murder, cheating, theft, extortion, adultery or criminal intimidation, or using a false property-mark. The charge may state that A committed murder, or cheating, or theft, or extortion, or adultery, or criminal intimidation, or that he used a false property-mark, without reference to the definitions of those crimes contained in the Indian Penal Code; but the sections under which the offence is punishable must, in each instance be referred to in the charge.

(d) A is charged, under section 184 of the Indian Penal Code, with intentionally obstructing a sale of property offered for sale by the lawful authority of a public servant. The charge should be in those words.

Amendment.—The words in italics are newly added in sub-section (7). By the amendment it was intended to remove the doubt which existed before whether evidence of previous conviction may be given when enhanced punishment sought to be awarded was beyond the competence of the Court. Now such evidence can be adduced.

Object of the section.—The object of this and the following Ss. 222 and 223 is clearly to enable the accused to know the substantive charges which he will have to meet and to be ready for them before the evidence is given. Where the offence charged involves consequences which may be stated in general form such as may arise in a case of arson where a man may by committing one act of arson set fire and destroy several stacks of several persons, no particular is required, the offence being sufficiently stated by the date, time and place of setting fire but in a case of extortion or obtaining money from several persons by unlawful means, involves stating with some approach of accuracy the approximate amounts alleged to have been obtained from each person and the nature of the extortion used against each person. It is not sufficient to say at the close of the evidence that the accused person knows what is alleged against him. The irregularity is not one which can be cured by appearance without objection, 17 Cr. L.J. 411=35 Ind. Cas. 971. See in this connection 55 C. 838. When the accused is charged under S. 120A, I.P.C. of having agreed to do or cause to be done a series of illegal acts, there is no authority for holding that the charge should state all details of specific acts which the conspirators are alleged to have agreed or caused to be done, 6 Ran. 6.

Charge.—For definition of charge see S. (1) (c), supra, which was inserted in the Code of 1898; a charge is a first notice to the prisoner of the matter whereof he is accused and must convey to him with sufficient clearness and certainty that which the prosecution intends to prove against him of which he will have to clear himself, 19 C.W.N. 972 at 988, and it is also an information to the Court which is to try the accused of the matter to which evidence is to be directed, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 72 at 82. An accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge against him, 42 C. 937; 29 C.W.N. 403=26 Cr. L.J. 849=65 Ind. Cas. 703, and unless he has this knowledge he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence, 11 C. 106 22 C. 278 and 391; 1893 A.W.N. 70; 4 C.W.N. 196. Unnecessary allegations in a charge may be treated as surplusage, 4 B.H.C.R. 17. When the accused fully understood the nature of the offence with which they are charged they had clearly not been prejudiced by the omission of the words "unlawfully and maliciously" and "in British India" occurring in S. 4 (b) of the Explosive Substances Act VI of 1903; such omission can be cured by the verdict. Moreover, where the illegal act charged under S. 120B, I.P.C., is the unlawful and malicious possession of explosive substances within the meaning of S. 4 of that Act, it is essential to specify in the charge the explosive substance which the accused had conspired to have in their possession or control. It is a wholesome rule that the Courts should adhere to the language of the statute as far as practicable when a charge is drawn up.

as nothing is to be gained by a paraphrase, while opportunity is afforded to the accused to take exception to the form of the charge, 42 C. 937. The models of charge given in Sch. V of the Code contain or imply the setting forth with reasonable particularity of the matters alleged to constitute the offence, 2 B. 142 at 144. The validity of an indictment depends not upon the facts found at the trial but on the circumstances alleged before the trial commences, 55 C. 858.

Sub-section (2).—In cases where the description with the particulars required to be specified by S. 222, infra, is found insufficient then further particulars may be stated as permitted by S. 218, infra, see illustration (c) to this section. It is not necessary in a charge of rioting to set out allegations that there were 5 or more persons actuated by a common object. Rioting is an offence with a specific name and it is sufficient to describe the offence by that name. The sub-section was enacted to meet a case of this kind, 55 C. 879 at 886.

Sub-section (3).—The law does not give the offences under Ss. 124A and 153A I.P.O. any specific names, and therefore under this sub-section so much of the definition of the offence must be stated to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged. If the charge is in English and the words uttered are in vernacular, there is nothing in the Indian Law requiring that the actual words should be set out in the vernacular, 32 M. 334. The descriptions of crimes in the Penal Code must of necessity be expressed in abstract terms, but the very object of a trial is to determine whether particular acts or omission on the part of an accused fall or do not fall within the rule thus abstractedly stated. Conformably to this principle all the models of charges in Sch. V to the code contain or imply the setting forth with reasonable particularity of the matters alleged to constitute the offence, 2 B. 142 at 144. See illustration (d) to the section. When the publication of the seditious is in a newspaper and the whole article is relied upon, no particular passages need be specified, 33 B. 77 and 221. A charge of house-breaking and theft must specify the particular house broken into and the specific article stolen; merely naming the village is not sufficient, 28 M.L.J. 381. A charge under this section should specify the office held by the accused so as to make him liable as a public servant, 5 W.R. (Cr. Let) 6. Where the accused was charged as being a public servant knowingly having disobeyed the direction of law as to the way in which he had to conduct himself as such public servant, what the direction of law was, what the conduct was, which contravened it, should be stated in the charge. A charge under S. 211, I.P.C., should specify the words, knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such charge, 2 W.R. (Cr. Let) 2. A charge under S. 461, I.P.C., should set out the intention of the accused, 17 C.W.N. 354. But see 6 M.L.T. 266. When a charge of attempt at cheating did not specify both the person upon whom the attempt was made and also the manner in which he was induced, and the defect was not remedied till the close of the prosecution case, it was held that the accused was prejudiced, 8 C.W.N. 278. Similarly under S. 217, I.P.C., the omission to specify the direction of law which was disobeyed was held fatal to the conviction, 2 B. 142. A charge of perjury should specify the actual words used by the person charged in his deposition and not merely the substance, Ratanlal 55; 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 137; 7 B.L.R. Appx. 66. A charge for rioting should specify the common object of the unlawful assembly, 33 C. 233; 42 C. 937; 39 C. 781; 36 C. 865; 11 C. 106; 22 C. 276; 35 C. 384 and 718 though in simple cases the omission might not have prejudiced the accused, 21 C. 827; 12 C.W.N. 944. When a charge as laid in a case of rioting was to assault the complainant but the common object found was to set fire to the complainant's hut, it was held that the conviction was bad as the charge laid against the accused had not been established. In all cases the principal and paramount common object should form the subject of the charge and not the incidental happenings, 29 Cr. L.J. 390=108 Ind. Cas. 421. In a charge of cheating it should be set out the manner in which the offence was committed, and the question whether the charge was reasonably sufficient to give notice to the accused of the accusation he has to meet depends on the circumstances of the each case, 26 Cr. L.J. 849=85 Ind. Cas. 705.

Sub-section (4).—The law and the section of the law under which the offence is punishable should be stated. See Form No. 23 of Sch. V, infra.

been committed, without specifying particular items or exact date the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence the meaning of section 234 :

Provided that the time included between the first and last o dates shall not exceed one year.

Object of the section.—By this section a slight departure from the law as is in Ss. 233 to 235, infra, is intended. It provides that when an accused person is with breach of trust or criminal misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to the gross sum misappropriated and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without the specifying in the charge each item misappropriated, or exact date of misappropriation which in most cases may not be possible and sometimes misapprehended. The proviso to the section is important and it shows that it was not the intention of the Legislature to make any further departure and so the period is restricted to one year between the first and last of such dates as in S. 234, infra. The charge thus framed will be deemed to be a charge of one single offence and not a series of acts constituting a transaction. If the charge relates to items exceeding one year the trial and the conviction will be illegal, (P.C.). The procedural law was altered to meet two difficulties. Under the law as it was before, there was very great difficulty in convicting a person charged where there was no running account and where the prosecution was unable to point out a specific item out of the particular item was embezzled or to which it is attributable. The other difficulty was what was experienced in 24 C. 193, where the charge was embezzlement of a large sum, Rs. 9,000 and odd made up of so many hundreds of items under S. 234, infra, it was not possible to have more than three offences of the same kind and so the charge could not legally be framed. The law on these two points was altered and altered for the better. It was not intended either to throw the onus on the accused by bringing a charge against him of a deficiency in his accounts or to do away with the necessity of proving the elements of the offence as laid down in the Indian Penal Code. An indictment of embezzlement might be supposed to be proof of a general deficiency of any particular sum received and not accounted for, L.J. 531=85 Ind. Cas. 731.

Sub-section (1).—A person against whom an offence is alleged to have been committed shall be described in the charge by his name and not by his accidental position in the case, as prosecutor or witness, Mad Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 167. A charge was held bad as being too general when it did not specify the article stolen, or the name of the person whose house was entered; and the place of offence was given only at village T, whereas the trial was for an offence committed both at villages T and N, 23 M.L.J. 331 at 333; 7 B.L.R. Appx. 66; 25 W. 46. It is not right to charge generally under any section of the Penal Code, but the facts should be specifically set out in the charge giving the accused sufficient particulars of time, place, person and circumstance as would give them notice of the matter with which they are charged, 15 B 491; 17 Cr. L.J. 411=35 Ind. Cas. 971; 25 M.L.T. 379. Where the charge of assault mentions a certain date and place of occurrence and the prosecution fails to prove the same, the Court is not entitled to convict the accused of an assault at a different place or time, 25 Cr. L.J. 471=77 Ind. Cas. 823. Where a person was tried and convicted of an unnatural offence on a charge which did not specify the time when, place where, or by what person with whom, the offence was committed, the only fact being that the accused habitually wore women's clothes and exhibited physical characteristics having committed the offence, it was held that the conviction was bad in law, 6 A. 1. A charge of adultery alleging commission of offences between two dates is illegal if it is not possible in the circumstances of the case to assign particular dates on which sexual intercourse took place, 51 C. 433 at 432.

Reasonably sufficient to give notice to accused.—The reasonableness of the notice is the criterion by which the validity of the charge must be judged and this depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The requirements of law are satisfied if the charge gives such a de-assembly should be stated in the charge, 22 C. 276; 11 C. 106; 26 C. 630; 33 C. 295; 39 C. 781; 3 C.W.N. 605; 35 C. 718 and 384; 32 M. 3; 14 C.W.N. 422. When a charge has been expressed in very vague terms, the prosecution on appeal should be limited to the particular sense in which the charge was understood at the trial, 2 B. 152.

224. In every charge words used in describing an offence shall be deemed to have been used in the sense attached to them respectively by the law under which such offence is punishable.

Words in charge taken in sense of law under which offence is punishable.

The description of crimes in the Penal Code must of necessity be expressed in abstract terms. But the very object of a trial is to determine whether particular acts or omissions on the part of the accused fall or do not fall within the rule thus abstractedly stated. Conformably to this principle all the model charges in Sch. V of the Code contain or imply the setting forth with reasonable particularity of the matters alleged to constitute the offence, 2 B. 152 at 153. Where the common object of the unlawful assembly was stated to be to commit assault, i. e., to do violence to person, it is immaterial whether the offence to commit which there was a common object was assault simple or grievous hurt and it is not necessary to alter the charge stating the common object into one to cause grievous hurt, 6 Pat. 832.

225. No error in stating either the offence or the particulars required to be stated in the charge, and no omission to state the offence or those particulars, shall be regarded at any stage of the case as material, unless the accused was in fact misled by such error or omission, and it has occasioned a failure of justice.

Effect of errors.

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged, under S. 242 of the Indian Penal Code, with "having been in possession of counterfeit coin, having known at the time when he became possessed thereof that such coin was counterfeit," the word "fraudulently" being omitted in the charge. Unless it appears that A was in fact misled by this omission the error shall not be regarded as material.

(b) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge, or is set out incorrectly. A defends himself, calls witnesses, and gives his own account of the transaction. The Court may infer from this that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating is not material.

(c) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge. There were many transactions between A and B, and A had no means of knowing to which of them the charge referred, and offered no defence. The Court may infer from such facts that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating was, in the case, a material error.

(d) A is charged with the murder of Khoda Baksh, on the 21st January, 1892. In fact, the murdered person's name was Haidar Baksh, and the date of the murder was the 20th January, 1892. A was never charged with any murder but one, and had heard the inquiry before the Magistrate, which referred exclusively to the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from these facts that A was not misled, and that the error in the charge was immaterial.

(e) A was charged with murdering Haidar Baksh on the 20th January, 1892, and Khoda Baksh (who tried to arrest him for that murder) on the 21st January, 1892. When charged for the murder of Haidar Baksh, he was tried for the murder of Khoda Baksh, the witnesses present in his defence were witnesses in the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from this that A was misled, and that the error was material.

Scope of the Section.—This section is designed to prevent miscarriage of justice by reason of failure to comply with technical provision of law unless the accused has been misled. This section refers to error in framing the charge at any stage of the case and provides that such error or omission in a charge will not vitiate proceedings, 10 B.H.C.R. 373; 32 M. 3. It refers only to errors in framing the charge and does not specifically deal with a case of absence of charge. See also S. 232, infra, which deals with absence of charge or an error in the charge, and S. 535, infra, refers only to an error or omission in the charge and does not cover the case of absence of charge. If the accused was in fact prejudiced, his consent to such an illegal procedure is perfectly immaterial, for there can be no waiver in a criminal trial, 46 M. 117 at 120; 18 M.L.J. 330; 6 C.W.N. 202; 21 A.L.J. 89=24 Cr. L.J. 656=73 Ind. Cas. 576. It is a well established principle of criminal law that a prisoner can consent to nothing which is not authorised by law nor can the consent of counsel for the accused person validate a course of procedure which the law does not authorise, 25 Cr. L.J. 68=75 Ind. Cas. 990; 46 M. 117 at 120; 18 M.L.J. 330; 28 M.L.J. 329=(1915) M.W.N. 229; 2 C. 23; 12 W.R. (Cr.) 59; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 69; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 59; 2 Pat. 793 at 795; 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.), where a criminal trial takes place under a procedure not authorised by law, even the consent of the accused and their counsel will not validate the proceeding. No consent by counsel whether for his own convenience or that of his client, or for the convenience of the Court can by itself create jurisdiction in the Court to commit irregularities substantially affecting the conduct of the trial and prejudicing the accused, 50 A. 457 at 462. When no charge has been framed or a defective one has been framed, there is no justification for a de novo trial. But the trial is to be proceeded with from the stage at which the illegality occurred, 25 Cr. L.J. 1152=81 Ind. Cas. 976. When the common object of an unlawful assembly is stated in the complaint and found by the Court, mere omission of it in the charge, will not vitiate the trial, 28 Bom. L.R. 497=27 Cr. L.J. 744=95 Ind. Cas. 72 where 21 G. 827 is followed and 22 G. 276 is distinguished. See also 36 C. 865 and 158. An accused person charged with rioting with a specified common object cannot be convicted finding a different common object of which he had no opportunity to meet and defend himself, 27 C. 990. Where the charge mentioned several alternative common objects, it is for the Appellate Court to find which of the common object has been made out, 35 C. 718.

At any stage of the case.—If the mistake is found out after the conclusion of the trial but before pronouncing judgment, the Court is entitled to proceed in accordance with the provisions contained in Ss. 226 to 231, infra. Ss. 255 and 271, infra, require that where an accused is called on to plead to a charge it should be read and explained to him. If this direction of law is complied with there can be no reasonable objection at any subsequent stage of the case to regard the charge to be indefinite. See 41 C. 743.

Unless accused was in fact misled.—The words "in fact" and "it has occasioned a failure of justice" were introduced in the Code of 1898. If the charge is drawn up in a somewhat informal manner but is sufficiently explicit to give the accused notice of the charge, the irregularity is cured by this section, 33 B. 77, see also 8 A. 665. The words "a failure of justice has in fact occasioned" occur in S. 535, infra. Also see the explanation to S. 537, infra, as to what determines whether an error, omission or irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice. Where in a charge of cheating, the exact date when the offence alleged to have been committed is not stated but the time is approximately indicated, the omission will not affect the legality of the trial if the accused has not been materially prejudiced, 27 Cr. L.J. 909=96 Ind. Cas. 221. Where the accused was charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain documents and convicted of embezzling not the documents but the amounts obtained by means of those documents, it was held that the conviction was unsustainable, 12 C.W.N. 577=7 Cr. L.J. 372. See also 2 Luck. 430. It is for the Court to decide whether the accused has been in fact misled, 10 B.H.C.R. 373; 42 C. 957. See also 32 M. 3 and 384; 25 B. 90. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 891=118 Ind. Cas. 323.

226. When any person is committed for trial without a charge, or with an imperfect or erroneous charge, the Court, or, in the case of a High Court, the Clerk of the Crown may frame a charge, or add to or otherwise alter the charge, as the case may be, having regard to the rules contained in this Code as to the form of charges.

Illustrations.

(1). A is charged with the murder of C. A charge of abetting the murder of C may be added or substituted.

(2). A is charged with forging a valuable security under S. 467 of the Indian Penal Code. A charge of fabricating false evidence under S. 193 may be added.

(3). A is charged with receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen. During the trial it incidentally appears that he has in his possession instruments for the purpose of counterfeiting coin. A charge under S. 235 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be added.

Scope of the section.—The combined effect of Ss. 226 to 231 is to confer a wide jurisdiction on the Sessions Court with regard to the charge. At the beginning of the trial if the Judge finds that the Magistrate has omitted to frame a charge, he may supply the omission and frame a proper charge made out by the evidence on record. If the charge framed is imperfect or erroneous the judge may alter or add to the charge or if he is of opinion that other offences have been committed he may include those offences so disclosed in the charge. The material on which the judge acts under this section is the evidence recorded at the preliminary inquiry and under the next section the evidence received by himself in the course of the trial. Provision is also made for adjourning the trial for ordering a new trial, for recalling witnesses and for obtaining, if necessary, sanction for the prosecution; all these indicate very clearly that there need not necessarily have any connection between the added charge and the original charge but the added charge must be for an offence disclosed by the evidence on record and the accused must not be prejudiced and the added charge must not contravene the provisions of Ss. 233 to 236, infra, 16 Cr. L.J. 573=30 Ind. Cas. 125 where 8 B. 200 and 11 B.H.C.R. 278 are approved and 3 M. 351 is distinguished and 8 A. 665; 32 C. 22 are not followed.

Committed without a charge.—The words "without a charge" do not warrant a Magistrate from committing the accused without framing a charge. The words were intended to cover cases where through inadvertence no charge was framed. The words "without charge" will apply not only to a case in which there is no charge but also to a case in respect of such offence as the Sessions Judge or Clerk of the Crown may think the accused ought to be tried, 8 B. 200; 12 C.W.N. 577=7 Cr. L.J. 372. A Court of Session may add charges under Ss. 497 and 498, I.P.C., under this section when the complaint of the husband also involved offences committed under those sections, 34 C.L.J. 81. But the addition of a charge which is not supported by the evidence before the Committing Magistrate is ultra vires and not merely an error of procedure, 3 M. 351; 32 C. 22; 11 B.H.C.R. 278; 16 Cr. L.J. 573=30 Ind. Cas. 125. Under S. 437 and 8 526 Cl. (1) (iv), infra, a commitment may be made without a charge against the accused, 27 M. 54 at 55. The illustrations to the section were added in the Code of 1829 to make the meaning of the section clear.

With an imperfect charge.—Imperfect implies defect in form. A Judge's power to alter a charge after commitment is limited by this section to imperfect or erroneous charges, 25 Cr. L.J. 1162=81 Ind. Cas. 958; 8 A. 665.

Court may frame a charge, etc.—A Sessions Judge can proceed under this section only on the facts appearing from the magisterial inquiry, 24 Cr. L.J. 177=71 Ind. Cas. 593.

May frame, add to or alter the charge.—A Sessions Judge ought to scrutinise the charges upon which accused persons are committed to his Court in the light of the fact disclosed in the Preliminary Register in order that additions or alterations may, if necessary, be made under this section before the accused are called upon to plead to the charge under S. 271, infra, 18 Cr. L.J. 346=38 Ind. Cas. 730; 11 A.L.J. 189. The ultimate responsibility of settling the charge against the accused person committed to the Sessions Court rests on the Sessions Judge who can alter or change the same, 16 Bom. L.R. 80=15 Cr. L.J. 292=23 Ind. Cas. 500. Where an accused person is committed to the High Court Sessions for kidnapping a minor girl in Bombay and also of abetting rape on her committed at Ahmedabad under S. 376 and 114, I.P.C., and it was sought by the prosecution to amend the second charge of abetment of rape by omitting S. 114, I.P.C., and by substituting in its place S. 109, I.P.C., leave to amend the charge was refused on the ground that the proposed amendment would materially alter the nature of the case the accused had to meet at a late stage of the case and the second charge was therefore withdrawn from the jury, 30 Bom. L.R. 1233=30 Cr. L.J. 191. A Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction and though vested with large powers for amending and adding to charges can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to matters not covered by the indictment. It has full discretionary power under this section to amend the charge, 32 C. 22; 26 Cr. L.J. 5=83 Ind. Cas. 435; 1920 M.W.N. 149=11 L.W. 317=21 Cr. L.J. 57=54 Ind. Cas. 409 or add a completely new charge. See S. 227, infra. But the power to alter should be used with great caution, 6 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 75. But under proper circumstances a Sessions Judge has power to add a charge distinct from the charges framed by the Committing Magistrate, 23 C.W.N. 561. Any action under this section can be taken by the Sessions Judge only on the facts disclosed by the Magisterial inquiry and where the facts show there is any omission by the Magistrate, an additional charge may be framed by the Sessions Judge, 24 Cr. L.J. 177=71 Ind. Cas. 593. A Sessions Judge has no power under this section to expunge a charge before calling upon the accused to plead to it, 7 C.L.R. 143.

Having regard to the rules in the code as to framing of charges.—See Schedule V, Form No 28, infra, and the provisions contained in this Chapter.

Revision.—A Court of Appeal or revision should be very slow to interfere with the discretion of the trial Court in the exercise of its powers under this section of altering or adding a charge if the discretion has not been exercised in a perverse or arbitrary manner. In 26 A. 238 (P.C.) this Lordships of the Privy Council observed that they are always slow to reverse decisions of Courts below in the deliberate exercise of a discretion entrusted to them by law. See also 42 B. 380 (P.C.) relied on in 27 Cr. L.J. 1217=97 Ind. Cas. 1041.

227. (1) Any Court may alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced or, in the case of trials before the Court of Session or High Court, before the verdict of the Jury is returned, or the opinions of the assessors are expressed.

(2) Every such alteration or addition shall be read and explained to the accused.

Scope of the section.—This section provides for amendment of the charge at a late stage, while S. 226, supra, provides for amendment of the charge at the commencement of the trial. This and S. 237 necessarily go together and it is not the intention of the Legislature to convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything, 23 A.L.J. 436=26 Cr. L.J. 1057=83 Ind. Cas. 1. An application for amendment of the charge should be made immediately the charge is read out and explained to the accused by the Court, 27 C. 839; 18 Cr. L.J. 346=38 Ind. Cas. 730. The accused must know what he is charged with and what offence he has to answer. S. 237, infra, must be read with this section. A court cannot convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been

When any person is committed for trial without a charge, or with an imperfect or erroneous charge, the Court, or, in the case of a High Court, the Clerk of the Crown may frame a charge, or add to or otherwise alter the charge, as the case may be, having regard to the rules contained in this Code as to the form of charges.

Procedure on commitment without charge or with imperfect charge.

(3). A is charged with receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen. During the trial it incidentally appears that he has in his possession instruments for the purpose of counterfeiting coin. A charge under S. 235 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be added.

Scope of the section.—The combined effect of Ss. 226 to 231 is to confer a wide jurisdiction on the Sessions Court with regard to the charge. At the beginning of the trial if the Judge finds that the Magistrate has omitted to frame a charge, he may supply the omission and frame a proper charge made out by the evidence on record. Committed without a charge.—The words "without a charge" do not warrant a Magistrate from committing the accused without framing a charge. The words were intended to cover cases where through inadvertence no charge was framed. The words "without charge" will apply not only to a case in which there is no charge but also to a case in respect of such offence as the Sessions Judge or Clerk of the Crown may think the accused ought to be tried, 8 B. 200; 12 C.W.N. 577=7 Cr. L.J. 372. A Court of Session may add charges under Ss. 497 and 499, I.P.C., under this section when the complaint of the husband also involved offences committed under those sections, 31 C.L.J. 51. But the addition of a charge which is not supported by the evidence before the Committing Magistrate is ultra vires and not merely an error of procedure, 3 M. 331; 32 C. 22; 11 B.H.C.R. 278; 16 Cr. L.J. 573=30 Ind. Cas. 125. Under S. 437 and S. 525 Cl. (1) (iv), infra, a commitment may be made without a charge against the accused, 27 M. 54 at 56. The illustrations to the section were added in the Code of 1893 to make the meaning of the section clear.

With an imperfect charge.—Imperfect implies defect in form. A Judge's power to alter a charge after commitment is limited by this section to imperfect or erroneous charges, 23 Cr. L.J. 1162=51 Ind. Cas. 936, 8 A. 665.

Court may frame a charge, etc.—A Sessions Judge can proceed under this section only on the facts appearing from the magisterial inquiry, 23 Cr. L.J. 177=71 Ind. Cas. 593.

May frame, add to or alter the charge.—A Sessions Judge ought to scrutinise the charges upon which accused persons are committed to his Court in the light of the fact disclosed in the Preliminary Register in order that additions or alterations may, if necessary, be made under this section before the accused are called upon to plead to the charge under S. 271, infra, 18 Cr. L.J. 346=38 Ind. Cas. 730; 11 A.L.J. 188. The ultimate responsibility of settling the charge against the accused person committed to the Sessions Court rests on the Sessions Judge who can alter or change the same, 16 Bom. L.R. 89=15 Cr. L.J. 292=23 Ind. Cas. 500. Where an accused person is committed to the High Court Sessions for kidnapping a minor girl in Bombay and also of abetting rape on her committed at Ahmedabad under S. 376 and 114, I.P.C., and it was sought by the prosecution to amend the second charge of abetment of rape by omitting S. 114, I.P.C., and by substituting in its place S. 109, I.P.C., leave to amend the charge was refused on the ground that the proposed amendment would materially alter the nature of the case the accused had to meet at a late stage of the case and the second charge was therefore withdrawn from the jury, 30 Bom. A Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction and though vested with large powers for amending and adding to charges can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to matters not covered by the indictment. It has full discretionary power under this section to amend the charge, 32 C. 22; 26 Cr. L.J. 5=83 Ind. Cas. 435; 1920 M.W.N. 149=11 L.W. 317=21 Cr. L.J. 57=54 Ind. Cas. 409 or add a completely new charge. See S. 227, infra. But the power to alter should be used with great caution, 6 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 76. But under proper circumstances a Sessions Judge has power to add a charge distinct from the charges framed by the Committing Magistrate, 23 C.W.N. 561. Any action under this section can be taken by the Sessions Judge only on the facts disclosed by the Magisterial inquiry and where the facts show there is any omission by the Magistrate, an additional charge may be framed by the Sessions Judge, 24 Cr. L.J. 177=71 Ind. Cas. 593. A Sessions Judge has no power under this section to expunge a charge before calling upon the accused to plead to it, 7 C.L.R. 143.

Having regard to the rules in the code as to framing of charges.—See Schedule V, Form No 28, infra, and the provisions contained in this Chapter.

Revision.—A Court of Appeal or revision should be very slow to interfere with the discretion of the trial Court in the exercise of its powers under this section of altering or adding a charge if the discretion has not been exercised in a perverse or arbitrary manner. In 26 A. 238 (P.C.) the Lordships of the Privy Council observed that they are always slow to reverse decisions of Courts below in the deliberate exercise of a discretion entrusted to them by law. See also 42 B. 389 (P.C.) relied on in 27 Cr. L.J. 1217=97 Ind. Cas. 1041.

227. (1) Any Court may alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced or, in the case of trials before the Court of Session or High Court, before the verdict of the Jury is returned, or the opinions of the assessors are expressed.

(2) Every such alteration or addition shall be read and explained to the accused.

Scope of the section.—This section provides for amendment of the charge at a late stage, while S. 226, supra, provides for amendment of the charge at the commencement of the trial. This and S. 237 necessarily go together and it is not the intention of the Legislature to convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything, 23 A.L.J. 436=26 Cr. L.J. 1057=88 Ind. Cas. 1. An application for amendment of the charge should be made immediately the charge is read out and explained to the accused by the Court, 27 C. 839; 18 Cr. L.J. 316=33 Ind. Cas. 730. The accused must know what he is charged with and what offences he has to answer. S. 237, infra, must be read with this section. A Court cannot convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything. It is not just to convict a man without telling him his offence, 24 A.L.J. 168=27 Cr. L.J. 152=91 Ind. Cas. 888; see also 23 A.L.J. 436. An application under S. 226, supra, should be considered and decided at once and not postponed till the conclusion of the trial, 16 B. 414 at 425; 16 Cr. L.J. 573=30 Ind. Cas. 125.

Court may alter or add to any charge.—These words were added in the Code of 1898 to meet the conflicting rulings in Bombay and Allahabad, 8 B. 200; 9 A. 525. A Sessions Judge cannot add to alter or amend the charge in such a way as to produce a charge in support of which evidence was not given before the Magistrate. A Sessions Judge should not alter a charge of dacoity into one of robbery without assigning a reason and before hearing the evidence, 16 C.W.N. 238=13 Cr. L.J. 127=13 Ind. Cas. 783. The Sessions Judge could without impropriety send the case down to the Magistrate and suggest that he should consider whether there were or were not grounds for inquiring into a more serious charge and the course adopted by the judge by adding a new charge and culling evidence in support of the same was not merely an error of procedure but an improper assumption of jurisdiction and the conviction was quashed by the High Court, 3 M. 351. A Court of Session is not a Court of original jurisdiction and though vested with large powers of amending and altering the charges it can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment, (1920) M.W.N. 149=11 L.W. 317=21 Cr. L.J. 57=54 Ind. Cas. 409; although the law empowers a Sessions Judge to add a charge at any time before pronouncing judgment he must in doing so exercise a sound and wise discretion. When the Court drew up a charge of a compoundable offence read out and pleaded by the accused and on the day fixed for argument the parties put in a petition compounding the offence the Court should accept the compounding and has no power to alter the charge to a non-compoundable offence, 15 Cr. L.J. 540=24 Ind. Cas. 948. A grave charge like dacoity should not be suddenly added and the trial proceeded with at once and the accused called upon his defence immediately, 6 C.W.N. 73; 16 Cr. L.J. 573=30 Ind. Cas. 125, see also 31 B. 218; 29 C. 415, following 5 A. 233. When an application for amendment of a charge is made it should be decided immediately and not postponed, 16 B. 414 at 425; 16 Cr. L.J. 573=30 Ind. Cas. 125. An amendment of a charge at a very late stage to cure an illegality in the trial is not permitted by law. Where the charge originally framed was for more than three offences and after the case had been tried the illegality was brought to the notice of the Magistrate in the course of arguments of counsel and he amended the charge immediately as to include only three offences, held as the charge was bad on the face of it, it could not be cured by amending it by striking out one charge as the mischief which the Legislature intended to safeguard against by enacting the provision of law may already have been done, 29 M. 569, followed in 49 M.L.J. 93, see also 25 M. 61 (P.O.); 27 Cr. L.J. 793=95 Ind. Cas. 393. It was held in 12 A. 351 that the power to alter in this section may be taken to include the power to withdraw a charge. The word "alter" ought not to be taken as tantamount to expungo, "7 C.L.R. 143.

Before the verdict of the jury.—On a trial by jury the Sessions Judge has no power to alter the charge after the jury returned their verdict, 5 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 9. "Returning verdict" means return of the final verdict which the Judge was bound to accept, 8 B. 200. Under S. 203, infra, the Judge is entitled to ask the jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what the verdict is and when those questions are answered by the jury and accepted by the Judge the final verdict which the Judge is bound to record cannot be said to have been delivered.

Or opinion of assessors are expressed.—In making the alteration of a charge, the limitations in which it is clearly laid down in this section should not be overlooked. The alteration is only permitted up to the time of taking the opinion of the assessors and not after such opinions are expressed, 17 Cr. L.J. 454=36 Ind. Cas. 134.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section makes it imperative on the Judge to read and explain to the accused every altered and added charge so that he may understand thoroughly the nature of the new charge which he is called upon to plead, 5 C. 826; 7 C. 95; 9 M. 61; 9 B. 200.

228. If the charge framed or alteration or addition made under section 226 or section 227 is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is not likely, in the opinion of the Court to prejudice the accused in his defence, or the prosecutor in the conduct of the case, the Court may, in its discretion, after such charge or alteration or addition has been framed or made, proceed with the trial as if the new or altered charge had been the original charge.

Object of the section.—This section lays down the procedure to be adopted after the charge is amended or altered or added to. The intention of the Legislature is, that whenever an amendment of the charge in any way tends to the prejudice of the prisoner, steps should be taken to prevent the consequences arising by ordering a new trial or suspending the trial going on, to enable him to make his defence, or to examine any material witness or to recall any witness already examined. It is only in the case of charges clearly related that a trial goes on forthwith after an amendment, 11 B.H.C.R. 278 at 280. Where there is a doubt as to whether the alteration or addition of a charge will or will not prejudice an accused person, the leaning of the Court should be in favour of the accused, 6 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 76. When a new grave charge like dacoity was added, the Judge will not be exercising a sound and judicial discretion in proceeding with the case immediately, 6 C.W.N. 73. A Sessions Court also cannot add a charge so as to take cognizance of an offence without a commitment to it by the Magistrate, 3 M. 351; 32 C. 22; 1920 M.W.N. 143 = 11 L.W. 317 = 21 Cr. L.J. 57 = 54 Ind. Cas. 409.

Not likely to prejudice the accused in his defence.—It is difficult in all cases to say whether an amendment will prejudice a prisoner in his defence upon the merits; in some cases it is clear that an amendment will not have that effect; in others it is equally clear it will; and where it is doubtful whether an amendment will or will not prejudice the prisoner the leaning of the Court should be in favour of the prisoner, 6 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 76 at 81.

Proceed with the trial.—The procedure allowed by this section will, generally be adopted only where the charges are so closely related that they are only different ways of looking at the same facts so that the accused who has come prepared to meet the charge on which he was committed to stand his trial at the Sessions Court will be under no disadvantage in meeting the amended or new charge, 7 B.H.C.R. 278 at 280; where however the new charge will raise different questions of law or would admit of a different defence upon the facts, the Court is bound to act under S. 229, infra.

Magistrate did not cover the gravity of the offence and any addition or alteration of the charge by him would not be supported by the evidence on record the Sessions Judge is to send back the records to the Magistrate to consider whether grounds exist for inquiring into a grave charge, 6 B 200. When a new trial is directed under this section the Court holding the new trial is not justified in referring to the former record as a whole, but only such portions of it as have been specially put in evidence before it, 7 C L.R. 193.

230. If the offence stated in the new or altered or added charge is one for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary, the case shall not be proceeded with until such sanction is obtained, unless sanction has been already obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded.

Stay of proceeding if prosecution of offence in altered charge requires previous sanction.

The word "sanction" in S. 195 is now omitted and "complaint" of Court or public servant in writing is the expression used. In S. 197 the expression "previous sanction" is used. Is this section confined to offences referred to in S. 197 only? This seems to be a case of oversight as the section clearly referred to S. 195 also. The words "complaint of Court", it is submitted, should be added after the word sanction to make the provisions of this section applicable to S. 195, supra as well. The expression "on the same facts" occurring in the section is to be carefully noted when once sanction is obtained for prosecution for the substantive offence, no fresh sanction is necessary to prosecute for abetment of the offence under this section as the new charge is founded on any but the same facts as those on which the sanction was originally obtained, 30 C. 103; 21 Cr. L. J. 230=55 Ind. Cas. 102; 12 Cr. L.J. 217=10 Ind. Cas. 156. A prosecution once started without the requisite sanction cannot be cured by obtaining the necessary sanction subsequently and that cannot cure the defect in the initiation of proceedings. The absence of the sanction is fatal in the initiation of proceedings and conviction, 28 Cr. L. J. 780=104 Ind. Cas. 108 following 9 B. 27 and 289; 37 C. 467, 16 Cr. L.J. 787=31 Ind. Cas. 613; 17 Cr. L.J. 454=36 Ind. Cas. 134.

231. Whenever a charge is altered or added to by the Court after the commencement of the trial, the prosecutor and the accused shall be allowed to recall or re-summon and examine with reference to such alteration or addition, any witness who may have been examined, and also to call any further witness whom the Court may think to be material.

Recall of witnesses when charge altered.

This section requires that when a charge is altered by the Court after the commencement of the trial, the prosecutor and the accused shall be allowed to recall or re-summon and examine the witnesses with reference to such altered or added charge and also examine further witnesses when the charge was altered at a very late stage and no commitment should be made without giving the accused an opportunity of re-examining the witnesses and adducing defence evidence, 22 A.L.J. 239=23 Cr. L.J. 708=81 Ind. Cas. 318; 26 Cr. L.J. 1497=90 Ind. Cas. 153. Once a charge is altered or added to, the provisions of this section apply. The Court is bound to recall any witness which the prosecution or the accused desire to examine with reference to the alteration or addition. It may be difficult to see what further questions could have been asked but the provisions of the section are peremptory, 6 Pat. 832. Similarly the accused has under this section the right to recall prosecution witnesses after the alteration of the charge even if that alteration could not affect his defence and the Court has no discretion in the matter. The provisions of this section are not inapplicable to cases to which S. 228 supra applies, 32 M. 345=56 M. L. J. 600=1925 M.W.N. 833=29 L.W. 111=30 Cr. L.J. 223=113 Ind. Cas. 672. When the charge is altered, the alteration should be entered formally in the record of the trial, 22 M.L.J. (3d. n) 1. Though this section does not require the grounds to be mentioned for refusing to summon new witnesses on the altered charge, the fact that the Appellate Court might have to consider whether the evidence of new witnesses on the altered charge would be material or not it is essential that grounds should be recorded. This section and S. 237, infra, have to be read together having regard to the principles underlying these two sections, 57 M.L.J. 478—1929 M.W.N. 530.

232. (1) If any Appellate Court or the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision or of its powers under Chapter XXVII, is of opinion that any person convicted of an offence was misled in his defence by the absence of charge or by an error in the charge, it shall direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner it thinks fit.

(2) If the Court is of opinion that the facts of the case are such that no valid charge could be preferred against the accused in respect of the facts proved, it shall quash the conviction.

Illustration.

A is convicted of an offence under S. 196 of the Indian Penal Code, upon a charge which omits to state that he knew the evidence, which he corruptly used or attempted to use as true or genuine, was false or fabricated. If the Court thinks it probable that A had such knowledge, and that he was misled in his defence by the omission from the charge of the statement that he had, it shall direct a new trial upon an amended charge; but, if it appears probable from the proceedings that A had no such knowledge, it shall quash the conviction.

Scope of the section.—This section covers a case of absence of charge or error in the framing of a charge while S. 535, infra, deals only with absence of charge and the procedure to be followed when prejudice to the accused has been made out, is more clearly expressed in S. 535 infra than in this section. This section empowers the Appellate Court or the High Court to direct a new trial on the ground that an accused person convicted of an offence was misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or an error in the charge. This is quite apart from the general powers of an Appellate Court to order a retrial when hearing an appeal under S. 423 (1) (b), infra. When the Court is of opinion that on the facts no valid charge could be sustained against the accused, it shall quash the conviction. Where certain owners of land were convicted under Ss. 164 and 165, I.P.C., for acts or omissions on the part of their agents but the charge framed referred only to the knowledge or belief and acts or omissions of the owners themselves and not of their agents, and on appeal the Sessions Judge held that the omission in the charge "or their agents or managers" was material and seriously prejudiced their defence, it was held that the conviction was unsustainable and a re-trial was ordered, 7 C.W.N. 301. When an accused person was summoned to appear for trial for two offences, under Ss. 143 and 379, I.P.C., and he was charged only with one of these offences, vis., S. 379, I.P.C., he would have good reason to suppose that the other offence had been dropped by the Magistrate, and when he is convicted of the offence not charged under S. 143, I.P.C., he must have been misled in his defence by the absence of the charge under this section, 27 C. 660. But when there was nothing on the record to show that any valid charge could be preferred against an accused person, the conviction shall be quashed and further proceedings in the matter should be stopped, 28 C. 63. An Appellate Court is not entitled to convict an accused person for an entirely different offence while acquitting him of the offence charged by the lower Court, 30 C. 288; 9 Cr. L.J. 406—1 Ind. Cas. 867. Nor can an accused person be convicted of grievous hurt when he was originally charged of that offence read with S. 149, I.P.C., 16 C.W.N. 1077; 41 C. 662, but in 47 M. 746 (F.B.), it was pointed out that these decisions do not consider the effect of S. 537, infra, upon omissions in the charge and the general statement that it was now settled law that when a person is under S. 149, I.P.C., he cannot be convicted of the substantive legality of the conviction had, depends upon whether materially prejudiced by the form of the charge. When a charge is amended, the accused is entitled to recall and cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses and not merely those witnesses on whose evidence the charge was amended, 25 Cr. L.J. 1437=60 Ind. Cas. 153.

Misled in his defence.—Where the accused was charged with storing wool but convicted of storing loose cotton, and where the accused was charged with causing hurt with a dao but convicted of using a lathi the convictions were set aside as the accused were misled in their defence, Ratanlal 529; 17 C.W.N. 419=14 Cr. L.J. 212=19 Ind. Cas. 308; 4 C.W.N. cxxix. It is the duty of the Court in all cases to satisfy itself that the accused has been misled in his defence by the absence or by an error in the charge. This applies as well to cases in which the conviction was in compliance with the terms of the law as well to cases in which the conviction was irregular 30 Cr. L.J. 891=118 Ind. Cas. 323 following 29 C. 481 and 40 C. 155. If the High Court is of opinion that in consequence of material errors in a charge the accused had been misled, it is bound to direct a new trial to be held on a proper charge being framed, 17 Cr. L.J. 454=36 Ind. Cas. 134.

In respect of the facts proved.—In criminal cases it is for the prosecution to prove its case and an accused person cannot be convicted merely because he has set up a false defence. But where evidence is purely circumstantial and the facts proved by the prosecution unless explained by the accused would justify an inference of his guilt it is lawful for the Court to consider the accused's explanation which he has put forward in his defence, 17 Cr. L.J. 23=32 Ind. Cas. 151.

Joinder of Charges.

233. For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, and every such charge shall be tried separately, except in the cases mentioned in sections 234, 235, 236 and 239.

Separate charges for distinct offences.

Illustration.

A is accused of a theft on one occasion, and of causing grievous hurt on another occasion. A must be separately charged and separately tried for the theft and causing grievous hurt.

Object of the section.—The general rule in criminal trials is that there should be a separate trial with respect to each distinct offence except in cases mentioned in Ss. 234, 235, 236 and 239, infra. The object evidently is that the attention of the Court should be directed to the evidence relating to the charge under inquiry and all irrelevant matter should be excluded. This object is not achieved but defeated by placing on the record copies of statements of witnesses recorded during the course of the trial relating to another charge, 29 Cr. L.J. 521=109 Ind. Cas. 343. In 49 B. 892 at 901, the High Court while setting aside a conviction for misjoinder of charges (accused being tried for three breaches of trust and three falsifications of accounts in respect of the same three amounts) at one trial, made the following suggestion as to the desirability of amending this section; "We wish to add that we think the attention of the Government should be drawn to this case with a view to its being considered whether the Government of India should not be moved to amend the Code in the form of an illustration to S. 231 or otherwise to obviate difficulties of the kind that have arisen in the present case. We think that obviously in this case (and probably in all such cases) there is no prejudice to the accused if he is allowed to be tried in one trial for three separate offences of breach of trust committed within one year and also three separate but unconnected offences of falsification of accounts in regard to those breaches of trust. Regrettable delay and expenditure are entailed by the present law as interpreted by the Courts which frequently necessitate the upsetting of trials and in consequence either retrial of the accused or his getting off scot-free." This section contains the general law, and the reason for it is, that the mind of the Court might be prejudiced against the prisoner if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting on different evidence. It might be difficult for the Court trying him on one of the charges not to be unfairly influenced by the evidence against him on the other charges, T.A. 174 at 177; 19 C.W.N. 972. An accused also is likely to be bewildered in his defence by having to meet many disconnected charges and a fair trial is to be endangered by the production of a mass of evidence of different matters tending to create undue suspicion against the accused, 13 B. 431; 29 M. 589; 49 M. L. J. 93; 27 Cr. L. J. 793=95 Ind. Cas. 393. The general rule is that there should be a separate trial for every distinct offence. The exceptions are the cases mentioned in Ss. 231 to 236 and 239, infra. These exceptions must be strictly construed so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by the general law, 5 Pat. L. J. 11 at 13; non-compliance with the provisions of this section is not a mere irregularity but an illegality which vitiates the trial. Where two offences are quite distinct and separate and there is also an interval of time between their commission, they cannot be said to form the same transaction and a joint trial is illegal, 21 A. L. J. 859=23 Cr. L. J. 964=81 Ind. Cas. 612. A trial in contravention of the section unless justified by the exceptional sections is not an irregularity but an illegality, 11 A. L. J. 185=14 Cr. L. J. 116=18 Ind. Cas. 676. The validity of an indictment depends not upon the facts found at the trial but upon the circumstances alleged before the trial commences, 33 C. 833.

For every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge.—Where a charge has been framed under Ss. 970 and 149, I.P.C., a conviction under S. 326, I.P.C., is not necessarily bad, but it depends on whether the accused has or has not been prejudiced by the form of the charge. The omission of S. 149 from the charge does not create an illegality by reason of this section which provides that for each distinct offence there shall be a separate charge. S. 149, I.P.C., creates no offence but like S. 34, I.P.C., is merely declaratory of the principle of common law; its object being to make it clear that the accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence, that it was not his hand that committed the offence and a person cannot be tried and sentenced under S. 149, I.P.C., alone as no punishment is provided for under that section, 47 M. 745 (F.B.). The provisions of this section are mandatory, 40 C. 168; 28 M. L. J. 331; 33 A. 42. When a person is charged with criminal breach of trust with regard to certain necklaces between February 1922 and January 1924, the transaction with regard to each necklace being apparently a separate offence it would be necessary to charge the accused separately with each offence and every such offence must be tried separately; otherwise the trial is bad for misjoinder, 28 Cr. L. J. 171=99 Ind. Cas. 603. This section must be strictly followed save and except, where the law itself provides an exception, 41 C. 722 at 725; 39 M. 327. This section equally applies even to summons cases where it is not necessary to have a written charge, 41 C. 694. Every act in breach of the conditions of the license or permit under the Opium Act is a distinct offence and under this section should be made the subject of a separate charge and tried separately, 16 Cr. L. J. 717=30 Ind. Cas. 1005. When there are two distinct offences for each offence a separate charge ought to be made under this section. Though certain provisions of the Code provide that more than one charge may in certain circumstances be tried together, that does not justify the inclusion in one charge of several distinct offences which is an illegality, 40 C. 848 at 843. A joinder of two offences in a single charge is only an irregularity and not an illegality, 31 C. W. N. 337=45 C. L. J. 591=28 Cr. L. J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827 where 11 C. W. N. 54; 19 C. W. N. 972; 50 C. 84 are referred to. See also 45 C. L. J. 438=39 Cr. L. J. 793, where all the previous decisions are discussed and the proposition re-affirmed but distinct offences under S. 807, I.P.C., and S. 20 of the Arms Act ought not to be tried together, 29 Cr. L. J. 521=109 Ind. Cas. 345. A joinder in one charge of two distinct offences though arising out of the same transaction is an illegality fatal to the trial, 10 C. W. N. 53 and 520 followed in 13 C. W. N. 1067=10 Cr. L. J. 469=4 Ind. Cas. 16. The exceptions to this section are Ss. 234, 235, 236 and 239 infra; where the acts imputed to the accused namely of manufacturing the excisable article, seized and brought into Court and of possessing the same, and of selling from time to time various other and similar articles not before the Court and of attempting to render denatured spirit unfit for human consumption, do not constitute the same transaction; a trial in respect of all such acts is bad for misjoinder under this section, 41 C. 694. A joinder of three charges relating to different transactions is not warranted by this section and does not come under any of the exceptions provided in the Code and is therefore illegal, and such a misjoinder is absolutely fatal to the trial, 41 C. 722; 28 Cr. L. J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827. S. 537, infra will not cure such an illegality. The disobedience of an express provision of law as to a mode of trial is not a mere irregularity; such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time. The remedying of mere irregularity is familiar to most systems of jurisprudence, but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted, that this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity, 23 M. 61 at 87-93 (P.C.). These observations were made by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee with regard to S. 234, infra, but they apply equally to cases falling under this section, also. In 39 M. 527 the principle of the decision of the Privy Council was applied to a case falling under this section. See also 41 C. 722 and 17 C.W.N. 479. The decision of the Privy Council in 23 M. 61 has overruled the following decisions, 27 C. 839; 23 C. 10 at 11; 20 C. 537; 22 C. 276; 14 C. 395; 21 A. 127; 14 A. 502; 11 M. 441; 12 M. 273 and 10 M.L.J. 147. If the joinder of the charge was in violation of the law, the accused must have been considerably embarrassed in their defence on the remaining charges, and their acquittal on the charges which the prosecution failed to prove cannot make valid the trial held, as it was illegal ab initio, 33 M. 502 at 505. See also 20 M.L.J. 220; 39 M. 527; 29 M. 553 49 M.L.J. 93; 27 Cr. L.J. 793=93 Ind. Cas. 393; 1 M. L.T. 409; 14 C. 128, 5 Pat. L.J. 11, 21 A.L.J. 853=25 Cr. L.J. 964=81 Ind. Cas. 612. The joinder of two distinct offences under one charge is an illegality fatal to the proceedings, 14 Cr. L.J. 459=20 Ind. Cas. 609. The following offences are held to be distinct offences within this section—(1) Public servant framing incorrect record, S. 166, and forgery of a record of Court or register, S. 465, I.P.C., 8 C. 450; (2) dishonestly receiving stolen property, S. 411, and habitually dealing in stolen property, S. 413, I.P.C., 8 C. 634; (3) theft in a building, S. 380, and dishonestly receiving stolen property S. 411, I.P.C., 28 M.L.J. 381; 28 C. 10; 1 C.W.N. 33. Theft under S. 379 cannot be charged with an offence under S. 315, I.P.C. 12 Cr. L.J. 72=9 Ind. Cas. 421; (4) dishonestly receiving stolen property S. 411 and using a false trade mark, S. 480, I.P.C., 6 C.W.N. 559; (5) three offences of breach of trust by a servant, S. 409, and three falsification of accounts, S. 477 A I.P.C., 30 M. 328, 41 C. 722; 26 C. 560; 43 B. 692; (6) kidnapping a boy under S. 365, I.P.C., and assaulting his mother when she went to get back the child, S. 352, I.P.C., 26 M. 454; (7) obstruction to a Railway line, S. 125, Railways Act, and resistance to lawful apprehension, S. 225, I.P.C., 29 C. 395; (8) theft in a building, S. 380 and resistance to lawful apprehension, S. 224, I.P.C., 4 Cr. L.J. 389; (9) offences under Ss. 372 and 373 of buying and selling a minor girl, 12 M. 273; (10) two attempts to cheat on different days are distinct offences requiring the drawing up of two charges, 2 C.L.J. 618. See also 24 A.L.J. 239 where 20 A.L.J. 320 and 32 A. 219 are referred to (11) forgery and using as genuine a forged document, 30 C. 822; (12) murder and causing disappearance of its evidence, 25 Bom. L.R. 231=25 Cr. L.J. 1349=82 Ind. Cas. 709. But see the recent Privy Council decision reported in 6 Lah. 226 where it was held that persons charged with murder under S. 302, I.P.C., can be convicted under S. 201, I.P.C., of making away with the evidence of murder by assisting in the taking away of the dead body even though there was no formal charge under S. 201, I.P.C., there was evidence on record to establish the charge. Joinder of two charges one under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, and another under S. 504, I.P.C., is not illegal where no objection was taken to such joinder in the trial Court, 50 M. 841. In two cross cases arising out of the same occurrence although two separate records are prepared, but in reality one joint trial in which the prosecution evidence in one case was treated as the defence evidence in the other, it was held that the procedure adopted was illegal and trials were set aside, 24 Cr. L.J. 551=81 Ind. Cas. 39. Joinder of two distinct offences in a single charge is only an irregularity and cannot vitiate the trial unless the accused is really prejudiced, 31 C.W.N. 337=43 C.L.J. 591=28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827, but distinct offences such as attempt to murder under S. 307, I.P.C., and S. 20 of the Arms Act ought not to be tried together, 29 Cr. L.J. 521=109 Ind. Cas. 345.

Such charge shall be tried separately.—This and the following sections relating to joinder of charges refer to the trial of the accused. The provisions contained in this section relate only to trials and not to inquiries into the guilt of the accused and as, in a warrant case the trial proper does not begin until the accused is charged and called upon to answer, No question of illegality of a joint trial arises when the accused are discharged under

S. 253, infra, 30 Cr. L.J. 404=115 Ind. Cas. 164 following 14 Cr. L.J. 230=19 Ind. Cas. 326 and distinguishing 18 Cr. L.J. 339=38 Ind. Cas. 723. The definite rule of law enacted herein cannot be disregarded to facilitate the disposal of a case against several accused, 39 M. 527; 41 C. 722; 40 C. 816. The Privy Council ruling in 25 M. 61 cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates with a view to commit the accused to the Sessions and thus render a commitment made illegal for mis-joinder of offences in the preliminary inquiry. It is open to the Sessions Court to frame separate charges and try separately as if there had been two commitments, 26 M. 592; 7 Bom. L.R. 457; 35 M.L.J. 259. But see the suggestion in 39 M. 527 at 533, that though the procedure is not obnoxious to this section, yet the procedure is not calculated to advance justice as the accused is practically on his trial the moment the prosecution starts the case. Two offences of being in possession of stolen properties belonging to different persons stolen on different days cannot be tried together in one trial, 13 C.W.N. 418=9 Cr. L.J. 277=1 Ind. Cas. 333 where 11 C.W.N. 1128 and 25 M. 61 (P.C.) are followed and 9 C. 371 not followed. Where a Magistrate framed separate charges and numbered them as distinct cases but when the witnesses were cross-examined he lost the necessity of keeping the two trials separate and allowed the witnesses to be cross-examined promiscuously in respect of both the cases, it was held the trial was illegal and the illegality cannot be cured by S. 537, infra, 29 M.L.J. 101 (F.B.)=(1915) M.W.N. 501=15 M.L.T. 93=16 Cr. L.J. 93=30 Ind. Cas. 143.

234. (1) When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences whether in respect of the same person or not he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, any number of them not exceeding three-

Three offences of same kind within a year may be charged together

(2) Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or of any special or local law :

Provided that, for the purpose of this section, an offence punishable under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an offence punishable under section 380 of the said Code, and that an offence punishable under any section of the Indian Penal Code, or of any special or local law, shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an attempt to commit such offence, when such an attempt is an offence.

Amendment.—In sub-section (1) the words 'whether in respect of the same person or not' have been added with the object of making it clear that offences of the same kind may be tried even if they were committed against different persons. The proviso is also new.

Scope and object of the section.—This section is the first exception to the previous section which requires a separate charge and separate trial for every distinct offence and allows three charges of three distinct offences of the same kind and committed within the space of one year of each other to be tried at the same time, but this does not mean that if at one time or within one year a man commits fifty distinct offences of the same kind he shall not in one day be prosecuted for more than three of such offences. See illustration (d) to S. 235, infra. This section merely places a statutory limit on the number of charges which may legally form part of a single trial. There is nothing in this section however to prevent an accused from being separately charged and tried on the same occasion for any number of distinct offences of the same kind committed within one year, 3 C. 540. The reason for such a

is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time. The remedying of mere irregularity is familiar to most systems of jurisprudence, but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted, that this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity. 25 M. 61 at 97-98 (P.C.). These observations were made by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee with regard to S. 234, infra, but they apply equally to cases falling under this section, also. In 39 M. 527 the principle of the decision of the Privy Council was applied to a case falling under this section. See also 41 C. 722 and 17 C.W.N. 479. The decision of the Privy Council in 25 M. 61 has overruled the following decisions, 27 C. 839; 28 C. 10 at 14; 20 C. 537; 22 C. 276; 14 C. 395; 21 A. 127; 14 A. 502; 11 M. 441; 12 M. 273 and 10 M.L.J. 147. If the joinder of the charge was in violation of the law, the accused must have been considerably embarrassed in their defence on the remaining charges, and their acquittal on the charges which the prosecution failed to prove cannot make valid the trial held, as it was illegal ab initio, 33 M. 502 at 505. See also 20 M.L.J. 220; 39 M. 527; 29 M. 563. 49 M.L.J. 93; 27 Cr. L.J. 793=93 Ind. Cas. 393; 1 M. L.T. 409; 14 C. 128; 5 Pat. L.J. 11; 21 A.L.J. 853=25 Cr. L.J. 954=81 Ind. Cas. 612. The joinder of two distinct offences under one charge is an illegality fatal to the proceedings, 14 Cr. L.J. 449=20 Ind. Cas. 609. The following offences are held to be distinct offences within this section:—(1) Public servant framing incorrect record, S. 166, and forgery of a record of Court or register, S. 466, I.P.C., 8 C. 450; (2) dishonestly receiving stolen property, S. 411, and habitually dealing in stolen property, S. 413, I.P.C., 8 C. 634; (3) theft in a building, S. 380, and dishonestly receiving stolen property, S. 411, I.P.C., 28 M.L.J. 381; 28 C. 10; 1 C.W.N. 35. Theft under S. 379 cannot be charged with an offence under S. 315, I.P.C. 12 Cr. L.J. 72=9 Ind. Cas. 421; (4) dishonestly receiving stolen property S. 411 and using a false trade mark, S. 480, I.P.C., 6 C.W.N. 559; (5) three offences of breach of trust by a servant, S. 409, and three falsification of accounts, S. 477 A I.P.C., 30 M. 328; 41 C. 722; 26 C. 560; 49 B. 892; (6) kidnapping a boy under S. 305, I.P.C., and assaulting his mother when she went to get back the child, S. 352, I.P.C., 25 M. 454; (7) obstruction to a Railway line, S. 125, Railways Act, and resistance to lawful apprehension, S. 225, I.P.C., 29 C. 395; (8) theft in a building, S. 380 and resistance to lawful apprehension, S. 224, I.P.C., 4 Cr. L.J. 389; (9) offences under Ss. 372 and 373 of buying and selling a minor girl, 12 M. 273; (10) two attempts to cheat on different days are distinct offences requiring the drawing up of two charges, 2 C.L.J. 618. See also 24 A.L.J. 239 where 20 A.L.J. 320 and 32 A. 219 are referred to (11) forgery and using as genuine a forged document, 30 C. 822; (12) murder and causing disappearance of its evidence, 25 Bom. L.R. 231=25 Cr. L.J. 1349=82 Ind. Cas. 709. But see the recent Privy Council decision reported in 6 Lah. 226 where it was held that persons charged with murder under S. 302, I.P.C., can be convicted under S. 201, I.P.C., of making away with the evidence of murder by assisting in the taking away of the dead body even though there was no formal charge under S. 201, I.P.C., there was evidence on record to establish the charge. Joinder of two charges one under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, and another under S. 504, I.P.C., is not illegal where no objection was taken to such joinder in the trial Court, 50 M. 841. In two cross cases arising out of the same occurrence although two separate records are prepared, but in reality one joint trial in which the prosecution evidence in one case was treated as the defence evidence in the other, it was held that the procedure adopted was illegal and trials were set aside, 24 Cr. L.J. 551=81 Ind. Cas. 39. Joinder of two distinct offences in a single charge is only an irregularity and cannot vitiate the trial unless the accused is really prejudiced, 31 C.W.N. 337=45 C.L.J. 591=28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827, but distinct offences such as attempt to murder under S. 307, I.P.C., and S. 20 of the Arms Act ought not to be tried together, 29 Cr. L.J. 521=109 Ind. Cas. 345.

Such charge shall be tried separately.—This and the following sections relating to joinder of charges refer to the trial of the accused. The provisions contained in this section relate only to trials and not to inquiries into the guilt of the accused and as, in a warrant case the trial proper does not begin until the accused is charged and called upon to answer, No question of illegality of a joint trial arises when the accused are discharged under

S. 233, infra, 30 Cr. L.J. 404=115 Ind. Cas. 164 following 18 Cr. L.J. 230=19 Ind. Cas. 326 and distinguishing 18 Cr. L.J. 339=38 Ind. Cas. 723. The definite rule of law enacted herein cannot be disregarded to facilitate the disposal of a case against several accused, 39 M. 527; 41 C. 722; 40 C. 816. The Privy Council ruling in 25 M. 61 cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates with a view to commit the accused to the Sessions and thus render a commitment made illegal for misjoinder of offences in the preliminary inquiry. 234. (1) When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences whether in respect of the same person or not he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, any number of them not exceeding three.

Three offences of same kind within a year may be charged together

(2) Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or of any special or local law :

Provided that, for the purpose of this section, an offence punishable under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an offence punishable under section 380 of the said Code, and that an offence punishable under any section of the Indian Penal Code, or of any special or local law, shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an attempt to commit such offence, when such an attempt is an offence.

Amendment.—In sub-section (1) the words 'whether in respect of the same person or not' have been added with the object of making it clear that offences of the same kind may be tried even if they were committed against different persons. The proviso is also new.

Scope and object of the section.—This section is the first exception to the previous section which requires a separate charge and separate trial for every distinct offence and allows three charges of three distinct offences of the same kind and committed within the space of one year of each other to be tried at the same time, but this does not mean that if at one time or within one year a man commits fifty distinct offences of the same kind he shall not in one day be prosecuted for more than three of such offences. See illustration (d) to S. 235, infra. This section merely places a statutory limit on the number of charges which may legally form part of a single trial. There is nothing in this section however to prevent an accused from being separately charged and tried on the same occasion for any number of distinct offences of the same kind committed within one year, 3 C. 540. The reason for such a provision is to see that the Jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of hearing together such a number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to the Judge and the accused. It is likely to cause confusion and interfere with the definite proof of a distinct offence which it is the object of the Code to obtain. The policy of such a provision is manifest and the necessity of a system of written accusation specifying a definite criminal offence is the essence of Criminal Procedure, 23 M. 61 at 97. The exceptions to S. 233 are not mutually exclusive. The language of that section does not favour this view. If it had been intended that S. 235 (2) or S. 236, infra, could not be made use of in co-operation with this section, this intention could have been easily expressed. If the exceptions are mutually exclusive, the provisions of S. 236 or 237, infra, could never be invoked to prevent a miscarriage of justice arising from a failure to make good all the details of a charge joined with two other charges under this section. It is difficult to believe that the Legislature intended that a joint trial of three offences under this section should prevent the prosecutor from establishing at the same trial the minor alternative degree of criminality involved in the acts complained of and therefore the exceptions are not mutually exclusive and Ss. 235 (2) and 236, infra, may be resorted to in framing additional charges where the trial is of three offences of the same kind committed within one year, 33 B. 221 at 237-238. This section is not limited to cases where the offence has been committed against the same person; it applies also to cases where the complainants are different persons, 23 Cr. L.J. 740=69 Ind. Cas. 628 following 43 C. 13. This section refers only to the case of a single accused and is not applicable where more persons than one are tried jointly under S. 239, infra, 21 Cr. L.J. 794=58 Ind. Cas. 522. According to the General Clauses Act words in the singular include the plural only when there is nothing repugnant in the subject or context. Here it would be repugnant to the context to read the word "a person" as including several persons, 33 C. 292; 12 Cr. L.J. 266=10 Ind. Cas. 331. To the general and broad rule contained in S. 233, supra, which, applies to all trials for offences under the Criminal Law there are four exceptions, and a Court cannot and ought not to treat a case before it as an exception to the general and broad rule, unless it is satisfied that in the case before it, the charge should be brought within one of the four exceptions and it would be safer if the Magistrate or Sessions Judge would in the charge-sheet or in his judgment state that he had reasons for bringing the case under one of those separate sections. The four exceptions are contained in Ss. 234 to 239, infra, 11 A.L.J. 168 at 190.

Offences of the same kind within twelve months.—An accused person can be tried for three offences when they are of the same kind and committed within the space of twelve months, 29 Cr. L.J. 287=107 Ind. Cas. 826 where 40 C. 846 is not followed and 27 Cr. L.J. 909=96 Ind. Cas. 221 is followed. Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable under the same section and with the same amount of punishment, and when this is not the case neither S. 236 nor S. 237, infra, can be read with this section, 23 Cr. L.J. 751=53 Ind. Cas. 159; 33 B. 77. When the appellant was tried on an indictment in which he was charged with no less than forty-one acts, these acts extending over a period of two years, it was held by the Privy Council that this was plainly in contravention of this section which provided that a person may only be tried for three offences of the same kind if committed within a period of twelve months and the course pursued was plainly illegal and cannot be amended by arranging afterwards what might or might not have been properly submitted to the jury, 23 M. 61 at 96-97. The word "offences" in this section can be held to mean not only the three offences mentioned there but also every act in itself an offence which is so connected with each of these offences as to form part of the same transaction. See 30 M. 328; 13 Cr. L.J. 21=13 Ind. Cas. 213; 4 Bom. L.R. 433; 41 C. 722 at 726; 21 Bom. L.R. 732 but see 33 B. 77 and 14 Bom. L.R. 306; 49 B. 892; which distinguished 33 B. 221. The words "of the same kind" are not limited to offences against the same person. Where an accused was charged under one charge, four counts: (1) house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft in A's house, (2) theft in A's house,

(3) theft in B's house and where he
(4) theft in B's house and where he at the words "offences of the same section, but includes a case like the present where a man has within one year committed two offences of house-breaking, 9 C. 371 dissenting from 4 A. 147, where it was held that a single trial is allowed only where the offences are committed in respect of one and the same person not against different complainants, within a period of one year. See also 19 C.W.N. 537 where it was held that this section is not limited to cases where the offences have been committed against the same person and it applies equally where the complainants are different persons. But Fletcher, J., remarked that the power given by this section is however one that requires to be used with great care and caution when there are different complainants. Two acts of cheating by the same gang though against different individuals can be charged and tried at one trial, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 299 where 7 A. 174 is followed and 4 A. 147 not followed. Two persons cannot jointly be tried for cheating, each having cheated a different person on a different date as the three acts of cheating were wholly distinct as there was no continuity between the three acts each being a completed act in itself, 12 Cr. L.J. 293=10 Ind. Cas. 63, where 33 M. 502 and 33 C. 292 are followed. This section must be read subject to the special provision contained in S. 222 (2), supra. Embezzlement of two separate sums on two different occasions in regard to the same individual is one offence and could be included in one charge, 14 C. 123; 29 M. 559; 31 C. 928; 32 C., 1083; 27 A. 69; 33 A. 36, but see 12 Bom. L.R. 226. Offences of criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts under Ss. 409 and 477A, I.P.C., are not offences of the same kind within the meaning of this section. Where three defalcations are committed on three different occasions, the false entries connected with one defalcation cannot be said to form part of the same transaction with the other defalcations or falsifications connected with them, within the meaning of this section, 49 B. 892; 30 M. 325; 41 C. 722. Waging war being a continuing offence a charge under S. 171, I.P.C., specifying more than three offences committed in the course of the same war and spread over more than one year does not contravene the provisions of this section and is not illegal. The question whether the various incidents formed parts of the same transaction or not must be judged by the facts of each case, 49 M. 74. The making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of giving false evidence and such charges of false evidence cannot be multiplied according to the number of false statements contained in the deposition and so could not be separately charged under this section, 35 C. 808; 23 Cr. L.J. 373=100 Ind. Cas. 981. Where there are two false statements on different subjects in the same deposition the accused may be tried separately and convicted of the two false statements, 51 B. 310, but once the provisions of this section are contravened the defect cannot be cured by merely striking out the offending charge after the mischief which the Legislature intended to safeguard by enacting the imperative provision, has been done, 29 M. 569; 49 M.L.J. 93; 27 Cr. L.J. 793=93 Ind. Cas. 393. See also 49 C. 555. In 41 C. 66 it was held that when the accused engaged in collecting rent was complained against by three tenants of cheating them, a single charge for all the three offences was framed, that the defect was one of duplicity and not misjoinder and there being no prejudice to the accused the trial was not bad. Where a charge of breach of trust by a clerk under S. 409, I.P.C., consisted of a total amount made up by adding together the several amounts embezzled by the accused at different periods but not realized and misappropriated at different periods, there was no contravention of the provisions of this section, 45 C.L.J. 207=28 Cr. L.J. 469=101 Ind. Cas. 597. Where a person is charged of cheating three separate persons on three different occasions in the same month, it was held there was no misjoinder and the joint trial was justified by this section, 27 Cr. L.J. 909=96 Ind. Cas. 221, but the trial of an accused person on three charges under S. 408 and one under S. 477A, I.P.C., was held to be illegal having regard to the provisions of this and the next section, 41 A. 540 where 32 A. 219 is followed; 30 M. 328; 17 Cr. L.J. 369=33 Ind. Cas. 801; 40 C. 318. See 41 C. 722; 30 A. 351; 43 A. 276 is no longer law. See the amendment in S. 239 (e). Trial of six distinct and separate charges of falsification of six separate and distinct documents, to wit, three pay bills and three cash accounts is not in accordance with law and wholly bad, 43 C.L.J. 1=28 Cr. L.J. 291 (1)=100 Ind. Cas. 371 (1).

The proviso to sub-section (2).—This proviso explains what is meant by "offences of the same kind". The word "section" in sub-section (2) is not invariably to be read in the singular. It is not the intention of this Code, either express or implied, to exclude from the operation of this section an offence because it is made the subject of more than one charge, 33 B. 77 at 86. The proper procedure in cases where the accused has committed numerous offences of the same kind is to select three typical cases and to confine the prosecution to them, 19 Cr. L.J. 161 and if the accused is acquitted then to proceed with the other charges. It was doubtful whether this section refers to the case of a single accused or to several accused also. In 33 C. 292, it was held that this section does not apply where several persons are jointly accused, S. 19 of the General Clauses Act was held not to apply. But in 25 M.L.T. 379 a different view was taken. See also 33 A. 457; 3 Pat L.J. 124. Now S. 239 (c) lends support to the view expressed in 25 M.L.T. 379; 33 A. 457; and 3 Pat. L.J. 124. See 8 Lah. 230 (P.C.), where it was held that there was no misjoinder when several persons were tried together upon several charges under S. 120B, I.P.C., (criminal conspiracy to murder) and specific instances of murder committed in pursuance of the conspiracy.

235. (1) If, in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more offences than one are committed by the same person, he may be charged with and tried at one trial for, every such offence.

Trial for more than one offence.

(2) If the acts alleged constitute an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, the person accused of them may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, each of such offences.

Offence falling within two definitions.

(3) If several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence, constitute when combined a different offence, the person accused of them may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, the offence constituted by such acts when combined, and for any offence constituted by any one, or more, of such acts.

Acts constituting one offence, but constituting when combined a different offence.

(4) Nothing contained in this section shall affect the Indian Penal Code, section 71.

Illustrations.

To sub-section (1)—(a) A rescues B, a person in lawful custody, and in so doing causes grievous hurt to C, a constable in whose custody B was. A may be charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 225 and 333 of the Indian Penal Code.

(b) A commits house-breaking by day with intent to commit adultery, and commits, in the house so entered, adultery with B's wife. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 454 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code.

(c) A entices B, the wife of C, away from C, with intent to commit adultery with B, and then commits adultery with her. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of offences under Ss. 498 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code.

(d) A has in his possession several seals, knowing them to be counterfeit and intending to use them for the purpose of committing several forgeries punishable under S. 466 of the Indian Penal Code. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, the possession of each seal under S. 473 of the Indian Penal Code.

(e) With intent to cause injury to B, A institutes a criminal proceeding against him knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceedings; and also falsely accuses B of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just, or lawful ground, for such charge. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, two offences under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code.

(f) A, with intent to cause injury to B, falsely accuses him of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charge. On the trial, A gives false evidence against B, intending thereby to cause B to be convicted of a capital offence. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 211 and 191 of the Indian Penal Code.

(g) A, with six others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt and assaulting a public servant endeavouring in the discharge of his duty as such to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 147, 325 and 152 of the Indian Penal Code.

(h) A threatens B, C and D at the same time with injury to their persons with intent to cause alarm to them. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, each of the three offences under S. 506 of the Indian Penal Code.

The separate charges referred to in Illustrations (a) to (h) respectively may be tried at the same time.

To sub-section (2)—(i) A wrongfully strikes B with a cane. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

(j) Several stolen sacks of corn are made over to A and B, who know they are stolen property, for the purpose of concealing them. A and B, thereupon voluntarily assist each other to conceal the sacks at the bottom of a grain pit. A and B may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code.

(k) A exposes her child with the knowledge that she is thereby likely to cause its death. The child dies in consequence of such exposure. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under Ss. 317 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

(l) A dishonestly uses a forged document as genuine evidence in order to convict B, a public servant, of an offence under S. 167 of the Indian Penal Code. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of offences under Ss. 471 (read with 466) and 196, of the same Code.

To sub-section (3)—A commits robbery on B, and in doing so voluntarily causes hurt to him. A may be separately charged with and convicted of, offences under Ss. 323, 392 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code.

Scope and object of the section—The object of the section is to prevent the accused from being bewildered in his defence by having to meet many disconnected charges. The prospect of a fair trial is likely to be impaired by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many different matters tending to induce an undue suspicion against the accused, 15 B. 491. This ruling enunciates a sound principle of universal application with regard to trials in criminal cases, 29 Cr. L.J. 801 at 802=111 Ind. Cas. 305, see also 16 B. 414. The provisions of this section and S. 239 infra are not imperative but merely enabling and if there is risk of embarrassing the defence such joinder of charges should not be resorted to, 52 C. 253 at 265. The language is "he may be charged with." It is not illegal to try an accused person for different offences committed, vis., rioting and causing hurt separately, 8 C. 491. In considering whether this section applies, the Court has to consider carefully whether the series of acts with which the accused is charged are so connected together as to form the same transaction, 11 A.L.J. 188. This section should be read along with S. 35, supra, and S. 71, I.P.C. This section is very much akin in phraseology with S. 239, infra; S. 239, infra, appears to be wider in scope than this section, but the main underlying principle governing these sections seems to be common, 5 Pat. L.J. 11 at 13;

while this section prescribes rules for criminal pleading and procedure to be followed in the trial of offences falling within its purview, S. 35, supra, and S. 71, I.P.O., deal with assessment of punishment for those offences. In cases falling under sub-section (1) the punishment is regulated by S. 35 supra, and in cases falling under sub-sections (2) and (3) of this section the punishment is regulated by S. 71, I.P.C. This section must be interpreted in a broad and common-sense way and not by a technical dissection of the language employed. There is a clear distinction between the three sub-sections of this section. Reading the whole section with S. 71, I.P.C., we get a fourfold result which may be stated thus:—

(1) A repetition in the same transaction of several acts of exactly the same character may constitute one crime, e.g., a number of blows on one person, a number of lies in one continuous deposition, a number of articles stolen at one house-breaking. That is a case governed by S. 71, I.P.C.

(2) A single transaction may give rise to either—

(a) Several offences of different character each complete in itself and distinct from the other, e.g., criminal breach of trust accompanied by falsification of accounts as a preliminary or a sequel to such breach; or,

(b) several offences of the same character affecting different persons, e.g., a single gunshot fired with criminal intent which injures two or more persons

Such cases come within sub-section (1) of this section.

(3) The same series of acts may constitute different offences. All may be charged, but only one offence can be regarded as committed for the purpose of inflicting punishment, e.g., a person who sets fire to a warehouse. Here his act is an offence under S. 435, I.P.C., and also under S. 433, I.P.C., and though he may be charged for both he cannot be punished for more than one of these offences. Here we have a case under sub-section (2) of this section and S. 71, I.P.C.

(4) An act in itself an offence may become either an aggravated form of that offence or a different offence when combined with some other acts, innocent or criminal. Here we have a compound offence which as well as its component minor offence may be charged under sub-section (3) of this section, but again S. 71, I.P.C., controls the punishment.

These provisions of law must not be confused with the provisions of S. 35, supra; separate offences which come under S. 71, I.P.C., and may be charged under sub-sections (2) and (3) of this section are not distinct offences within the purview of S. 35 supra; while sub-section (1) of this section seems to refer to distinct offences which are separately punishable, 14 Cr. L.J. 133=18 Ind. Cas. 837. See also 33 C. 453; 50 C. 94.

One series of acts so connected as to form the same transaction.—The Joint Committee remarked thus: "We think it will be dangerous, if not impossible to attempt any definition of the phrase 'in the course of the same transaction.' An exhaustive definition is not feasible and if the phrase is altered, the Courts will be deprived of the guidance of a long series of rulings and we do not find any pronounced conflict of opinion on the rulings." There is no definition of the expression "the same transaction." The meaning to be attached to it must be gathered from the context in which it occurs in various sections and illustrations. According to its etymological and dictionary meaning the word "transaction" means "carrying through" and suggests not necessarily proximity in time so much as continuity of action and purpose. The same metaphor implied by that word is continued in the illustrations, where the phrase used is "in the course of the same transaction." The Legislature though more than once invited has studiously and wisely refrained from attempting a definition of the phrase 'in the course of the same transaction' Each case must be considered on its merits and therefore, it is peculiarly true that no case can be an authority except upon its own facts, 51 B. 310; 45 C. L.J. 591=28 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 965. In this section the phrase is used in a connection which implies that there may be a series of acts; illus. (f) to the section indicates that the successive acts may be separated by an interval of time and that the essential progressive action, all pointing to the same object. In S. 233, infra, a series of acts separated by intervals of time are not enclosed provided that those jointly tried have throughout been directed to one and the same object, 30 B. 49 at 54-55; 53 B. 479. Two acts of kidnapping may be tried together under this section but the operation of this and S. 35, supra, cannot be combined, as by doing so the rule laid down in S. 213, supra, would be frustrated. The main principle is, for every distinct offence there should be a separate trial and the two exceptions are enacted in this and S. 235, infra. Permitting a joint trial in respect of two acts of separate and independent transactions in which different offences have been committed would create such an amount of confusion as would in most cases end in a distraction of the minds of the Judges and Jury and the accused persons themselves, 43 A. 236. The real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are connected together so as to form the same transaction depends upon whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose, or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts as to constitute one continuous action. A mere interval of time between the commission of one offence and another does not by itself necessarily import want of continuity, though the length of the interval may be an important element in determining the question of connection between the two. For instance, proximity of time combined with the use as to intention and similarity of action and result was held to bring several offences as to fraudulent transfers of property within the meaning of the words "the same transaction" in this section, 27 B. 135 at 138; 3 Luck. 664. following 27 B. 135 and 15 B. 491; 31 Bom L.R. 545. See also 28 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 965; 29 Cr. L.J. 801=111 Ind. Cas. 305. The Bombay decisions were approved and followed, in 42 C. 762; 1 Lah. 562; 21 Cr. L.J. 456=93 Ind. Cas. 248. See also 7 M.L.T. 367; 4 Cr. L. Rev. 434; 28 M.L.J. 397= (1515) M.W.N. 231=17 M.L.T. 242=16 Cr. L.J. 323=28 Ind. Cas. 659; 33 M. 502; 21 Cr. L.J. 297; 42 C. 957; 27 C.W.N. 626; 5 Pat. L.J. 11; 50 C. 100; 13 C.W.N. 1113; 23 A. L.J. 5; 25 Cr. L.J. 533=77 Ind. Cas. 997; 28 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 965; 28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827; 31 C.W.N. 337=45 C.L.J. 591. The idea conveyed by the words "same transaction" seems to be obvious enough and it may be doubted whether it can be compendiously expressed in simple and clearer language. And generally speaking there can be very little difficulty in arriving at a proper conclusion in a concrete case. "For instance, in this case, what is said to connect the different acts charged into one transaction is the allegation that these acts were committed by the six persons in pursuance of a systematic scheme for defrauding those members of the public who might subscribe to the Fund. If this contention is sound then if the company was carried for ten or twenty years, and a hundred acts of embezzlement were committed during that period the accused would be liable to be tried at one trial for all these offences. Obviously this cannot be the scope of S. 235. No doubt proximity of time any more than unity of place is neither a necessary nor decisive test of what constitutes "the same transaction" though such proximity often furnishes good evidence of connection which unites several acts into one transaction." 33 M. 502. See 26 M. 125, 27 B. 135; 30 B. 49, 16 B. 491; 15 B. 491; 53 B. 479. Community of purpose or design and continuity of action are essential elements of the connection necessary to link together different acts into one and the same transaction. In such cases the acts alleged to be connected with each other must have been done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto or perhaps as suggested by the circumstances in which the acts in pursuance of the original design were done and in close proximity of time to these acts. For it may happen that an act is done with a particular object in view but the final aim is abandoned for some time and pursued afterwards. . . . As regards community of purpose it would be going too far to lay down that the mere existence of some general purpose or design is sufficient to make all acts done with that object in view, part of the same transaction. If that were so, the result would be startling. . . . the purpose in view must be something particular and definite such as where a man with the object of misappropriating a particular sum of money or of cheating a particular individual of a certain sum falsifies books of account or forges a number of documents, 33 M. 502 at 506-507; 33 C. 453; 19 C.W.N. 672; 16 Cr. L.J. 3=26 Ind. Cas. 307; 1 Lah. 562; 27 C.W.N. 626. Courts have not to concern themselves with the ultimate object of the offender

In determining the nature of the transaction. The object may be to cause injury in some way or other to the complainant but it is the immediate purpose that determines the character of the particular transaction. . . . The criterion is, what was it that the offenders had in view as their immediate object? Mere interval of days will not disturb the oneness of the transaction; nor necessarily the fact that different sets of persons were engaged on different occasions. But if the aim of the accused on different occasions is directed towards effecting different purposes, the transactions are different, 28 M.L.J. 397 at 402=(1915) M.W.N. 241=17 M.L.T. 242=16 Cr. L.J. 323=28 Ind. Cas. 659. In each case it is a question of fact whether the acts are so connected together as to form part of the same transaction and the word "transaction" as is evident from the illustrations to the section should be read in the ordinary sense of a completed act, 7 M.L.T. 367 followed in 28 M.L.J. 397; 15 Cr. L.J. 695=23 Ind. Cas. 143; 4 Cr. L. Rev. 484; 21 A.L.J. 820=25 Cr. L.J. 486=77 Ind. Cas. 818; 19 A.L.J. 392=22 Cr. L.J. 641=63 Ind. Cas. 401=49 M. 74=26 Cr. L.J. 1513=91 Ind. Cas. 297; 49 C. 573; 26 Cr. L.J. 1602=90 Ind. Cas. 706; 30 Cr. L.J. 619=116 Ind. Cas. 369 following 43 C. 573. Where an accused is charged with five murders in one day, three in one village in the forenoon and two in another village in the afternoon, one charge cannot be framed as the murders are not committed in the same transaction and the single charge is against the provisions of this section, 17 A.L.J. 614=20 Cr. L.J. 353=56 Ind. Cas. 833. It is not possible to frame a comprehensive formula of universal application to determine whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction; but circumstances which must bear on the determination of the question in an individual case may be easily indicated; they are—(1) proximity of time, (2) unity or proximity of place (3) continuity of action, and (4) community of purpose or design 42 C. 957. at 983 following, 21 C.L.J. 195 and 201; 31 C.W.N. 337=45 C.L.J. 591=28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827. This appears to be a good working test of what should or should not be regarded as the same transaction, 35 C.L.J. 527 at 529. The expression "same transaction" used in this and S. 239 infra has been the subject of discussion in numerous cases. It has been held in some cases that if a series of acts are so connected together by proximity of time, community of criminal intention and continuity of action and purpose, or from the relation of cause and effect, as to constitute, in the opinion of the Court one transaction, then the accused may be charged with and tried at one trial for every offence committed in such series of acts and if more persons than one are accused of different offences in a series of acts so connected, they may be tried together. In other cases it has been held the word "transaction" suggests not necessarily proximity in time so much as continuity of action and purpose i.e., it is not necessary that the act should have been committed all on the same occasion but it is sufficient that though separated by a distinct interval of time they are closely connected by continuity of purpose or progressive action towards a single object. In accordance with the last mentioned view it has been held that, where the accusation against all the accused persons is that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts done at intervals and there was a complete unity of project and the whole series of acts were so linked together by one motive and design as to constitute one transaction within the meaning of S. 239, infra, a joint trial is not only legal but is demanded in the interests of public time and convenience. In all these cases, however the foundation for the procedure is the association of two or more persons concerning from start to finish to attain the same end, 80 C. 1004 at 1008-09. Joint trial for offences falling in two distinct transactions is not permitted, 42 A. 12; 21 Bom. L.R. 732; 31 C.W.N. 337=45 C.L.J. 591=28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827. The mere fact that complaints were made on the same day or that the motive of the commission of the offence was the same on all the four occurrences does not at all go to show that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction, 18 Cr. L.J. 739=40 Ind. Cas. 739. The question whether certain offences specified in different charges were or were not so connected together that it might fairly be said that they had been committed in the course of the same transaction is substantially one of fact, 26 Cr. L.J. 29=83 Ind. Cas. 509; 31 C.W.N. 337=45 C.L.J. 591=23 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827. The validity of an indictment depends not on the facts as found at the trial but on the circumstances alleged before the trial commences, 55 C. 853; 30 Cr. L.J. 619=116 Ind.

Cas. 369. Where the accused committed theft of sheep and on being remonstrated by the owner, threatened to use force to him, drove him into his house and confined him there till late at night and on the next morning went again to his house and renewed their threat and intimidation, it was held that all the above acts formed part of the same transaction and could be tried together as the purpose of the accused throughout was to demonstrate their power over the complainant to bully and intimidate him, 9 Cr. L.J. 367=1 Ind. Cas. 632.

Instances of clear misjoinder of charges.—(1) act of permitting cattle to trespass, subsequent rioting and rescue, 7 M.L.T. 367=(1910) M.W.N. 541=11 Cr. L.J. 293=6 Ind. Cas. 242; (2) obstructing an Amlin of a Civil Court in executing a decree and subsequent assault on the decree-holder's son, 13 C.W.N. 1113; (3) kidnapping a child, its wrongful confinement, and assault on its mother when she went to get back the child, 28 M. 454; (4) offences under S 302 and S. 201, I.P.C., causing disappearance of evidence of the same, Weir II, 301; 8 A. 252; 22 C. 638. But these rulings are now obsolete owing to the Privy Council decision in 6 Lah. 226 where it was held that a person though not charged under S. 201, I.P.C., can be convicted thereunder in a trial on a charge under S. 302, I.P.C. Therefore there could be no illegality in charging him under both sections in the alternative, 30 C.W. N. 816; (5) misappropriation of the proceeds of a cheque and cheating and thereby inducing delivery of property from a Railway goods shed without payment, 13 C.W.N. 1039=10 Cr. L.J. 476=4 Ind. Cas. 28; (6) theft of crops by A and subsequent rioting and hurt by A's friends in rescuing A from legal custody, 28 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 965; 4 Cr. L. Rev. 434=15 Cr. L.J. 695=26 Ind. Cas. 143 following 7 M.L.T. 367=1910 M.W.N. 541=11 Cr. L.J. 293=6 Ind. Cas. 242. See also 29 C. 385; 13 C.W.N. 804; 31 C. 1053.

Sub-section (2) deals with offences falling within two or more separate definitions of any law for the time being by which offences are punished, see S 71 (2) and (3), I.P.C. When the acts alleged against the accused, viz., of making a false report of an alleged offence fall within two definitions of the I.P.C. namely under Ss. 211 and 500, I.P.C., this sub-section applied; the accused could be charged with both the offences and tried at one trial for each of such offences but if he is convicted of one of such offences he cannot legally be tried over again for an offence under the other section, 27 A.L.J. 1056 at 1058 following 10 C.W.N. 518.

Sub-section (3)—This sub-section deals with acts constituting one offence but constituting when combined a different offence, see S. 71 (3), I.P.C., 19 C. 105; 12 C. 495; 16 C. 442; 7 A. 414 and 29; 9 A. 645; 17 B. 280.

Sub-section (4).—As a matter of adjective law this section confines itself to the question of trial till the stage of conviction while S. 71, I.P.C., as a matter of substantive law deals with the question of punishment, the necessary result of a conviction. A person tried and convicted of several offences under this section is liable to be punished for each of such offences unless the case falls within the provisions of S. 71, I.P.C.

Illustrations.—The illustration to the various sub sections makes the meaning of the sub-sections quite clear. Illustrations (a) to (h) deal with cases of various acts committed in the course of one transaction where though the ultimate object is one, different acts are committed in the course of attaining it, and those acts form by themselves, or when combined with other different offences, causing grievous hurt for extorting information and making false entries to attribute another cause for the death of the injured person, for offences under Ss. 193, 218, 330 and 331, I.P.C., can be tried together and such a joinder of charges comes within illustration (f) to this section, 14 Bom. L.R. 41=13 Cr. L.J. 137=13 Ind. Cas. 825. Illustration (e). The heading shows that this is an illustration to sub-section (1) and it does not state whether the institution of criminal proceedings and the false accusation were on the same day or on different dates. But in either case distinct offences have been committed, 30 Bom. L.R. 342=29 Cr. L.J. 522=109 Ind. Cas. 346. Illustrations (i) to (l) deal with cases where though the act is one yet when viewed from different aspects it constitutes more offences than one. Illustration (j) to this section supplies a conclusive answer to the contention that a person who has dishonestly received stolen property cannot possibly be charged and convicted of voluntarily concealing or disposing of the property. The illustration says as plainly as possible that both of them may be separately charged with, and convicted of offences under Ss. 411 and 414, I.P.O. This is an illustration to the general principle embodied in sub-section (2) of this section, that if the acts alleged, constitute an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force by which offences are defined or punished the person accused of them may be charged and tried at one trial for each of such offences 49 B. 878 at 887-88. Illustration (m) deals with a case where though the elements constituting the two offences are the same to some extent the result of their combination materially differs from its component parts.

236. If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences.

Where it is doubtful what offence has been committed.

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of an act which may amount to theft, or receiving stolen property, or criminal breach of trust or cheating. He may be charged with theft, receiving stolen property, criminal breach of trust and cheating, or he may be charged with having committed theft, or receiving stolen property, or criminal breach of trust or cheating.

(b) A states on oath before the Magistrate that he saw B hit C with a club. Before the Sessions Court A states on oath that B never hit C. A may be charged in the alternative and convicted of intentionally giving false evidence, although it cannot be proved which of these contradictory statements was false.

Scope of the section.—This section refers to a series of acts which are of such a nature that it is doubtful which of the several offences the facts constitute, 40 C. 168. The essential difference between cumulative charges, alternative charges and charges in the alternative is, that under the first the Court is asked to convict of two or more offences, under the second of any one specified offence, under the third of one or other of two offences without specifying which. There is no limit whatever expressly imposed by the section in its application except that the doubt which arises must have a special origin. In practice, however, the use of a charge in the alternative is restricted to narrow limits, 12 Cr. L.J. 224 at 229 = 10 Ind. Cas. 168. This section is intended to apply to cases where there is no doubt that the accused person must have committed one of two or more offences punishable under either the same or different sections, but in which without proof of further facts it is not possible to say which offence has been committed. When on the prosecution evidence no doubt arises as to which of several offences the accused has committed, but it is only doubtful what part, if any, the accused has taken in the occurrence, this section can have no possible application, 18 C.L.J. 574 at 577 = 15 Cr. L.J. 41 = 22 Ind. Cas. 185; 40 B. 97; 21 C. 955. This section does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts but applies only where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to a certain set of facts which have been proved. The Magistrate is not entitled to compromise his doubt as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, 28 Cr. L.J. 759 = 103 Ind. Cas. 839. This section contemplates a state of facts constituting a single offence but it is doubtful whether the act or acts involved may amount to one or other of several cognate offences, 23 C. 174; 18 C.L.J. 574 = 15 Cr. L.J. 41 = 22 Ind. Cas. 185; 36 M. 308. This section only permits a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute and not when there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence, 21 C. 955. But it is unsatisfactory to have an alternative indictment one Court charging the accused as principal and, the other as accessory after the fact, 20 C.W.N. 169 at 168; see 50 C. 564; 22 C.W.N. 199.

An accused may be charged in this alternative under this section with offences under S. 330, I.P.C., and S. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act (possession of or offering for sale or pawn, property believed to be stolen), and convicted under S. 237, infra, of the latter offence though not separately charged therewith, 53 C. 564 where 22 C.W.N. 199 is followed. So also an accused may be charged in the alternative with mischief and rioting and when not so charged an acquittal for one of the offences is a bar to the trial of the other offence by virtue of S. 403 (1), infra, 19 L.W. 31. A joinder of charges under S. 411 and S. 414, I.P.C., is bad unless the charges are framed in the alternative under this section. But when no such alternative charge is framed, a Magistrate cannot remedy the error at the conclusion of the trial by stating in his judgment that he would proceed only on the charges legally joined. If any charge is to be struck out, it should be done before concluding the trial thus giving the accused an opportunity to defend himself on the amended charge, 49 C. 555. A joint trial for offences under Ss. 330 and 414 I.P.C. is valid even though the charges are framed cumulatively and not in the alternative, 8 Pat. 731. A conviction in the alternative under s. 457 or 215, I.P.C., is bad in law.

Series of Acts.—These words imply two or more acts connected by some more intimate relation than that of consecutiveness in time. Two acts of swearing to certain facts before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Court occur in the preliminary and final stages of the same trial and therefore there is a clear connection between them other than mere temporal, and therefore two series acts of swearing would form a series, 23 Cr. L.J. 1195= 82 Ind. Cas. 59.

Which of several offences.—The expression "several offences" applies not only to two or more offences punishable under different sections of any law but also applies to two or more offences punishable under different parts of the same section. The offences mentioned in this section are not in fact offences of the same kind but offences of different kinds arising out of a single act or series of acts and combined at one and the same time, 9 C. 371. This section contemplates a state of facts constituting a single offence, but where it is doubtful whether the act or acts involved may amount to one or other of several offences the accused may be simultaneously charged with and tried for the commission of all or any of the charges and after an acquittal or conviction cannot be again tried on the same facts, either for the specific offence or offences for which he has already been tried or for any other offence for which he might have been tried under the provisions of this section, 23 C. 173 at 178, but if on a reversal of the conviction on one of two alternative charges, a retrial is ordered, then the retrial must be taken to be on all the charges originally framed and the acquittal by the Jury at the previous trial on some of the charges is no bar to the retrial on all the charges, 23 C. 377; 23 C. 975.

May be charged with all or any of such offences.—This section applies only to cases in which the prosecution is not in a position to establish conclusively any one offence but is able on the facts proved to exclude the innocence of the accused and to show that he must have committed one of two or more offences.

May be charged in the alternative, etc.—In the first place, this section is nothing more than a permissive rule of procedure. Whether it is expedient to frame a charge in the alternative or whether it will unfairly embarrass the accused in the conduct of his defence are two of the most important questions which should be answered satisfactorily before the procedure is followed. Secondly the cases in which a charge in the alternative can effectively be used must necessarily be rare. The prosecution is never relieved of its burden of proving the guilt of the accused and the prosecution case must be such that it is a fair inference from the facts of which direct evidence is offered that the accused committed one of two offences, otherwise the trial on a charge in the alternative must inevitably prove futile, 12 Cr. L. J. 223 at 230=10 Ind. Cas. 168. The word "alternative" means a choice between two things so that if one is taken out the other must remain. An accused cannot be charged alternatively in respect of distinct offences or even in respect of cognate offences when the difference is only one of degree, i.e., as to the intention imputed to the accused, or as to some circumstance of aggravation. An alternative charge is justified only when it is difficult to establish the falsity of one of the two statements and not otherwise, 28 Cr. L. J. 645=103 Ind. Cas. 101. An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the Indian Penal Code and one under a Special law, nor can a Court inflict a sentence on a person found guilty in the alternative of an offence under the Indian Penal Code and another under a Special Act, 12 Cr. L. J. 224 at 230=10 Ind. Cas. 168. Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together into one head of charge. If a Magistrate desires to charge the accused in the alternative he must frame two separate alternative charges. This section does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts but applies only where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to a certain set of facts which have been proved, while the facts are in doubt there is no objection to the Magistrate framing alternative charges but at the conclusion of the case he is not entitled to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is therefore bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts and then only if the law applicable to prove facts is doubtful he may convict in the alternative, 7 Ran. 96. Alternative charges may properly be framed against an accused person on the same set of facts but alternative charges which include offences which do not arise out of the same set of facts as those with which they are united even though tried in the same proceedings ought to be made clear to the accused before trial, and dealt with by the Court in its final decision, 25 Cr. L. J. 592=81 Ind. Cas. 80. When no such alternative charge is framed a Magistrate cannot remedy the error at the conclusion of the trial by stating in his judgment that he would proceed only on charges legally joined. If any charge is to be struck out it should be done before conclusion of trial thus affording the accused person an opportunity to defend himself on the amended charge, 49 C. 535. An accused person may be charged in the alternative of mischief and rioting; when not so charged an acquittal of one of the offences is a bar to the trial of the other offence by virtue of S. 403 (1), infra, 19 L.W. 31; see also, 50 C. 564. If two contradictory statements recorded in two utterly unconnected cases one, a deposition as an approver in a Sessions case and the second as a defendant in a civil suit, they cannot form the basis of an alternative charge for perjury, 25 Cr. L. J. 1195=82 Ind. Cas. 59. Where a person makes contradictory statements at the police investigation under S 164, supra and subsequently at the inquiry before a competent Magistrate, the two statements constitute a series of acts within the section on which an alternative charge for perjury can be framed, 26 Cr. L. 1437=89 Ind. Cas. 1025 where 45 B. 834 (F.B.) is followed. If a witness makes a statement and later in the course of the same deposition contradicts it and says it was untrue, the whole deposition amounts to no more than the second statement. He cannot be convicted of perjury in the alternative, in one or the other of the two statements and if the first can be proved to be false he cannot be convicted of more than an attempt to commit perjury, 28 Cr. L. J. 645=103 Ind. Cas. 101. When a conviction is in the alternative only, the sentence to be passed cannot be heavier than what is suitable for the less serious offence, 1903 P.R. (Cr. J.) 60 at p. 247. When no alternative charge had been framed against an accused in the trial Court, the appellate Court in hearing an appeal from the conviction ought not to order a re-trial or an alternative charge, 8 Lah. 496.

There is no limit whatever expressly imposed by the section in its application except that the doubt which arises must have a special origin. In practice, however, the use of a charge in the alternative is restricted to narrow limits, 12 Cr. L. J. 224 at 229=10 Ind. Cas. 168. Alternative charges are not only permissible but also legal, 30 C.W.N. 816 following 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.) Alternative charges under this section cannot be framed in respect of distinct offences, not even in respect of cognate offences when the difference is one of degree, i.e., as to the intention imputed to the accused or as to some circumstance of aggravation. An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the Indian Penal Code and an offence under a Special law, nor can a Court inflict a sentence on a person found guilty in the alternative of an offence under the I.P.C. and another under a Special Act, 12 Cr. L. J. 224=10 Ind. Cas. 168. A joinder of charges of murder and causing disappearance of evidence of murder in the alternative is legal, 11 Cr. L. J. 731=8 Ind. Cas. 936; 30 C.W.N. 816. An alternative conviction is permissible only if on the facts found the law is doubtful, 14 Cr. L.J. 664=21 Ind. Cas. 904; 7 Ran. 98. A person cannot be convicted in the alternative with having committed an offence under S. 182, I.P.C., and another under S. 211, I.P.C., 11 Cr. L.J. 420=6 Ind. Cas. 144 where 32 C. 130 and 31 B. 204 are followed. For form of charge in the alternative under S. 193, I.P.C., see Sch. V, Form No. XXVIII (1) (4), infra. A joint trial for offences under Ss. 390 and 414, I.P.C., is valid even though the charges are framed cumulatively and not in the alternative, 8 Pat. 731.

Illustrations (a) and (b) make the meaning of the section clear. Illustration (b) was added in the Code of 1893 to settle the law that contradictory statements by a witness which are irreconcilable constitute the offence of intentionally giving false evidence, though it can not be proved which of the two statements is false. The illustration adopts the view in 13 B.L.R. 324=21 W.R. (Cr) 72 (F.B.); see also 7 A. 44; Weir II, 300. Omission to frame an alternative charge comes within the expression "error or irregularity in any inquiry or other proceedings" in S. 537 infra, [1916] 2 M.W.N. 267; 26 B. 533.

237. (1) If, in the case mentioned in section 236, the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it.

Scope of the section.—This section and S. 227, supra, necessarily go together and it is not the intention of the Legislature to convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything, 26 Cr. L.J. 1057=88 Ind. Cas. 1; 24 A.L.J. 168=27 Cr. L.J. 152=91 Ind. Cas. 838. The application of this section is by its express terms restricted to the case mentioned in S. 236, supra, 18 C.L.J. 574 at 577=15 Cr. L.J. 41=22 Ind. Cas. 185. Where on the evidence there is no doubt as to the facts, although it may be doubtful what precise offence the accused has committed on the facts alleged, it was held to such a case the provisions of this section are applicable and the accused may therefore be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed although he is not charged with it, 41 C. 537 at 544. This section is to be read with S. 236, supra. If the facts of the case do not fall under that section, this section has got no application. It is open to a Magistrate to convict an accused for a lesser offence than that with which the accused was charged, e.g., to convict the accused under S. 290, I.P.C., when charged under S. 278, I.P.C., 3 Luck. 680, but when a trial was begun as a warrant case the Court is not entitled to alter the charge into one triable as a summons case in the middle of the trial holding the evidence made out only an offence triable as a summons case and convict the accused of such an offence without a formal charge, 23 Cr. L.J. 227 (2)=93 Ind. Cas. 1027 (2). Where therefore the petitioners were convicted for rioting under S. 147, I.P.C., but in appeal the Judge while setting aside the conviction convicted them for causing hurt under S. 323, I.P.C., an offence for which they were not charged, it was held that the accused had no opportunity to defend themselves on the charge of hurt and the conviction was bad in law, 18 C.W.N. 1276, but a person charged constructively under S. 149, I.P.C., cannot be convicted of the substantive offence, 21 Cr. L.J. 439=56 Ind. Cas. 231; 34 C. 698; 6 C.W.N. 98; 50 C. 94. A person charged

Scope of the section.—This section and S. 227, supra, necessarily go together and it is not the intention of the Legislature to convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything, 26 Cr. L.J. 1057=88 Ind. Cas. 1; 24 A.L.J. 168=27 Cr. L.J. 152=91 Ind. Cas. 838. The application of this section is by its express terms restricted to the case mentioned in S. 236, supra, 18 C.L.J. 574 at 577=15 Cr. L.J. 41=22 Ind. Cas. 185. Where on the evidence there is no doubt as to the facts, although it may be doubtful what precise offence the accused has committed on the facts alleged, it was held to such a case the provisions of this section are applicable and the accused may therefore be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed although he is not charged with it, 41 C. 537 at 544. This section is to be read with S. 236, supra. If the facts of the case do not fall under that section, this section has got no application. It is open to a Magistrate to convict an accused for a lesser offence than that with which the accused was charged, e.g., to convict the accused under S. 290, I.P.C., when charged under S. 278, I.P.C., 3 Luck. 680, but when a trial was begun as a warrant case the Court is not entitled to alter the charge into one triable as a summons case in the middle of the trial holding the evidence made out only an offence triable as a summons case and convict the accused of such an offence without a formal charge, 23 Cr. L.J. 227 (2)=93 Ind. Cas. 1027 (2). Where therefore the petitioners were convicted for rioting under S. 147, I.P.C., but in appeal the Judge while setting aside the conviction convicted them for causing hurt under S. 323, I.P.C., an offence for which they were not charged, it was held that the accused had no opportunity to defend themselves on the charge of hurt and the conviction was bad in law, 18 C.W.N. 1276, but a person charged constructively under S. 149, I.P.C., cannot be convicted of the substantive offence, 21 Cr. L.J. 439=58 Ind. Cas. 231; 34 C. 698; 6 C.W.N. 98; 50 C. 84. A person under Ss. 147 and 323, I.P.C. cannot be convicted under S. 160, I.P.C. unless proper charge is framed and the accused tried on the latter charge, 47 M. 61. This section deals with a case where in the case mentioned in S. 236, supra, the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of S. 236; but this does not apply, because S. 236 only refers to a series of acts which are of such a nature that it is doubtful which of the several offences the facts constitute. Where there was no doubt whatever about what was charged or on the evidence about hurt being caused to one person, the conviction for rioting and causing hurt to another person are questions totally different and independent and the trial should have been on a distinct and separate charge, 40 C. 183 at 172. Where a Court finds it necessary to make use of this section in order to convict an accused of an offence with which he has not been charged, the Court should be particularly careful to formulate to its own mind the charge it had duly framed, and on which it proposed to convict, 17 Cr. L.J. 4=32 Ind. Cas. 656. The operation of this section is limited to cognate offences but does not relate to offences of so distinct a character as murder and theft, 1883 A.W.N. 95. This section must necessarily be limited in its operation to cognate offences, offences under Ss. 376 and 366, I.P.C., involved different elements and different questions of fact but offences under Ss. 160 and 147 I.P.C. were obviously ejusdem generis and it is not illegal in convicting under S. 160 I.P.C. when charged with an offence under S. 147 I.P.C., 23 Cr. L.J. 189=99 Ind. Cas. 61 distinguishing 8 Bom. L.R. 120=5 Cr. L.J. 240. Persons tried for theft can be convicted as receivers if the acts proved lead to the inference that receipt rather than theft has been committed, 17 M.L.J. 219. So also a person charged with forgery may be convicted of user even though not charged, 21 Cr. L.J. 410=56 Ind. Cas. 581; see 33 M. 254; 11 B.H.C.R. 210; 15 L.W. 83=(1922) M.W.N. 182. If the prosecution establishes certain acts constituting an offence and the Court misapplies the law by charging and convicting the accused for an offence other than for which he should have been properly charged and if notwithstanding such error the accused by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of those acts, then an appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute provided the accused is not prejudiced by such alteration of charge or finding. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance. Thus when the conviction for theft was altered into one under S. 143, I.P.C., and the sentence maintained by the appellate Court, it was held that the accused were prejudiced and therefore the conviction bad because the defence in the two cases must be distinct. But having regard to the ruling of the Privy Council in 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.) such alteration may only be an irregularity cured under S. 537 infra, and a conviction even without a charge may be held good, 54 C. 476. An appellate Court can alter a conviction under S. 353 I.P.C. into one under S. 189, I.P.C. when the actual assault is found against, 2 Luck. 503 but the appellate Court is not empowered in setting aside a conviction under S. 453 I.P.C. to alter it into one under S. 19 (c) of the Arms Act as the accused person was not charged with that offence and had no opportunity of meeting it, 4 Ran. 355. Similarly when there was no alternative charge in the trial Court that it was open to the prosecution to do so, on a conviction for dacoity, it was not open to the appellate Court to find the accused guilty under S. 457 I.P.C. without a specific charge for that offence, 2 Luck. 444. A person may be convicted of an offence, although there has been no charge in respect of it, if the evidence is such as to establish a charge that might have been made. Three men were convicted of making away with the evidence of the crime of murder by assisting in taking away the body. They were not charged with that formally, but they were tried on evidence which brings the case under this section. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that they entertained no doubt that the procedure was a proper procedure and one warranted by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.) followed in 30 Bom. L.R. 330 and 29 Cr. L.J. 459=103 Ind. Cas. 507 but in 29 Cr. L.J. 763=110 Ind. Cas. 795 it was held distinguishing 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.) that where a person is charged under S. 392 and 397 I.P.C. he cannot be convicted under S. 325 I.P.C. as dacoity is an offence against property, whereas causing hurt is an offence against person and it was therefore not open to the Court to convict under S. 325 I.P.C., when charged with S. 392 and 397, I.P.C.. It is now settled law that a person may be convicted under Ss. 201, I.P.C., even though he is charged only under S. 302, I.P.C. But an accused charged under S. 302, I.P.O. cannot be convicted of an offence punishable under S. 191, I.P.O. (fabricating evidence of injury on the dead body after death), 27 Cr. L.J. 1351=98 Ind. Cas. 471. There cannot be an illegality in charging the accused under both Ss. 302 and 201 I.P.O., alternatively, 27 Cr. L.J. 1011=68 Ind. Cas. 887 where 6 Lah. 226 is followed. See 30 C.W.N. 816. When a person is charged with murder and convicted of that offence it is not open to the appellate Court to alter the conviction under S. 302, I.P.O., to one under one of the sections dealing with offences against property, 4 Lah. 373. See also 7 Lah. 261 where 4 Lah. 373 is followed and 6 Lah. 226 was distinguished on the ground that the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the latter case must be read with the facts of that particular case and not to be taken as laying down any rule of general application. On a charge of abetment of forgery, the accused cannot be convicted of an offence of using as genuine a forged document. The offence of abetment of forgery is complete when the document is written and signed but the user is a distinct and different offence for which the accused is entitled to be charged separately, 53 C. 466. But it has been held in 29 Cr. L.J. 1093=112 Ind. Cas. 677, that no such universal rule can be laid down applicable to every case but the true rule seems to be whether in each particular case prejudice has been caused to the accused by reason of the conviction for abetment of the offence in the absence of charge for abetment. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 224=113 Ind. Cas. 891 following 41 C.L.J. 216=28 Cr. L.J. 2=99 Ind. Cas. 34 and 23 M.L.J. 722. -

Sub-section (2) which existed previously has been omitted here but is added to S. 238, where it is more appropriate. It was held in a number of decisions that when a person is charged with the principal offence the Court cannot convict him of abetment, as provision is made in sub-section (2A) of S. 238, infra, to attempts and not to abetments of offences, the only inference that abetment should be specifically charged and without which a conviction is illegal, 33 M. 264; 15 L.W. 583=(1922) M.W.N. 182; 13 Cr. L.J. 203=14 Ind. Cas. 203 13 Cr. L.J. 223; 1921 Pat 96; 26 Bom. L.R. 715=23 Cr. L.J. 1292=82 Ind. Cas. 362; 26 Bom. L.R. 323=25 Cr. L.J. 1135=81 Ind. Cas. 959; 44 C.L.J. 414; 49 A. 120, 28 Cr. L.J. 2=99 Ind. Cas. 34; 3 Ran. 11 at 27-28, takes a different view and holds that the conviction is not bad.

238. (1) When a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, and such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it.

When offence proved included in offence charged.

(2) When a person is charged with an offence and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence, he may be convicted of the minor offence, although he is not charged with it.

(2A) When a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although the attempt is not separately charged.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize a conviction of any offence referred to in section 198 or section 199 when no complaint has been made as required by that section.

Illustrations.

(a) A is charged, under S. 407 of the Indian Penal Code, with Criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted to him as a carrier. It appears that he did commit criminal breach of trust under S. 406 in respect of the property, but that it was not entrusted to him as a carrier. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust under S. 406.

(b) A is charged, under S. 325 of the Indian Penal Code, with causing grievous hurt. He proves that he acted on grave and sudden provocation. He may be convicted under S. 335 of the Code.

Amendment.—Sub-section (2A) is newly added: it was previously sub-section (2) to S. 237, supra.

Scope of the section—The principle, the greater includes the less and when more is done than ought to be done, the act is valid, for the part that ought to be done and is void as to the excess, is recognized by the Code as under this section a charge of a major offence will in some cases operate as a charge for a minor offence, 15 Cr. L.J. 804 at 805=21 Ind. Cas. 478. This section is an enabling provision and not an imperative one. So when an accused was charged and convicted under S. 454, I.P.C., the conviction was held good although the facts proved amounted to an offence under S. 380, I.P.C., and the accused could have been tried for both the charges, Ratanlal 307, 26 Bom. L.R. 323=25 Cr. L.J. 1135=81 Ind. Cas. 959. The powers given by this section to convict for a minor offence are not controlled by those sections which prescribe the procedure to be followed in trying the offence charged, 44 C.L.J. 239. So on the trial of an accused by a Sessions Judge for an offence so triable it is competent to the Judge to convict the accused of a minor offence though the minor offence is triable only by a jury, 22 Bom. L.R. 1241. This section applies to cases in which a charge is for an offence which consists of several particulars a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence. Though the Magistrate has power under this section to convict the accused of a different charge from what was originally formulated, this must be done only in cases where the accused is not prejudiced by a conviction on the new charge. The accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him, and unless he knows this he must be seriously prejudiced, 23 Cr. L.J. 114=65 Ind. Cas. 346; 44 C. 358; 11 C. 106. Though an accused person may be charged in the alternative with either of two offences under S. 236, supra, and may be convicted under S. 237, supra, with the offence which is proved though not specially charged, these two sections must be read together, 13 Cr. L.J. 429=14 Ind. Cas. 973. The grave charge gives to the accused notice of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor one of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former, 11 B.H.C.R. 240 at 241. In such cases the only consideration is whether the accused has been prejudiced by being convicted for a minor offence. In determining this question, the nature of the case made at the trial against the accused, the evidence that was given and the line of defence set up are all matters to be considered, 20 C.W.N. 1075. An accused cannot be convicted of abetment when charged only with the substantive offence, 28 Cr. L.J. 2=99 Ind. Cas. 34 but see 3 Ran. 11. Sub section (2A) newly added expressly mentions an attempt to commit an offence and the inference is in the case of abetment, a charge should be framed and without which a conviction of abetment cannot stand, 44 C.L.J. 214; 33 M. 261; 1921 Pat. 96. See the decisions collected at pp. 447 and 450.

Constitute a complete minor offence.—What is regarded as a minor offence when compared with another has not been defined by law and the words "minor offence" may be taken in their ordinary sense, e.g., an offence under S. 365 would be a minor offence as compared with that punishable under S. 360, I.P.C. The words "minor offence" are to be taken not in any technical sense but in their ordinary sense, 22 C. 1006 at 1010. Conviction for minor offences though not expressly charged is allowed by this section, 44 C.L.J. 239. Where an accused person is charged with an offence under S. 412, I.P.C., an offence triable by a jury, the jury is entitled to return a verdict of guilty on the minor offence under S. 411, I.P.C., although such minor offence is triable with the aid of assessors, and under this section a conviction under S. 411, I.P.C., is legal and the accused cannot complain of the verdict being given by the jury for an offence triable with the aid of assessors when such a verdict is accepted by the Judge, 27 Bom. L.R. 1416=27 Cr. L.J. 650=94 Ind. Cas. 602 where 33 B. 423; 49 B. 619; 25 B. 680 and 26 M. 243 are referred to. The following are held to be minor offences.—(1) Offence under S. 304 when charged with an offence under S. 302, I.P.C., 20 B. 215;

(2) offence under S. 335 when charged with S. 305, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 61; (3) offence under S. 412 when charged with offence under S. 305, 1 B. 50.; and the following were held not minor offences—(1) Offence under S. 306 is not minor to an offence under S. 376, 1 P.C., 8 Bom. L.R. 120-3 Cr. L.J. 242. (2) offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship, S. 363 is not minor to the offence of murder, S. 302, 1 P.C., Weir II, 302; (3) offence under S. 493 is not minor to the offences under Ss. 363 and 366, I.P.C., 31 B. 218, see also 20 A. 166 when a person is charged with robbery he cannot be convicted without the charge being altered, of an offence of house-breaking by night, as robbery cannot include the latter offence, but house breaking by night is a graver offence than one of robbery, 13 Cr. L.J. 429-14 Ind. Cas. 973. It has been held in 1 Bom. L.R. 513 that a conviction for a major offence is not necessarily bad when charged only with a minor offence.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section invests the Court trying the offence (however constituted) with authority to find as an incident to such trial that certain facts only are proved in the trial, which facts constitute a minor offence though such minor offence is not triable by the Court as constituted, 23 Bom. L.R. 1211 at 1243. Ordinarily a charge ought to be framed under the provisions of the Code, but in the case of minor offence a conviction can be recorded without a charge being framed, ibid at 1245. The necessary implication of this section appears to be that there need not be a separate trial with reference to a minor offence, ibid at 1245, when a person was originally charged under S. 452, I.P.C., but the facts proved established a case under S. 426, I.P.C. a conviction under the latter section is justified under the provisions of this sub-section, 23 Cr. L.J. 1037=81 Ind. Cas. 911. When certain persons were charged under S. 147, I.P.C., with the common object of taking forcible possession of complainant's land and of assaulting him, and were convicted of criminal trespass under S. 417, I.P.C., without any charge being framed against them or without their being called upon to plead to such a charge and this sub-section was invoked to maintain the conviction it was held that inasmuch as the common object charged, was not to commit criminal trespass, the conviction was clearly bad, 18 C.W.N. 992=15 Cr. L.J. 188=22 Ind. Cas. 764. Similarly a person charged with dacoity and rioting cannot properly be convicted with criminal trespass as that offence is no part of the offence of dacoity or rioting, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 39. A person charged with rape on a married woman cannot be convicted of having committed adultery with the same woman on the same facts, 8 A. 233; 27 M. 61. But an accused charged under Ss. 304 and 325, I.P.C., can properly be convicted under S. 323, I.P.C., without any specific charge under that section; when certain persons are charged under Ss. 304 and 325 read with S. 149, I.P.C., with regard to an offence alleged to have been committed by another person and the evidence as to the riot is disbelieved, they cannot be convicted under S. 323, I.P.C., in respect of their individual acts with which they were not charged and which were not imputed to them in the Judge's charge to the Jury, 34 C. 325. Similarly where certain persons were charged with rioting, culpable homicide and causing grievous hurt not by themselves but through others constructively under S. 149, I.P.C., and they were convicted under S. 325, I.P.C., it was held that under no reasonable construction of Ss. 236 to 233 can it be said that the offences of causing grievous hurt is minor to, or included in a charge under S. 325 read with S. 149, I.P.C., 34 C. 693 at 703, where 6 C.W.N. 83 is followed. See 47 M. 745 (F.B.) which holds that the legality of the conviction depends upon whether the accused was materially prejudiced by the omission in the charge.

Sub-section (2A).—Sub-section (2) of S. 237 is omitted from that section and now added to this section as this is thought to be the proper place for it. This sub-section relates only to attempt and is in accordance with S. 9 of 14 and 15 vict. ch. 100. That section permits a conviction for attempt on an indictment for a complete offence and it was enacted as offenders often escape conviction by reason that such persons were not specifically charged with attempting to commit offences. 'If on the trial of any person charged with felony or misdemeanour it shall appear to the jury upon the evidence that the defendant did not complete the offence charged but he has been guilty of an attempt to commit the same, such person shall not by reason thereof be entitled to an acquittal but the jury shall be at liberty to return as their verdict . . . that the defendant is guilty of an attempt to commit the same and therefore such person shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for attempt to commit the particular felony or misdemeanour charged'. Having regard to the manner in which this sub-section expressly makes mention of an attempt to convict an offence while it is silent with regard to abetment of the offence, the inference appears to be that, in the case of abetment, it is necessary that a charge should be framed on a charge for a substantive offence, the conviction for abetment of such offence is unsustainable, 44 C.L.J. 216=28 Cr. L.J. 2=99 Ind. Cas. 34 followed in 30 Cr. L.J. 224=113 Ind. Cas. 891, but in 3 Ran. 11 at 27-28, it was held that the appellate Court on appeal from a conviction for the substantive offence could alter the conviction to one of abetment of such offence although there was no charge of abetment in the trial Court and follows the decisions in 22 Cr. L.J. 161=59 Ind. Cas. 913; 15 Ind. Cas. 85 and 26 C. 863. In 29 Cr. L.J. 1093=112 Ind. Cas. 677 it was decided that could not be laid down as a universal rule that in no circumstances whatever can a person be convicted of abetment of an offence where he was only charged with the substantive offence and not with abetment. The cases on the point under Ss 236 and 237 and this section indicate a conflict of judicial opinion but the true rule seems to be that the answer to the question really depends on the facts of each case and what we have to find out in each case is whether or not prejudice has or has not been caused to the accused by reason of the conviction for abetment of the offence without a charge. See also 23 M.L.J. 722. The conviction was held bad in 33 M. 264; 15 L.W. 583=(1922) M.W.N. 182; 26 Bom. L.R. 323=25 Cr. L.J. 1135=81 Ind. Cas. 959; 13 Cr. L.J. 203 and 13 Cr. L.J. 223; 1921 Pat 96; 44 C.L.J. 216; 49 A. 120; 14 Ind. Cas. 203=14 Ind. Cas. 319. This sub-section allows an accused person charged with a substantive offence to be convicted of an attempt to commit that offence without a separate charge and trial when the lower Courts found that a person was not actually deceived by the accused and so the offence of cheating was not made out it was open to the High Court to convict of an attempt to cheat when such attempt to cheat was made out by the evidence and S. 439 (4), infra, has no application to such a case as there was no acquittal by the lower Court of any attempt to cheat, 48 M. 774.

What persons may be charged jointly.

239. The following persons may be charged and tried together, namely:—

(a) persons accused of the same offence committed in the course of the same transaction;

(b) persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment, or of an attempt to commit such offence;

(c) persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind within the meaning of section 234 committed by them jointly within the period of twelve months;

(d) persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction;

(e) persons accused of an offence which includes theft, extortion, or criminal misappropriation, and persons accused of receiving or retaining, or assisting in the disposal or concealment of, property possession of which is alleged to have been transferred by any such offence committed by the first named persons, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such last-named offence;

(f) persons accused of offences under sections 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code or either of those sections in respect of stolen property the possession of which has been transferred by one offence; and

(g) persons accused of any offence under Chapter XII of the Indian Penal Code relating to counterfeit coin, and persons accused of any other offence under the said Chapter relating to the same coin, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such offence ; and the provisions contained in the former part of this chapter shall, so far as may be, apply to all such charges.

Amendment—This section which defines what persons may be charged jointly is re-drafted and the amendments are as follows :—(1) It is provided that when two or more persons are accused of offences of the same kind committed by them jointly during the space of one year they may be tried for the same at one trial. (2) It is directed that when one person is accused of any offence which includes theft, extortion or criminal misappropriation and another of receiving, retaining or disposing of the stolen property or abetment or attempt to commit the latter offences they may be tried jointly. (3) Provision is made for the joint trial of one person accused of counterfeiting coin and another of fraudulently possessing or uttering it. The illustrations have been repealed by the amendment.

Scope and object of the section.—This section is only an enabling provision. It is always open to the Court if it appears that a joint trial of accused persons or even the charges will embarrass the accused to try them separately, 30 Cr. L.J. 619=116 Ind. Cas 369. This section deals with the joint trial of accused persons. The provisions of Ss 234 to 236 infra are mutually exclusive and the provisions of this section stand by themselves and the scope of this section cannot be extended by the use of the provisions of sections not referred to herein. Where two persons are tried jointly, being charged with three offences and each offence being framed in the alternative either of criminal breach of trust or abetment thereof, the accused had to meet two distinct sets of circumstances which is against the spirit of the provisions of S 233, supra, and would not be covered by any of the exceptions detailed in the sections that follow S. 233, supra. The accused were therefore tried for six offences and the trial was therefore held to be illegal and prejudice must be presumed from the confusion arising from a man being called upon to face at a single trial six sets of circumstances, 51 A. 544 at 549-50. Jurisdiction is the foundation of every charge and must be imported into this section. Unless the subject of the inquiry comes within the territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate he cannot invoke the powers under this section, say to try abetment along with the principal offence, 57 M.L.J. 518=1929 M.W.N. 578=30 L.W. 501. The foundation for the procedure sanctioned by this section is the association of two or more persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end, 23 Cr. L.J. 268=66 Ind. Cas 392. A separate trial is the rule and a joint trial is the exception and it is always for the prosecution to justify a joint trial. Where the accused committed offences not of the same kind on two different dates, a joint trial is illegal, 45 A. 54 where 40 C. 318 and 30 A. 351 are followed; see also 9 A. 452; 43 A. 223. It should be remembered that the provisions of S 235, supra, and this section are merely enabling ones and if there is a risk of embarrassing the defence such joinder of charges should not be resorted to, 52 C. 253 at 265. To enable the Court in the same trial to try more persons than one, they must be accused of the same offence, or they must be related as principals and abettors or persons attempting to commit such offences, or persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind within S. 234, supra, or persons accused of different offences committed in the same transaction or persons accused of theft, extortion or misappropriation and persons receiving, retaining or disposing of the same stolen property or person accused of counterfeiting coins and person fraudulently possessing or uttering it except as provided by this section, the joint trial of several accused is not permitted by law and is an illegality which cannot be cured by S. 537, infra. A good working test of what should or should not be regarded as the same transaction within the meaning of this section is (1) proximity of time, (2) unity or proximity of place, (3) continuity of action, (4) community of purpose or design, 35 C.L.J. 527 where 42 C. 957 is followed. It is difficult to lay down any single test or criterion with regard to joinder of charges. The cases divide themselves into three groups. (1) A case similar to one in 23 M. 61. (P.C.) not covered by S 235 or this section, in which case prejudice or no prejudice, the illegality vitiates the trial. (2) A case without any such illegality prejudice might nevertheless be caused to the accused even though the Crown may have the power of joinder, it might be fairer not to exercise that power. (3) A case where there is a common thread or purpose underlying the alleged offences of the accused even though separated by time and space that may form the same transaction in which a joint trial is permitted with numerous charges and numerous accused, 31 Bom. L.R. 148 at 150. S 234, supra will not control the provisions of this section, 26 Cr. L.J. 1202=60 Ind. Cas. 706. The question whether certain offences specified in different charges were or were not so connected together that it might fairly be said that they were committed in the same transaction is substantially one of fact and admissions on a question of fact made by accused persons may undoubtedly be received and acted upon by the trial Court. The law on the point is correctly laid down in 19 A.L.J. 392, 26 Cr. L.J. 29=63 Ind. Cas. 509. This section cannot give jurisdiction to a Magistrate who has not jurisdiction under the provisions of any of the sections in Chapter XV of the Code. The mere fact that the offences could have been tried jointly under this section if committed within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the offences committed outside his jurisdiction, 28 C.W.N. 575 and 419. A trial which takes place in defiance of the express provisions of this section must be held to be void and a misjoinder of parties is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by applying the provisions of S. 537, infra. If a trial is illegal the question of prejudice or absence of prejudice does not arise, 15 Cr. L.J. 420=24 Ind. Cas. 156; 15 Cr. L.J. 472=24 Ind. Cas. 352.

May be charged and tried together.—This section is merely an enabling section and does not in any way trammel the discretion of the Court 19 C.W.N. 672 at 673; 26 M. 592; 11 W.R. (Cr.) 16; under this section a judicial discretion has been given to the Court to try a principal offender and the abettor either jointly or separately, and the manner in which this discretion should be exercised must depend on the facts of each case. A joint trial of the owner of a common gaming house with those found gaming therein or present for the purpose of gaming is permitted as the offences are committed in the same transaction, 24 Cr. L.J. 155=71 Ind. Cas. 567. But this section does not apply to preliminary inquiries, prior to commitment, 7 Bom. L.R. 457; 42 M. 561; 26 M. 592. The fact that all the accused under trial formed a gang and all the acts attributed were directed towards a common purpose and no objection as to joint trial was taken at the trial Court or in the Court of appeal, held that the trial under the circumstances was not illegal and did not prejudice the accused, 1927 M.W.N. 183 where 1925 M.W.N. 57, 27 C. 781 and 41 A. 109 are distinguished but when a trial is illegal, the whole trial is bad and no question of prejudice arises in such a case, 15 Cr. L.J. 420=24 Ind. Cas. 156; 15 Cr. L.J. 472=24 Ind. Cas. 352.

Clause (a)—The expression "same offence" refers not merely to the nature of the offence but to one and the same physical act of crime, 8 Cr. L.J. 11. If several witnesses summoned to appear to give evidence on the same day in a case and all of them fail to appear they cannot be tried together as each has committed a separate and distinct offence though punishable under the same section of the Penal Code, S. 174, 1 P.C., 1883 A.W.N. 25. So also if several witnesses on the same side give false evidence in the same case. The lie told by one witness is none the less his own particular lie because other witnesses at the same time have told similar lies. It is each man's own lie and not his neighbours that can alone be used against him. The perjury of one witness is a transaction complete in itself and cannot be connected with the false evidence given by another witness in the same case and on the same point, 3 M.H.C.R. Appx. 32; 2 N.W.P.H.C.R. 21; 1381 A.W.N. 83; 1282 A.W.N. 44 & 160; 1885 A.W.N. 24; 7 B.L.R. Appx. 66=16 W.R. (Cr.) 47; 13 Cr. L.J. 23=13 Ind. Cas. 215; 44 A. 293; 5 A. 17; 6 M. 252; 10 C. 405; 4 Bom. L.R. 53; 14 Bom. L.R. 972; 11 W.R. (Cr.) 16; 26 M. 592; 48 A. 325. The joint trial of four persons living separately, for offences under the Municipal Act contravened the provisions of this section as the accused cannot be said to have committed the same offence in the course of the same transaction, 7 L.A. 168. The expression "same offence" implies that persons jointly tried and acted in concert or association,

15 Cr. L.J. 695=26 Ind. Cas. 143; 17 Cr. L.J. 30=32 Ind. Cas. 158; 1 Patna L.J. 64; 42 C. 557 and 1153; 1 Pat. L.J. 64=17 Cr. L.J. 234=24 Ind. Cas. 650; 6 M.L.T. 17; 42 C. 760; 38 A. 457; 19 C.W.N. 672. Where two persons were charged and tried jointly for two separate acts but the facts alleged against them were identical viz. obtaining credit concealing their being undischarged insolvents, it was held that the two accused could be jointly tried under this section, 63 C. 929. It does not apply to a case in which the allegations against the two accused are mutually exclusive. It is not permissible for the prosecution at the same trial to adduce some evidence that A committed the act complained of and some evidence that it was not A but B that did the act. In such a case S. 233, supra, requires separate trial, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 237=14 Cr. L.J. 863=21 Ind. Cas. 163; there is no objection if A and B are concerned in a common enterprise though each in defending himself might try to throw the blame on the other, 12 Cr. L.J. 662; when one of the accused jointly tried with others makes a confession, it is improper to hold a joint trial, 5 C.W.N. 294; opposing factions in cases of rioting can not be brought under this clause or any other clauses of this section, though each party, uses force they are not guilty of the same offence within this clause as the common objects of the rioters on one side is necessarily different from that imputed to the other, 20 C. 537; 6 C. 96; 9 W.R. (Cr.) 93; 12 W.R. (Cr.) 75; 1 N.W.P.H.C.R. 293. When two factions opposed to each other fight and they are charged for their attacks on each other in the same occurrence and the charges were tried separately as two distinct cases but only one judgment was given even though there was separate evidence applicable to each case, it was held that although it would have been better to keep the evidence distinct and deliver separate judgments, no injustice has been occasioned by the procedure adopted, 3 Lah. 193 (P.C.) When in the course of a joint trial of the accused it is found to prejudice them in their defence it is the duty of the Court to stop the trial and to proceed to try them separately 3 Cr. L.J. 76, In 23 C.W.N. 437=26 Cr. L.J. 65=83 Ind. Cas. 625, it was held that counter cases should be tried simultaneously and contemporaneously and should be dealt with wholly separately from each other, each on its own merits and upon facts and circumstances appearing therein, and the judgment in both being pronounced if possible after both the trials are over. The Code is silent with regard to the procedure in the trial of counter criminal cases. It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a particular course must be adopted in such cases and each case has to be decided according to its requirements, 26 Cr. L.J. 1615=93 Ind. Cas. 719. See notes under S. 235 pp. 438 to 441 as to the exact significance of the expression "offences committed in the course of the same transaction." An offence cannot be treated necessarily as one transaction merely because it is a continuing offence. On the contrary this section implies a continuing offence and may embrace more than one transaction. But only so far as it is concerned with one transaction can more persons than one be tried together for it. The section allows the trial of several persons for the same continuing offence within the limits of one transaction only and under clause (d) several persons may be charged and tried together when accused of different offences committed in one transaction and the word "transaction" must have the same meaning as in clause (a). The provisions as to charges are designed to simplify and define the charges that may be tried at one trial and to avoid embarrassment to the accused. It is very desirable that Public Prosecutors and the Courts should give full effect to the spirit of the provisions of the Code instead of straining them to cover doubtful cases, 49 M. 74. See also 5 Pat. L.J. 11; 39 C.L.J. 331; 27 C.W.N. 700,=37 C.L.J. 410. Where in the course of a riot a person's death is caused and subsequently one of the rioters takes away and causes the disappearance of the dead body, a joint trial of that person for an offence under S. 201 I.P.C., along with a trial of all the rioters for offences under Ss. 145 and 304, I.P.C., is not warranted by law, as the offence under S. 201, I.P.C., cannot be said to have been committed in the same transaction in which the other offences charged were committed, 26 Cr. L.J. 467=85 Ind. Cas. 147; 48 A. 325. See in this connection, 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.) followed in 30 Cr. L.J. 851=118 Ind. Cas. 323, where conviction under S. 201, I.P.C., was upheld when charged only under S. 302, I.P.C. Where certain persons committed initial trespass into a factory and subsequently when ejected therefrom a body of men collected there to force an entry into the factory it cannot be said that the unlawful assembly formed subsequently and their acts as members of that assembly could not form part of any preconceived plan entertained at the time of the original trespass and therefore the charges cannot form part of the same transaction within the meaning of this clause, 4 Cr. L. Rev. 481=15 Cr. L. J. 695=26 Ind. Cas. 143 following 7 M. L. T. 367=11 Cr. L. J. 293=1910 M. W. N. 541=6 Ind. Cas. 242; 29 C. 385; 25 M. 61 (P.C.).

Clause (b).—This clause empowers a joint trial of the principal offender, the abettor or one who attempts to commit the offence, 19 C. W. N. 121; 27 Cr. L. J. 391=93 Ind. Cas. 42. It is improper under this sub-section in a case of murder to allow the principal offender to remain untried and to proceed with the offenders who were abettors and who took a minor part in the occurrence, 50 M. 274; no one disputes the general principle enunciated in the above decision that ordinarily the correct course is to try the abettor with the primary offender and where no reason to the contrary appears, the enabling provisions of this section should be availed of, 1929 M. W. N. 796. This clause would equally apply to a joint trial of several abettors or of an abettor and one who makes an attempt to commit the offence, 33 C. 433. Where several persons conspiring to commit an offence and one of them achieves the object of the conspiracy, a joint trial is permitted by this clause although there are two offences or clause (d) may permit such a joint trial, 42 C. 937at933; 42 C. 1153, 19 C. W. N. 672 and 706 at 713; 21 C. L. J. 195=16 Cr. L. J. 3=23 Ind. Cas. 307. A keeper of a common gaming-house may be jointly tried with those found gaming therein as the keeper may be considered to abet those who were found gambling, under this clause, 14 Cr. L. J. 293=19 Ind. Cas. 919. A joint trial of the printer and the publisher of an alleged seditious pamphlet is not bad for misjoinder as both of them are concerned in the same transaction in regard to the publication and both of them are on very much the same footing with regard to their being able to raise their plea, 30 Bom. L. R. 320=23 Cr. L. J. 633=110 Ind. Cas. 235.

Clause (c).—This clause makes it clear that the exception embodied in S. 234, infra, is not confined to cases where there is only a single accused but is also applicable to cases where several persons are jointly tried. This clause refers to joint trial of different connected offences of the same kind as defined in S. 234 (2), supra, S. 234, supra, requires that the accused may be tried for three selected offences, but in the language of this clause there is no such limitation as regards the number of offences. Where there was no joint action or the part of the accused and each acted independently of the other and made separate defences, it was held that a joint trial of the charges against 62 persons in one trial was bad, Weir II, 333. Similarly, where fifteen persons in one trial were jointly tried and convicted of distinct offences of committing public nuisance in a village it was held that the trial was bad and the accused were really prejudiced in their defence, 5 M. 23. If several witnesses were summoned to give evidence in a case on the same day and all of them fail to attend they cannot be tried together for an offence under S. 174, I. P. C., 1893 A. W. N. 25. Where four persons were charged with giving false evidence in the same proceedings they cannot be tried together and it is an illegality vitiating the trial, 10 C. 403; 6 M. 232; 26 M. 592; 4 A. 293; 5 A. 17; 13 Cr. L. J. 23=13 Ind. Cas. 215, but see 48 A. 325. A lie by a witness is none the less his own particular lie and it is his own and not another's lie that can alone be used against him or be the subject of a prosecution on that account, 7 B. L. R. Appx. 66. Where several persons jointly filed a written statement signed by all and one of them gave evidence in support thereof, it was held a joint trial of all of them, the deponent under S. 193 and the others for abetting him was good, 1881 A. W. N. 52. The identity of the persons committing the offence must be the same on each occasion, 1 C. L. J. 475. Unless a case fell strictly within this clause the fact that the same body of men are concerned in two distinct offences of the same kind, it could not render them liable to be jointly tried, 14 C. W. N. 394. See 51 M. L. J. 692=39 M. L. T. 37=27 Cr. L. J. 133=93 Ind. Cas. 597, referring to 28 M. L. J. 381, 33 M. 502 and 48 A. 325.

Clause (d)—For the meaning of the expression 'offences committed in the same transaction,' see cases discussed under S. 235, supra at pages 439 to 441. The idea underlying the expression 'in the course of the same transaction' used herein is that there is a practical unity in men's actions which enable us to draw a mental circle round an act, or event, or a series of them and call it for practical purposes, a single transaction, though theoretically this must be a true description. The expression must be understood as including both the immediate cause and effect of an act or event and also its collocation or relevant circumstances the other necessary antecedents of its occurrence connected it, at a reasonable distance of time, place and cause and effect, 31 Bom. L.R. 545 at 559. The Legislature though more than once invited to define the expression has studiously and wisely refrained from attempting a definition of this phrase. Each case must be considered on its merits and no case can be an authority except upon its own facts. The test is whether the two persons concerned are engaged in one transaction and to determine that it is necessary to regard facts from the point of view of these persons. If they are animated by a common purpose and there is a continuity in their action then surely there is one transaction so far as they are concerned. It may even be that community of purpose is not necessary, 51 B. 310. The real test whether several offences connected together to form the same transaction depends upon whether the, are so related to one another in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts as to constitute one continuous action. Mere interval of time between the commission of one offence and another does not by itself necessarily import want of continuity, though the length of the interval may be an important element in determining the connection between the two 3 Luck 664 following 27 B. 135 and 15 B. 491, offences are connected together either when they have been committed at the same time by several persons together, or when they have been committed by different persons or at different times and places, but pursuant to an understanding formed beforehand among them either when those guilty have committed one in order to procure the means with which to commit the other, to facilitate it, to carry out its execution, to assure its being unpunished. A striking illustration of this was the trial of the automobile bandits in France. "Twenty accused were arraigned several of whom were accused of murders but not the same person or at the same place; some of whom were accused of crimes punishable with imprisonment for life, some for 20 years and some for 10 years. Yet the long list of offences were so connected together and so inextricably woven together that they formed one continuous narration of crimes and it was a credit to any system of criminal procedure that enables the final hearing and disposal of such a series of crimes at one and the same trial. Every one of the prisoners had a fair and impartial trial and each offence was carefully and separately decided and evidence relating to the participation of each prisoner being strictly limited to his case." The fact that the complaints were presented the same day or that motive for the commission of the offences was the same in all the occurrences will not go to show that the offences to be committed in the course of the same transaction, 18 Cr. L.J. 739=40 Ind. Cas. 739. The circumstances in different cases may vary to an indefinite degree. Where three accused persons, viz., witnesses on the same side in a case of communal riot, all giving evidence on the same point and to the same effect to prove the same fact, viz., the manner in which a certain person met with his death, there is no hesitation in holding that the evidence of the three witnesses was given in the course of the same transaction. There was the most obvious identity of purpose. The phrase "community of purpose" is ambiguous inasmuch as it suggests a conspiracy which is not a necessary element supporting a finding whether the offences were committed in the same transaction. It is clear that the framers of the Code could never have had in mind the necessity for any proof of conspiracy before the terms of the section could be applied. The section has been in the Code for a very large number of years and long before Ss 120A and 120B I.P.C. were added. We have to look to this section and this section only. If the several acts of the accused are committed in the same transaction there is an end of the matter and they can legally and properly be tried together. Much confusion has arisen owing to failure to distinguish between different acts of the accused and different transactions. The act of one accused may be wholly independent of the act of the other and in that sense there may be no community, whatever but there may still be community of purpose in the sense of identity of purpose and acts committed in the same transaction, 43 A. 325. This sub-section enables all the offences committed by the accused whether substantive offences or abetment of those offences being tried together provided they were committed by the accused in the course of the same transaction. 30 Cr. L.J. 619=116 Ind. Cas. 369, but to justify a joint trial of persons concerned in two different offences, their act must constitute parts of the same transaction. The difficulty often arises only in applying the principles deducible from the volume of case law on the subject, to the particular facts of a case. Before different offences can be said to have been committed in the course of the same transaction by various persons charged with the same, we must see whether such persons had a common purpose, resulting in actions which constituted a concatena of events ultimately leading to the commission of such offences. The test of unity of time and unity of place as regards the offences with which the various accused persons may be charged are not always safe criteria for the purpose of determining whether or not these offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. Cases might occur where such tests may be of very great help, but on the other hand there may be cases in which a Court of Justice cannot treat such tests as a proper guide in arriving at the same conclusion. Each case must depend on its own facts and circumstances, 23 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 963 where 29 C. 383; 30 B. 431 Lah. 562, 23 Cr. L.J. 268=66 Ind. Cas. 832 are referred. See also 31 Bom. L.R. 143 following 20 B. 49 and 42 C. 937. If the different offences were committed in different transactions a joint trial is wholly illegal, 42 A. 12; 23 M. L.J. 381; (1910) M.W.N. 541; 31 C. 1053; 13 C.W.N. 1113; 10 Cr. L.J. 452=3 Ind. Cas. 1, 21 Bom. L.R. 732; 11 A.L.J. 188; 17 C.W.N. 419; 35 C.L.J. 527; 20 A.L.J. 881; 43 M. 73; 26 Cr. L.J. 1602=93 Ind. Cas. 700. In considering the nature of the transaction Courts must have regard to the immediate and not to the ultimate object of the offenders. When certain persons were jointly tried for offences committed at two different points of time, the object for the commission of the offences at one point being to coerce the complainant to hand over certain valuable securities, etc., and at the other point to prevent the complainant's party from proceeding to the Magistrate to lodge a complaint in respect of the first occurrence, it was held that the two series of acts lacked the essential elements of community of purpose and continuity of action to make them parts of the same transaction within the meaning of this section, 28 M. L.J. 397. If it is established that the offences of the several accused do not form parts of the same transaction, the case is outside the scope of this clause and the joint trial is bad, 26 M. L.J. 593. Where the accused were engaged in a common design, their case falls within the sub-section, and a joint trial is permitted 26 A.L.J. 197; See also 31 A. 142, where two persons members of a firm gave false evidence as witnesses in support of a claim on a promissory note in favour of their firm, it was held that a joint trial of the accused was justified as the two acts of the accused in giving false evidence were committed in the course of the same transaction within this sub-section, 29 Bom. L.R. 170=28 Cr. L.J. 373=109 Ind. Cas. 931. When the offence of each of the accused is separate and there is no common offence in which all join, it is quite irregular to try them jointly, 11 M. 411. Joint trial of an offender and those who rescue him from custody is bad, 29 C. 385; 13 C.W.N. 604, 31 C. 1053, 28 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 965; 31 C.W.N. 337=28 Cr. L.J. 347=109 Ind. Cas. 827. Where several people commit different offences on their own account with a common intent, say, during a car festival, it cannot be said they committed offences in the same transaction. The expression same transaction implies oneness of purpose which is wanting here. If persons who are collected at a festival quarrel accidentally there among themselves and there happens to be a fight, injuries inflicted by some on others, without a common object they would be committing different offences of hurt, 23 A.L.J. 3=26 Cr. L.J. 734=66 Ind. Cas. 222. Where several persons abduct a girl and she was raped by one of the accused, the offence of rape constituted a separate transaction from that of abduction and the person who committed rape cannot be tried jointly with the others who had taken no part in it. But where a joint trial is held, a retrial is not necessary where the accused has not been prejudiced and does not wish to be retried, 23 Cr. L.J. 533=77 Ind. Cas. 997. The keeper of a common gaming house can be tried jointly with those found gaming therein as the offences though distinct are committed in the course of the same transaction, 28 Cr. L.J. 1001=105 Ind. Cas. 825 where 11 Cr. L.J. 211=5 Ind. Cas. 720 and 16 Cr. L.J. 220=27 Ind. Cas. 844 are followed.

Clause (e)—This clause permits a joint trial of persons accused of theft, extortion or criminal misappropriation only. This clause now permits joint trial of a thief or receiver or retainer of stolen property even though the offences are not committed in the same transaction; see 33 A. 311; 45 A. 223; 6 Bom. L.R. 517, 28 B. 312. If the thief and receiver could be jointly tried now, there is no reason why several receivers could not be jointly tried. It is clearly unnecessary for the Legislature to legislate for joint trial of persons to whom property had been transferred jointly i.e. when one receiver receives property as agent of another.

In such a case whether there is one or more than one theft, the receipt is the act of one person and a joint trial is permissible. Nor is it conceivable that the Legislature intended to enact a joint trial of receivers at different times of goods stolen at different thefts, there being no community of purpose between the receivers and therefore there is no reason for providing for joinder of parties in such a case but where there is one theft in which the property had passed to several receivers at different times Legislation was required because it had been held in several High Courts that a joint trial was illegal. It was thought a multiplicity of trials should be avoided and therefore this clause was newly enacted in 1923. The statute practically declares that the different acts of receipt are one and the same transaction if the transfer of possession from the owner to the thief was made by one and the same act. Whether the word 'transfer' is appropriate to the change of possession in such a case may be open to objection but that is the only construction which can reasonably be given to the statute, 6 Pat 593 at 585. The decisions in 29 B. 449; 23 C. 104; 33 C. 1256; 21 C.W.N. 111; 45 C. 741 are no longer law. When two persons were jointly tried under this clause and convicted of two distinct offences, it is open to the Appellate Court to convict one of them of some other offence on the same facts applying the general principles of Ss 236 to 238, 15 Cr. L. J. 680=25 Ind. Cas. 1008.

Clause (f).—This clause deals with joint trial of persons accused of counterfeiting coin and persons accused of fraudulently possessing or uttering it. A person who was in possession of 104 counterfeit coins, delivered 50 of them to another to pass them off from him. The two were jointly tried for offences under Ss. 240 and 243, I.P.C., it was held the joint trial was valid under this section read with S. 235 (1), supra, 31 C. 1007. This sub-section mentions only Ss. 411 and 414, I.P.C., and where definite sections are mentioned the provisions cannot be extended by analogy to other sections. Therefore a joint trial of persons accused under S. 412, I.P.C., is illegal, 26 Cr. L. J. 1291=89 Ind. Cas. 155 where 16 Cr. L. J. 270=28 Ind. Cas. 158 is followed; see also 26 Cr. L. J. 1361=89 Ind. Cas. 419. A trial is not bad for charges under sections 380 and 414, I.P.C., as they are cognate offences and the charges are really in the nature of alternative charges, 8 Pat 731.

Provisions in the former part of the Chapter apply to all such charges—By the expression 'by former part' is meant the part prior to the part headed 'joinder of charges.' Chapter XIX headed 'of the charge' is not divided into parts but different subjects have different headings. The first heading is 'form of charge' and this section falls under this heading. 'By the former part' is meant the part under the heading 'form of charge' prior to the part beginning with the heading 'joinder of charges.' S 234, supra, therefore will control the provisions of this section, 26 Cr. L. J. 1602=90 Ind. Cas. 706. This section cannot apply to a joint trial of accused unconcerned in acts which are independent of one another. Three persons each charged with cheating a separate individual cannot be tried together, 12 Cr. L. J. 208=10 Ind. Cas. 63. When three persons at a meeting of the caste passed a resolution defaming the complainant and a fourth sent a resolution of his own accord for publication in a newspaper, the joint trial of the four accused was held bad, 20 M.L.J. 423=7 M.L.T. 127=11 Cr. L. J. 135=5 Ind. Cas. 436. Where four persons were tried jointly, two of them being convicted under S. 168, I.P.C., and S. 8 of the Epidemic Diseases Act, while the other two were convicted under S. 419, I.P.C., for attempting to cheat by personation, an altogether distinct offence not connected with the former, it was held that the joint trial was illegal, 4 Cr. L. J. 479.

Objection as to misjoinder.—A trial that takes place in defiance of the express provisions of this section must be held to be void and a misjoinder of parties is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by, S. 537, infra. If a trial is illegal the question of prejudice or absence of prejudice does not arise, 15 Cr. L. J. 420=24 Ind. Cas. 156; 15 Cr. L. J. 472=24 Ind. Cas. 352. Where a joint trial is held contrary to law it is open to an accused person who has been convicted at such trial to raise the objection of misjoinder in revision, even if the objection was not taken in the Courts below. There is no obligation on the accused to prove prejudice in such a case. The trial is either good or bad and if it is bad no question of prejudice arises and the conviction could not be sustained, 25 Cr. L. J. 807=81 Ind.

Cas. 343. After the decision of the Privy Council in 23 M. 61, it cannot be contended that S. 537 infra could cure a defect as to misjoinder because it is a disobedience to an express provision as to the mode of trial which is not a mere irregularity but an illegality. See also 52 C. 159; 28 C.W.N. 119; 52 C. 1; 28 Cr. L.J. 357=100 Ind. Cas. 583. A joint trial of accused not permitted by law cannot be held to be an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra. Such misjoinder is not an irregularity in framing the charge but goes further than an irregularity in a trial prohibited by law and a disobedience to an express provision of law cannot be considered an irregularity. When a trial is prohibited by law it is more than an irregularity but an illegality, 30 Cr. L.J. 214=113 Ind. Cas. 721. Where criminal proceedings are substantially bad in themselves the defect cannot be cured by any waiver or consent on the part of the accused or their pleaders, 6 C. 95; 2 C. 23; 6 C.W.N. 202; 11 C.W.N. 1129; 12 W.R. (Cr.) 59; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 69; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 89; 48 M. 117; 28 M.L.J. 329=(1916) M.W.N. 229; 18 M.L.J. 330; 23 M. 123; 7 M.L.T. 229; 27 M. 127; 4 Bom. L.R. 53; 7 Bom. L.R. 527; 21 A.L.J. 80; 13 A.L.J. 343; 11 A.L.J. 183; 4 Lah. 376; 28 Cr. L.J. 63=75 Ind. Cas. 980; 2 Pat. 793 at 795; 5 Ran 83; 29 Cr. L.J. 521=109 Ind. Cas. 345 following 4 Lah. 376. An illegality affecting the jurisdiction of the Court cannot be cured by the fact that no objection was taken either in the trial Court or in the Court of appeal, 11 C.W.N. 1128. No consent by counsel, whether for his own convenience or that of his client or for the convenience of the Court can by itself create jurisdiction in the Court to commit irregularities; nor can the commission of irregularities of a serious nature substantially affecting the conduct of the trial and prejudicing the accused be waived merely by consent on the part of the accused's representative, 50 A. 457 at 462. In case of misjoinder of charges, the trial is wholly void and quashing the charges against one accused would not validate the trial of the other, 27 Cr. L.J. 1099=97 Ind. Cas. 383. Misjoinder of charges and of persons vitiates the whole proceedings, 28 Cr. L.J. 438=101 Ind. Cas. 491, but where several persons were tried together on several charges of criminal conspiracy to commit murder and other offences under S. 120B, I.P.C., and other charges being various specified offences committed in pursuance of the conspiracy as murder etc., it was held that there was no misjoinder of charges vitiating the trial, 8 Lah. 230 (P.C.)=54 Ind. App. 45 (P.C.).

Re-trial.—When a trial is set aside on account of misjoinder, the High Court is not bound to order a re-trial. It rests with the prosecution to consider whether a re-trial should be had, 12 C.W.N. 246.

240. When a charge containing more heads than one is framed against the same person, and when a conviction has been had on one or more of them, the complainant, or the officer conducting the prosecution, may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw the remaining charge or charges, or the Court of its own accord may stay the inquiry into, or trial of such charge or charges. Such withdrawal shall have the effect of an acquittal on such charge or charges, unless the conviction be set aside, in which case the said Court (subject to the order of the Court setting aside the conviction) may proceed with the inquiry into or trial of the charge or charges so withdrawn.

Scope of the section.—This section deals with a case where a person is accused of several offences and also a case where there are a number of charges relating to distinct offences constituted by separate acts but it does not apply to cases where there are several charges founded on the same fact dealt with in Ss. 235 (2) and (3) and S. 236, supra; in the latter case there is only one charge with several heads and there can be only one trial. In the former case the charges are distinct capable of being tried separately and a withdrawal of the remaining charges on a conviction had on one of the several charges is permitted by the section and such withdrawal has the effect of an acquittal, 1899 P.R. (Cr. J.) 24. The opening words of the section make it clear that it is only applicable to joinder of charges in the same case not to separate charges of distinct offences tried separately and an order by a Sessions Judge staying the trial of a sessions case pending appeal, if any, by the accused against his conviction in an earlier case is not warranted by this section. The Judge might have attained the desired object by adjourning the trial under S. 344, infra, pending the appeal or under S. 491, infra, the public prosecutor might with the consent of the Court have withdrawn the prosecution if so advised, 9 Cr. L.J. 495=2 Ind. Cas. 128=6 M.L.T. 90 following Ratanlal 362. The authorities responsible for the prosecution of offenders should not be compelled by the Court to reserve a prosecution which they have thought expedient to drop or to carry it out in any particular way, 8 Cr. L.J. 11.

A charge containing more heads than one is framed.—These words were substituted in the Code of 1893 for the then existing words "more charges than one are made" and the change is in accordance with the definition of "charge" in S. 4 (1) (c), supra. The opening words of the section make it clear that it is only applicable to joinder of charges in the same case and not to separate charges for distinct offences tried separately as distinct Sessions cases. In such a case the Judge might act under S. 344, infra, or ask the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution under S. 491, infra, but he cannot act under this section, 6 M.L.T. 93=9 Cr. L.J. 495=2 Ind. Cas. 148, Ratanlal 977. A Criminal Court has power to permit the prosecution to withdraw charges the joinder of which is objected to as illegal, 16 C.W.N. 1103 (Sp. B.). Similarly it was held by the Madras High Court in 3 Cr. L. Rev. 148 that this section will not enable a Magistrate to stay the trial of a charge in cases with different offences committed in the same night and the order of the Magistrate staying the trial was set aside by the High Court.

May with the consent of the Court withdraw.—The provisions of this section apply to every grade of Court including the High Court and not to the Court of trial only when a party to a revision to the High Court withdraws the revision petition and the High Court accepts the withdrawal, it may be presumed that the High Court gave its consent for the withdrawal, 27 A.L.J. 1056.

Withdrawal of the remaining charges.—A charge cannot be permitted to be withdrawn after the Judge had summed up and the Jury had returned their verdict, Ratanlal 286, and the Judge is bound to sum up on all the charges, and the Jury should be required to return a verdict on all the charges when evidence had been let in on all the charges and pleaders heard on the whole evidence, Ratanlal 283. Where a Judge at the commencement of a trial himself framed an additional charge and subsequently on acquitting the accused of the charge for which he was committed to stand his trial considers the additional charge framed by him to be improper there is no express provision of law which prohibits such a course. To this extent the word "alter" occurring in S. 227 supra must be taken to include "withdraw," 12 A. 551 at 552, See Ss. 454 and 273 infra, which also provide for cases of withdrawal. Where an accused was charged with ten offences of the same nature under S. 408 I.P.C., and was convicted of three of them, the High Court in appeal from the conviction while upholding the conviction directed that further proceedings with regard to the remaining charges be withdrawn and dropped, 9 C.L.J. 237=10 Cr. L.J. 482=4 Ind. Cas. 48.

CHAPTER XX.

OF THE TRIAL OF SUMMONS-CASES BY MAGISTRATES.

241. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of summons-cases.

Procedure in summons-cases.

For the definition of the word "summons cases" see S. 4 (1) (c) supra. This Chapter dealt with the procedure in summons-cases while the next Chapter deals with the trial of warrant cases. The general provisions of the Code found in other Chapters apply equally to the procedure in summons and warrant cases, 43 M. 511 (F.B.) at 528. A warrant case being a graver offence cannot be tried under this Chapter, 7 M. 454. When of the two offences charged, one is a summons-case and the other warrant-case the procedure which the Magistrate ought to adopt is the one prescribed for a warrant-case, 11 C. 91 followed in 39 M. 503; 41 M. 727, and if he fails to follow the procedure prescribed for a warrant-case and convicts the accused of the offence triable as a warrant-case, the conviction is bad in law, 29 M. 372; 3 M.L.T. 204. When a summons case was committed to the Court of Sessions the commitment was quashed by the High Court on the ground that there was no warrant for such a commitment, as the Magistrate could adequately punish the offenders, 1906 A.W.N. 28=3 A.L.J. 14. When a complainant is absent, the proper course is to discharge the accused under S. 253, infra, and not to acquit the accused under S. 247, infra, 11 C. 91; 22 B. 711. When the accused is tried for two offences in the same trial, one being a summons-case and the other a warrant-case the proper procedure to be adopted is that prescribed for warrant-case, 39 M. 503; 41 M. 727; 11 C. 91; 29 C. 481; 22 B. 711.

242. When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge.

Substance of accusation to be stated.

Particulars of the offences shall be stated.—It is necessary that the accused should have a clear statement made to him that he is about to be put on his trial and the facts constituting the offence with the commission of which he is accused, 4 C. 603=3 C.L.R. 87. In summons cases the statement to the accused of the particulars of the offence of which he is accused takes the place of the formal charge, 2 Cr. L.J. 739 at p. 744 and the answers which the accused gives to the questions put to him takes the place of the plea of the accused to a formal charge. This section applies to security proceedings and the Magistrate is bound to state to the person proceeded against particulars of the matter against him and ask him to show cause why he should not furnish security, 7 M.L.T. 304. See also 17 M.L.J. 338. Where a Court dispenses with the presence of the accused and allows a pleader to appear for him, the Court can act on the plea of the pleader under this section and the record must show the person appearing for the accused was duly instructed, 50 B. 250. A conviction based on an admission made by the counsel for the accused without examining or recording any evidence in a summons-case is illegal and cannot stand, 26 Cr. L.J. 179=83 Ind. Cas. 883. It is incumbent on a Magistrate to state the particulars of the offence charged to the accused when he appears, but when a Magistrate failed to do so especially when the accused was represented by a pleader it is only a technical irregularity and such omission is cured by S. 537, infra, 28 Cr. L.J. 511=101 Ind. Cas. 895 but in 54 C. 359 it was held that the omission to comply with the provisions of this section by failing to state to the accused the particulars of the offence charged is an omission to comply with an express provision of the Code as to the mode of trial and such omission vitiated the whole trial. See also 31 C.W.N. 167 and 48 C.L.J. 92 at 94 where the same view as in 54 C. 359 was taken.

Shall not be necessary to frame a charge.—These words indicate that in a summons-case there is a charge of an offence. Although it is not necessary to have a written charge in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 222, 223, supra, and the provision as to joinder of charges equally apply to summons-cases also, 41 C. 722 at 725. If commitment is made in a summons case it cannot be quashed as illegal, 1906 A.W.N. 28=3 A.L.J. 14. When a case is being tried as a warrant-case, if it is intended to proceed against the accused also for an offence triable as a summons case, that offence should also form part of the charge. Where therefore the accused who were summoned for an offence under Ss. 143 and 879, I.P.C., were tried on a charge drawn up only for an offence under S. 379, I.P.C., but were convicted of the offence under S. 143 the conviction was set aside as bad in law as the accused were misled in their defence by the absence of a charge under S. 143, I.P.C., 29 C. 481.

243. If the accused admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused, his admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him; and, if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly.

Conviction on admission of truth of accusation.

Amendment.—"Shall convict" has been altered into "may convict." This alteration gives the Magistrate a discretion which he did not possess before as to convicting an accused who pleads guilty in a summons-case, and the Court is thus able to refuse to accept a plea of guilty which it believes to be untrue. The Magistrate has an option now under this section similar to the one provided by Ss. 255 (2) and 271 (3), infra.

Admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him.—The plea of the accused has to be recorded at once by the Magistrate and not afterwards from rough notes taken from the Magistrate's memory, 15 M. 83, and it shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him so as to show whether the statement recorded by the Magistrate is really an admission by the accused that he has committed the offence charged. It is of the utmost importance that the terms of this section should be strictly complied with, because the accused's right of appeal depends on whether he has really pleaded guilty or not. It was no doubt for that reason that the Legislature required the exact words used by the accused in his plea to be as nearly as possible recorded, 1889 A.W.N. 81. To save all misapprehension and mistake, it is desirable that the plea of guilty should be recorded as far as possible in the words used by the accused, 5 Bom. L.R. 999. This section allows a conviction if the accused admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused. But S. 204 supra says that a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence in a case where summons should issue in the first instance, shall issue his summons for accused's attendance under form No. 1 in Sch. V; the person summoned is required to appear in person or by pleader. Of course the form cannot itself override any express provision of the Code. But in the absence of a clear provision that only accused's own plea should be accepted for the purpose of this section the Court must give due weight to the form of summons permitting appearance of the accused by pleader; moreover, S. 205, supra, permits a Magistrate to dispense with personal attendance of the accused and allow appearance by pleader whenever he issues a summons, and the words "or by pleader" in the form prescribed may have been inserted with reference to this provision. The Magistrate may also allow appearance by pleader even after the issue of summons. There is no sufficient ground for holding in spite of the fact that S. 312, supra, and this section speak of the accused only, that a pleader representing the accused may not make the necessary answers and plead 'guilty' or 'not guilty' on his behalf. This view is in accordance with provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts XI and XII, Fact, Ch. 43, S. 14 on which the provisions of S. 242 and this section are based, 50 B. 250 where 14 Cr. L.J. 272—19 Ind. Cas. 314 is referred to. It is illegal for a Magistrate to decide a case in accordance with the statement of the father of an accused person consenting to the special oath of the complainant on Ganges water. Neither the accused's father or the complainant's son who was said to have been assaulted were parties to the case of assault before the Court and there is no provision of law and it is against common sense to decide on the special oath of the complainant, 28 Cr. L.J. 301—100 Ind. Cas. 381. When a Magistrate in a warrant-case without recording evidence called upon the accused to plead to the charge and convicted him on his own admission as under this section, held that the procedure was illegal and prejudiced the accused and the conviction was set aside, 29 M. 372. See 27 C.W.N. 923. This section applies to security proceedings also; the statement of the person expressing his willingness to furnish security should be duly recorded, otherwise the order passed is illegal, 17 M.L.J. 438.

May convict.—The alteration of "shall" into "may" is new and allows the Magistrate a discretion as the one allowed in the trial of Sessions cases by S. 271 (2), infra, and in the trial of warrant-cases by S. 255 (2) infra. By the amendment the Court is further empowered to refuse to accept a plea of guilty which is not accepted by the Court as true.

244. (1) If the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section or if the accused does not make such admission, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any), and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution, and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence.

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on the application of the complainant or accused, issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or other thing.

(3) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses, incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial, be deposited in Court.

Amendment.—In sub-section (1) the words "if the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section" have been added and the proviso is also new, making it unnecessary to hear the complaint where a complain is made by a Court. In sub-section (2) the words "a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce" have been substituted for the words "process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of," thus making it clear that a Magistrate is not bound to compel the attendance of a witness to give evidence on the application of the complainant. See 30 C. 121; 6 C.W.N. 513.

Shall proceed to hear complainant and take all such prosecution evidence.—Where a Special Act creates an offence within the definition of S. 4 (1) (c), supra, and nothing is said in the Act itself to regulate the manner of trying the offence, the offence is triable by virtue of S. 5, supra, according to the provisions of the Code and the trial must be held in accordance with this section by recording evidence and the magistrate cannot convict the accused upon the report of an Honorary Magistrate as to what accused had told him without any manner of investigation of the facts, 30 Cr. L.J. 517=115 Ind. Cas. 690. This section does not say that the complainant himself is to be examined but only says he shall be heard. Non-examination of the complainant will not vitiate proceedings, 21 Cr. L.J. 232=53 Ind. Cas. 204. When an accused does not admit the truth of the accusation against him, the Magistrate is bound under this section to hear the complainant and his witnesses in support of his complaint and also the accused and his witnesses in his defence, 6 W.R. (Cr) 75. It is the prima facie duty of the prosecution to call as witnesses all persons who must be able to give important information, and if they are not called sufficient explanation must be given for not doing so. If no satisfactory reasons are given, the Court may draw an inference adverse to the prosecution, 8 C. 121; 14 A. 521; 13 C. 235; 15 A. 6, but no such inference could be drawn as against the accused for not calling defence witnesses, 7 A. 904; 8 C. 121. Right to cross-examine is not expressly provided for in this section as in S. 208 (1), supra. When complainant's witnesses are summoned, a Magistrate is not justified in dismissing the complaint on a consideration of the statement of the complainant alone without examining his witnesses, 20 M. 368; Weir II, 305. Even when a complainant declined to be examined, it is the duty of the Court to proceed to take the evidence of the complainant's witnesses under S. 242, supra, before dismissing the complaint although a strong preliminary presumption against the truth of the complainant's case will arise from his contumacious refusal to allow himself to be examined, 23 Cr. L.J. 511=101 Ind. Cas. 695.

Hear accused and take all evidence he produces in his defence.—The Magistrate is bound to take down the evidence in open Court and he cannot rely on statements made to him out of Court, 14 B. 572. It is the duty of the accused to produce his witnesses on the day of trial, 14 W.R. (Cr.) 76. A Magistrate is bound to examine all the witnesses whom an accused person may produce for his defence, 13 W.R. (Cr.) 63; 18 A. 221; 4 M.H.C.R. Appx. 29; and a conviction had without such examination of witnesses is liable to be set aside, 4 B.L.R. Appx. 77=12 W.R. (Cr.) 77. No inference adverse to the accused ought to be drawn from his failure to call defence witnesses, 10 C. 130; 8 C. 121; Ratanlal 686; 7 A. 904.

Sub-section (1).—Under the old Code there was the phrase "compel the attendance of a witness," etc., but in the present Code the words used are "summon any witness directing him to attend," etc. Evidently now the Court cannot compel a witness to appear before it, if the witness refuses to appear, in which case he may be liable for disobedience of summons but the party is not entitled to ask the Court as a matter of right to compel the attendance of any witness who does not care to attend in obedience to summons. It is in the discretion of the Magistrate to issue fresh summons, but the Code does not compel him to issue fresh summons to a witness who has once been summoned, 27 Cr. L.J. 76=91 Ind. Cas. 252, where 30 C. 121 is distinguished and held to be no longer law. The new amendment which gives ample discretion to refuse to issue further process is already noted above. See 21 Cr. L.J. 335=55 Ind. Cas. 993. But a Magistrate has no such discretion to refuse to compel the attendance of a witness to whom he had already issued process, 30 C. 121.

Sub-section (3).—When the complainant fails to pay the necessary fee for summoning witnesses, the Magistrate cannot dismiss the case for default. He is bound to deal with the case on such evidence as he may have before him, 5 M. 160.

245. (1) If the Magistrate upon taking the evidence referred to in section 244 and such further evidence (if any, as he may, of his own motion, cause to be produced, and (if he thinks fit) examining the accused, finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

(2) Where the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562, he shall if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Amendment.—Sub-section (2) has been re-drafted. The words "unless he proceeds under S. 349 or S. 562" have been newly added.

If he thinks fit examining the accused.—The words "if he thinks fit" in this section do not necessarily mean more than that an accused can be acquitted without being examined. The language is similar to that used in Ss. 209 and 253 infra, but it has not quite the same purpose. The governing idea is that in summons-cases the matter shall be finally decided (save in the case under S. 249, infra). It should proceed to a conviction or acquittal, not merely end in a discharge. Apparently this section has been held to mean that an accused cannot be acquitted until he has been heard and after he has produced all his evidence. When the prosecution case breaks down hopelessly, the Magistrate can acquit the accused without taking defence evidence. An application under S. 488, infra, for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence as the neglect or refusal does not involve the question of any punishment to be awarded. That section is merely intended to enforce the legal obligation of the husband or father as the case may be in a summary manner. Prima facie this section does not apply. There is no accused in the case and his examination is therefore not necessary, 29 Cr. L.J. 1002=112 Ind. Cas. 218.

Shall record an order of acquittal.—An order of acquittal without a charge having been framed against an accused, is justified only in summons-cases by the operation of S. 248, infra, 24 Cr. L.J. 120=71 Ind. Cas. 248. It may be done also under S. 345, infra when there is a composition or when the Advocate-General withdraws the case under S. 333, infra. The term acquittal implies that there has been at least an inquiry to the extent required by S. 242, supra, 1891 A.W.N. 63. No acquittal can properly be recorded without examining the complainant and his witnesses, Ratanlal 539.

No order of discharge can be passed in a summons-case. The Magistrate is bound to record an order of acquittal, 24 C. 429, and an order of acquittal passed under this section will not operate as such with regard to an offence triable as a warrant-case, 1886 A.W.N. 260. If a Magistrate trying a summons-case, whatever procedure he adopts, finds no case is made out and let the accused go unconditionally he acquits him although he heads his order an order of discharge and mentions the section of the Code dealing with discharge, 8 M.L.T. 78= (1910) M.W.N. 414=11 Cr. L.J. 360=6 Ind. Cas. 385. A Magistrate has no power and no jurisdiction to record an order of acquittal under this section until he has heard the complainant and taken all the evidence that he produces in support of the prosecution and also heard the accused and taken all such evidence as he may produce, and an order of acquittal passed without complying with the provisions of law is not an acquittal within the meaning of the section and will be set aside, 18 A. 221 at 223. Again once a Magistrate issues process to complainant's witnesses he cannot acquit the accused under this section without examining them, 20 M. 388; 30 C. 121. A Sessions Judge has no power in a such a case to order further inquiry. The High Court cannot in revision convert an acquittal into a conviction, 8 M.L.T. 380.

Sub-section (2).—After the word "shall" the words "unless he proceeds under S. 349 or S. 562" have been newly added, S. 349 deals with a case in which a Magistrate cannot adequately punish; and S. 562 infra deals with the case of first offenders being released on probation of good conduct or on admonition. A finding of guilty must be followed by a sentence, 4 M.H.C.R. Appx. lxvi; 2 Bom. L.R. 611, unless the Magistrate acts under S. 562 infra. Every conviction must ordinarily be followed by a legal sentence. After the conviction of an accused person under the Municipal Act he cannot be warned and discharged as this is not a form or order that could legally be passed and is contrary to the provisions of this section. S. 562, infra, cannot apply to offences other than those punishable under the I.P.C., 52 B. 250.

Further Inquiry and revision.—The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot order further inquiry under S. 436, infra, 8 M.L.T. 380, but the High Court in revision has power to direct a retrial in very exceptional cases, 15 M.L.J. 225, and generally without an order for re-trial no fresh complaint can be entertained, 22 Cr. L.J. 331=61 Ind. Cas. 59.

For form of warrant of commitment on a sentence of imprisonment or fine, see Sch. V, No. 29.

246. A Magistrate may, under section 243 or section 245, convict the accused of any offence triable under this Chapter which from the facts admitted or proved he appears to have committed, whatever may be the nature of the complaint or summons.

Finding not limited by complaint or summons.

This section does not mean that an accused in a summons-case can be convicted of an offence alleged to have been committed on a date to which reference has been made in the complaint or summons, 22 Cr. L.J. 559=62 Ind. Cas. 575. This section empowers a Magistrate to convict the accused in regard to any other offence prima facie established by the evidence adduced by the prosecution, but he is bound in such a case to proceed under S. 242, supra, and state the particulars of such offence to the accused so as to enable him to defend himself, 22 W.R. (Gr.) 40; where certain accused persons were summoned to answer a charge of criminal trespass, but the Magistrate convicted them under this section of the offence of mischiefs and assault, it was objected that the Magistrate could not so convict the accused without re-opening the trial and following the procedure laid down in Ss. 213 and 214, supra, the High Court held that the conviction was legal, 36 C. 869. This section authorizes a Magistrate to convict an accused person of a non-cognizable offence like assault when he was sent by the police for trial under the City Municipal Act even without a formal complaint from the person assaulted when the police took action at the instance of the person assaulted and as a witness he evinced a desire that the accused should be proceeded against. S. 520 (c), infra also supports this view, 23 Bom. L.R. 231=27 Cr. L.J. 493=93 Ind. Cas. 896 following 36 C. 869. A conviction for an offence other than that shown in the complaint is illegal, 22 Cr. L.J. 331=61 Ind. Cas. 59.

247. If the summons has been issued on complaint, and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned, the complainant does not appear the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day :

Non-appearance of complainant.

Provided that where the complainant is a public servant and his personal attendance is not required, the Magistrate may dispense with his attendance and proceed with the case.

Scope of the section.—This section lays down a general principle that a person charged with a summons-case offence is entitled to an acquittal if the complainant is absent without sufficient cause and there is no reason why the right should be denied when the Magistrate follows a particular procedure, 44 M.L.J. 119=17 L.W. 229. The Code contains no provision analogous to O. IX, r. 4, C.P.C., enabling the Court to set aside an order passed for default of appearance. Such default entails an acquittal which can only be reopened by the High Court, 52 M.L.J. 173=1927 M.W.N. 274=33 M.L.T. 203=28 Cr. L.J. 270=100 Ind. Cas. 233; when in a summons-case the complainant is absent the Magistrate is not entitled to strike off the complaint and such striking off is not the same as an acquittal nor can the Magistrate entertain a second complaint and acquit the accused as he cannot do so in a case which he had not tried and the most he could do on the second complaint would be to record an order of discharge, 10 Bom. L.R. 628=8 Cr. L.J. 133. This section merely authorizes a Magistrate to adjourn the case to enable the complainant to appear. It does not authorize him to dispense with the appearance of the complainant except when he is a public servant. In a summons-case where the complainant had gone to England and it was unfair to the accused to keep such a petty case pending till the complainant returned the Magistrate was right in acquitting the accused, 27 Cr. L.J. 1022=96 Ind. Cas. 878. Courts in the Muffassal, no doubt, take it as their right and privilege to sit at any time as they like, regardless of the convenience of the parties concerned. The parties being suitors before it do not boldly object to the prolonging of the Court hours or taking up of cases late in the day for fear of incurring the displeasure of the presiding officer of the Court. The Courts should not take advantage of the weakness of the parties, 29 Cr. L.J. 239=107 Ind. Cas. 827. This section lays down that if a summons has been issued on complaint and on a date to which the hearing is adjourned the complainant does not appear the Magistrate shall acquit the accused unless for some reason he thinks it proper to adjourn the hearing for some other day. The question is what is the legal consequence of the case not having been taken up on the day fixed for hearing at all. The right to an order of acquittal accrues to the accused upon two conditions and is dependent first on the absence of the complainant and secondly, on the Court not adjourning the case. If a case is not taken up at all it cannot be said that the second condition is fulfilled, for, there is no knowing in what way the Court's discretion would have been exercised if it had been taken up. To adopt any other view would result in unnecessary hardship to the complainant and undue leniency to the accused. If therefore the complainant fails to appear on the date fixed for hearing and the Magistrate omits to take up the case, the accused is not entitled to an acquittal, 26 Cr. L.J. 1050=87 Ind. Cas. 970 where 23 Cr. L.J. 492=77 Ind. Cas. 892 is followed. A Magistrate is not bound to wait till the close of the day in the trial of a case. If the complainant is absent when the case is called on for hearing the Magistrate is justified in dealing with the case under this section and acquitting the accused. The presence of the complainant's vakil alone is not sufficient compliance with the requirements of the section. In criminal cases, unlike as in civil cases the presence of a party's vakil is not considered as the presence of the party. Except where the Court dispenses with the personal attendance of the accused and allows him to appear by pleader or agent his presence is essential. A complainant cannot be represented by a pleader in order to take away the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under this section. The object of the section is to prevent a complainant from being dilatory in the prosecution of the case and if he does not care to be present when the case is called on the accused is entitled to an acquittal unless the Magistrate chooses for reasons he thinks proper to adjourn the case, 49 M. 883 following 7 M. 213 and 356. This section is applicable only to a case where summons is issued to the accused on a complaint and not to a case taken, upon a police report. Appearance of the vakil for the complainant is not an appearance of the complainant within the meaning of this section, Weir II, 309. Where after the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and the defence the Magistrate adjourned the case for argument for the purpose of the documentary and oral evidence being explained to him and on that adjourned date the complainant did not appear and the Magistrate dismissed the complaint and acquitted the accused under this section, it was held that the acquittal was proper, 18 C.W.N. 583=15 Cr. L.J. 731=22 Ind. Cas. 739. Where a case was called by mistake on a date not fixed for hearing and the complaint was dismissed and accused acquitted on account of the absence of the complainant under this section, and the Magistrate having found out the mistake on the date really fixed for hearing ignored the previous order wrongly passed, and proceeded with the case which ended in a conviction, it was held that the procedure of the Magistrate was proper and he had jurisdiction to ignore his previous order of acquittal which was a nullity, 47 C. 147 following Weir II, 307; 42 C. 363. When a party was summoned to appear on a particular day at a particular hour and "he appeared at that hour but the Court was not sitting then but sat only later on when the party was not present, it cannot be said that the party failed to appear within the meaning of this section, 25 L.W. 358=28 Cr. L.J. 208 (2)=99 Ind. Cas. 944 (2). An order of acquittal passed owing to the non-appearance of the complainant on the date fixed for disposal of the case is wholly without jurisdiction when to the knowledge of the Magistrate the complainant had died before such date, and such an order is no bar to the Magistrate taking cognizance of a fresh complaint made by another servant of the master, for mischief to whose property the deceased had preferred the first complaint, 18 C.W.N. 1211=13 Cr. L.J. 726=26 Ind. Cas. 174. Where a Magistrate adjourned a case for pronouncing judgment and on the adjourned date acquitted the accused on account of the absence of complainant to hear judgment, it was held that the case did not fall within the provisions of this section as the hearing of the case had already been concluded, 46 C. 867. When in a compoundable offence, after the death of the complainant, his nephew applied for substitution of his name in his place and the Magistrate directed the case to be proceeded with on the ground that the accused had been guilty of contempt of the process of the Court, it was held that the Magistrate ought to have passed an order of acquittal under this section on failure of complainant to appear at the hearing of the case unless he thinks proper to adjourn the case to some other day, and the ground on which the Magistrate chose to proceed with the case was not valid, and the High Court acquitted the accused, 19 C.W.N. 834=16 Cr. L.J. 322=28 Ind. Cas. 658. Death of complainant operates as a statutory acquittal. Reasons for adjourning a case apply only for making the complainant to appear and cannot possibly apply when he is dead and the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed with the case after the death of the complainant, 51 M. 339. See 24 C.W.N. 199. But see 20 C.W.N. 862 where it was held that this section was primarily intended to apply to a complainant who is alive and does not appear. The closing words of the first paragraph seem to suggest that the case should be adjourned in order to enable the complainant to appear. When a case was disposed of under this section, the complainant and the accused both being absent, the order under this section operates as a bar to further proceedings. An acquittal under this section acts as a bar to further proceedings equally with an acquittal on the merits under S. 403, 43 A. 58. The provisions of S. 403 infra that a fresh trial will not be barred unless the accused has in the first case been "tried" does not limit the effect of an order of acquittal under this section, 34 M. 253, where 4 C.W.N. 335 and 7 C.W.N. 711 and 493 followed; 40 M. 976, followed in 49 C.L.J. 119 at 121=33 C.W.N. 260, See also 31 Bom. L.R. 795. An order of acquittal under this section on a date other than the date fixed for hearing is no order at all and is a nullity, 42 C. 365; Weir II, 307; under this section the Magistrate is given a discretion to acquit the accused in the absence of the complainant. But mere absence of the complainant cannot result in the acquittal of the accused without the Magistrate passing an order in the exercise of that discretion, 23 Cr. L.J. 492=77 Ind. Cas. 892. When a Magistrate acting under this section dismisses a summons-case on account of the non appearance of the complainant under S. 203, supra, the effect of his order is to bar all subsequent proceedings on the same complaint or based on the same fact until his order is set aside by a competent authority. 3 C.W.N. 760 On account of the absence of the complainant the accused who was charged with mischief was acquitted but on the complainant's motion the District Magistrate revived the complaint and directed that the accused should be proceeded against for theft, it was held the acquittal on the charge of mischief was a bar under S. 403, infra, to his being put on his trial again on the same facts for theft and that the order of the District Magistrate was illegal, 37 C.L.J. 253=25 Cr. L.J. 149=76 Ind. Cas. 293. In a case in which the complainant being absent, the Magistrate acquitted the accused under this section, it subsequently transpired that the absence of the complainant had been procured by the fraud of the accused who had him arrested and kept in custody on a false charge, held that the High Court as a Court of Revision will not on the District Magistrate's reference under S. 493 infra set aside the acquittal, as an appeal lay from the order of acquittal, and no appeal having been preferred by the Government no provision is made in the Code for the Court which passed an order of acquittal under this section to vacate its order, even though such order was obtained by a fraud practised on the Court by the accused, 38 M. 1028, followed in 52 M.L.J. 173=1927 M.W.N. 275=38 M.L.T. 203=28 Cr. L.J. 270=100 Ind. Cas. 238. In the case of cognizable offences where a complainant and a complaint are not necessary, the death of the injured person makes no difference to the criminal proceedings which are a matter for the State and which are undertaken by the Government. But even in the case of non-cognizable offences such as, bribery, the Code does not intend to confine prosecution to persons directly injured. The section was intended to apply to the case of a complainant who is alive but does not appear in Court. In the case of a non-cognizable offence instituted upon complaint the maxim "actio personalis moritur cum persona" does not apply and the trying Magistrate has a discretion in proper cases to allow a complainant to continue by a proper and fit complainant if the latter is willing. Courts should always be on their guard against needless harassment of an accused by substituting a complainant who is not a fit person, 28 Bom. L. R. 288=27 Cr. L.J. 491=93 Ind. Cas. 891 This section is not applicable to proceedings under S. 107, supra, as no summons is issued and no accused in the case and the proper order to pass when complainant and his witnesses are absent is one of discharge and not an acquittal under this section, 31 C.W.N. 335=43 C.L.J. 211=28 Cr. L.J. 479=101 Ind. Cas. 607.

Upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused.—It is to be noticed that the section does not say "upon the day on which the accused appears," but only "the day appointed for the appearance of the accused" and if it had been intended that the appearance of the accused to answer the charge was necessary, there is no reason why the Legislature should not have said so, therefore an acquittal under this section of an accused on whom no summons to appear and answer the charge is served bars a fresh trial on the same facts under S. 403, infra, 31 Bom. L.R. 793 at 799 following 40 M. 976 and 34 M. 253.

Unless he thinks proper to adjourn—This section gives a Magistrate a discretion to adjourn the hearing when complainant is absent and examination of witnesses on any such day during complainant's absence does not necessarily vitiate proceedings, 24 C.W.N. 199. A Court is not bound to wait till the Court is about to close for the day, 7 M. 353. See also the recent decisions of the Madras High Court, 49 M. 883, followed, in 51 M.L.J. 730=24 L.W. 713. See also 52 M.L.J. 173=33 M.L.T. 203=25 Cr. L.J. 270=100 Ind. Cas. 238. But the Court is bound to use some discretion when a complainant was prevented by heavy floods which cut off all communications; and in such a case the acquittal will be an improper exercise of discretion, 24 W.R. (Cr.) 54. If the complainant is dead he could not appear before the Magistrate and therefore the words "unless for some reason he thinks proper, etc." cannot apply to the case of a complainant who is dead and the Magistrate should not have, under the circumstances, proceeded with the inquiry but acquitted the accused, 51 M. 339 where 19 C.W.N. 334 is referred to; but the High Court did interfere in revision where the Magistrate after the prosecution was closed had posted the case for the defence at an unusual hour in the night and acquitted the accused when he found the complainant absent when the case was called, 27 Cr. L.J. 1391=93 Ind. Cas. 607 distinguishing the case in 38 M. 1028.

Further inquiry.—A District Magistrate or Sessions Judge cannot direct further inquiry or re-hear a case dealt with under this section, 7 M. 213; Weir II, 308, 7 C.W.N. 711 and 493; 4 C.W.N. 346. An acquittal of an offence arising out of a certain set of facts under a wrong section will prevent a further inquiry being directed into any offence disclosed on the same facts until that acquittal is set aside, 25 Cr. L.J. 794=81 Ind. Cas. 314; see also 25 Cr. L.J. 359=77 Ind. Cas. 295.

Revision.—The High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with an acquittal as the local Government could appeal under B. 417, infra, if the acquittal is wrong or perverse, but this rule does not properly apply to an acquittal under this section and in any case the rule will not preclude interference by the High Court when the acquittal is the result of an improper clutching at jurisdiction, 25 Cr. L.J. 793=81 Ind. Cas. 314. See in this connection the decision in 38 M. 1028 where the High Court refused to interfere in revision when moved by the District Magistrate even in a case where a trick was played upon the Court by the accused getting the complainant arrested on a charge of nuisance and thereby getting an acquittal under this section. The only remedy open when an order of acquittal has been passed under this section is to have it set aside by the High Court. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to set aside the order of acquittal passed by him and revive the proceedings against the accused, as the order under this section operates as a bar to revival, 33 C.L.J. 196=24 Cr. L.J. 716=74 Ind. Cas. 540.

248. If a complainant, at any time before a final order is passed in any case under this Chapter, satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint, the Magistrate may permit him to withdraw the same, and shall thereupon acquit the accused

Scope of the section.—This section deals with the withdrawal of complaint in some cases, 5 M. 316; 27 B. 369 at 372. This section has no application to warrant cases. Where therefore the offence charged is a warrant case, a Magistrate ought to proceed with the inquiry or trial in spite of the withdrawal by the complainant, if he finds the elements of an offence are made out, 3 C.W.N. 518; 13 B. 600; 37 B. 260. This section contemplates the withdrawal of the complaint, that is the complaint as a whole. When the complaint is against two accused and the withdrawal petition mentioned only one of the accused, it is a withdrawal of the whole complaint and consequently a withdrawal of the complaint in respect of both the accused [1921] Pat. 144. This view was based on the analogy of the decision in 7 C.W.N. 176, which held that the compounding of an offence with regard to one is a compounding with regard to all the accused, but this view was dissented from in 41 M. 323 and 1 Lah. 162. The analogy will not hold good now as the amendment in sub-section (6) of S. 345 is in accordance with the view in 41 M. 323 and opposed to the ruling in 7 C.W.N. 176. This section enables a complainant at any time before a final order is passed by the Magistrate to apply for a withdrawal of a case but there is no absolute power of withdrawal under this section and before a withdrawal can be permitted, there must be sufficient grounds to the satisfaction of the Magistrate, 53 C. 631 at 636. This section is intended to apply to cases instituted upon complaint as defined in S. 4 (1) (h), supra, while S. 249, infra is intended to apply to cases instituted otherwise than on complaint. When a Civil Court which made a complaint for offences under Ss. 183 and 185, I.P.C., against a judgment debtor for disobedience of an injunction issued by it being satisfied that there was a disobedience, requests that the complaint may be withdrawn the Criminal Court to which the complaint was made will not ordinarily be justified in refusing to allow the withdrawal under this section, 27 Cr. L.J. 1247 (2)=98 Ind. Cas. 63 (2). When a Magistrate took cognizance of the case upon a police-report which was no doubt based on a complaint made to them, the person who complained to the police was not entitled under this section to withdraw charges, and the order of the Magistrate permitting the case to be withdrawn is bad in law, 23 M. 626. It is not competent for a Municipal Council to withdraw a complaint under this section when the complaint was preferred by a person in virtue of an express authorization by the Municipal Secretary to whom the powers of the Chairman were delegated under the District Municipalities Act, 27 M L.J. 617=15 Cr.L.J. 299=23 Ind.Cas. 567. When a complaint is withdrawn under this section it is a withdrawal of the whole complaint even though the withdrawal is against one of the accused. It is a question of fact whether a withdrawal is in whole or in part. The offence alleged to have been committed, however, numerous the offenders be, is one and the Code does not contemplate the partial withdrawal of a complaint or withdrawal against some of the offenders only, in spite of the fact that the complainant may now compound against some of the accused under S. 345 (c), infra and continue the case against the remaining accused, 5 Lah. 239. The effect of a withdrawal of a compoundable charge tried with another which was non-compoundable is that the Magistrate was entitled to acquit the accused under this section treating the petition of compromise as one of withdrawal of that charge, 42 A. 202.

At any time before a final order is passed.—These words do not apply to a time before the accused has been ordered to appear inasmuch as S. 242, supra, applicable to the trial of summons-cases, says that "when the accused person appears or is brought before the Magistrate the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted." So an order on the charge-sheet that the persons proceeded against were acquitted cannot be availed of by persons against whom no process has been issued, 36 M. 315.

Satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw.—As the withdrawal of a complaint unlike the composition of an offence is a unilateral act, it is quite intelligible why the Legislature should have imposed the necessity of obtaining the permission of the Magistrate in the case of a withdrawal of the complaint. If such a restriction is not imposed a person may be harassed by a purely vexatious criminal proceeding in which a complainant having put the accused person to much inconvenience and degradation might then calmly withdraw the complaint. To prevent the abuse of the process of the Court this restriction of obtaining the permission of the Court is imposed, 1888 P.R. (Cr. J.) 19. See also 20 C.W.N. 1209. It is for the Magistrate to be satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for permitting the complainant to withdraw the complaint. Permitting the withdrawal is therefore a judicial act, the exercise of which is vested in the Magistrate by this section and the police have no authority to interfere in the matter, Ratanlal 91. The Magistrate is entitled in proper cases to refuse the application for withdrawal made by the complainant. For example in 53 C. 631 it was held that the Calcutta Corporation had no absolute power to withdraw a complaint under S. 537, Cal. Mun. Act which is only an enabling provision and that before the withdrawal can be

Distinction between withdrawal and compounding of an offence.—An act of compounding is different from the withdrawal of a complaint made to a Magistrate. A withdrawal must be an intimation to the Magistrate holding the trial, and is permissible only in a summons-case, and the complainant is required in such a case to satisfy the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting to withdraw. The law does not provide for the withdrawal of a warrant case. The compounding of an offence signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed, has received some gratification not necessarily of a pecuniary character to act as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution, and the law laid down in S. 345 of the Code provides that if the offence is compoundable, the composition shall have the effect of an acquittal, 21 C. 103 at 112-113. 'Compromise' is a word which in itself contemplates an agreement to which there are two parties, but 'withdrawal' has no such meaning. A case is compromised if with the consent of the accused it is withdrawn. A case is withdrawn under this section not with the consent of the accused but in its stead this section lays down that permission of the Magistrate is necessary, 20 C.W.N. 1209. See also 1888 P.R. (Cr. J.) 19. The power of withdrawal is confined to the complainant who has preferred a complaint. Where the Magistrate took cognizance of the case on a police-report, the informant to the police cannot be allowed to withdraw, 23 M. 826, and once a Magistrate has allowed a complaint to be withdrawn, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revive the case against the accused, 25 W.R. (Cr.) 64. There are three contingencies under which a person can be acquitted without a charge having been framed—(1) in a summons-case under S. 243; (2) under S. 345 on a valid compounding of the offence; (3) under S. 333 when the Advocate-General withdraws from the prosecution, 24 Cr. L.J. 120=71 Ind. Cas. 248. In a warrant-case with regard to a non-compoundable offence it is not competent to a Magistrate on a private complainant's offering to withdraw from the prosecution to enter an order of acquittal, 37 B. 369. When an acquittal results from a withdrawal of a complaint, compensation can be awarded under this section, such award of compensation is illegal only when the acquittal is a statutory acquittal under sub-section (6) of S. 345, infra, owing to the composition of an offence which can be validly compounded under S. 345, infra, Ratanlal 957; 11 Cr. L.J. 638=8 Ind. Cas. 387. See also Ratanlal 760.

stage without pronouncing any judgment, either of acquittal or conviction, and may thereupon release the accused.

Scope of the section.—This section applies only to cases instituted otherwise than on a complaint, 21 Cr. L.J. 184=54 Ind. Cas. 888; 13 Cr. L.J. 860=17 Ind. Cas. 796, and S. 247, supra, applies to such cases, instituted on complaint, 6 Pat. 243.

Stay of proceedings at any stage.—The order of the Magistrate stopping proceedings without pronouncing a judgment of acquittal or conviction and releasing the accused is no bar to further proceedings in accordance with law. Such an order is not an acquittal within S. 403, infra. A District Magistrate purporting to act under S. 436, infra, cannot set aside such an order as his powers under that section are confined to a complaint dismissed under S. 203 or S. 201 (3), supra, or where there has been an order of discharge under S. 253 or S. 259 infra. An order under this section does not fall under any of those sections, and cannot be dealt with by the District Magistrate in revision 13 Cr. L.J. 880=17 Ind. Cas. 796.

Frivolous Accusations in Summons and Warrant-cases.

250. (1) If, in any case instituted upon complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation, against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid.

(2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show, and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation to such amount not exceeding one hundred rupees, or, if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not exceeding fifty rupees, as he may determine, be paid by such complainant or informant to the accused or to each or any of them.

(2A) The Magistrate may, by the order directing payment of the compensation under sub-section (2), further order that, in default of payment, the person ordered to pay such compensation shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub-section (2A), the provisions of sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply,

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall, by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him :

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter.

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees may appeal from the order, in so far as the order relates to payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate.

permitted the Magistrate must be satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for doing so and the High Court refused to interfere with the order of the Magistrate refusing permission.

Distinction between withdrawal and compounding of an offence.—An act of compounding is different from the withdrawal of a complaint made to a Magistrate. A withdrawal must be an intimation to the Magistrate holding the trial, and is permissible only in a summons-case, and the complainant is required in such a case to satisfy the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting to withdraw. The law does not provide for the withdrawal of a warrant-case. 'Compromise' is a word which in itself contemplates an agreement to which there are two parties, but 'withdrawal' has no such meaning. A case is compromised if with the consent of the accused it is withdrawn. A case is withdrawn under this section not with the consent of the accused but in its stead this section lays down that permission of the Magistrate is necessary, 20 C.W.N. 1209. See also 1888 P.R. (Cr. J.) 19. The power of withdrawal is confined to the complainant who has preferred a complaint. Where the Magistrate took cognizance of the case on a police-report, the informant to the police cannot be allowed to withdraw, 23 M. 626, and once a Magistrate has allowed a complaint to be withdrawn, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revive the case against the accused, 25 W.R. (Cr.) 64. There are three contingencies under which a person can be acquitted without a charge having been framed—(1) in a summons-case under S. 248; (2) under S. 345 on a valid compounding of the offence; (3) under S. 333 when the Advocate-General withdraws from the prosecution, 24 Cr. L.J. 120=71 Ind. Cas. 248. In a warrant-case with regard to a non-compoundable offence it is not competent to a Magistrate on a private complainant's offering to withdraw from the prosecution to enter an order of acquittal, 37 B. 369. L.J. 638=8 Ind. Cas. 357. See also Ratanlal 700.

Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class, or, with the previous sanction of the District Magistrate, any other Magistrate, may, for reasons to be recorded by him, stop the proceedings at any stage without pronouncing any judgment, either of acquittal or conviction, and may thereupon release the accused.

Scope of the section.—This section applies only to cases instituted otherwise than on a complaint, 21 Cr. L.J. 184=54 Ind. Cas. 888; 13 Cr. L.J. 860=17 Ind. Cas. 796, and S. 247, supra, applies to such cases, instituted on complaint, 6 Pat. 243.

Stay of proceedings at any stage.—The order of the Magistrate stopping proceedings without pronouncing a judgment of acquittal or conviction and releasing the accused is no bar to further proceedings in accordance with law. Such an order is not an acquittal within S. 403, infra. A District Magistrate purporting to act under S. 436, infra, cannot set aside such an order as his powers under that section are confined to a complaint dismissed under S. 203 or S. 204 (3), supra, or where there has been an order of discharge under S. 253 or S. 259 infra. An order under this section does not fall under any of those sections, and cannot be dealt with by the District Magistrate in revision 13 Cr. L.J. 880=17 Ind. Cas. 796.

Frivolous Accusations in Summons and Warrant-cases.

250. (1) If, in any case instituted upon complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation, against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid.

(2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show, and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation to such amount not exceeding one hundred rupees, or, if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not exceeding fifty rupees, as he may determine, be paid by such complainant or informant to the accused or to each or any of them.

(2A) The Magistrate may, by the order directing payment of the compensation under sub-section (2), further order that, in default of payment, the person ordered to pay such compensation shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub-section (2A), the provisions of sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply,

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall, by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him :

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter.

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees may appeal from the order, in so far as the order relates to payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such

(4) Where an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is subject to appeal under sub-section (3), the compensation shall not be paid to him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed or, if an appeal is presented before the appeal has been decided and where such order is made in a case which is not so subject to appeal, the compensation shall not be paid before the expiration of one month from the date of the order.

Extent of amendment.—This section has been partly re-drafted. The amount awardable is raised to rupees one hundred unless the Magistrate is a third-class Magistrate who can award only rupees fifty. Imprisonment in default of payment is to be for a period not exceeding thirty days and the order awarding compensation may now specify the same, and the provisions of Ss. 69 and 70, I.P.C., are made applicable to such imprisonment. This section is made applicable to false, frivolous or vexatious accusations; (1) for the purpose of recovery and imprisonment in default of payment, the compensation will be treated in all respects as a fine; (2) the procedure in awarding compensation has been clearly laid down by, directing that a Magistrate in his order of discharge or acquittal may call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation, and he shall then consider and record any cause shown and pass such orders as he sees fit. As the section is now worded, the order to pay compensation is part of the order of discharge or acquittal and the recording and consideration of objections is to precede such order. The procedure now adopted is more logical. An appeal is now also provided in cases where a Magistrate other than a second or third class Magistrate awards more than fifty rupees as compensation.

Scope and object of the section.—This section is a penal provision and must be construed strictly. There is, therefore, no authority for introducing into it words which would extend the liability to pay compensation to any person beyond the actual complainant or person who gives the information on which the case is initiated. The word 'information' as used in this section is limited to the information given and entered in the cognizable register under S. 154, supra. A person who abets the giving of information or a person who gives information on which the information is recorded under S. 154, supra, or one who appears afterwards in the case is not within the section. A wide construction of the section would enable Magistrates to order compensation to be paid by persons not contemplated by the section, 21 Cr. L.J. 49=55 Ind. Cas. 401; 20 Cr. L.J. 100=48 Ind. Cas. 980. The provisions laid down herein should be strictly followed, 30 Cr. L.J. 438=115 Ind. Cas. 334. The section applies to proceedings under this and following Chapters including summary trial, 11 M. 142. The object of the section is not to punish a complainant, but, by a summary order, to award some compensation to the person against whom a frivolous or vexatious accusation is brought, leaving him to obtain further redress against the complainant, if he seeks for it by a regular suit or criminal prosecution, 30 Cr. L.J. 123 (F.B.) at 129; 16 Cr. L.J. 92=26 Ind. Cas. 1004; 1881 A.W.N. 167. The principle of giving compensation is to recompense by way of damages the party who has been vexatiously dragged before a Criminal Court, 38 M. 1091 at 1033; under this section compensation can be awarded only against a complainant. It does not provide for the responsibility of a next friend or guardian who cannot be ordered to pay compensation, 13 Cr. L.J. 136=13 Ind. Cas. 824. The compensation which the Court is empowered to award under this section is not a fine but is in the nature of damages for malicious prosecution although it is made recoverable in a summary manner as if it were a fine, 26 M. 127. Proceedings under Chapter VIII for taking security are not accusations of an offence within this section enabling the Magistrate to award compensation, 20 A.L.J. 624; 36 A. 382; 15 A. 365; 7 A.L.J. 743; 25 B. 48. So also maintenance proceedings do not come within the provisions of this section, 16 M. 234; 6 M.L.T. 261. There is nothing illegal for a Magistrate to proceed simultaneously under S. 470, infra, and this section. There is no conflict between the two sections as the object of this section is to give some compensation to the accused who had been harassed by a false, and frivolous or vexatious complaint, whereas proceedings under S. 476, infra, are taken on grounds of public policy to punish complainants for making a false charge, 10 Sind L.R. 162 7 Sind L.R. 10; see also 29 C. 479; 21 M. 237; 3 C. 123 (F.B.); 15 Bom. L.R. 49, 1901 P.R. (Cr.J.) 6. If a false charge is of such a nature that a prosecution is necessary on grounds of public policy, it may be well for the Magistrate to act under S. 476, infra, but if the charge is one which does not render it necessary on grounds of public policy that a prosecution should be started a Magistrate may award compensation under this section and he cannot be said to have exercised his jurisdiction wrongly, 27 M. 59. Although a Magistrate who makes a complaint of Court in writing under S. 476, infra, is not debarred from granting compensation it may not be an exercise of proper discretion, 26 A. 542; 37 B. 376; 21 M. 237 dissenting from 22 C. 586. This is a penal section and should be construed strictly, 14 Cr. L.J. 437= 20 Ind. Cas 597; but this section does not warrant an order against a person who only instigates the giving of false information but does not himself make the complaint or give information. There is no authority for introducing into it words which would extend the liability beyond the actual complainant or person who gives the information on which the case is instituted, 20 Cr. L.J. 100=43 Ind. Cas. 930. A Magistrate cannot act under this section when the offence has been lawfully compounded by the parties, 11 Cr. L.J. 638= 8 Ind. Cas 387. To award compensation the Magistrate himself is to discharge or acquit the accused, 16 Cr. L.J. 92=26 Ind. Cas 1004.

Any case instituted upon complaint or information given to a police-officer or Magistrate — 'Complaint as defined in this Code' was the expression found in this section before the recent revision of the Code. Now the words "as defined in this Code" are omitted. When a certain decree-holder applied for a complaint by Court to prosecute his judgment-debtor for obstructing the Court Bailiff in executing a warrant of attachment issued by the Court, and the Court when refusing the same passed an order under S. 476 infra, sending the judgment-debtor to the nearest first class Magistrate for trial who in discharging the accused awarded compensation against the decree-holder, it was held that the order for compensation was bad, as the accusation was not made upon the complaint or information of the decree-holder and complaint cannot include the deposition made during the course of the trial, 13 Bom. L.R. 1166. This section has no application to a case instituted on a police report, 21 C. 579; 7 C.W.N. 206; 5 C.W.N. 370; 7 M. 563; 6 A. 96; 22 B. 934. See also 21 M.L.J. 844=10 M.L.T. 191. This section is not applicable to cases under Ch. VIII of the Code relating to security proceedings. The provisions therein contained are aimed at prevention of and are not consequent upon the commission of specified offence. See also 3 Cr. L. Rev. 410=12 A.L.J. 506, where it was held that an order awarding compensation against a person laying information with a view to start proceedings under S. 107 supra was not proper and was set aside. A police-officer in a non-cognizable case may initiate proceedings by laying information before a Magistrate just like any other complainant, and in such a case the information which he lays will be a complaint within this section and compensation can be awarded against such police-officer if the information was found to be vexatious, 26 B. 450 (F.B.) overruling 22 B. 934. See also 6 A. 96, where it was held that a case instituted by the police on a complaint made to them is not one instituted upon complaint under this section. But see 24 A.L.J. 221=27 Cr. L.J. 702=34 Ind. Cas. 884, where it was held that a person who gave information to the police upon which proceedings were started can be dealt with under this section and he cannot be heard to say he was merely an informant and not a real complainant. This section refers to information given to the police and not to information which led to information being given to the police. If A tells B and B tells C and C tells the police; A cannot be asked to pay compensation under this section, 1929 M.W.N. 785 distinguishing (1913) M.W.N. 803. A person who complains to a Village Magistrate of an offence knowing that the latter must in the ordinary course of his duty report the substance of the complaint to the police, gives information to the police just as effectively as if he went in person to the police station and if the police charge the case, it is instituted on information given to police-officer within the section. A comparison of the opening words of this section with S. 190, supra, will show that they closely correspond and that the former are intended to cover all the three methods marked in S. 190 (a), (b) and (c) in which a Magistrate may take cognizance of a case, with the single exception "of his own knowledge or suspicion" which would be inappropriate to this section. It is difficult to understand that a person who chooses to institute a frivolous or vexatious charge in one way should be less liable to pay compensation than one instituting it in another, seeing that all are equally effective methods of inducing the Criminal Courts to take action, 39 M. 1006 dissenting from, 22 M.L.J. 138. The same view was taken in 4 Cr. L. Rev. 183, where it was held that information to the Village Magistrate was information to a police-officer within the meaning of this section, and a Magistrate was entitled to act under this section by awarding compensation to the accused. Where a Station-House officer prepared a charge-sheet and presented it to a Magistrate on the strength of a sanction granted to prosecute a person by the Assistant Superintendent of Police for an offence under S. 211, I.P.O., and the Magistrate discharged the accused and awarded compensation against the constable under this section, it was held that the constable was not in such circumstances the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made, and therefore the compensation order was illegal, 21 M.L.J. 834=10 M.L.T. 191=12 Cr. L.J. 482=12 Ind. Cas. 90. See also Weir II, 318 where the order for compensation against a public servant who acted merely on the information of his official superior was held bad. Information contemplated by this section is limited to information given and entered in the cognizable register under S. 154, supra, 21 Cr. L.J. 49=54 Ind. Cas. 401. 'Information to a police officer' will include not only a case in which the police were originally put in motion but also a case where subsequent information is given leading to the accusation of others during police investigation of the case, 14 C.W.N. 326=5 Ind. Cas. 693. A statement made by a person at a police inquiry which results in the institution of criminal proceedings against another is not a complaint within this section and the institution of the proceedings is not his complaint or information given by him but is a result of the police inquiry, 17 Cr. L.J. 336=35 Ind. Cas. 512. If a person makes a report to the police which is found by the Magistrate to be false, frivolous or vexatious the Magistrate can direct the complainant to pay compensation under this section, 23 A.L.J. 1054=27 Cr. L.J. 35=91 Ind. Cas. 67 where 1 Pat. L.J. 106 is referred to. This section has no application to a case instituted upon a police-report or on information given by a police-officer, 21 C. 979; 5 C.W.N. 370; 7 C.W.N. 206. In 39 M. 1006 the Court was inclined to take the view that the term "Magistrate" occurring in this section included a Village Magistrate, but the point was not actually decided, although the decision in 25 M. 667 which took a different view was disapproved on the strength of the latter Full Bench ruling in 32 M. 238. Under this section a guardian or next friend of a minor complainant cannot be ordered to pay compensation to accused, 13 Cr.L.J. 136=13 Ind. Cas. 824. The report of an excise officer is a complaint falling within S. 4 (1) (h), supra, and it is only a police report for the purposes of S. 190, supra, and not the section and so an order to pay compensation can be passed against the excise officer who makes the complaint acting on the information given to him by an informer. Even if the report is not a complaint, it is information given to a Magistrate and the officer is the person on whose information the accusation was made to make the section applicable 54 C. 371.

Any offence triable by a Magistrate.—An order for compensation can be passed not only in summons-cases but also in warrant cases, 28 Cr. L.J. 450=101 Ind. Cas. 482. It must be an offence first, 43 B. 463; 15 A. 365. Offence need not necessarily be under the Indian Penal Code, 4 N.W.P.H.C.R. 94; 1872 P.R. (Cr. J.) 11. The person must have been accused before a Magistrate of an offence, 25 B. 48. See S. 4 (1) (c) for definition of an offence. Proceedings under Chapter VIII for taking security instituted on the information given by a private person is not an accusation of an offence, and therefore the provisions of this section are inapplicable to such a case, 45 A. 363; 36 A. 382; 15 A. 365; 7 A.L.J. 749; 25 B. 48; 24 Cr. L.J. 228=71 Ind. Cas. 692; 45 A. 363; 1903 P.L.R. (Cr.J.) 9 at p. 32. Where a complaint is filed by a person to initiate security proceedings against another under S. 107, supra, but the Court chooses to regard it as one falling under S. 106, I.P.O., and ultimately dismisses it, it has no jurisdiction to act under this section by awarding compensation even though the accused expressed his willingness to furnish security, it can never be said that the complaint was false, frivolous or vexatious, 49 A. 750 following 45 A. 363, or to maintenance proceedings under S. 489 infra, 16 M. 234; 6 M.L.T. 261=4 Ind. Cas. 1046. Nor can it be a case of mere breach of contract under S. 2 (1st part) of Act XIII of 1859 (Breach of Contract), 4 C.W.N. 253. A complaint under S. 28 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act is not a complaint in respect of an offence within the meaning of this section, although there is a summary remedy provided for the recovery of the legal fare of a public conveyance and so the Magistrate is not entitled to award compensation under this section, 22 Bom L.R. 193=21 Cr. L.J. 390=55 Ind. Cas. 860; 44 B. 463. The object of the Legislature in enacting this provision was to exclude offences of a grave nature from the provisions of this section and the words triable by a Magistrate mean triable under S. 28, supra, by a Magistrate and the cases provided by this section are those specified in the 8th column of the 2nd Sch. as triable by a Magistrate. Where the 8th column shows that an offence say under S. 436, I.P.C., is triable by a Court of Session, a District Magistrate not empowered under S. 30, supra, cannot pass an order under this section awarding compensation. 'Triable by a Magistrate' means ordinarily triable by a Magistrate as distinguished from the case ordinarily triable by the Court of Session exclusively, 1902 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 139 at p. 602. Therefore a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry into a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session is not competent to act under this section when he discharges the accused, Weir II, 315; 20 Cr. L.J. 141=43 Ind. Cas. 173; 40 A. 615; 25 A.L.J. 818=23 Cr. L.J. 933=105 Ind. Cas. 507 where 40 A. 615 is followed; 19 Bom. L.R. 60=18 Cr. L.J. 463=39 Ind. Cas. 303. Where in a complaint filed, the offence disclosed was one of dacoity not triable by a Magistrate that will not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, to make an order under this section if the Magistrate, after a preliminary inquiry issued process for an offence triable by him. To restrict the operation of this section to cases in which the section referred to in the complaint was an offence triable by a Magistrate would seriously diminish the usefulness of this section and enable complainants to evade its provision by intentionally referring to sections triable exclusively by a Court of Session. In filing a complaint, the complainant must be deemed to make an accusation which includes not only the offence specifically referred to, but also any offence which the facts disclosed in the complaint considered in the light of such inquiry as the Magistrate considers necessarily disclosed, 26 Cr.L.J. 265=84 Ind. Cas. 329. But when the complaint is for offences some of which are triable exclusively by the Magistrate and some by the Sessions Court and the accused after trial was discharged of all the offences, it was held that no order for compensation could be passed even when the accused was discharged under S. 253, infra, 48 A. 166 followed in 28 Cr. L.J. 450=101 Ind. Cas. 482. Where a Magistrate tries an accused person for an offence within his jurisdiction when the offence disclosed was one exclusively triable by a Court of Session and discharges the accused, he is competent to award compensation to the accused under this section, 43 M. 29, 23 Cr. L.J. 633=103 Ind. Cas. 910, but see 20 A.L.J. 433 and 23 Cr. L.J. 289=66 Ind. Cas. 513. The provisions of this section are applicable to summons-cases tried summarily by virtue of S. 262 infra, and compensation may be awarded, 11 M. 142. A Magistrate who has no jurisdiction to try a charge and who inquires into the charge and discharges the accused cannot award compensation, 9 Cr. L. J. 502=2 Ind. Cas. 159.

The Magistrate before whom case was heard.—The word "heard" was substituted for the word "tried" and as a complete trial is not necessary now for awarding compensation, order can be passed after hearing a case partly, and the only restriction is that evidence must be heard, 10 W.R. (Cr.) 6. So compensation cannot be awarded in cases where the complaint is dismissed without issuing process to the accused, because in such a case there is no 'hearing' within the meaning of this section and there is no discharge or acquittal within the meaning of this section. The Magistrate cannot award compensation to an accused before process is issued for his appearance, even though the accused appeared at the preliminary investigation under S. 202, supra by a pleader to watch the proceedings, 7 P.L.R. 234=4 Cr. L.J. 35. The words 'the Magistrate by whom the case is heard' mean the Magistrate by whom the case is decided and not that the evidence must have been recorded by him. The section does not say the Magistrate by whom the evidence is heard but the Magistrate by whom the case is heard. A Magistrate who decides a case is under no necessity to hear the evidence under the provisions of S. 250, infra, when the hearing is made over to another Magistrate. Under the provisions of S. 245, infra, after recording some evidence and the latter Magistrate heard the rest of the evidence and ordered complainant to pay compensation such Magistrate was competent to do so under this section, 19 A.L.J. 631=22 Cr. L.J. 406=61 Ind. Cas. 646. This section is confined by its terms to the Courts of Magistrates trying cases in the first instance and does not confer the requisite powers on appellate Courts to award compensation when setting aside a conviction, 43 A.83 followed in 7 Lah. 152; 27 Cr. L.J. 570=14 Ind. Cas. 138. The special provisions of this section are applicable only to original trials. The words 'are the Magistrate by whom the case is heard' and they will not include a Court of appeal and therefore an appellate Court while reversing a conviction cannot award compensation under this section, 3 Bom. L.R. 631, 7 Bom. L.R. 995=3 Cr. L.J. 83; 8 M.H.C.R. Appx. 7. In view of the language of this section it is only the Magistrate who originally heard the case can pass an order for compensation. It is not intended by the Legislature that any other tribunal other than the Magistrate who heard the evidence should have the power. It would be inconvenient if, when the tribunal before which the case is heard finds a charge proved, an appellate Court when revising that finding could pass an order for compensation and such order cannot be justified by invoking the aid of S. 423, (1) (d) infra, 3 A.L.J. 382=3 Cr. L.J. 441. An order making a complainant to compensate an accused for having been frivolously or vexatiously charged does not come within the words " consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper " occurring in S. 423 infra defining the powers of the appellate Court as the making of an award of compensation would require express authority, and the special power under this section is given only to an original magisterial Court. Moreover, as the exercise of such a power by the appellate Court would involve such an extreme measure of contempt for the judgment of the inferior Court concerned, that it could but seldom be used with propriety, it can readily be understood why the Legislature should not have thought it worth while if, indeed, it did not think it actually inexpedient to extend it to such a Court, 39 C. 157 (F.B.) at 161-62 overruling 14 C.W.N. 212; 28 A. 625; 1892 A.W.N. 53. The Magistrate who heard the case alone is competent and his successor cannot award compensation under this section, and this is clear from the wording of the section. When a case is disposed of after hearing some of the prosecution witnesses and the Magistrate did not care to examine the other witnesses being of opinion that their evidence will not materially help the case the Magistrate was not justified in awarding compensation although he was entitled under the law to discharge the accused at any stage. But it is only after the examination of all the witnesses for the complainant whom he wanted to examine, the Magistrate can come to the conclusion that the complaint is false, frivolous or vexatious, 51 M. 337; 44 M. 51 at 53; 25 Cr. L.J. 1280=82 Ind. Cas. 288.

Discharges or acquits the accused.—The wording of this section is very clear. It is only the trying Magistrate who, if he discharges the accused can order compensation to be paid. The appellate Court has no jurisdiction to proceed under this section, 46 A. 80 following 28 A. 625 and 39 C. 157 (F.B.), followed in 7 Lah. 152. This section is not applicable to a case in which a complaint is dismissed under S. 203, supra, without any process being issued for the attendance of the person against whom such complaint is made. In such a case there is no discharge or acquittal within the meaning of this section entitling the Court to award compensation to the accused, 29 A. 137. See in this connection 47 A. 722 and 51 M. L.J. 605 (F.B.)=24 L.W. 613. Before compensation is awarded, the case must be heard by a Magistrate and he shall have discharged or acquitted the accused, and the principle of giving compensation is to recompense by way of damages to the party who has been vexatiously dragged before a Criminal Court, 26 M. 127, followed in 38 M. 1091. Proceedings under this section are inapplicable to a case where the accused person has himself by agreement with the prosecutor arrived at a settlement and has been a party to it. When a Ran-nama was filed in Court stating that the offence charged which was compoundable had been compounded, the Court ought to accept the same under S. 245, infra, and was not entitled to hold an inquiry whether the charge was frivolous or vexatious, to decide whether compensation should be awarded to the accused under the section 10 Bom. L.R. 1056=11 Cr. L.J. 633

—8 Ind. Cas. 337. The composition under S. 345 has the effect of an acquittal but there is no discharge or acquittal within the meaning of this section to entitle the Magistrate to award compensation to the accused. When the accused is acquitted under S. 315 (c) infra by a valid composition effected by the parties, the Magistrate is not entitled to act under this section. The reason is that such an acquittal is the result of an operation of law upon the act of composition effected by the parties but an acquittal under S. 215 or 217, supra, is the result of a purely Magisterial act. There is a withdrawal of the complaint with the permission of the Court and in such cases the Magistrate may award compensation in proper cases, 1883 P.R. (Cr.J.) 19; 10 Bom. L.R. 1056; see also 11 Cr. L.J. 638=8 Ind. Cas. 337 and Ratanlal 700. It was held in 24 C. 53 that the acquittal or discharge must be complete before awarding compensation; where an accused was charged with offences under Ss. 352 and 379, I.P.C., and one of the offences alone was proved, no compensation could be awarded as the complaint was at any rate partly true. Compensation may be awarded after hearing defence evidence because it is possible that the Magistrate might not be able to detect the frivolous or vexatious nature of the complaint until the accused had an opportunity to explain the real state of affairs, Weir II, 316; 10 B. 199; 5 M. 381.

All or any of the accused.—The words "all or any" have been newly added now. It was not very clear whether compensation could be awarded when some accused were convicted and some were acquitted. To make this clear, the words "all or any" were added. Conviction of some of the accused will not preclude a Magistrate awarding compensation to others who are acquitted. A complaint may be well founded as regards some of the accused, and frivolous or vexatious as regards the others so as to render the complainant liable to pay compensation to those others, 5 M. 381.

Is satisfied that accusation was false and frivolous or vexatious.—The Magistrate must be satisfied that the accusation was false and frivolous or vexatious and it is only then, that he is entitled to award compensation, 1881 A.W.N. 167. The alteration now made, covers a case where the complaint is shown to be false and either frivolous or vexatious. This section justifies compensation being awarded when a false complaint is filed out of enmity, 25 A.L.J. 161. The word 'frivolous' comes from Latin frigus, cold, and means coldly or lightly esteemed, not worth notice. Trifling acts causing slight harm, coming under S. 95, I.P.C. (De minimis) may be held to be frivolous. Vexatious means causing vexation or annoyance, teasing, distressing, harassing, full of trouble. In legal language every prosecution is vexatious as we find in the maxim 'nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa'. As qualifying an accusation the term frivolous indicates that the accusation is of a trivial nature, but it may or may not be false, 2 Cr. L.J. 209 (n) and the term vexatious implies that the accusation is one which ought not to have been made in a Criminal Court and which it is intended to harass the accused. But neither of the two words excludes the element of falsehood in the charge. An accusation cannot be said to be vexatious within the meaning of this section unless the main intention of the complaint be to cause annoyance to the person accused and not merely to further the ends of justice, 18 Cr. L.J. 1003=32 Ind. Cas. 733. Again, a charge that is false must be vexatious though it may not be frivolous as well. A false charge is patently both a vexatious and frivolous one. Frivolous may be described as meaning trifling, silly or without due foundation, 21 Cr. L.J. 41 at 42=54 Ind. Cas. 249; 10 Bom. L.R. 128. The term frivolous or vexatious covers a deliberately false report, 21 Cr. L.J. 226=53 Ind. Cas. 98. A vexatious charge may be partly true and the idea conveyed by the word vexatious is that the object of the person making the accusation shall primarily be to harass the person accused ibid. at 228. The word "false" has now been added and is in accordance with the decision in 30 C. 123 (F.B.) which overruled 28 C. 251; see 26 A. 512; 34 A. 354; 38 M. 1091 and 16 Cr. L.J. 92=26 Ind. Cas. 1004. So there is no reason why a case in which the accusation is false should be considered as being outside the scope of the section. The object of the section is not to punish the complainant but by a summary order to award some compensation to the person against whom a frivolous or vexatious accusation is brought leaving it to him to obtain further redress if he seeks for it in a Civil or Criminal Court. When a false complaint was made at the instance of another party by the complainant it is vexatious within the meaning of this section, Weir II, 313; 21 M. 237. But when the complainant finding his wife absent and the accused also missing, filed a complaint against him of enticing away his wife and the order of discharge showed that the complaint had good grounds for coming to the conclusion that they had gone together, though a good alibi was proved by the accused, the complaint was held to be not vexatious, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 389 at 390. When a complaint is not wilfully false and there does not appear to be any perversion or exaggeration of the evidence the case is not a fit one for compensation, 30 Cr. L.J. 839=115 Ind. Cas. 900.

Magistrate may in his discretion.—The question whether the discretion given by this section has been rightly exercised must always depend upon the facts of the particular case. If the false charge is of such a nature that a prosecution is necessary on grounds of public policy it may well be that a Magistrate would exercise his discretion wrongly, if instead of sanctioning a prosecution, he awarded compensation. If the false charge is not one which does not render it necessary on grounds of public policy that a prosecution should be sanctioned, a Magistrate who makes an order for compensation cannot be said to exercise his discretion wrongly. These are considerations to be borne in mind in making an order under this section, 27 M 59 at 60 61. Where a Magistrate awarded compensation under this section in a case in which the complaint was found to be false and malicious and made with deliberation on account of past misunderstandings and was instituted, knowing that there was no just and lawful ground, the High Court set aside the order for compensation holding that the Magistrate did not exercise a proper discretion in granting compensation and pointed out that the case was a fit one for proceeding against the complainant under S. 211, I.P.C., 29 C. 479.

By his order of discharge or acquittal call upon complainant forthwith to show cause.—No order under this section can be passed without discharging or acquitting the accused, 30 Cr. L.J. 854=117 Ind. Cas. 833. When a person is accused of several offences and is discharged in respect of some of them and acquitted of others, it is still open to the Magistrate to make an order under this section in respect of all the accusations when he passes the final order of acquittal. It is obviously better for the Magistrate to take action in such a case not at an intermediate stage of the trial but at the end, 27 Cr. L.J. 448=93 Ind. Cas. 240. This section requires that before a Magistrate makes it a ground for discharging an accused that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious, he shall hear the complainant on that aspect of the case and unless he does so, his order of compensation is without jurisdiction. The order awarding compensation must be contained in the order of discharge or acquittal and not, passed in a separate proceeding after the accused had been discharged and acquitted, 33 C. 302 following 25 A. 315; 34 A. 355; 15 Cr. L.J. 290=23 Ind. Cas. 493; 36 A. 132 and failure to do so cannot be cured by S. 537, infra, 26 Cr. L.J. 449=85 Ind. Cas. 129; 20 Cr. L.J. 774=53 Ind. Cas. 614. But the decision in 33 C. 302, was distinguished in a latter case. There a Magistrate by his order of discharge declared the case to be frivolous and directed the complainant under this section to pay compensation to the accused subject to any cause being shown by him and no cause having been shown by the complainant the Magistrate, the day after, made his previous order absolute and the High Court held that the order was not only reasonable and proper but it strictly complied with the requirements of the section. The Court further remarked that it was sufficient that the Magistrate fixed the compensation in his order of discharge but if the complainant was absent at the time of discharge the Magistrate certainly would not be justified in keeping the accused in custody with the charge hanging over their head while the complainant is fetched to show cause. The direction shall be conditional or in the nature of a rule and that the rule shall not be made absolute until complainant had shown cause, 18 C.W.N. 702. A complainant cannot insist on an adjournment to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation under this section, 28 Bom. L.R. 98. A complainant who was called upon to show cause, stated "my pleader will give a written reply. I am not in a position to give my reply now" and the Magistrate passed an order directing him to pay compensation, it was held that he had not a right to an adjournment to enable him to consult his pleader and give a written reply if he chose the procedure prescribed under this section being similar to the one prescribed in the case of an accused person in a summons-case to show cause under S. 242, supra, 27 Cr. L.J. 430=93 Ind. Cas. 158. It is only the trying Magistrate who can order payment of compensation when discharging or acquitting the accused. The appellate Court has no jurisdiction to proceed under this section and award compensation, 7 Lah. 152 where 23 A. 625; 39 C. 157 (F.B.); 46 A. 60; 7 Bom. L.R. 998 are followed. Where the Magistrate ordered compensation to be paid by an absentee complainant believing that the complainant deliberately absented himself on the day the judgment was pronounced, it was held that the order was illegal as the section provided for what is to be done in case the complainant was not present when judgment was delivered, i.e., to summon him and give him an opportunity to show cause before passing the order. The order was therefore set aside as illegal, 24 A.L.J. 170=27 Cr. L.J. 128=91 Ind. Cas. 705.

Before the amendment in 1923, there was a conflict of opinion as to whether a Magistrate after discharge could award compensation by separate proceedings. 25 A. 315; 34 A. 354; 38 C. 302; 20 Cr. L.J. 226 and 774 held that such order was illegal but 1916 M.W.N. 159; 8 Bom. L.R. 847; 18 Cr. L.J. 1014; 42 Ind. Cas. 758; 36 A. 132; 21 Cr. L.J. 371=55 Ind. Cas. 851 took the opposite view and held that the order was legal. By the new amendment the conflict is set at rest and the word "forthwith" has been newly added. By this section as amended and enacted in the precise words which are now to be found in it, it was intended that its provisions should be observed and carried out by the subordinate Court irrespective of any prejudice to the complainant occasioning a failure of justice. It is desirable and it should be made clear that the provisions of the Code should be observed by the Magistrates in the subordinate Courts, 29 C.W.N. 127=26 Cr. L.J. 449=85 Ind. Cas. 129. The law as it now stands is that only the order calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation is to be contained in the order of discharge and the order for payment of compensation is necessarily a subsequent order, 7 Lah. 121 followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 680=110 Ind. Cas. 232. The order is to be passed always in the presence of the complainant in Court. If the complainant is absent when the Magistrate discharged the accused, before he awards compensation, he must adjourn the case to secure the attendance of the complainant and give him an opportunity to show cause and then pass his final order. See 3 Cr. L.J. 123. Where a Magistrate signed and dated his order of discharge, then recorded an order calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation, and recorded and considered the objections and at once proceeded to pass an order to pay compensation, it was held that the entire proceedings followed one another on one and the same date and there was substantial compliance with the provisions of the section or at most an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, 8 Bom. L.R. 847=4 Cr. L.J. 423 followed in 28 Cr. L.J. 592=102 Ind. Cas. 560; 10 Cr. L.J. 220. The same view was taken in 36 A. 132. There, after calling upon the complainant to show cause, the Magistrate four days later after hearing complainant passed an order awarding compensation, it was held that the proceedings though not strictly in accordance with law were merely irregular and not without jurisdiction. Where a Magistrate directed the acquittal of the accused and asked the complainant if he had any cause to show, and immediately thereafter passed the order, it is only a continuation of the same order, and if instead of signing the order at two places, he had signed the order at the very end no objection can be taken to the procedure adopted, 27 Cr. L.J. 35=91 Ind. Cas. 67 where 25 A. 315 and 34 A. 354 are distinguished. Where a Magistrate after acquitting the accused passed an order directing complainant to pay compensation to each of the accused and then called upon complainant to show cause why he should not pay the same, complainant being absent, his brother verbally showed cause which was held by the Magistrate to be insufficient; held, that the complainant was in fact given no opportunity to show cause, 18 C.W.N. 1277=15 Cr. L.J. 707=26 Ind. Cas. 153; 25 Cr. L.J. 1312=82 Ind. Cas. 480.

Direct the person upon whose complaint accusation is made.—An executive body cannot authorize one of its servants to prefer a frivolous and vexatious complaint and so screen its servant who prefers the complaint from the legal penalty; such servant can be ordered to pay compensation under this section, Ratanlal 309. Judicial officers acting judicially cannot be made liable under this section, 1 B. 175; 20 G. 481; 26 A. 183; 11 Cr. L.J. 634=8 Ind. Cas. 832. Public officers are liable to be dealt with under this section, Weir II, 317; but where a public servant only gave evidence in the proceedings instituted on the information of his official superior, an order for compensation against him was held bad Weir II, 318A. A Police-officer who lodges information may be dealt with under this section, 26 B. 150 (F.B.) overruling, 22 B. 534; 13 Cr. L.J. 752=17 Ind. Cas. 64. Where a servant is only a mouthpiece of his master and merely gave expression to his master's accusation, he cannot be held liable under this section, 14 C.W.N. 326=11 Cr. L.J. 201=5 Ind. Cas. 693. Where a charge sheet under B. 211, I.P.C., was presented to a Magistrate by a constable having been prepared by an S.H.O. under the orders of an Assistant Superintendent of Police it was held that the constable was not a person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made so that the Magistrate may make an order under this section, 21 M.L.J. 844=10 M.L.T. 191=12 Cr. L.J. 482=12 Ind. Cas. 50; See also 1 B. 175; 20 G. 481; 26 A. 183; Weir II, 316; 11 Cr. L.J. 634=8 Ind. Cas. 832. A guardian and next friend of a minor complainant cannot be asked to show cause and against him an order to pay compensation cannot be made, 13 Cr. L.J. 136=13 Ind. Cas. 824.

If such person is not present direct summons to him to appear and show cause.—Under the amended section if the complainant is present in Court he is bound to show cause immediately. He cannot insist upon a grant of an adjournment for this purpose, see 23 Bom. L.R. 58. If however, an adjournment is granted or if the complainant is not present and a summons is issued to him, the Court can pass an order at the adjourned hearing after recording and considering the cause, if any, shown by the complainant or informant, 31 Bom. L.R. 591 at 593.

Shall record and consider any cause complainant may show.—These words are imperative and the omission to record and consider the objections cannot be treated as a mere irregularity, 23 Cr. L.J. 251; 10 Cr. L.J. 230; 10 C.W.N. 544; 21 Cr. L.J. 751. An order for compensation made in the absence of the complainant is not a compliance with law, as this sub-section says that the Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant may show and the order was set aside by the High Court, 9 A.L.J. 170=13 Cr. L.J. 258=14 Ind. Cas. 652. It cannot be said that an order for compensation made in spite of the request of the complainant to examine all his remaining witnesses to prove that his case was a true one is not illegal but is not one that should be made except in exceptional cases. He should be allowed to call witnesses, for until the Magistrate has heard them he cannot say that their evidences will not help him to decide the propriety of such order and the extent of the culpability of complainant to assess the amount, 44 M. 51 at 53; 23 Cr. L.J. 1290=52 Ind. Cas. 238. It is only after examining all the witnesses for the complainant whom he wanted to examine the Magistrate could come to the conclusion that the complaint is false, frivolous or vexatious. No doubt he was entitled at any stage to discharge the accused but that would not be a ground for awarding compensation to the accused, 51 M. 337 following 44 M. 51 at 53. The direction to pay compensation should be part and parcel of the order of discharge or acquittal and this clearly shows that no separate inquiry is contemplated, (1878) A.W.N. 118. It is not the intention of the Legislature that a complainant should be entitled to an adjournment to enable him to show cause, much less the opportunity of producing further evidence, 36 A. 132; 34 A. 354; 15 Cr. L.J. 364=22 Ind. Cas. 592. The addition of the word 'forthwith' is very significant and supports the view taken in the above decisions. An opportunity to show cause must be given before an order is passed, 24 Bom. L.R. 205; 5 Cr. L. Rev. 400. An order should not be made without calling upon the complainant to show cause, 38 C. 302; 3 C.W.N. 514; 11 M. 342; Weir II, 310; Ratanlal 634 & 725; 3 Bom. L.R. 586; 9 A.L.J. 170=13 Cr. L.J. 258=14 Ind. Cas. 652.

Rule 200, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. says that the Magistrate should call upon the complainant if he is present to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation and if the complainant is not present notice should be issued to him to appear on the day fixed for delivery of judgment to show cause; if the complainant cannot be served with notice in a reasonable time or appears to be keeping out of the way or having been served with notice fails to appear on the appointed day, the Magistrate may proceed ex parte and make an order under this section if he deems fit to do so.

For reasons to be recorded directing compensation.—The Magistrate should state his reasons why he holds the complaint to be frivolous or vexatious. A bare statement that the prosecution evidence is in his opinion highly unsatisfactory and upon the evidence and the written statements and documents there is no doubt that the complaint is vexatious was held not to be sufficient, 10 C.W.N. 844. On a proper reading of this section it is clear that recording of reasons for ordering compensation to be paid, is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of the power. The recording of reasons is in addition to the finding of the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious. No doubt there are no words in the section calculated to indicate what the reasons recorded should be but obviously the reasons must go to show, why it is that the Magistrate considers the accusation against the accused to be frivolous or vexatious and why in his opinion it was a fit case in which an order for compensation should be made. The reasons for the Magistrate finding the accusation to be frivolous or vexatious must be set out.....The policy of the Legislature in requiring that in such a case the reasons should be recorded in writing is obviously to afford an opportunity to the appellate or revising tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons so recorded, 21 L.W. 646 at 647—26 Cr. L.J. 1501—80 Ind. Cas. 157. The mere fact that a Magistrate is trying a case summarily does not justify his omission to record the complainant's objection to an order directing compensation and such an omission is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537, infra. The section shows that the Court must first be of opinion that the complaint is false, frivolous or vexatious and then he is to call upon the complainant for his explanation. It is necessary after hearing the explanation that he should still be of the same opinion. His final opinion should be that the case is false, frivolous or vexatious and not that the explanation of the complainant is unsatisfactory merely saying that the complaint is false frivolous or vexatious and then that the explanation is not satisfactory does not give the Court of revision sufficient grounds for finding whether there were good grounds for awarding compensation or not, 30 Cr. L.J. 438—115 Ind. Cas. 334 following 15 Cr. L.J. 666—25 Ind. Cas. 894.

Sub-section (2).—Under this sub section all that is prohibited is that the compensation to the accused or each of them where there are more than one accused should not exceed rupees one hundred in amount. This sub section does not mean, if there are a number of accused persons, the total amount awarded to all of them must not exceed the maximum, 24 A.L.J. 221—27 Cr. L.J. 702—94 Ind. Cas. 894.

Sub-section (2A).—Where under the provisions of sub-section (2) the Court orders a complainant to pay compensation separately to each of several accused and in default to suffer imprisonment, imprisonment may be awarded for default of each separate payment as ordered, even though this sub-section is not very explicit, 3 Ran 93. For the purpose of recovery and imprisonment in default of payment, the compensation is to be treated in all respect as a fine. It is now enacted that the Magistrate by his order directing payment may further order that, in default of payment, the complainant shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days. So the decisions in Weir II, 320; 18 C.W.N. 702; 5 C.W.N. 213 and 214, 23 C. 231 and 164; 22 C 536 and 139; 18 A. 96, 19 A 73 and similar decisions, which held that the order should not specify imprisonment in default and a prior attempt to recover the amount was absolutely necessary before imprisonment is awarded, are no longer law. The provisions of S. 397, infra, cannot apply when the detention of the person against whom an order of imprisonment for default of payment of compensation under this sub-section is made under the order of a Civil Court as such detention is not a sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation and as a Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment in default, shall take effect after a term of detention by order of a Civil Court, 3 Ran. 93.

ordered to pay compensation under this section, Ratanlal 309. Judicial officers acting judicially cannot be made liable under this section, 1 B. 175; 20 C. 481; 26 A. 183; 11 Cr. L.J. 634=8 Ind. Cas. 832. Public officers are liable to be dealt with under this section, Weir II, 317; but where a public servant only gave evidence in the proceedings instituted on the information of his official superior, an order for compensation against him was held bad Weir II, 318A. A guardian and next friend of a minor complainant cannot be asked to show cause and against him an order to pay compensation cannot be made, 13 Cr. L.J. 136=13 Ind. Cas. 824.

If such person is not present direct summons to him to appear and show cause.—Under the amended section if the complainant is present in Court he is bound to show cause immediately. He cannot insist upon a grant of an adjournment for the purpose, see 28 Bom. L.R. 18. If however, an adjournment is granted or if the complainant is not present and a summons is issued to him, the Court can pass an order at the adjourned hearing after recording and considering the cause, if any, shown by the complainant or informant, 31 Bom. L.R. 591 at 593.

Shall record and consider any cause complainant may show.—These words are imperative and the omission to record and consider the objections cannot be treated as a mere irregularity, 23 Cr. An order for compensation made in the absence of the complainant is not a compliance with law, as this sub-section says that the Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant may show and the order was set aside by the High Court, 9 A.L.J. 170=13 Cr. An opportunity to show cause must be given before an order is passed, 25 Bom. L.R. 805; 5 Cr. L. Rev. 400. The mere fact that a Magistrate is trying a case summarily does not justify his omission to record the complainant's objection to an order directing compensation and such an omission is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537, infra. The section shows that the Court must first be of opinion that the complaint is false, frivolous or vexatious and then he is to call upon the complainant for his explanation. L.J. 438=115 Ind. Cas. 334 following 15 Cr. L.J. 666=25 Ind. Cas. 994.

Sub-section (2).—Under this sub-section all that is prohibited is that the compensation to the accused or each of them where there are more than one accused should not exceed rupees one hundred in amount. This sub section does not mean, if there are a number of accused persons, the total amount awarded to all of them must not exceed the maximum, 24 A.L.J. 221=27 Cr. L.J. 702=94 Ind. Cas. 894.

Sub-section (2A).—Where under the provisions of sub-section (2) the Court orders a complainant to pay compensation separately to each of several accused and in default to suffer imprisonment, imprisonment may be awarded for default of each separate payment as ordered, even though this sub-section is not very explicit, 3 Ran. 93. For the purpose of recovery and imprisonment in default of payment, the compensation is to be treated in all respect as a fine. It is now enacted that the Magistrate by his order directing payment may further order that, in default of payment, the complainant shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days. So the decisions in Weir II, 320 ; 18 C.W.N. 702 ; 5 C.W.N. 213 and 214 ; 23 C. 251 and 164 ; 22 C. 536 and 139 ; 18 A. 96 ; 19 A. 73 and similar decisions, which held that the order should not specify imprisonment in default and a prior attempt to recover the amount was absolutely necessary before imprisonment is awarded, are no longer law. The provisions of S. 397, infra, cannot apply when the detention of the person against whom an order of imprisonment for default of payment of compensation under this sub-section is made under the order of a Civil Court as such detention is not a sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation and so a Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment in default, shall take effect after a term of detention by order of a Civil Court, 3 Ran. 93.

Sub-section (2B) is new. Ss. 68 and 69, I.P.C., provide for termination of imprisonment on payment of fine or proportionate portion of fine.

Sub-section (2C) is also new and makes it clear that the award of compensation under this section will not exonerate the complainant from any civil or criminal liability with regard to such complaint and the proviso which was sub-section (5) before makes it clear that such amount already awarded may be taken into consideration in any subsequent civil proceedings.

Sub-section (3) provides for an appeal against an order for payment of compensation passed by a Magistrate of the second or third class and also an appeal is now provided from a similar order of any other Magistrate to pay more than rupees fifty as compensation. This sub-section means that whenever a complainant is ordered under sub-section (2) to pay compensation exceeding rupees fifty the right of appeal is given, whether the compensation is awarded only to one accused or is to be distributed among a number of accused in sums not exceeding rupees fifty. In a case where the total compensation awarded is over rupees fifty to all the accused, the complainant is entitled to appeal, 49 B. 440 at 442, 26 Cr. L.J. 1504=89 Ind. Cas. 180; 29 Cr. L.J. 430=108 Ind. Cas. 617. The words of this sub-section are general and do not repeat the provisions of sub-Sections (1) and (2) stating the limit of compensation to each individual accused. When the total amount ordered to be paid as compensation in one particular case exceeds rupees fifty there is a right of appeal even though the amount awarded to each individual accused may not exceed rupees fifty, 24 A.L.J. 167=27 Cr. L.J. 146=91 Ind. Cas. 882; 9 Lah 462 following 49 B. 440 and 24 A.L.J. 167. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 905=118 Ind. Cas. 215. The remedy to have the order revised by the High Court after the appellate Court has declined to interfere is still open under Ss. 435 and 439, infra. A Sessions Judge has no power to set aside an order for compensation made by a first class Magistrate unless the amount exceeds rupees fifty although he has power to set aside the order of discharge made by a first class Magistrate. A Bench of the Madras High Court has held that when a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is moved under S. 436, infra, to set aside an order of discharge by a first class Magistrate and to direct a further inquiry, if there is a further order awarding compensation also, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate should report the matter to the High Court which alone would be competent to deal effectively with both the orders of discharge and compensation, 10 Cr. L.J. 569=4 Ind. Cas. 399. This will also prevent conflict of decisions by the superior and inferior Courts; but see 18 L.W. 651 following 43 A. 497 and 36 C. 643 which took a different view. There it was held that it is a right course to adopt to insist on a party exhausting all his remedies in an inferior Court before he comes up to the High Court, and the fact that the order of compensation is revisable by the High Court only, does not alter the procedure. This section does not declare what the powers of an appellate Court are in disposing of appeals under this sub-section and it is necessary to invoke the aid of S. 423, infra, for this purpose. S. 430, infra, illustrates the difference in this respect between this section and S. 195 supra which 'has been held to be a self-contained section . . . It seems to be an anomaly which might be cured when the Code is amended that no provision should be made for notice to the person most interested in the order being upheld in the case of an appeal being preferred against an order of compensation passed by a second class or third class Magistrate, but if the matter is taken to the High Court for revision of his order S. 539 (2), infra, strictly construed, will make it imperative that notice should go to the accused. In appeals under this section notice should ordinarily be given to the accused and an order made without such notice even though not illegal will be set aside by the High Court under S. 439 as improper, 38 M. 1031 following 29 M. 187 and 33 M. 89 and distinguishing 27 M.L.J. 629=16 M.L.T. 426=1 L.W. 908=15 Cr. L.J. 648=23 Ind. Cas. 848; 2 L.W. 1244=17 Cr. L.J. 1=32 Ind. Cas. 129; 23 Cr. L.J. 209=76 Ind. Cas. 631. No provision is made by the new amendment to give notice in appeals to the accused in whose favour an award was made to support the order. See 27 Cr. L.J. 243=92 Ind. Cas. 424 where it was held that though want of notice is not illegal it is desirable generally that before an order is made the accused should have notice of any intended interference with an order of compensation made in his favour. See also 83 C. 869. When the order is sought to be impugned in appeal or revision, it is obligatory to serve notice on the Crown, 23 Cr. L.J. 417=101 Ind. Cas. 192; both appeals and revisions are strictly speaking between persons aggrieved and the Crown and the respondent in an appeal from the order awarding compensation is the Crown quite a part from the question whether an ex accused should or should not be given an opportunity of appearing and being heard, 8 Lah. 563.

Sub-section (4).—In cases where no appeal is provided for, it is enacted that the compensation is not to be paid to the accused before the expiration of one month from the date of order within which a complainant may apply to the High Court in revision and get an order for stay. When the compensation awarded to the accused is paid over to him and the order is subsequently set aside in appeal or revision the amount so paid may be recovered under S. 547, infra, 1904 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 2 p. 5 following 1885 P.R. (Cr. J.) 12 and 10 A. 112.

CHAPTER XXI.

OF THE TRIAL OF WARRANT-CASES BY MAGISTRATES.

Procedure in Warrant-cases.

251. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of warrant-cases.

Warrant-cases.—For definition of a "warrant-case" see S. 4 (1) (w) supra. For mode of recording evidence in warrant-cases see Ss. 356 and 362, infra. The distinction between a summons-case and a warrant-case is that in a warrant-case sufficient evidence to support the charge must be recorded before a charge can be framed and the accused called upon to plead, 27 C.W.N. 923 at 524. The powers of a Magistrate who has taken a warrant case on his file for trial are as follows:—(1) he may try it himself if he has jurisdiction; he may, if he thinks he cannot inflict a proper sentence or act under S. 349 or S. 349, send it to a higher Magistrate, (2) he may, if he thinks that it is a proper case for Sessions, commit the accused under S. 547, (3) If he has no power to commit, send the case to another Magistrate to commit under S. 346, 42 M. 83 at 89. The procedure prescribed by this Chapter is to be observed when there are two charges arising out of the same facts, one triable as a summons case and the other as a warrant-case, 11 C. 91 followed in 39 M. 503. When once the trial has been begun according to the provisions of this Chapter as a warrant-case, it is not open to the Magistrate after recording the evidence for the prosecution and holding that an offence triable as summons-case only is made out and try and convict the accused of that offence without framing a charge for the offence which according to the Magistrate has been made out by the prosecution evidence. In such a case the procedure prescribed by this Chapter ought to be followed by the Magistrate, 23 Cr. L.J. 227 (1)=99 Ind. Cas. 1027 (1) relying on 19 A.L.J. 6. Similarly where a case is tried as a warrant-case under this chapter and the accused reserves his right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, he is still entitled to have the prosecution witnesses recalled for cross-examination after the framing of the charge even if the charge is framed for an offence triable as a summons-case. If this is not done it is obvious that the accused will be prejudiced considerably and the procedure adopted will be considered improper, 29 Cr. L.J. 235 (1)=107 Ind. Cas. 285 (1). When a warrant-case is tried as a summons-case and the conviction was passed on an admission made by the accused under S. 243, supra, which applied only to summons-cases it was held that this was something more than an irregularity and the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered, as the procedure adopted by the Magistrate may have prejudiced the accused, 29 M. 372; 41 M. 727. See 27 C.W.N. 923. It is settled law that proceedings before a Magistrate in a warrant case under this chapter is only an "inquiry" until a charge is framed and on a charge being framed it becomes a "trial," 38 M. 535; 32 M. 213 and 220. Even in the case of mandatory provisions their application must vary according to the circumstances of case, 25 A.L.J. 845=29 Cr. L.J. 735=134 Ind. Cas. 725.

252. (1) When the accused appears or is brought before a Magistrate, such Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution.

Evidence for prosecution.

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person or complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate shall ascertain, from the complainant or otherwise, the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and shall summon to give evidence before himself such of them as he thinks necessary.

Amendment.—The proviso to sub-section (1) is new and dispenses with the hearing of complainant when a complaint is made by a Court in writing under Ss. 195 and 476 infra.

Scope of the section—The procedure to be followed in the trial of warrant-cases is laid down in this section which provides that the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant, if any, and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution, and, after ascertaining the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case, he shall summon such of them to give evidence as he thinks necessary. The section clearly contemplates that once action has been taken against the accused the case will formally proceed. It is nowhere contemplated that a desire on the part of the complainant to refrain from further pursuing the case shall justify the arrest of further proceedings. The very words of S. 248, supra, which occur in the chapter dealing with summons-cases make it clear that no such action is contemplated in the trial of warrant cases, while S. 259, infra, only gives discretion to a Magistrate in a warrant-case instituted on complaint to discharge the accused in the absence of the complainant and if the offence may be lawfully compounded or is not a cognizable offence. The principle underlying the provisions dealing with the trial of non-compoundable or cognizable warrant-cases is that whether instituted on complaint or otherwise, the final responsibility for the conduct of such cases rests with the State and that where there is reasonable ground for believing that an offence has been committed, once the machinery of law has been set in motion, the right of arresting its progress rests with the State alone, 5 Ran. 136. This section lays down that not only shall the Magistrate take down all the evidence which may be produced in support of the prosecution but shall himself ascertain the names of other persons able to give evidence for the prosecution and summon such of the latter as he thinks necessary. When a new list of witnesses is filed by complainant some time after the complaint was filed and after the trial had begun, what then is the proper attitude for the Court to take up regarding such a list? The section does not appear to be very clear on the point but it means that the complainant should himself produce what evidence he can in support of the prosecution and the Magistrate shall then proceed to hear it. The Court is apparently not bound to issue process for such witnesses or grant time for their production but if produced he must record their evidence. Unlike the corresponding provisions in 208 (2), supra, and 244 (2), supra, there is a remarkable omission here S. 257, infra, gives the accused power to issue compulsory process to his witnesses while this section gives the Magistrate power to summon persons whom he has himself ascertained to be acquainted with the facts of the case. When the complainant has done all he can without the assistance of the Court it is then for the Magistrate to ascertain from the complainant or otherwise the names of other persons likely to give evidence and he is to summon such of them as he thinks necessary. He cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon such witnesses. It is his duty to assist and not to hamper the prosecution and for that purpose he must issue summons to persons named by the complainant when he thinks that they are likely to give useful evidence. The Magistrate is not bound to, or expected to exercise this duty of ascertaining more than once and the proper time is when evidence produced, by the prosecution, has been taken, 49 M. 978.

When the accused appears or is brought before a magistrate.—S. 204, supra, deals with issue of process for causing the accused to be brought or to make him appear at a certain time before a Magistrate. S. 205, supra, deals with the power of the Magistrate when he issues a summons to an accused to appear before him, to dispense with his personal attendance and to permit him to appear by pleader. When an accused is brought before the Court it is duty of the Court to try the accused for the offence charged. There is no provision of law which requires or entitles the Magistrate to go into the question as to the legality of the arrest or as to how the accused came into the hands of the police. See 35 B. 225; 31 C. 557; 26 C. 124; 1889 P.R. (Cr. J.) 6; 29 Cr. L.J. 1089=112 Ind. Cas. 673.

Proceed hear the complainant.—Hearing of a complainant within the meaning of this section does not involve his examination on oath and the trial in a warrant-case is not irregular merely because it did not begin with an examination of the complainant by the Court, 42 M.L.J. 103=(1922) M.W.N. 71=15 L.W. 311. This section directs that the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant and take all such evidence produced by him. So he cannot refuse to examine any witness merely because his evidence will be the same as that already recorded, 4 M. 329; 2 A. 447; 1882 A.W.N. 179 but he should enforce the attendance of the witnesses. S. 253 (a) empowers the Magistrate to discharge the accused without examining all the witnesses of the complainant if for reasons recorded, he considers the charge to be groundless.

Take all such evidence as may be produced.—A Magistrate under this section is bound to take the evidence of the witnesses produced before him in support of the prosecution. But he is not bound by law to hear one witness beyond those mentioned in the original list. The law clearly lays down that after the witnesses produced in support of the case have been heard, the Magistrate is then to ascertain the names of persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and shall summon to give evidence before himself only such of them as he, the Magistrate, thinks necessary. He is not bound by law to accept a list thrown at his head from time to time by the police or by any one else and it would be well if the Magistrate bore this more clearly in mind. The length to which cases are spun out threatens to be a danger to the administration of justice, 12 A.L.J. 262 at 263-264=15 Cr. L.J. 368=23 Ind. Cas. 731; 49 M. 978. S. 510, infra, is to be read along with this section. By the former section it was not intended that a Magistrate should exercise his powers at the bidding of any person, but that the powers are given to prevent any danger of miscarriage of justice just because some particular witness has not been called and are to be exercised with great discretion. Under this section the prosecution is given full opportunity of substantiating their whole case. But it is expected and the expectation is right and proper one, that the prosecution should come to Court with their case fully prepared and thought out. After the witnesses produced in support of the prosecution are heard, it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that prosecutors are not allowed to set the Court on to a roving inquiry summoning persons in the hope that something may be elicited which would help their case, and cases which ought to be heard within a fortnight are spun out to a period of six weeks and more to the inconvenience of all concerned. Now a witness is not an inanimate thing and is not to be moved about as if he were a stick or a stone. He is a living person who has his work to do and whose convenience has to be considered. For a Magistrate to send for every person whom the complainant names in a supplementary list is a thoughtless act and in some cases may cause very serious inconvenience to persons who ought not to be subjected to such inconvenience, 12 A.L.J. 15 at 16, 17; 14 Cr. L.J. 682=21 Ind. Cas. 1003. But once the Magistrate has issued summons to the witnesses named, he must enforce their attendance. This section applies to the course which may be taken before the issue of summons and not after, 4 M. 329; 35 C. 1023; 6 C.W.N. 543. For form of summons, see Sch. V, Form No. XXX.

252. (1) When the accused appears or is brought before a Magistrate, such Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution.

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person or complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

He cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon such witnesses. It is his duty to assist and not to hamper the prosecution and for that purpose he must issue

This section deals with discharge of accused in a warrant case. See S. 20, supra.

Sub-section (1).—An order of discharge cannot ordinarily be passed until the evidence of all the witnesses for the prosecution has been taken, 4 M. 329; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 67; 22 W.R. (Cr.) 25, but sub section (2) permits the discharge of the accused at any previous stage of the case, if the Magistrate, for reasons to be recorded by him, considers the charge to be groundless, (1911) 1 M.W.N. 149=9 M.L.T. 302=12 Cr. L.J. 103=9 Ind. Cas. 606. A Magistrate should not refuse to examine witnesses for the sole reason that their evidence will be to the same effect as that already recorded by him, 3 C. 389; 2 A. 447.

Scope of the section—The words of this section are as plain as any words can be. Sub-section (1) states that if on taking all the evidence referred to in S. 252 supra and if necessary examining the accused, no case is made out against the accused, the Magistrate shall discharge him. Sub-section (2) says that nothing in the section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case, that is, before all the evidence referred to in S. 252, supra, has been taken, if for reasons to be recorded the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless. Authority for supporting such a plain statutory provision is needless. The amount of evidence which would enable a Magistrate to say that a charge was groundless is so entirely dependent on circumstances and no general rule or direction can be laid down that he is required to arrive at his conclusion judicially and not capriciously. If acting judicially he has come to the conclusion on grounds recorded that the charge must fail either because the allegations are false or because they disclose a dispute of a civil nature which is distorted into a Criminal case or for any other reason, then there is nothing to prevent him from discharging the accused before examining all the witnesses for the complainant, 37 M.L.J. 430 at 492=33 L.W. 273 at 275=1929 M.W.N. 575 at 576. It is not a proper exercise of the discretion vested in a Magistrate under this section to discharge the accused merely on a statement by a prosecution witness of a prior admission by the complainant that the case was a false case. In such a case the Magistrate will do well to hear the whole evidence and after that to come to a conclusion, 30 Cr. L.J. 854=117 Ind. Cas. 883.

Such examination of accused as he thinks necessary.—This section does not place any restriction on the power of the Magistrate to examine the accused. But it should be conducted according to the provisions of S. 315, infra, and recorded in the manner laid down in S. 364, infra. A Magistrate should not examine the accused if the evidence adduced by the prosecution discloses no proper subject of a criminal charge against him, 1 B.L.R. Appx. 16. The object of an examination of the accused is to enable the Judge to ascertain from the accused from time to time, particularly if he is undefended, what explanation he may desire to offer regarding any facts stated by the witnesses or after close of the case how he can meet what the Judge may consider damning evidence against him, 9 C. 96 at 102 and not to fill up gaps in the prosecution evidence, 23 C. 43; 27 M. 233; 33 M. 770. An accused cannot be asked to make admissions to enable the crown to procure a legal decision. It is not the function of a Court of Justice to supplement the deficiencies of the prosecution and the subject cannot be made to suffer because of the neglect or omission of the Crown in the mode in which it conducts a criminal proceeding, 5 Lah. 423. S. 312 infra says the examination of the accused by the Court is for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstance appearing in evidence against him. The Magistrate may examine the accused if he thinks it necessary, 48 M. 419 (F.B.) at 452, 451. The Magistrate can examine the accused after the evidence for the prosecution is taken to enable him to decide whether a charge shall be framed or not. There may be cases where the Magistrate sees an easy answer to the prosecution evidence and he desires that answer to be given by the accused before discharging him 49 A. 551. It is not absolutely compulsory for the Magistrate in a warrant case to examine the accused before framing a charge provided he does so after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined and before the accused is called on to enter on his defence and such non-examination before charge where the accused has been duly examined at the close of the prosecution case, would amount to a mere irregularity, 27 Cr. L.J. 830=93 Ind. Cas. 606.

When no case is made out Magistrate shall discharge.—The phrase 'no case is made out' and the phrase 'he considers the charge to be groundless' are not used in this section in the same sense. Where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence a Magistrate cannot hold a charge to be groundless unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced to prove it. Without examining witnesses and without knowing what they are going to say, a Magistrate cannot judicially come to the conclusion that the charge is groundless and discharge the accused, 51 M. 185. A Magistrate who finds that he had no jurisdiction to try the case cannot discharge the accused under this section which authorizes only a discharge on the ground that no offence has been proved by the evidence for the prosecution, but the proper procedure for him is to send the accused before a Magistrate having jurisdiction under S. 346, infra. Weir II, 323. The Legislature does not render the writing of reasons by the Magistrate necessary when an accused person is discharged after he has heard all the prosecution evidence. It is, however, desirable that the Magistrate should record his reasons as his order is not final and to satisfy a Court of Revision that a proper judicial discretion was exercised. The provisions of S. 367 infra apply only to a judgment which is a final decision of the case so far as the Court trying the case is concerned, 9 Bom. L.R. 250; 23 G. 726. An order of discharge under sub-section (1) is not a judgment which indicates the final order in a trial terminating in either conviction or acquittal of the accused. It is clear that the Legislature never intended that a Magistrate discharging an accused should furnish him with a certificate of immunity from further molestation and the section does not require the Magistrate to give reasons for his order in ordinary circumstances, 31 M. 543. A Magistrate has power to re-entertain a complaint or of his own accord to revive a proceeding after a discharge of the accused without such order being set aside by a superior Court. The principle enunciated in 29 M. 126 (F.B.) was extended to cases coming under this section by 31 M. 543. No distinction in principle could be drawn between a discharge under this section or under S. 203, supra, or S. 259, infra. A defence of autre fois acquit has no application to a case of discharge. It has been held in Ratanlal 350 that a discharge not operating as an acquittal leaves the matter at large for all purposes of judicial inquiry and there is jurisdiction vested in all Magistrates including the Magistrate who discharged the accused to inquire again into the case and due judicial discretion must be exercised. 31 Bom. L.R. 146=30 Cr. L.J. 534=116 Ind. Cas. 251 following 29 Bom. L.R. 312, 23 G. 726; 29 M. 123; 36 A. 129. A discharge not operating as an acquittal leaves the matter at large for all purposes of magisterial inquiry, 31 M. 543 at 546. It is competent to a Magistrate who had tried and discharged an accused person on a particular charge to again inquire into the same charge on a second complaint, 36 A. 53. See also the decisions in 28 G. 652; 29 G. 725 (F.B.); 35 G. 828; 29 M. 126; 28 M. 310; 31 M. 543; 40 C. 71; 29 A. 7, which take the same view, but unless there is manifest error, or manifest miscarriage of justice no process is to issue, 29 M. 126 (F.B.). See also 9 Bom. L.R. 250; 12 Cr. L.J. 381=11 Ind. Cas. 132. But the appropriate remedy for a complainant whose complaint is wrongly dismissed is to move the superior Court to set aside the dismissal, 11 Cr. L.J. 582=8 Ind. Cas. 202; 11 Cr. L.J. 203=52 Ind. Cas. 696. A very heavy burden lies on those who seek to disturb in revision the order of discharge, 10 Cr. L.J. 160=2 Ind. Cas. 825; 10 Cr. L.J. 314=3 Ind. Cas. 580. The mere absence of a complainant is not a valid ground for discharging the accused in a warrant case regarding a non-compoundable offence, 10 C. 67; 20 C.W.N. 698, nor can a Magistrate discharge an accused on the ground that the accused was illegally arrested by the police without a warrant issued on complaint of a non-cognizable offence, 21 A. 263.

Sub-section (2)—This sub-section was introduced in the 1898 Code, under which it is competent to a Magistrate to discharge the accused after examining some only of the prosecution witnesses, 9 M.L.T. 302=(1911) 1 M.W.N. 149=12 Cr. L.J. 105=9 Ind. Cas. 805. No doubt the language in the three sub-sections of this section is different but it is impossible to lay down any general principle or attempt to define what precisely is meant by the word "groundless." Probably, as good a definition as any, is that the evidence must be such that no conviction could be rested on it. It obviously does not mean that the evidence discloses no offence whatever, 57 M.L.J. 493=33 L.W. 273=1929 M.W.N. 575. If he does so, he is bound under this sub-section to record his reasons for the same. The reasons are to the effect that the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless and no case is made out against the accused. When in a warrant-case the Magistrate discharged the accused under this section on account of the absence of the complainant it was held, setting aside the discharge, that this section only provided for discharge when the Magistrate found that no case had been made out or he considered the charge to be groundless, and when the complainant was absent, the discharge must be under S. 259, infra, provided the offence is compoundable under S. 345, infra, 23 C.W.N. 693. Under this sub-section, the Magistrate may discharge an accused person even when no witnesses are examined in accordance with the provisions of S. 252 supra, 27 Cr. L.J. 531 = 93 Ind. Cas. 1037; but solid and substantial reasons are required to justify such a course, 15 C. 608 at 621; 11 A.L.J. 431; 25 Cr. L.J. 696 = 81 Ind. Cas. 184.

Further inquiry.—A District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge can direct a further inquiry under S. 436, infra, 32 M. 229; 18 Cr. L.J. 703 = 49 Ind. Cas. 706. So also the High Court, but further inquiry is to be made sparingly and in exceptional cases and notice to accused should as a rule be given before an order to his prejudice is made, 17 L.W. 247. But it is open to a Magistrate who has discharged the accused under this section to entertain a fresh complaint on the same charge, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 443 where 1895 A.W.N. 86 is followed; 36 A. 53; 29 C. 726; 38 C. 828; 29 M. 126; 31 M. 643. See also notes at pp. 385 and 505.

254. If, when such evidence and examination have been taken and made, or at any previous stage of the case, the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under this chapter, which such Magistrate is competent to try, and which, in his opinion, could be adequately punished by him he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused.

Charge to be framed when offence appears proved.

Scope of the section.—This section merely lays down what a Magistrate must do when proceeding with the trial of warrant-cases. It would be an undue extension of its scope to hold that it was meant to fetter the discretion of the Magistrate in all circumstances. S. 347, infra, is a general section which applies to all inquiries and trials and gives the Magistrate power to deal with the case under Chapter XVII at any stage before signing judgment and if this power is exercised, then, the provisions of this section are no longer applicable, 3 Ran. 42 where 42 M. 83 is followed.

The words "or at any stage of the case" were added in the Code of 1898. Before this amendment, the Magistrate was bound to take all the evidence for the prosecution before framing charge. The amendment was made for the purpose of protecting witnesses from the inconvenience of being required to attend a second time by enabling the Magistrate at any stage of the case to frame a charge in writing and if a cross examination then takes place, it would be in the terms of S. 256, infra, and then, unless there has been some amendment of the charge, a second cross-examination might be refused, 27 C. 371 at 372. No Magistrate or Court can refuse to allow an accused person to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before charge is framed and the Magistrate's procedure in refusing to allow such cross-examination was most irregular and in contravention of law. The proper course in revision, where such a procedure is adopted is for the High Court to cancel the charge and direct that the cross-examination of the witnesses be permitted, 23 Cr. L. J. 556 = 81 Ind. Cas. 41, 21 C. 642. The discretion was given to the Magistrate to draw up a charge at any previous stage of the case in order to enable the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution to take place on their first attendance. Before the amendment the procedure in inquiries held in cases triable exclusively by the Court of Session under Chapter XVIII of the Code and in trials under this Chapter as to warrant-cases up to the time of drawing up a charge was the same, and there was no difficulty when the accusation was for offences, some of which were triable exclusively by the Court of Session, while others were triable by the Magistrate, but when some of the offences were triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Magistrate cannot proceed under this section. S. 208, supra, requires that an opportunity should be given to the accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution before the stage of proceedings is reached at which it might be found necessary to draw up a charge, and the Magistrate has power under S. 213 (2) supra, to cancel a charge if on taking further evidence after the charge he finds that no case is made out for commitment, 3 C.W.N. 110 at 111, 112. S. 239, infra, also makes provisions for the examination of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution after a charge was framed at an early stage without examining them all.

Offence triable under this chapter.—The procedure prescribed by this section is applicable only to the trial of warrant-cases, but where one of the offences with which the accused is charged is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, then proceedings will be in the nature of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII and S. 208, supra, and this section is not applicable, 3 C.W.N. 110. Where the accused was tried at one trial of defamation, a warrant-case and using criminal force, a summons-case, and was convicted of the latter offence and it was objected that the conviction was bad as the provisions of this section only allowed the Court in the course of a warrant-case to charge an offence triable under this Chapter, it was held by the High Court that the procedure of the Magistrate was legal, inasmuch as the allegations made by the complainant in her evidence constituted a fresh complaint and the accused understood this new charge and cross-examined the witnesses with reference to this new charge 3 Bom. L.R. 673. Where in the course of a trial under this Chapter the warrant-case fails the Magistrate can then and there, under the provisions of S. 238, supra, try the accused for a minor offence, a summons-case, adopting the procedure to be followed in trying summons-cases, 7 M. 454. Where in the course of a trial under this Chapter, the Magistrate finds that the charge was unsustainable and he immediately proceeded to try and complete the hearing altering the section into an offence which is a summons-case without framing a charge and without affording the accused an opportunity of further cross-examining the prosecution witnesses, it was held that the trial and conviction was altogether bad, 28 Cr. L.J. 227 = 99 Ind. Cas. 1027 following 19 A.L.J. 6 = 22 Cr. L.J. 146 = 59 Ind. Cas. 880.

Offence which the Magistrate was competent to try and adequately punish.—A charge is not to be framed when the Magistrate (1) cannot himself punish adequately; (2) is of opinion that he should submit the case to a superior Magistrate under S. 349 infra; (3) thinks the case ought to be committed; but a Magistrate is not bound to commit merely because the evidence disclosed another offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session, 4 Lah. 69; 37 C.L.J. 34. Failure by a Magistrate to exercise his own power where the offence is within his jurisdiction, is a failure to comply with the provisions of this section and an unnecessary committal can be quashed, 26 Cr. L.J. 148 = 83 Ind. Cas. 708. A Magistrate who is competent to try a case should not commit it to the Sessions unless he considers that he cannot pass an adequate sentence. The mere fact that the Magistrate was a witness to the identification parade is no ground for committing the accused, 21 A.L.J. 420 = 23 Cr. L.J. 683 = 81 Ind. Cas. 153. The complaint given to the Magistrate gave him jurisdiction to try the offence complained of, and, if it was established, to proceed with the trial and to convict, 27 A. 69 at 70. It is not irregular to frame a charge even in cases where the Magistrate knows that he may have to send up the case to a superior Magistrate for adequate punishment, 2 Cr. L.J. 454. In framing a charge the Magistrate is to consider the sole question, what is the offence disclosed by the evidence on record? When the Magistrate is of opinion that the offence is one which he is competent to try but could not be adequately punished by him, he can commit the accused to the Court of Session, 24 C. 429; 41 A. 454; 42 M. 83, followed in 3 Ran. 42 or he may not under S. 349, infra, see 2 Cr. L.J. 454. A Magistrate's discretion to commit to the Court of Session is not limited by this section which directs the Magistrate only to frame a charge, 42 M. 83. Under this section a Magistrate has to exercise a discretion in each particular case and his proceedings in the exercise of this discretion are clearly subject to examination and review by a superior Court either on appeal or by way of revision, 16 B. 880. The terms of this section are mandatory. It is imperative on a Magistrate to draw up a formal charge against the accused in the manner indicated in this section and also to strictly comply with the provisions of B. 242, infra, 43 C.L.J. 100; 80 B. 230. The Magistrate is given a discretion to commit to the Court of Session only such of the cases as are within his competence to try but which cases he is of opinion cannot be adequately punished by him and so they should be tried by the Court of Session, 15 Cr. L.J. 664=25 Ind. Cas. 997.

He shall frame in writing a charge.—It is important to bear in mind the distinction obviously recognized in the code between the preliminary proceedings in warrant-cases that precede the drawing of a charge, which may be terminated by an order of discharge, that does not amount to an acquittal nor bar a second prosecution at the instance of the complainant and those that ensue after charge framed and pleaded, which can only be concluded by an acquittal or conviction which the accused can afterwards avail himself under B. 403 infra. So long as the case continues in the stage of inquiry, the duty of the Magistrate is confined to ascertaining whether there is anything that the person accused ought to be called upon to answer. When once the charge has been framed and a plea has been taken, the inquiry is turned into a trial and the evidence in support of the charge already recorded becomes evidence on that trial, subject to the right of the accused as declared by B. 256 and 257, infra, 9 A. 52 (F.B.) at 58. "Trial begins when the accused is charged and called upon to answer and then the question before the Court is whether the accused is to be acquitted or convicted and not whether the complaint is to be dismissed or the accused discharged. The observations in 15 C. 608 at 620 are questions which arise at the stage of inquiry," 32 M. 220 (F.B.) at 234, where during the trial of a warrant case, the complainant when examined, further charged the accused of an offence triable as a summons-case and the accused cross-examined the complainant and her witnesses upon the new charge a conviction upon the new charge is legal and is not prohibited by this section, 3 Bom. L.R. 675. Omission to frame a charge in writing will not invalidate the trial and acquittal of the accused, 3 A. 129. When a Magistrate frames a charge he indicates thereby that prima facie case exists against the accused, 7 C.W.N. 521. When a Court has framed a charge against an accused for an offence which is compoundable without the permission of the Court, and the charge has been read and explained to the accused who has pleaded to the same, the Court should when an application is made to it intimating that a composition by the person authorized to compound has been effected at once accept the composition and acquit the accused and has no power to alter the charge already drawn up, 18 Cr.L.J. 81=26 Ind. Cas. 993.

255. (1) The charge shall then be read and explained to the accused, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make.

Plea,

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate shall record the plea, and may in his discretion convict him thereon.

Scope of the section.—An accused person does not plead to a section of a criminal statute. He pleads guilty or not guilty to the facts alleged to disclose an offence under that section. Accordingly the Court has to consider whether the facts set out in the charge establish an offence within a particular section, 7 Lah. 339 at 362.

Charge shall be read and explained to accused.—The provisions of this section are imperative and it is an illegality to ignore them. Mere reading of the charge to the accused is not sufficient. Where a Judge after reading the charge did not explain the charge to the accused as he is required to do by law, the conviction was set aside, 7 C. 98; 9 M. 61. When arraigning an accused, and before receiving his plea, the Court should be careful to ensure the explanation of the charge in a manner sufficiently explicit to enable the accused to understand thoroughly the nature of the charge which he is called upon to plead 5 C. 838, are in attendance they are to be examined, and after that the accused shall be allowed to re-call and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. If he refuses to exercise this right after he has entered on his defence he cannot demand as of right to re-call the witnesses for the prosecution if the case is adjourned because he has not produced his witnesses. He has had the opportunity intended by the section," 2 A. 233 at 238. The right conferred by this section is absolute and unqualified, 43 M. 411. The privilege conferred by this section on the accused is a substantial one and when denied it was for the prosecution to show that there was no prejudice, 39 M. 303. The provisions of this section are applicable to the summary trial of a warrant case, 1920 Pat. 283=21 Cr. L.J. 530-57 Ind. Cas. 434. The section gives the accused a right of recalling witnesses after a charge is framed. In summary trials where no charge is framed the accused has no such right, 28 Bom. L.R. 95=27 Cr. L.J. 431=93 Ind. Cas. 159, but see 50 M. 740. When an accused seeks to exercise his right of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses under this section he cannot be required to deposit the expenses, likely to be incurred by the witnesses, the right under this section being absolute, 25 Cr. L.J. 912=81 Ind. Cas. 449. When after framing of the charge, the accused requires the recall of the prosecution witnesses and the complainant failed to produce the witnesses the Magistrate is not entitled to order the complainant to deposit process fee for summoning the witnesses and to pay the accused a certain sum as costs, 29 Cr. L.J. 20=106 Ind. Cas. 436. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 664=116 Ind. Cas. 710. See 32 C.W.N. xv-xvi—critical note as to the effect of the new amendment of this section.

Sub-section (1).—This sub-section was re-drafted in 1893. From this sub-section it is clear that in a warrant-case "the trial" does not begin till a charge has been framed and the accused claims to be tried. Till a charge is framed it is only an inquiry. Trial begins when the accused is charged and called on to answer and then the question is whether the accused is to be convicted or acquitted, and not whether the complaint is to be dismissed or accused discharged, 32 M. 220 at 234 and 218 followed in 38 M 595; 2 L.W. 1244=17 Cr. L.J. 1=32 Ind. Cas. 129. An accused person is not bound to answer any question put to him at all, and can, if he likes, decline to plead and if he declines to plead, the case goes on just the same. S. 179, I P.C., has nothing whatever to do with the conduct of the accused persons in Court and no conviction for refusing to plead to a charge against an accused under S. 179, I P.C., can stand, 47 M 396.

Shall be required to state at the commencement of the next hearing whether he wishes to cross-examine.—According to the new amendment, after charge has been framed, unless the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate is bound to ask the accused at the commencement of the next hearing of the case or if he, for reasons to be recorded in writing so thinks fit, forthwith whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and if so, which of the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken. When the accused makes up his mind and desires to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses the Magistrate is bound to procure the attendance of those witnesses, 28 Cr. L.J. 861=104 Ind. Cas. 637; 53 B. 578. Under this section the accused is to be called upon to state whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses, only at the commencement of the next hearing. But if the Magistrate requires the accused to state so forthwith, the law requires the Magistrate to state his reasons for doing so. Where the accused is represented by a vakil from the very beginning he may be asked forthwith to state whether he wishes to cross-examine for the simple reason that the accused will not be prejudiced and it is convenient to arrange a date for the attendance of such of the prosecution witnesses whom the accused wishes to further cross examine before the witnesses leave the Court. But if the accused is not represented reasons must be recorded for not postponing the question to the next hearing by which time he can consult a vakil. The provisions of the section are undoubtedly mandatory. Before the amendment it was held that omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused if he wished to cross examine the prosecution witnesses vitiated the trial. The Legislature has now amplified the mandatory section and an omission on the part of the Magistrate to comply with the mandatory provisions cannot be cured by S. 537, infra. The safest guide is the well-known ruling of the Judicial Committee in 23 M. 61 (P.C.), that a disobedience to an express provision of law as to a mode of trial is not a mere irregularity but an illegality, 30 M. 740, dissenting from 6 Lah. 534 and 23 Bom L.R. 95=27 Cr. L.J. 431=93 Ind. Cas. 159, followed in 30 Cr. L.J. 850=118 Ind. Cas. 200 and distinguishing 49 A. 315. See also 55 M.L.J. (Sh n) 6. If failure of justice has resulted from the non-compliance with the provisions of this section, it would furnish a valid ground for remanding the case for a re-trial, 29 Cr. L.J. 354=108 Ind. Cas. 412, but a different view was taken in 49 A. 315, holding that decision of the Privy Council in, 23 M. 61 (P.C.), applies only to a disobedience to an express provision of law as to the mode of trial and mere disobedience to an express provision of law cannot come within that ruling; the provisions in this section are not provisions relating to the mode of trial and it would be wrong to hold that failure to follow the provisions strictly amounts to more than an irregularity in procedure especially when no failure of justice has been occasioned thereby, 23 Cr. L.J. 851=104 Ind. Cas. 637. See in this connection 3 Ran. 53 (P.C.) & 8 Lah. 230 (P.C.) explaining, 23 M. 61 (P.C.). See also 29 Cr. L.J. 354=108 Ind. Cas. 412. The intention of the Legislature is that sufficient time should be given to an accused person to consider whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge and it is only in special cases the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he so wishes. This does not come into operation until the charge is framed and where a pleader for the defence, before charge, had cross-examined the witnesses and stated that he no longer required their attendance it will not deprive the accused of his right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses after charge and any irregularity committed by the Magistrate in not asking the accused to state if he wished to further cross-examine the witnesses can be condoned if the defence pleader expresses a desire that the witnesses should be re-called for further cross-examination. The Magistrate has no power when passing an order under this section to impose a condition on the accused that he should deposit in Court the expenses of re-calling the prosecution witnesses before they are actually recalled, 5 Pat 110; 13 Cr. L.J. 554=15 Ind. Cas. 970. The Legislature intended to give accused persons, against whom charges are framed an interval of time to think out the line of their defence before they are called upon to inform the Court how they intended to proceed. Where a Magistrate infringed the imperative provisions of this section he commits an illegality which vitiates the whole proceedings. The Legislature has conferred upon an accused person the privilege that ordinarily after being charged with an offence, he shall have a period of not less than twenty-four hours to consider the method in which he will meet the charge, and it is difficult to say that he has not been prejudiced if the Magistrate without assigning any reason departs from the normal procedure probably overlooking or being unaware of the recent changes in the law and has not allowed the accused that privilege, 26 Cr. L.J. 1158=89 Ind. Cas. 518. Provided no failure of justice has been occasioned the Magistrate's omitting to record reasons in writing forthwith questioning the accused under this section is only an irregularity as the provisions of this section as to the recording of reasons are not mandatory and the trial held cannot be said to be illegal by this omission but cured under 8, 537, infra, 6 Lah. 534. But see 50 M. 740 which dissents from this view. Where the Magistrate fails to comply with the imperative provisions of this section it is for the prosecution to show that the accused was not prejudiced and when the illegality has been committed the proper course for the appellate Court is to order a re-trial, 31 Bom. L.R. 593 following 39 M. 503 and 16 Cr. L.J. 788. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 880=118 Ind. Cas. 200. Where the prosecution witnesses came from a distant Native State and it would have taken a long time to have again secured their attendance, it was held that the Magistrate was justified in asking the accused forthwith whether they wished to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses, 27 Cr. L.J. 720=94 Ind. Cas. 912. The obligation imposed by this section on a Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wishes to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses is quite distinct from the obligation imposed by 8, 549, infra, to question the accused generally for the purposes mentioned therein, 50 B. 42. The accused is not required to state immediately. Time till the next hearing is to be given to him generally, but if the Magistrate thinks fit he may for reasons to be recorded by him in writing forthwith ask the accused to state immediately after a refusal or omission to plead or claim to be tried whether he wishes to cross-examine the witnesses. The object of the amendment is to require the accused to exercise his right at once only in exceptional cases. The provisions contained herein are imperative and it is an illegality to ignore them. The law allows no option in the matter and the accused must be asked at the appropriate time if he wishes to re-call witnesses for cross examination, 16 Cr L J. 146=27 Ind. Cas. 210; 50 M. 740. The terms of this section are an exception to the general rule. It is permissible to a Magistrate to put the question forthwith on the framing of the charge and taking the accused's plea thereto but if he follows that procedure he has to record his reasons in writing which must appear to be cogent and adequate. The reason that it was the usual practice of the Magistrate to put the question forthwith and that the accused's pleader ought to have foreseen that the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses would have to be proceeded on the day the charge is framed is no sufficiently cogent or adequate reason for adopting the procedure, 31 Bom. L.R. 593 at 595. This section gives the Magistrate no discretion and the accused is entitled to have the witnesses re-called for the purpose of cross-examination. Indeed, after a charge has been drawn up, it is his duty to require the accused to state whether he wishes to cross examine and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. The fact that there has already been some cross-examination before the charge has been drawn up does not affect the privilege. It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate is given a discretion to refuse, 27 C 370 at 371-372; 14 Cr L J 358=20 Ind. Cas 212. To the same effect are the rulings in 7 C.L.J. 240; 4 C.W.N. 361 and 6 C.W.N. 421, but it was held in a case in 4 Cr L. Rev. 393, that the omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses again after the charge was framed is an irregularity, and a conviction ought not to be interfered in revision by the High Court, as the records in that case showed that the accused was not prejudiced in any way. Failure on the part of the Magistrate to record his reasons in writing for calling upon the accused to answer forthwith whether he wished to cross examine, prosecution witnesses as required by this section does not render the trial illegal. The provision is only directory and not mandatory and it is a mere irregularity which can be cured under S 537, infra, unless there has been a failure of justice, 6 Lah. 534; see also 28 Bom. L.R. 98=27 Cr L J. 431=93 Ind. Cas. 159. But see 50 M. 740. When an accused person is deprived of his right conferred on him by this section, i.e., the right to have the prosecution witnesses cross-examined after charges there is a violation of an express provision of law which is not mere irregularity but an illegality vitiating the whole trial and there is no authority for the position that the accused can be deprived of this right after charge 30 Cr L J 880=118 Ind. Cas. 200 following 50 M 740 and 25 M 61 (P.C.) The privilege conferred by this section is a substantial one and, when denied, it is for the prosecution to show that there was no prejudice, 39 M. 503 at 504; see also 46 M 449 (F.B.). When there are several accused and some of them have cross-examined, that fact will not in any way affect the right under this section of each accused to cross-examine, 11 C.W.N. cxi.

Witnesses named by him shall be re-called—The word "re-call" is very significant and does not mean re summon. If the pleader for the defence who had heard the evidence-in-chief is not prepared to cross-examine the witnesses then and there after the charge has been framed, he hardly deserves the name and rank of a pleader. Cross-examination is intended for testing the accuracy and credibility of witnesses, not for building up a case for the defence and the witnesses should then and there after cross and re-examination have been discharged and they would have been discharged with a minimum inconvenience. Then should follow the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution who should then and there be cross-examined and re-examined and discharged. After this the accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence. The moment the stage has been reached when there is ground for presuming that an accused has committed an offence triable under Chapter XXI, is the critical moment at which the examination of the accused should be taken and the charge drawn up, 8 A.L.J. 707 at 701, 709=42 Cr. L.J. 471=11 Ind Cas 1007. But when the case is a complicated one, a pleader ought not to be asked to cross-examine immediately, and time ought to be given to prepare for such cross-examination, 1895 A.W.N. 40. Where the accused is undefended it is not giving him a reasonable opportunity to ask him immediately after charge was framed to cross-examine the witnesses, more especially when he had no means of knowing that a charge would be framed on that date and that the prosecution witnesses would be present then for cross-examination, and a refusal of the Magistrate to give a reasonable adjournment, and to summon the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination was regarded by the High Court not merely as an irregularity but an illegality vitiating the conviction, and the conviction was set aside, [1911] 2 M.W.N. 192=12 Cr. L.J. 545=12 Ind. Cas. 524. Similarly where the accused who were ignorant persons wanted time to cross-examine after a charge has been framed against them to obtain legal advice and assistance and the Magistrate refused the request of the accused, it was held that no reasonable opportunity was given to the accused to cross-examine the witnesses and asking them who were undefended to cross-examine immediately after the charge was framed was not giving them a reasonable opportunity, 18 Cr. L.J. 786=31 Ind. Cas. 542. Where the accused applied for an adjournment to have the prosecution witnesses cross examined by Counsel who could not appear on the date fixed and the Magistrate refused the adjournment and when they were summoned as defence witnesses the Court refused Counsel to cross-examine them, the High Court while setting aside the conviction holding that the Magistrate was wrong in refusing cross examination of the witnesses, made the following general observation. "We may observe at the very outset that in our opinion the work of this Court would be appreciably lightened, if the Subordinate Magistrates in dealing with the law relating to the rights of accused persons, would construe it in a less technical spirit than they are sometimes accustomed to do. In the inferior Courts the right principle is occasionally reversed and a person is presumed to be guilty the moment he is accused, and every attempt on his part to prove his innocence is regarded as vexatious. When the law vests in a Court a certain discretion, that discretion in our opinion should be exercised so as not to give rise to any reasonable complaint of prejudice or bias, 23 C. 594 at 595. Where a Magistrate refused to re-summer a medical witness for cross-examination unless the accused paid beforehand the fees for his attendance, and convicted the accused, the High Court set aside the conviction and sentence and directed the Magistrate to issue process for the attendance of the witnesses, 4 C.W.N. 351. Where before charge was framed the accused was allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the distinct understanding that the witnesses will not be asked to be re-called after charge and the accused after charge wanted to re-call for further cross examination of the witnesses and the Magistrate refused to re-call them, it was held that the Magistrate acted contrary to the provisions of this section, but as the accused offered to pay the expenses incidental to the re-call of the witnesses they were directed to pay the same, 6 C.W.N. 423. Where an inquiry commenced as a warrant-case and the accused curtailed their cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under the impression that they will have a further opportunity to cross-examine after the framing of a charge but no offence triable as a warrant-case having been disclosed, the Magistrate closed the case and convicted the accused, it was held that the refusal of the Magistrate to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination was inequitable and that it was his duty to allow the accused an opportunity of completing the cross-examination before proceeding with the charge, 16 Cr. L.J. 230=28 Ind. Cas. 108. Similarly where a summons and a warrant case are tried together the procedure to be followed being that prescribed for a warrant-case, the accused would be entitled under this section to recall for cross-examination the prosecution witnesses even if the charge triable as a warrant-case had been dropped. The accused should not have anticipated such an event and the refusal of the Magistrate to recall the witnesses for cross-examination was held illegal, 39 M. 503; 41 M. 727, see also 53 B. 578. When the records showed that the requirements of this section as to requiring the accused to state whether he wished to cross-examine any witness had been complied with, then there is no provision requiring a Magistrate to offer an opportunity to the accused to have his witnesses summoned. It is his right to apply and when he did not exercise it he has nothing to complain, [1912] M.W.N. 1121=13 Cr. L.J. 828=17 Ind. Cas. 572. A person proceeded against under S. 110, supra, has no right to further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under this section, 8 Lah. 265 following 1916 P.R. (Cr. J.) 1 and 33 C. 243; 17 Cr. L.J. 84=32 Ind. Cas. 676; but in 50 A. 71 an opposite view was taken. The Madras High Court recently referred the question to a Full Bench, see 56 M.L.J. (Sh. n.) 40 See p. 164 under S. 117, infra. The Judges in the Full Bench decision in 43 M. 511 were of opinion that S. 117, infra, attracted to itself all the provisions of the warrant-case so this section also applied. The Full Bench has held (Cr. R. C. No. 941 of 1923) 57 M.L.J. (Sh. n.) 39=30 L.W. (Sh. n.) 47 that the accused has no absolute right to have the prosecution witnesses recalled for further cross-examination and the expression 'no charge need be framed' occurring in S. 117 (2), supra, would mean that it would not be possible or there would be no occasion for framing a charge in security proceedings; the notice to show cause issued to the accused would take the place of a charge in a warrant. *o*ise as such a notice is to state the substance of the information. It was further held that the hardship, if any, to the person proceeded against can be obviated by invoking the provisions of S. 257, infra, which is a sufficient protection against any such hardship. The decisions in 8 Lah. 263; 35 C. 243 were followed and 50 A. 71 was not followed and the view expressed in 43 M. 811 was held to be mere obiter as the question did not arise there specifically for decision. See 30 Cr. L.J. 251=118 Ind. Cas. 647, following 48 M. 1 as to the admissibility of evidence not subjected to cross-examination by accused either before charge or after charge due to serious illness of the witness.

Evidence of remaining witnesses for prosecution shall be taken—The expression "remaining witnesses" occurring in this sub-section is not necessarily limited to the witnesses named by the complainant and summoned by the Magistrate before the framing of the charge. The expression is wide enough to include any witness who, according to the prosecution, is able to support its case, though he has not been named, provided, of course, that he is not sprung upon the defence all of a sudden, and sufficient opportunity is given to the latter to prepare for the cross-examination of the witnesses, 11 Bom. L.R. 1153=10 Cr. L.J. 530=4 Ind. Cas. 268. The witnesses whom the complainant may wish to examine after the cross-examination and the re-examination of the prosecution witnesses already examined are "remaining witnesses" within this sub-section and if they are not in attendance he has a right to insist, on an adjournment for the hearing of their examination, 26 Cr. L.J. 958=87 Ind. Cas. 110.

Accused to be called upon to enter upon his defence.—If a charge is framed the accused is given an opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses. There the remaining witnesses, if any, for the prosecution are to be examined and the accused is called upon to enter on his defence and produce his evidence. This is the procedure prescribed by the section. S. 342, infra, adds something further to this section. It requires questioning the accused generally on the case just before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence, 49 A. 551. An accused cannot be called upon to enter upon his defence until the prosecution closes its case. After the accused has entered upon his defence, no further evidence can be adduced against the accused except under S. 540, infra, for which there must be valid reasons which must be recorded by the Magistrate, 10 A.L.J. 333 at 334.

Sub-section (2)—This is the only provision in the Code for putting in a written statement by an accused which the Magistrate should file with the record. When the accused says he will file a written statement as an answer to questions put to him it means he prefers to put in a written statement and does not wish to answer by word of mouth, 45 M. 449 at 470. The sub-section provides that if the accused puts in any written statement the Magistrate shall file it with the record. When a document is written by an accused person whether it be a letter or any other document, it is open to the accused person to file it along with his statement. It may be that there is no witness to speak to the actual writing of the document but the Court is bound to consider the document along with his statement. It may be that the statement is not true but in order to see whether the documents are relevant or irrelevant, the Court must look into them, see what they purport to be and then consider the statement of the accused that he wrote them and then decide the case. It is not open to a criminal Court to shut its eyes to the statement of the accused when that statement refers to certain documents to which the accused is a party. Under the law the Court is bound to consider the statement of the accused and may require further proof and if further proof is not forthcoming it may decline to act on it. But no Criminal Court is justified in brushing aside the documents to which the accused is a party when the accused himself files those documents in Court along with his statement. As the accused cannot give evidence on oath he can only file a statement or to refer to some documents to which he was a party, 53 section ought not to be used for defeating the ends of justice, 39 C. 781. The principle of this section applies also to summons-cases, 29 Cr. L.J. 308 at 310-107 Ind. Cas. 846; 43 M. 411. The Magistrate has no discretion to refuse to issue process to compel the attendance of any witnesses unless he considers that the application should be refused on the ground that it was made for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice and such ground shall be recorded by him in writing. The Magistrate, therefore, must issue the summons for each witness named in the list, unless he takes the responsibility of recording his ground for believing that any particular name is entered for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice, 5 Pat. L.J. 95; 51 C. 1043. The case of each witness must be dealt with separately and the limitation of the number of witnesses on a particular point was purely arbitrary and cannot be upheld, 25 B. 418 at 421 followed in 27 Cr. L.J. 543=93 Ind. Cas. 1039. Every case in which a petition is rejected under this section must be judged on its merits, 21 M.L.J. 233 at 239=10 M.L.T. 84= (1911) (1) M.W.N. 327=12 Cr. L.J. 150=9 Ind. Cas. 897. The Magistrate cannot decline to examine the witnesses for the accused on the ground that in his opinion they are unnecessary, 15 Bom. L.R. 360=13 Cr. L.J. 523=15 Ind. Cas. 795. After a charge has been altered the accused is entitled to have new witnesses examined on the altered charge unless the Magistrate is of opinion that the application to summon new witnesses is made for the purpose of vexation or defeating the ends of justice, 57 M.L.J. 478=1929 M.W.N. 530. The Madras High Court in a recent Full Bench decision, 57 M.L.J. (Sh. n.) 38=30 L.W. (Sh. n.) 47, Cr. R. C. No. 941 of 1928 has held that to proceedings under S. 110 supra, the provisions of this section apply and not those of S. 256 supra.

After the accused has entered on his defence—After a charge was framed the accused pleaded not guilty and stated he had witnesses to examine; in such a case the accused had entered on his defence and an application for further cross-examination of witnesses discharged from attendance must be deemed to have been made under this section, 43 M. 411. It is not clear whether the application for summons should be made immediately after the accused had entered upon his defence or whether it could be made within a reasonable time and how long the right of the accused will remain open. Where there was a delay of one day in making an application under this section the Magistrate, it was held, was not justified in refusing to summon the witnesses, 4 C.W.N. 241. It is open to a Magistrate after a case has been closed, and at any time before judgment is pronounced to give an opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution and to examine the witnesses for the defence, even if the accused had to avail himself of such opportunity at an earlier stage of the proceedings. And it always depends upon the circumstances of each case whether a belated application should be granted or not. Where the attitude of the accused is deliberately designed to harass the Court, the Magistrate will not be acting improperly by refusing his application, 21 M.L.J. 233 at 237-99=10 M.L.T. 84 at 91, 92.

Process for compelling attendance of any witness for examination or cross-examination.—This section allows an accused to summon witnesses for the purpose of cross-examination and the application for process need not state whether the accused wants the witnesses for examination or for cross-examination. It is for the Magistrate to inquire into the accused's purpose if he thinks the application is for causing vexation or delay, 24 L.W. 751=23 Cr. L.J. 32=39 Ind. Cas. 64. When certain witnesses were cited by the accused the Magistrate should not decline to issue summons on the representation of the complainant that they were cited for causing vexation or delay. It is his duty to look into the list of witnesses himself and satisfy whether the citation was for vexation or for delaying the trial and then he is entitled to say whether he will summon them or not, 29 Cr. L.J. 725=110 Ind. Cas. 581. As the law stands, an accused person, by paying expenses can enforce the appearance of any witness including the trying Magistrate under this section, unless the Magistrate considers the application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice and it would be for the Magistrate to decide whether the application shall be granted or refused. The Magistrate may however require that reasonable expenses for summoning witnesses be 13 Cr. L.J. 523=15 Ind. Cas. 795 nor is it open to him to refuse to examine a witness for the accused when the witness was actually present in Court, 4 Bom. L.R. 461.

Such ground shall be recorded.—Failure to record reasons is an illegality and cannot be cured by S. 637, infra, 31 M. 131; 26 B. 418. The section is imperative as to the recording of reasons for refusing the application of the accused for further cross-examination, and if the Magistrate fails to record in writing his reasons, the trial is bad, 51 C. 1044. It was held in 3 A. 392 that a failure to record reasons is to omit to satisfy the plain direction of the law. Where the Magistrate failed to give any reason for refusing to summon the witnesses cited by the accused under this section the Full Bench decision see 57 M.L.J. (Sh.n) 38=30 L.W. (Sh.n) 47, Cr. Rev. Case, 941 of 28 suggested that it may be a ground for interference. The proviso was newly added in the Code of 1893. When the accused had cross examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine but did not exercise it, the Magistrate is to be satisfied that to allow a further cross-examination is necessary for the purposes of justice. The evidence of a witness not cross-examined before charge and who was not available for further cross-examination after charge due to serious illness is admissible but its weight depends upon the circumstances of each case, 30 Cr. L.J. 851=113 Ind. Cas. 647 following 43 M. 1.

Proviso—A Magistrate is bound under this section to issue process on the accused's application after he has entered on his defence for compelling the attendance of his witnesses unless for stated circumstances which he must find, and record in writing his reasons for the refusal. The proviso on the other hand definitely prohibits the Magistrate from issuing such process, if the accused has cross-examined or had an opportunity to do so after charge, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such attendance is necessary for the purposes of justice, i.e., unless he is convinced of the existence of the strongest possible grounds for disregarding the prohibition. The exception to the prohibition must not be read as swallowing up the prohibition or the whole proviso as enjoining that the Magistrate shall issue process if he is not satisfied that the attendance of witness is unnecessary for the ends of justice, or if he is not satisfied that (as in the case of witnesses not covered by the proviso) the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. On the contrary the prohibition may not be disregarded unless the Magistrate is of opinion that the ends of justice not only warrant but demand such disregard. It is also clear that it is not incumbent to record in writing reasons for not being satisfied. The natural consequence would be a record of reasons for disregarding (not for not disregarding) a statutory prohibition. There may be exceptional cases where the Court can see at once that the attendance of witnesses referred to in the proviso should be compelled. But it is ordinarily for the applicant to satisfy the Magistrate that it is necessary for the purposes of justice that his application for compelling the attendance of such witnesses should be granted, 27 Cr. L.J. 333=92 Ind. Cas. 863.

Sub-section (2).—This section gives the accused a right to summon witnesses for cross-examination even after they have been further cross examined after the charge has been framed. It is true that this sub-section lays down that the Magistrate may, before summoning any witness require that the reasonable expenses of the witness be deposited in Court. But the ordinary procedure in warrant-cases is that the costs of causing the attendance of the accused's necessary witnesses is usually borne by Government. The Magistrate has no doubt authority to depart from this usual practice but there should be strong and cogent reasons for making the departure. When a long list of witnesses is filed to defeat or delay the ends of justice under sub-section (1) he may decline to compel the attendance of all the witnesses but the same result ought not to be achieved by refusing to summon the witnesses unless the costs are deposited. While the Court is fully justified in declining to accede to the request which would amount to an abuse of the process of the Court, it should at the same time be careful not to do any act which might hamper the accused in his defence 30 Cr. L.J. 814=117 Ind. Cas. 667. Under this sub-section it is open to the Magistrate before summoning any witness to require the accused to deposit in Court reasonable expenses for witnesses' attendance. The provision has no doubt been made so that if the accused is not prepared to deposit the reasonable expenses of the witnesses the Magistrate need not summon them and put the Government to expense but where the witnesses have in fact been summoned at Government expense and present in Court, the Magistrate should not refuse to allow them to be cross examined unless the accused paid their expenses, 33 Cr. L.J. 333-115 Ind. Cas. 78 S. 511, infra 13 Cr. L.J. 534=15 Ind. Cas. 970.

258. (1) If in any case under this chapter in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

Acquittal.

(2) Where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 319 or section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Conviction.

Scope of the section.—When the trial of a case was one falling under Chapter XXI of the Code, the only means by which an order of acquittal could legally be arrived at are the means described in this section and the preceding sections, that is to say, an order of acquittal could be pronounced only where, after the framing of a charge, the Magistrate is of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction. In a warrant-case in respect of a non-compoundable offence the Magistrate without framing a charge and instead of exercising his own mind upon the evidence in the case, allowed the decision to be taken out of his hands by a private arrangement between the persons interested and acquitted the accused, it was held that upon the provisions of the Code the order was unwarranted and a rehearing of the case was ordered, 37 B. 369 at 372, 22 W.R. (Cr.) 25. No order acquitting the accused under this section can be made without the Court recording a finding that the accused is not guilty. Where the charge had been framed against the accused and they pleaded not guilty to the charge and entered on their defence they cannot be acquitted on account of the complainant's absence on an adjourned hearing and such acquittal is illegal, 28 Cr. L.J. 264=84 Ind. Cas. 323. Where after framing a charge a Magistrate is transferred and succeeded by another Magistrate who recommenced the inquiry under S. 350 infra, if the succeeding Magistrate is satisfied that the charge framed by his predecessor is not well-founded, he must acquit the accused under this section and cannot discharge under S. 253 (2), supra, 22 C.W.N. 117. See also 33 M. 583. An order of acquittal made under this section cannot be set aside by the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge and further inquiry ordered under S. 436, infra, 38 M. 583. The only remedy open is to move the Local Government to prefer an appeal against the acquittal under S. 417, infra, to the High Court. An acquittal of some of the accused under this section bars the trial even of those accused who could have been charged and tried along with the acquitted accused but were not tried. So long as the acquittal on the same facts remained in force, the acquittal could be pleaded as a bar even by those accused who were not so tried, 7 C.W.N. 473 and 711; 4 C.W.N. 345.

Any case in which a charge has been framed—If a charge has been framed under S. 254, supra, the accused must either be acquitted or convicted. S. 535, infra, lays down the procedure to be followed when a failure of justice has been occasioned by an omission to frame a charge. The Court of appeal or revision shall in such a case order a charge to be framed and the trial recommenced from the point immediately after the framing of the charge. Even where the order is styled 'an order of discharge' it is in effect an acquittal, 38 M. 535. S. 537, infra, applies only to error, omission or irregularity in the charge framed and not to absence of a charge.

Shall record an acquittal—Discharge is different from an acquittal. After framing a charge there cannot be a discharge and even where the order is styled one of discharge it is really one of acquittal, 22 W.R. (Cr.) 25; 38 M. 583 following 1903 P.R. (Cr. J.) 35. A Magistrate in a warrant-case after a charge against the accused is not found to convict him merely because the accused did not produce any rebutting evidence but is bound to acquit him if at the time of giving judgment he has a reasonable doubt as to the accused's guilt, Ratanlal 854. It is not necessary that the acquittal should be by the Magistrate who framed the charge 3 C. 495 and where an order of acquittal is in force, it is not competent for the superior authorities to order a further inquiry into the case, 3 C.L.R. 131; 9 B.H.C.R. 170; 38 M. 585.

Shall pass sentence according to law, etc.—The words "unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of S. 349 or S. 562" have been newly added. Every case of conviction need not necessarily now be followed by a sentence. The Magistrate, if empowered, may pass an order under S. 562, infra, releasing the accused upon probation of good conduct or release on admonition instead of sentencing him at once to undergo punishment or he may send up the case under S. 349 infra to a superior Magistrate for a more severe punishment. A Magistrate when convicting the accused cannot release the accused without passing a sentence on the ground that the hardship he has already undergone was sufficient punishment. Some sentence however nominal should be passed unless he acts under S. 562 or releases on admonition now, see 4 M.H.C.R. Appx. 66; 1884 A.W.N. 219.

259. When the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint, and upon any day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant is absent, and the offence may be lawfully compounded, or is not a cognizable offence, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, at any time before the charge has been framed, discharge the accused.

Amendment—The words "or is not a cognizable offence" have been newly added now for conferring a discretion on the Magistrate to discharge the accused if the complainant is absent and the offence is not cognizable.

Scope of the section.—This section applies only to warrant-cases and that to warrant-cases where the offence is lawfully compoundable under S. 345, infra. This section gives a Magistrate discretion to discharge the accused, when in a case instituted upon complaint, the complainant chooses to be absent on the day fixed for hearing and when the offence is one which may be lawfully compounded or when it is a non-cognizable offence. When the complainant is dead but he has been examined and cross-examined his evidence can be used under S. 84, Ind. Ev. Act and therefore the Magistrate is not bound to discharge the accused but can proceed with the trial and by so doing he exercises a proper discretion, 6 Ran 667. An order under this section has not the effect of an acquittal under S. 403, infra, 28 M 310; 26 Cr. L.J. 1040=87 Ind. Cas. 923, under this section, which deals with warrant-cases the Magistrate can pass an order of discharge where the offence is compoundable. This section cannot apply to the case of withdrawal by a complainant, 10 C 551 and 67. In a warrant-case a Magistrate is bound to proceed with trial of a non-compoundable offence after the framing of the charge and to conclude it regardless of the fact whether the complainant does or does not attend. After the framing of a charge in such a case, the position of the complainant is reduced to that of a witness and he cannot be ordered to pay the costs of the adjournment occasioned by his failure to attend at the date of the particular hearing 25 Cr. L.J. 87=76 Ind. Cas. 23. The principle underlying the provisions dealing with the trial of non-compoundable and cognizable cases is whether instituted on complaint or otherwise the final responsibility of the conduct of such cases rests with the State and where there are reasonable grounds for believing that an offence has been committed. Once the machinery of law has been set in motion, the right of arresting its progress rests with the State alone, 5 Ran. 136. This section gives no power to dismiss a warrant case for default after a charge has been framed, 20 Cr. L.J. 763=53 Ind. Cas. 491 and the Magistrate ought to enforce the attendance of the complainant in such a case, Ratanlal 524 and 847; 4 C.W.N. 26. A discharge under this section can be made on the ground of the absence of the complainant. The offence may be lawfully compoundable and is not cognizable. The Magistrate has a wide discretion under this section and before discharging the accused he is bound to see whether a prima facie case has been made out by the evidence on record, 1881 A.W.N. 116; 12 Cr. L.J. 184=9 Ind. Cas. 1007. He is not bound to wait till the Court is about to close for the day in order to give an opportunity for the absentee complainant to appear before discharging the accused, 7 M. 336 and 213 followed in 43 M. 893. When, in a warrant-case, the Magistrate discharged the accused under S. 253, supra, on account of the absence of the complainant, it was held that the only provision which enabled a Magistrate to discharge the accused for absence of complainant was this section, 20 C.W.N. 638. A Magistrate discharging the accused under this section is incompetent to rehear the case without an order for further inquiry. A discharge not operating as an acquittal leaves the matter at large for all purposes of judicial inquiry and there is jurisdiction to entertain a fresh complaint but the Magistrate must exercise a judicial discretion, 31 Bom. L.R. 145. It is competent to a Magistrate to entertain a fresh complaint to restore to file the first complaint on sufficient grounds being shown for complainants' absence, 21 Cr. L.J. 391=100 Ind. Cas. 381, but see 32 Cr. L.J. 411=115 Ind. Cas. 309 discussed under S. 203 supra at p. 355. The order of discharge has not the effect of an acquittal, 31 M. 543; 23 M. 128 (F.B.); 23 C. 632; 23 C. 726; 18 M.L.J. 561; 23 M. 310, 41 M. 727; 22 B. 711; 31 Bom. L.R. 145; 27 Bom. L.R. 332; Ratanlal 350; 36 A. 123.

Complainant is absent.—The absence of the complainant raises a presumption that he does not wish to proceed with the prosecution, 12 Cr. L.J. 181=9 Ind. Cas. 1007. On the non-appearance of a complainant in a summons-case S. 247, supra, authorises an acquittal unless the Magistrate for some reason thinks fit to adjourn the case but in a warrant-case which is not compoundable he cannot discharge the accused, 10 C. 67. If a stage has been reached in the trial indicated in S. 254, supra, he is bound to frame a charge if he believes the evidence, Ratanlal 524. If a Magistrate discharges the accused because of the non-appearance of the complainant under this section and subsequently he excuses the non-appearances he must proceed de novo. None of the evidence recorded at first can be carried over to the second case. If no evidence is recorded at first and the Magistrate is asked to proceed de novo he must take a fresh sworn statement and failure to do so is only an irregularity, 1929 M.W.N. 195=30 Cr. L.J. 433 (1)=115 Ind. Cas. 64. When a case involving a serious offence has been charge-sheeted by the police and on the day fixed for hearing, the officer charged with the prosecution takes no steps to proceed with the case, no one present to conduct the prosecution and no witnesses were present in Court, the Magistrate dismissed the case under this section, it was held that although the Magistrate was well within his rights of protesting against the manner in which the Court was treated, he was not entitled to dismiss the case as the case was not instituted on complaint and the complainant was absent and no action was taken by the Court under S. 253, supra on the ground that no case was made out on the evidence, 28 Cr. L.J. 816=104 Ind. Cas. 256.

The offence may be lawfully compounded.—S. 315, infra, and Sch. II, column G show what offences may be compounded and the table attached to sub-section (2) of S. 345, infra, gives the offences which may be compounded with the permission of the Court. Warrant-cases which cannot be lawfully compounded cannot be dismissed or end in a discharge owing to the absence of the complainant. The Magistrate should enforce the attendance of the complainant and his witnesses under S. 92, supra, and admit the accused to bail if the complainant is absent, 1891 A.W.N. 116, see Ratanlal 524.

Further inquiry.—There was a conflict of opinion as to whether a further inquiry could be ordered when no fresh evidence was forthcoming but it was made clear that a further inquiry could be ordered even when no fresh evidence is available, 15 M. 334 (F.B.); 10 B. 131; 15 C. 603 (F.B.); 9 A. 52 (F.B.). A District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge can direct under S. 436, infra, a further inquiry into the case of discharge under this section. An accused person should be given an opportunity to show cause before an order of discharge that the complainant was absent and it transpired subsequently that his absence was due to heavy floods the order of discharge was set aside. The power under S. 436 infra is very wide and not limited as the powers of a Court of appeal, 12 Cr. L.J. 184=9 Ind. Cas. 1007. The High Court has also under Ss. 436 and 439, infra, power to direct further inquiry.

CHAPTER XXII.

OF SUMMARY TRIALS.

Scope of the Chapter.—Summary procedure under this chapter in cases of serious offences though legal is inappropriate especially when a conviction entails serious consequences, 6 M. 396 ; Ratanlal 778 and 784. Powers under this Chapter should be exercised very cautiously. The responsibility thrown on Magistrates entrusted with summary powers is very great and the responsibility of those who have to entrust them with such powers is equally great. Magistrates who are sufficiently alive to the responsibility extended to them will take care that the procedure and the record are not made more summary than the law has laid down, 21 A. 189 at 192 ; 2 C.L.J. 565 at 567=10 C.W.N. 79=3 Cr. L.J. 178. In summary trials the procedure to be adopted is the same as that prescribed for summons and warrant-cases respectively but the full record of evidence and judgment required ordinarily are dispensed with and the right of appeal is also curtailed. The trial is not summary in respect of proceedings themselves which should be as complete and as carefully conducted as if they were recorded at length. Summary trial is summary only in respect of records of its proceedings. No tribunal can properly clutch at jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence really cognizable only by a higher tribunal and where the accused himself has objected to the jurisdiction of the lower Court, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the conviction, 25 Cr. L.J. 1193 following Weir II, 21. It has been repeatedly held that it is not for a Court, to minimise an offence by shutting its eyes to a graver offence which on the facts found by it has been committed and to refrain from charging the accused with that offence and by such abstention to justify itself in trying the case summarily, 27 A.L.J. 340. Splitting up of offences for purposes of summary trial is not permitted by law but highly objectionable, 4 C. 18 ; C.L.R. 434 ; 11 C. 236 ; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 19 ; 22 W.R. (Cr.) 28 ; 25 W.R. (Cr.) 19 ; 1 Bom. L.R. 688 ; 16 C. 715, where the facts disclosed in a complaint amount to an offence of an aggravated nature the case cannot be tried summarily 27 C.W.N. 148=25 Cr. L.J. 528=77 Ind. Cas. 992. There is no law forbidding a public servant being tried summarily and it would be unwise to make any general pronouncement as to classes of public servants who should never be tried summarily and such summary trials cannot constitute an irregularity, 26 Cr. L.J. 1452=89 Ind. Cas. 972. In 35 A. 173 it was held that Magistrates should ordinarily restrict summary trials to simple cases and a re-trial was ordered in a case under the Indian Companies Act involving inspection of accounts. The mere fact that the case involves a question of title, say to certain trees cut will not be a sufficient ground for holding the case to be complicated for a summary trial, 26 Cr. L.J. 1452=89 Ind. Cas. 972. Cattle lifting is a serious offence and should not be tried summarily, 13 Cr. L.J. 780=17 Ind. Cas. 412 ; 23 Bom. L.R. 984=23 Cr. L.J. 21=64 Ind. Cas. 501. So also a case involving question of title depending on documentary evidence supporting the same, 13 Cr. L.J. 771=17 Ind. Cas. 403. Cases to be tried summarily should be of simple character not calling for severe punishment, 35 A. 173. The sections which the complainant chooses to enumerate in his complaint themselves cannot be the criterion to determine the jurisdiction of the tribunal or the offence for which process should issue. The Magistrate is expected to scrutinise the complaint petition, examine the complainant and form an independent opinion for himself before fixing the offence disclosed and issuing process and he should record reasons for his conclusion. As a rule Courts should not reduce the accusation merely to clutch at jurisdiction to try summarily or otherwise when occurrence is on the border line or partakes for any reason of a serious character it is always desirable if not necessary, to exercise the discretion in favour of a regular trial, 28 Cr. L.J. 164=99 Ind. Cas. 596 See also 23 L.W. 86=28 Cr. L.J. 164 (2)=99 Ind. Cas. 592. This Chapter is not applicable to Presidency Magistrates, Ratanlal 539, but Ss. 862 and 370, infra, provide something like a summary trial so far as they are concerned. First-class Magistrates must be specially empowered to try summarily. In Madras every Sub-divisional first-class Magistrate who had exercised first-class powers for two years has been invested with the powers under this Chapter.—Fort St. George Gazette, 1874, p 1136 ; G.O. No. 159 Jud., dated 24-1-1896. Second and third-class Magistrates cannot exercise powers under this Chapter and they cannot even be empowered to try under this Chapter. But under S. 261 Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the second or third class can try certain specified offences mentioned in that section summarily. The District Magistrate of Bangalore has no power to try a European British subject summarily and a trial held is void under S. 530, infra. The Code does not apply primarily to Bangalore which is no part of British India and is only in force there by virtue of declarations of the Governor General in Council in the exercise of powers conferred by the Indian Foreign Jurisdiction Order in Council, 1907. The notification confers on Justices of the Peace certain specified powers among which the powers of trying offenders summarily under this section is not included, 39 M. 942. The Chapter of the Code does not appear to intend that proceedings in summary trials shall commence ordinarily, otherwise than in other criminal trials, either by summons or warrant, indeed S. 262 implies the contrary. S. 263 requires a record of the proceedings to be made by the presiding officer, and it is intended that the record shall be made at the time of trial. Magistrates who exercise powers to try summarily must realize that they should strictly comply with the conditions which the Code imposes on them because otherwise the intention of the Legislature as to the exercise of summary powers is set at naught, 30 Bom. L.R. 954 at 956.

Power to try summarily.

260. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Code,—

(a) the District Magistrate,

(b) any Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, and

(c) any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of a first class and especially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, may, if he or they think fit, try in a summary way all or any of the following offences:—

(a) offences not punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months;

(b) offences relating to weights and measures under sections 264, 265 and 266 of the Indian Penal Code;

(c) hurt, under section 323 of the same Code;

(d) theft, under sections 379, 380 or 381 of the same Code, where the value of the property stolen does not exceed fifty rupees;

(e) dishonest misappropriation of property under section 403 of the same Code, where the value of the property misappropriated does not exceed fifty rupees;

(f) receiving or retaining stolen property under section 411 of the same Code, where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees;

(g) assisting in the concealment or disposal of stolen property, under section 414 of the same Code, where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees;

(h) mischief, under section 427 of the same Code ;

(i) house trespass; under section 448 and offences under sections 451, 453, 454, 456 and 457 of the same Code ;

(j) insult with intent to provoke a breach of the peace under section 504, and criminal intimidation, under section 506, of the same Code ;

(k) abetment of any of the foregoing offences ;

(l) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence ;

(m) offences under section 20 of the Cattle-trespass Act, 1871 :

Provided that no case in which a Magistrate exercises the special powers conferred by section 34 shall be tried in a summary way.

(2) When in the course of a summary trial it appears to the Magistrate or Bench that the case is one which is of a character which renders it undesirable that it should be tried summarily, the Magistrate or Bench shall re-call any witnesses who may have been examined and proceed to re-hear the case in manner provided by this Code.

A Magistrate specially empowered.—The Government confers powers of summary trial only on experienced Magistrates and any irregularity in procedure cannot be explained on the ground that the Magistrate is hard pressed with work, 28 Cr. L.J. 756=103 Ind. Cas. 836.

May try in a summary way.—This section gives a discretion to a Magistrate to try summarily certain offences, if he thinks fit. The fact that there are a number of accused does not appear to be a conclusive reason against trying a case summarily, 28 Cr.L.J. 140=99 Ind. Cas. 343. A long and complicated case should not be tried summarily, 29 Bom L.R. 710=28 Cr.L.J. 537=102 Ind. Cas. 345 where 26 Cr. L.J. 1026=87 Ind. Cas. 914 is followed. The summary trial under this section is intended only to apply to short and simple cases where little evidence is needed, 25 W R (Cr.) 65, where from the nature of the dispute and particularly from the plea taken by the accused it is obvious that the case involved complicated questions of right and title to property and that it was not possible in a summary procedure to come to a definite and correct conclusion upon these points, the Magistrate exercises a wrong discretion in adopting the summary procedure, (1922) Pat. 10=21 Cr. L.J. 374=55 Ind. Cas. 855. The jurisdiction to try summarily does not depend on the complaint alone but on the complaint and examination of the complainant taken together, 36 C 67 ; 29 C 409 ; 27 C. 983 ; 2 C. L.R. 374 ; 25 W R. (Cr.) 19 ; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 23. Where a Deputy Magistrate being also the Chairman of the Municipality while seated in his pony convicted an accused on his own admission of having raised the level of a road, of the offence of causing obstruction to a highway without dismounting from his pony, without issuing process and without making a record of proceedings under this section, the conviction was set aside. The record prepared after the close of the trial from memory or possibly from rough notes is not the procedure contemplated by the Code even in summary trials, 15 M. 83 at 87. The question whether a complaint affords sufficient grounds for a summary trial or requires a trial in the ordinary way must be left in a great measure to the discretion of the Magistrate to be exercised with due care according to judicial methods with reference to the circumstances of each case, 10 A. 53 at 56, but when an accused person is charged with two offences, one of which is triable summarily and the other is not so triable, it is not open to the Magistrate to ignore the later charge and to proceed to try the case summarily, 11 C. 238. No tribunal can properly elude its jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence really cognizable only by a higher tribunal and where the accused himself has objected to the jurisdiction of the Lower Courts the High Court will interfere in Revision and set aside the conviction, 15 Cr. L.J. 1193=82 Ind. Cas. 57, following Weir II, 21; 28 Cr. L.J. 164=6 Ind. Cas. 596; 31 C.W.N. 553. Where the facts disclosed in the complaint amounted to an offence of an aggravated nature the case cannot be tried summarily, 27 C.W.N. 148=25 Cr. L.J. 516=77 Ind. Cas. 922, but where the so-called circumstances of aggravation are mere exaggerations the Court may ignore them and try the case summarily 1 Bom. L.R. 633; 23 B. 90. Similarly a Magistrate cannot split up a charge so as to give himself a summary jurisdiction unless he disbelieves some of the essential elements of the offence charged, 16 C. 715; 3 C.W.N. 252; 4 C. 13; 27 C. 933; 6 N.W.P.H.C.R. 234; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 19; 22 W.R. (Cr.) 26; 25 W.R. (Cr.) 19; 1 Bom. L.R. 663; 25 Cr. L.J. 164=69 Ind. Cas. 516. A Magistrate after hearing evidence finds that the offence disclosed is one triable summarily, he may adopt summary procedure, 22 M. 459; but once the Magistrate had followed recording evidence in the regular manner he could not afterwards change his procedure to that followed in this Chapter, 25 C.W.N. 831; 37 C.L.J. 105=24 Cr. L.J. 157=71 Ind. Cas. 509. The responsibility thrown on the Magistrate entrusted with summary powers is very great and the responsibility of those who have to entrust them with such powers is equally great. Magistrates who are sufficiently alive to the responsibility entrusted to them will take care that the procedure and the record are not made more summary than the law has laid down, 21 A. 189 at 192. In summary trials there must be clear findings on questions of facts because it is only by means of those findings the High Court will be in a position to exercise its revisional jurisdiction effectually, 24 Cr. L.J. 916=75 Ind. Cas. 292.

May if he or they think fit.—The words "If he or they think fit" have been added in the Code of 1893. A very wide discretion is given to the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates to try under this Chapter or to proceed in the ordinary way. A District Magistrate has a free discretion as to whether he should proceed under this Chapter or not, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 378.

All or any of the offences.—Joinder of charges is permitted. The offences of mischief and theft may be tried together, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 5.

Sub-section (1) (c), (m) and sub-section (2) were introduced in the Code of 1893. Under S. 4 (1) (c) the word "offence" was made to include any act for which a complaint may be made under S. 20 of the Cattle-trespass Act. The re-hearing under sub-section (2) must be de novo as the proceedings held till then were without jurisdiction and therefore void under S. 539 (g), infra, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 3.

Clause (a).—An offence under S. 22 of the Criminal Tribes Act VI of 1924 is punishable with the maximum amount of six months' rigorous imprisonment and therefore that offence can be tried summarily under this section, 50 A. 718.

Clause (f).—Before a Magistrate can assume jurisdiction to try offences of theft or receiving stolen property in a summary way, he has to satisfy himself that the property in respect of which the offence has been committed is less than rupees fifty in value and must record this fact in the form prescribed in this section. Where there is no such reference in the records of the case, the conviction cannot stand, 22 W.R. (Cr.) 65; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 17; 1891 A.W.N. 183; 1892 A.W.N. 30; 25 Cr. L.J. 545=81 Ind. Cas. 33.

The following offences are not to be tried summarily.—(1) Theft when combined with a charge of previous conviction, Weir II, 324; (2) breach of contract of service under Act XIII of 1859; 4 M. 234; 20 M. 235; 27 C. 131; 16 B. 368; (3) petition under S. 483, infra, for maintenance of wives and children, 20 C. 331; (4) preferring a false charge under S. 211, I.P.C., 23 C. 251; (5) where the offence charged is one under S. 60 of the Excise Act 1910 as modified by Act II of 1923 punishable with imprisonment for one year, 26 Cr. L.J. 800=86 Ind. Cas. 432. A Magistrate cannot to the prejudice of an accused change his procedure in the middle of a regular trial to one under this section, 25 C.W.N. 831=37 C.L.J. 105=24

Cr. L.J. 157=71 Ind. Cas. 509. A trial by a Magistrate not empowered to try summarily (e.g., an offence under S. 147, I.P.C.), is a nullity under S. 530 (g) even though the offence for which the accused is convicted is triable summarily say S. 323 I.P.C. S. 537, infra, cannot cure the defect as the procedure adopted is more than an irregularity, 52 B. 254.

261. The Local Government may confer on any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the second or third class power to try summarily all or any of the following offences:—

(a) offence against the Indian Penal Code, sections 277, 278, 279, 285, 286, 289, 290, 292, 293, 294, 323, 334, 336, 341, 352, 426, 447 and 504;

(b) offences against Municipal Acts, and the conservancy clauses of Police Acts which are punishable only with fine or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month with or without fine;

(c) abetment of any of the foregoing offences;

(d) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence.

Amendment.—S. 504, I.P.C., has been newly added to cl. (a) and to cl. (b) the words "with or without fine" have been added. In Madras every Bench with first class or second class powers is empowered to try summarily.—Fort St. George Gazette, 1891, Part I, p. 279, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 2. This section unlike S. 260, supra, applies only to certain sections of the I.P.C., and against Municipal and Police Acts but does not apply to Special and Local laws. Under S. 407, infra, an appeal lies from the conviction by a Bench of Magistrates exercising second or third class powers, 9 M. 36. A Bench of Magistrates cannot try any offence except those mentioned in this and S. 260, supra, 9 C. 96. They are not entitled to take proceedings under the security chapter.

Offences against municipal acts—In prosecutions under Municipal Acts the Magistrate is bound to conduct the proceedings according to the rules applicable to summary trials. The expression summary proceedings occurring in Municipal Acts must be proceedings for which provision is made in Chapter XXII of the Code. There is no other provision in the Code which appears applicable to the case, 17 B. 731 at 732-733.

Offences against conservancy clauses of police acts.—S. 48 of the General Police Act XXIV of 1859 which relates to obstructions and nuisance in roads within the limits of towns is a general conservancy clause and that offences committed thereunder are within the cognizance of a Bench of Magistrates, 13 M. 142 at 143. S. 355, infra, does not apply to offences under this clause, 29 Bom. L.R. 710=23 Cr. L.J. 537=102 Ind. Cas. 345.

262 (1) In trials under this Chapter, the procedure prescribed for summons-cases shall be followed in summons-cases, and the procedure prescribed for warrant-cases shall be followed in warrant-cases, except as hereinafter mentioned.

Procedure for summons and warrant-cases applicable.

(2) No sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months shall be passed in the case of any conviction under this Chapter.

Limit of imprisonment.

Sub-section (1).—The procedure prescribed for summons and warrant cases shall be followed in summary trials according as the offences tried are summons or warrant-cases. It was held by the Bombay High Court in 28 Bom. L.R. 95=27 Cr. L.J. 431=93 Ind. Cas. 159 that the mere fact that a Magistrate in a summary trial did not ask the accused before he is called upon to enter on his defence whether he wishes to recall any of the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination is not an illegality but only an irregularity cured by S. 237 infra, but the Madras High Court in 51 M.L.J. 637=35 M.L.T. 141=24 L.W. 649 at 652=78 Cr. L.J. 12=99 Ind. Cas. 44 dissented from the above view and held that the mandatory provisions of S. 250 supra, apply equally to warrant-cases tried summarily under Chapter XXII of the Code and it cannot be said that when the accused who is unrepresented is called upon to state forthwith whether he wishes to cross examine and the Magistrate recorded no reasons for such a course as required by S. 250, supra, that no failure of justice had been occasioned in such a case. In a warrant case tried summarily the memorandum of the substance of evidence of witnesses must in conformity with S. 350 (3), infra, be signed by the Magistrate, 23 Cr. L.J. 114=45 Ind. Cas. 210. Under this section it is necessary that in a summary trial the procedure prescribed in warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases with certain exceptions; one of the distinguishing points between a summons case and a warrant case is that in a warrant case sufficient evidence to support the charge must be recorded before a charge can be framed and the accused called upon to plead. Where a Magistrate convicted the accused in a warrant case without recording evidence on the plea of the accused and passed an appealable sentence, the conviction was held bad, 27 C.W.N. 923. The procedure prescribed by this Chapter does not appear to intend that proceedings in summary trials shall commence ordinarily otherwise than in criminal trials either by summons or warrant; indeed, this section implies the contrary, 15 M. 83 at 87. In summary trials whether appealable or not a formal charge in writing need not be framed, 7 Lah. 303, following 27 C.W.N. 923=23 Cr. L.J. 1270=82 Ind. Cas. 278, Ratanlal 768. See also 53 C. 738.

Sub-section (2).—This Sub section lays down the limit of punishment in summary trials. The term shall not exceed three months. See 9 Cr. L.J. 23=23 Ind. Cas. 939. But where an accused is convicted for more than one offence in the same trial, there is nothing in law to prevent the Magistrate passing a sentence of three months for each of the offences the sentences unless otherwise directed running consecutively under S. 35, supra. The limit of three months is applicable only to substantive sentence passed, and will not apply to imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine which is only a process for enforcement of fine, 6 A. 61. There is nothing to limit the amount of fine in a summary trial, 35 A. 173. There is also nothing in this sub section making it illegal to impose solitary confinement as part of the sentence under S. 73, I.P.O., 6 A. 83. Where an accused was convicted in a summary trial, the High Court in revision can enhance the sentence under sub-section (3) of S. 439 infra, up to two years the limit to which a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class can sentence the accused.

263. In cases where no appeal lies, the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates need not record the evidence of the witnesses or frame a formal charge; but he or they shall enter in such form as the Local Government may direct, the following particulars:—

Record in cases where there is no appeal.

- (a) the serial number;
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence;
- (c) the date of the report or complaint;
- (d) the name of the complainant (if any);

- (e) the name, parentage and residence of the accused ;
- (f) the offence complained of and the offence (if any) proved, and in cases coming under clause (d), clause (e), clause (f), or clause (g), of sub-section (1), of section 260, the value of the property in respect of which the offence has been committed ;
- (g) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any) ;
- (h) the finding, and, in the case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor
- (i) the sentence or other final order ; and
- (j) the date on which the proceedings terminated.

Scope of the section.—This section does not excuse the Magistrate from hearing the evidence of all the witnesses but only excuses him from recording the evidence of witnesses which is a different thing from hearing the evidence, 39 C. 931. The provisions of this section should be strictly complied with in cases of summary trials in which so little is recorded and therefore there is very little protection from without to the person accused, against the risk of error, haste or inaccuracy. The scanty provisions of the section must be fully and strictly complied with and the record must be sufficiently exact and full to enable a Revision Court to say whether the law has been complied with or not on the points to be recorded. Three particular things are to be recorded, (1) the offence complained of, (2) offence, if any, proved, (3) in case of conviction a brief statement of the reasons. These must be recorded in such a way as to enable the Court of Revision to say "aye" or "no" from within the four corners of the record itself, whether the offence charged is an offence in point of law, whether the offence proved is an offence in point of law and whether the reasons for the conviction are good and sufficient, 2 C.L.J. 563 at 567=10 C.W.N. 79=3 Cr. L.J. 178; 21 A. 189; 10 A.L.J. 251; 12 Cr. L.J. 233=10 Ind. Cas. 921; 16 Cr. L.J. 713=30 Ind. Cas. 1001; 21 Cr. L.J. 636=57 Ind. Cas. 672; 23 Cr. L.J. 431=51 Ind. Cas. 207. This section is not abrogated by S. 441, infra, 46 M. 233; 20 L.W. 330 and provides for the preparation of record in cases where there is no appeal from a conviction under this chapter. With regard to appeals from summary convictions, see Ss. 407, 408, 412, 413, 414 and 415 infra. The next section provides for preparation of record in appealable cases. The section cannot apply to a case tried summarily in which the Magistrate passes an appealable sentence, 27 C.W.N. 923 at 924=25 Cr. L.J. 1270=82 Ind. Cas. 273. This section must be read along with S. 355, infra, and this section only lays down by way of exception that in cases where no appeal lies the Magistrate need not record any evidence. The primary rule is that the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence, but he can do away with it only when he makes up his mind at the initial stage that in any event the sentence to be passed will be non-appealable, 43 C. 280 not followed in 49 A. 261 holding that it is left to the Magistrate to note whatever he pleases and such notes are his private property and he may do whatever he pleases with them. See also 29 Bom. L.R. 710=28 Cr. L.J. 537=102 Ind. Cas. 345 where 43 C. 280 is not followed, see 49 A. 562. The Magistrate's notes should form part of the record and where they have not been kept the conviction is liable to be set aside as the High Court will not be in a position to form an opinion as to the propriety of the conviction without the notes of evidence, 26 Cr. L.J. 1451=81 Ind. Cas. 974. A Magistrate if he destroys his notes of a summary trial, the conviction cannot be invalidated on that ground 49 A. 562 following 49 A. 261 and not following 43 C. 230. See 49 A. 131 which took a different view and that decision cannot be regarded as good law after 49 A. 261 and 562 but in a summary trial the Magistrate is not relieved of the duty of making a précis of the evidence adduced before him and if he fails to do so the conviction is bad in law, 23 Cr. L.J. 534=109 Ind. Cas. 600. In summary trials it is very important that there should be clear findings on questions of facts because it is only then, the High Court will be in a position to exercise its revisional jurisdiction effectively, 24 Cr. L.J. 916=78 Ind. Cas. 292, Magistrates who exercise powers to try cases summarily must realize that they should strictly comply with the conditions which the Code imposes on them because, otherwise the intention of the Legislature as to the exercise of summary powers is set at naught 33 Bom. L.R. 934 at 936.

Need not record the evidence.—This section does not excuse the Magistrate from hearing the evidence of all the witnesses. It excuses him only from recording the evidence of any of the witnesses. It is an elementary point, that recording evidence is not the same as hearing evidence. In all criminal cases if the accused denies the charge, the complainant and such witnesses as he may produce must be examined and the case must be decided upon the effect of their evidence, 39 C. 931 at 932. Where there is no obligation on the part of the Magistrate to record the evidence what the witnesses stated may be proved by the oral evidence of persons who heard the witnesses depose, Ratanlal 338.

Need not frame a formal charge.—This section expressly says that no charge need be framed in non appealable cases and from the omission of such a provision in S. 264, infra, dealing with appealable cases it cannot be contended that a formal charge should be framed in appealable cases. In a summary trial whether appealable or non-appealable no formal charge in writing need be framed. Charge cannot be held to be part of the record or what is usually called the record of evidence and sub section (2) of S. 264 cannot therefore apply to a charge, 7 Lah. 303, see also 53 C. 733 at 745. In a case triable summarily, where non appealable sentence is given, the Magistrate need not frame a formal charge but he should specify in his record the offence complained of, and the offence (if any) proved. In these circumstances it is mainly the offence complained of, in regard to which process had been issued, that determines whether a particular accused has been tried for an offence. In a case where the trial is held summarily and falls under this section, and when an accused is put in peril of a conviction, say, for rioting under S. 147, I.P.C., (not triable summarily) it cannot be said that the accused were not actually tried for that offence, 52 B. 254. Although no formal charge need be drawn up, the accused must be called-upon to answer to the particulars of the offence charged, whether the proceedings be summary or otherwise, and the Magistrate must specify the offence complained of to give the accused sufficient notice of what is charged against him. The same rules of law as to misjoinder of charges in warrant-cases must apply to the particulars required to be set out by this section in a summary record, 16 C.W.N. 696 at 697=13 Cr. L.J. 224=14 Ind. Cas. 320. The record should state the offence clearly and distinctly, 1852 A.W.N. 59.

Shall enter in such a form the particulars.—The Magistrate should himself prepare the record in non-appealable cases subject to the exception contained in sub-section (2) of S. 265, infra, where a Bench may be authorized to employ a clerk. A Magistrate is not authorized in either case to employ a clerk to prepare the record or to affix his signature to the record by a stamp, 6 M. 396; 8 A. 293; 10 C.W.N. 79=2 C.L.J. 563=3 Cr. L.J. 178; 12 Cr. L.J. 280=10 Ind. Cas. 921, 16 Cr. L.J. 713=30 Ind. Cas. 1001. The facts found by the Magistrate must show what offence has been committed, 3 C.W.N. 281. But where no reasons are given the defect cannot be subsequently cured by the explanation called the written statement submitted to the High Court by the Magistrate, 9 C.W.N. 1xxvi.

Clause (f).—The value of the property alleged to be stolen should be stated and the value should be found to be less than the amount mentioned in S. 260 (d) to (g); otherwise the conviction will be bad, 20 W.R. (Cr.) 17, 22 W.R. (Cr.) 65; 1891 A.W.N. 183; 1892 A.W.N. 30; 25 Cr. L.J. 545=81 Ind. Cas. 33; 17 A.L.J. 1146=21 Cr. L.J. 28=54 Ind. Cas. 172.

Clause (g).—It seems unthinkable that the Legislature should have intended by this section to give Magistrates a discretion in cases ending in a conviction to dispense with the examinations of the accused. The principle 'audi alteram partem' is the first and most important principle governing the mode of administering justice and essential of a fair trial. The meaning of the words 'if any' in this and S. 370, infra, are clear if one considers Ss. 243, 245, 253 and 289 of the Code. It is not in every trial the examination of the accused is required, e.g., in a summons-case if the accused admits his having committed the offence the Magistrate may convict him under S. 243, supra, and again if the prosecution evidence does not support the charge under S. 245 the Magistrate may acquit and under S. 253, supra, the Magistrate may discharge in a warrant-case. This is only reasonable and in harmony with S. 342, infra, for in such a case there is nothing in the evidence requiring the accused to explain. Similarly under S. 289, infra, the Court may without examination direct the Jury to return a verdict of not guilty. The words 'if any' do not limit the obligation under S. 342, infra, or render it inapplicable to summary trials. They really have reference to those cases in which owing to the admission and plea of the accused or owing to the weakness of the prosecution evidence the accused can be convicted or acquitted without his examination. That the mandatory provisions of this section apply to summons-cases has been recognized by all the High Courts, 26 Cr. L.J. 1534=90 Ind. Cas. 434. See 45 B. 672; 46 B. 441; 5 Pat. L.J. 174; 6 Pat. L.J. 174; 23 Cr. L.J. 154=65 Ind. Cas. 618 but see 46 M. 758. Where a Magistrate failed to record a plea of the accused the conviction was held bad, 9 C.W.N. 1xxvi. This clause does not give a Magistrate discretion whether he will examine the accused or not. This is governed by S. 342, infra, which gives the accused the right to refuse to say anything if he chooses. Failure to record the plea of the accused and his examination vitiates the trial, 26 A.L.J. 109=29 Cr. L.J. 265=107 Ind. Cas. 592. But there must be an examination in all warrant-cases and the words "if any" occurring in this clause do not apply when the case tried by the Magistrate is a warrant-case, 41 C. 743 at 745; see also 46 M. 449 (F.B.).

Clause (h).—Under this clause a brief statement of reasons for conviction must be given showing that there is evidence to prove the existence of the ingredients necessary to complete the offence, 10 A.L.J. 251=13 Cr. L.J. 708=16 Ind. Cas. 516; 21 A. 189 at 191; 16 Cr. L.J. 713=30 Ind. Cas. 1001; 23 Cr. L.J. 161=65 Ind. Cas. 625; 14 Cr. L.J. 594=21 Ind. Cas. 456; 23 Cr. L.J. 94=65 Ind. Cas. 446; 28 Cr. L.J. 495=101 Ind. Cas. 671; 26 A.L.J. 109=29 Cr. L.J. 265=107 Ind. Cas. 592 where 10 A.L.J. 251; 1883 A.W.N. 213; 1886 A.W.N. 181; 1899 A.W.N. 81 are referred to. See also 10 Cr. L.J. 216; 21 A. 189 and 18 B. 97. The Magistrate under this section need not write a judgment as in the case contemplated by S. 204, infra. He is bound to state briefly his reasons for conviction. The Legislature has provided a minimum protection for the person affected by the order and it is absolutely necessary that officers who act under the Chapter should most strictly observe the scanty formalities which the law provides. If they do not do so, it would be absolutely impossible for the High Court as a Court of Revision or any other authority to exercise the smallest control over proceedings which may form the subject of complaint, 22 W.R. (Cr.) 28; 10 C.W.N. 79=2 C.L.J. 565=3 Cr. L.J. 178; 21 A. 189; 46 M. 253. The law does not require the Magistrate who deals with the case summarily to record the evidence but he must record his reasons for the conviction and so state them that a superior Court acting in revision may see that the reasons are different from those before the Magistrate to find the accused guilty. See 1883 A.W.N. 114 and 1886 A.W.N. 181. The duty of the Magistrate and of the person accused but what he should do and what he must take care he does, is to leave upon record some brief but intelligible reasons for the conclusions at which he has arrived so that the High Courts' superintendence of his proceedings may not be defeated, 1883 A.W.N. 114; 1885 A.W.N. 213; 1886 A.W.N. 181; 1899 A.W.N. 81, but where there is clear evidence to justify a conviction the omission to comply strictly with the provisions of this sub-section may be treated as an irregularity cured under S. 537, infra, and there is no contravention of some express provision of law as to the mode of trial, 26 Cr. L.J. 466=83 Ind. Cas. 146. The record must be sufficiently elaborate to satisfy a Court of Revision that the finding is correct, legal or proper under this Chapter, 2 Cr. L.J. 375; 6 C. 579; 18 B. 97; 46 M. 253; 20 L.W. 330; 3 C.W.N. 281; 8 C. 193. When the case ends in an acquittal, it is not necessary to record reasons which is imperative in a case of conviction only, 3 Cr. L.J. 433. When the President of a Bench of Magistrates is in a minority as to a conviction or acquittal the judgment should be written by some member of the Majority of Bench Magistrates otherwise there will be a conviction or an acquitting judgment and the High Court in revision will be left without any reasons for conviction when the law as laid down herein says that reasons should be set out by the Bench, 1923 M.W.N. 31=27 L.W. 239.

264. (1) In every case tried summarily by a Magistrate or Bench in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate or Bench shall, before passing sentence, record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence and also the particulars mentioned in section 263.

Record in appealable cases.

(2) Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section.

Scope of the section.—The section deals with the preparation of the record in appealable cases in summary trials held under this Chapter. The procedure for the trial is prescribed in S. 262 (1) supra, see S 3 C. 738. Failure to observe the conditions prescribed in this section is one that will prejudice the accused because it prevents the proper disposal of the appeal that he is entitled to prefer and the appellate Court should know the substance of the evidence that had been given, so as to be in a position to decide the appeal on the merits and it is not proper to decide the appeal by merely finding that the Bench did address themselves with due diligence to the question of fact that arose for consideration, 30 Bom L.R. 954 at 956=23 Cr L.J. 1033=112 Ind. Cas. 221.

In which an appeal lies—An appeal lies from a conviction by a Bench of Magistrates exercising second or third class powers, 9 M. 38, and the Bench should record a judgment under this section. This section may not apply to the case of an acquittal although an appeal is provided for by S 417, infra, at the instance of the Local Government.

Before passing sentence.—The record should be made at the time of trial and not after concluding it, from memory or from rough notes, 15 M. 83.

Judgment embodying substance of evidence, etc—Under this section a Magistrate is not bound to record the substance of every deposition. He has to state generally the substance of the witness's evidence and the substance of the evidence is a matter distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence. The substance of the evidence should be recorded in such a manner that a superior Court acting in appeal or revision may be in a position to judge that there were sufficient materials to support the conviction and a judgment which contains the substance of the evidence sufficient to decide the case is not illegal merely because evidence is not summarized fully, 30 Cr. L.J. 537=116 Ind. Cas. 57. Sufficient evidence must be recorded to justify the judgment. No doubt the object of the procedure laid down in this Chapter is to shorten the course of the trial, but this will not absolve the Magistrate from recording sufficient evidence to support his order, 27 C. 450 at 451. The judgment under this section must contain in addition to the particulars required to be mentioned in non appealable cases under S 263, supra, the substance of the evidence on which a conviction is based and such judgment shall be the only record in appealable cases tried summarily. See 27 C.W.N. 928. This section requires that the substance of the evidence shall be plainly stated in the judgment and not that the Court should be driven to inferences in order to find out the substance of the evidence 30 Bom. L.R. 954=29 Cr. L.J. 1005=112 Ind. Cas. 221. When the record does not comply with the requirements of the section, the conviction cannot be upheld 9 Cr L.J. 23 and such failure is not a mere irregularity cured by S. 537 infra but renders the whole proceedings bad 3 Bom. L.R. 934=29 Cr. L.J. 1005=112 Ind. Cas. 211.

Sub-section (2).—Under this section the judgment is the only record available to the appellate Court. Rough and incomplete notes of evidence made by the Magistrate is no evidence, 26 Cr. L.J. 1026=87 Ind. Cas. 914. The judgment alone embodying as it does the substance of the evidence is the only record of the case. There is no other record, 7 Lah. 303 following 27 C.W.N. 928. See S 3 C. 738, which also takes the same view that the judgment is the only record in the case. The express terms of this sub-section clearly show it cannot be laid down that if a Magistrate takes rough notes for his own purposes such notes form part of the record. There is some justification in saying that such note destroyed in cases falling under S. 355, infra but not otherwise, 29 Bom. L.R. 710=28 Cr. L.J. 537=102 Ind. Cas. 345 where 43 C. 280. is not followed and 26 Cr. L.J. 1026=87 Ind. Cas. 914 is followed. Such Judgments shall be the only record in the case and additional matter such as notes made by the trying Magistrate cannot be called for or consulted by the appellate Court, 52 M.L.J. 32=1927 M.W.N. 40=33 M.L.T. 35=25 L.W. 43. The appellate Court cannot go beyond the records and look into the complaint and sworn statement, 55 M.L.J. 117=28 L.W. 394=29 Cr. L.J. 625=109 Ind. Cas. 897 following 52 M.L.J. 32; 53 C. 738 and 7 Lah. 303.

265. (1) Records made under section 263 and judgments recorded under section 264 shall be written by the Language of record and judgment. presiding officer, either in English or in the language of the Court, or, if the Court to which such presiding officer is immediately subordinate so directs, in such officer's mother-tongue.

(2) The Local Government may authorise any Bench of Magistrates empowered to try offences summarily to Bench may be authorised to employ clerk. prepare the aforesaid record or judgment by means of an officer appointed in this behalf by the Court to which such Bench is immediately subordinate, and the record or judgment so prepared shall be signed by each member of such Bench present taking part in the proceedings.

(3) If no such authorisation be given, the record prepared by a member of the Bench and signed as aforesaid shall be the proper record.

(4) If the Bench differ in opinion, any dissentient member may write a separate judgment.

Scope of the section :—Sub sections (3) and (4) were added in the Code of 1898. See S. 355, infra, which contains similar provisions as to mode of taking and recording evidence in inquiries and trials. It is doubtful whether S. 355, infra, was intended to apply to cases coming under this Chapter. It is no doubt important that the substance of evidence, on which the conviction is based should be set forth in the judgment to enable the appellate Court to perform its functions in appeal. The prisoner's right of appeal must not be defeated in consequence of an imperfect statement of the substance of the evidence. On the other hand it does not appear necessary to cancel a conviction and sentence not otherwise apparently exceptionable by reason of such a defect. The Session Judge may have found authority in precedents for the course adopted by him in this case. But if he found it impossible to dispose of the prisoner's appeal because the substance of the evidence for the prosecution has not been sufficiently embodied in the judgment of the Magistrate, it would have been better to have required that officer to repair the defect in this judgment by recording a judgment in which the substance of the evidence should be fully embodied and if necessary re-examining the witnesses for that purpose, or, to have ordered a retrial with that view. The Session Judge's order was therefore cancelled and he was directed to dispose of the appeal afresh, 1 A. 680 at 682.

Sub-section (2) —Where the judgment of a Bench of Magistrates is prepared by the President of the Bench under this sub-section it is sufficient if he alone signs it and it is not necessary that the other Members of the Bench should sign the record or judgment, S. 367 infra, requires the presiding officer of the Court to write judgment which shall be dated and signed by him in open Court at the time of pronouncing the same but if the Presiding officer wrote the judgment and signed and delivered the same after the other members of the Bench had left the Court, the judgment was not a proper judgment and the conviction based on such judgment is illegal. S. 366 infra requires that the judgment of a Criminal Court should be pronounced by the Court and if required by the accused it shall be explained to him but when the members composing the Bench leave the Bench there is no Court at all and the mere fact that the Presiding officer sits in the Court room and writes his judgment will not make that a Court, when a judgment is delivered the members of the Bench who took part in the trial and who concurred or differed from the judgment should be present. Such a procedure is not an irregularity which can be cured. 52 M. 237 see also 23 L.W. (Sh. n) 55; Cr. R. Case (M.H.O.) 373 of 1929 & 922 of 1927. In Madras every Bench of Magistrates is empowered to prepare the record or judgment of the Bench by means of an Officer appointed by the sub-divisional Magistrate, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 20.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section does not apply to the case of the preparation of the record or judgment by the Presiding officer of the Court. If the record is prepared by a member of the Bench and not by the Presiding officer, it shall have to be signed by each member of the Bench taking part in the proceedings, but it will be otherwise if the Presiding officer himself prepares the record or judgment, 52 M. 237.

Sub-section (4).—The dissenting judgment, even where the Bench consists of only two members only, should form part of the record otherwise the appellate Court would not be in a position to know whether the judgment of the lower Court is a concurrent judgment of the two Magistrates composing the Bench or a judgment of the President dissented from by the other member of the Bench. This view is consistent with the intention of the Legislature as expressed in this sub section, 29 Bom. L R. 1470 at 1473.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF TRIALS BEFORE HIGH COURTS AND COURTS OF SESSION.

A—Preliminary.

266. In this Chapter, except in sections 276 and 307, and in Chapter XVIII, the expression "High Court" means a High Court of Judicature established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and includes the Chief Courts of Oudh and Sind and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and such other Courts as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be High Courts for the purposes of this Chapter and of Chapter XVIII.

The words "and includes the Courts of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces" and the other italicised words have been added by Act XII of 1923. Now the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Oudh and Sind are raised to Chief Courts. For definition of "High Court" see S. 4 (1) (j), supra. This section merely prescribes the procedure to be adopted by the various Courts herein mentioned, after they have been given the jurisdiction of a High Court by some local Legislature. Where any of the Courts mentioned in this section has by a local Legislature been given the jurisdiction of a High Court then and then only this section comes into operation in respect of that Court, 29 Cr. L.J. 945=111 Ind. Cas. 865. See also 26 Cr. L.J. 562=85 Ind. Cas. 706.

always first determine whether that offence has been committed, by an individual and next whether S. 149, I.P.C., makes the participator responsible. So it is with S. 34, I.P.C., 5 Pat. 238.

Various Local Governments have issued notifications under this sub-section specifying what offences are triable by Jury.

Madras: Ss. 379, 380, 392, 392 to 395, 397 to 402, 411, 412, 414, 451 to 459 and 461, I.P.C., and abetments of these offences. G.O. of 20th March, 1883. Fort St. Geo. Gazette, Pt. I, p. 150; Notification No. 145, Fort St. Geo. Gazette, Pt. I, p. 1859, dated 10-11-1896, Mad. Crl. Rules of Pr. Rule No. 40.

Bombay: All offences for which under Chapters VIII, XI, XII, XXI, XXIII or under any of the Chapters taken with S. 75, I.P.C., the punishment awardable is death, transportation for life or imprisonment for ten years or upwards.

Bengal: All offences under Chapters VIII, XI, XVI, XVII, XVIII and XX, I.P.C. Cal. Gaz. of 27th March, 1893, ibid March 1895.

United Provinces and Oudh: Ss. 363 to 369, 372, 373, 376, 379, 380, 381, 392, 393 to 395, 397 to 399, 401, 403, 404, 411 to 414, 426 to 432, 434 to 436, 440, 448, 450 to 462, 493 to 498 and offences under Chapters V and XXIII, I.P.C.

Burma: See Burma Gazette 1900, Pt. I, p. 321.

Assam: See Assam Gazette 1903, Pt. II, p. 170.

Any particular class of offences.—The classification need not be the same classification recognized by the Legislature such as offences against the State, against the person, or bailable or cognizable offences, etc. The classification may be according to the persons who commit them, i.e., the offences, the offenders or allowing to the persons or property against whom or which the offences are committed, or in regard to the particular occasion in connection with which they are committed. Thus the fact of offences having been committed by old offenders or members of criminal tribes or having been committed against women or against public property would afford reasonable grounds for a classification. Offences connected with an outbreak of riots and disturbances directed against a section of the population, i.e., riots and disturbances known as the "anti Shanar" riots was properly dealt with by notification as a particular class of offences, 23 M. 632 at 633.

Sub-section (2).—Trial by Jury is a comparatively recent innovation in India and even now few offences are so tried and the classes of cases to be so tried may be varied from time to time by Government, 26 M. 1 at 16. Powers given to the Local Government to revoke its general order as regards certain particular class of offences; offences connected with an outbreak of riots and disturbances can be dealt with by a notification under this section as a particular class of offences. When the Madras Government soon after the Sivakasi Shanar riots in Tinnevely District issued a notification under this section revoking the previous Jury notification as to trial of offences by Jury and directing that the rioters who were committed for trial or who may hereafter be committed for trial to the Sessions Court of Tinnevely shall be tried with the aid of Assessors and not by Jury, it was held that the trial held by the Sessions Judge with the aid of Assessors in pursuance of such a notification was valid as the offences connected with the outbreak were treated as a class of offences, and it was competent to the Government to revoke the previous notification as far as it related to that class, 23 M. 632.

Sub-section (3).—The words 'same trial' in this sub-section cannot be read as taking away the right of appeal given by S. 410, infra. This section uses the words in a distributive sense. 'Trial' has two meanings. In a case of trial by Jury and there is another charge tried by the Judge, right of appeal from the judgment of the Judge is retained in spite of the words 'same trial' used in this sub-section, 9 Cr. L. Rev. 187=18 Cr. L.J. 348=38 Ind. Cas. 730; where the Judge tried at one trial the accused charged with offences some of which were triable by Jury and others with the aid of Assessors, exception cannot be taken to the procedure adopted on the ground that the simultaneous disposal of the charges triable by Jury and of those triable with the aid of assessors had prejudiced the accused, as such a procedure is warranted by this sub-section, 2 L.W. 933=16 Cr. L.J. 771=30 Ind. Cas. 1003. When an accused is charged at the same trial with respect to offence of which are triable by Jury and some with the aid of Assessors, the Judge was bound to constitute all the members of the Jury as Assessors for trying the non-jury offences and not two of them as Assessors, it was held that the Judge acted illegally and the conviction was set aside, 21 M.L.J. 520=10 M.L.T. 22=12 Cr. L.J. 239=10 Ind. Cas. 231 following 26 M. 593, see also Ratanlal 603. Similarly where the Judge convicted the accused without recording the opinion of the Jury as Assessors as required by this section, the conviction was held bad, Weir II, 331. S. 536 (1), infra, enacts that in trial by Jury of Assessor offences shall not on that ground only be invalid See 4 C.L.R. 425. The accused cannot in such a case be heard to complain unless he objects before the verdict is delivered, 33 B. 423. But after the verdict was taken the Judge is not entitled to correct his mistake by treating the verdict as opinion of Assessors 25 C. 553; 23 B. 698; 1 Bom. L.R. 114; 26 M. 243; 9 M. 42. No appeal lay on matter of fact in such cases but only on questions of law, 23 B. 680 (F.B.); 33 B. 423; 26 M. 243; 13 M. 626; S. 536 (2), infra, enacts that the trial with the aid of Assessors of offences triable by Jury shall not on that ground only be invalid unless objection is taken before the Court records its finding, see 23 M. 632 at 635. But where the Judge charged the Jury as a whole directing them to give a verdict on each of the charges and not taking their opinion individually as Assessors on the minor charges not triable by Jury, it was held the trial of all the offences was by Jury, 33 B. 423. Where an accused is tried by the Judge with a Jury for offences triable by Jury and the Jury return a verdict of not guilty but find the accused guilty of a minor offence triable by Assessors, the failure on the part of the Judge to take the individual opinion of the members of the Jury is only an irregularity cured under S. 536, infra, but this section cannot apply to a case where the accused is not charged in the first instance with the major offence triable by Jury and the Jury finds the accused guilty of an offence not charged and the conviction comes to be made under S. 238, supra without a charge 1927 M.W.N. 299. Where a preliminary register showed that the accused were either guilty of murder in dacoity under S. 396, I.P.C., an assessor case, or that they were not guilty of dacoity at all, and the Sessions Judge tried the case with a Jury, and on their returning a verdict of not guilty, referred the case to the High Court, it was held that the Sessions Judge ought to have tried the accused with the aid of Assessors for an offence under S. 396, I.P.C. The High Court further pointed out that the Judge might have empanelled a Jury and at the conclusion of the trial he might have under this section recorded their opinion as Assessors as to the guilt of the accused under S. 396 and the Judge should then have found the accused guilty or not guilty under that section. If he found them guilty he should have proceeded to conclude the case by passing sentence. If however, he found them not guilty, he should have then charged the Jury with respect of the dacoity under S. 393, I.P.C., and should have taken their verdict, 22 M. 13 at 18; [1911] 2 M.W.N. 197=12 Cr. L.J. 488; 23 M. 632. The High Court without ordering a retrial dealt with the case on the merits under S. 307, infra. Where an accused was tried by a Judge with a Jury who found them guilty of a non-jury offence and the Judge made a reference under S. 307, infra, to the High Court, it was held that the reference was not proper as the Judge ought to have treated the verdict as the opinion of Assessors under this section and he was competent to deal with the case finally as if the trial was with the aid of Assessors, 9 Bom. L.R. 1057=6 Cr. L.J. 236, see 6 Pat. 208 as to the effect of a retrial by the appellate Court on appeal from a conviction of the assessor-offences as re-opening the whole case including the jury-offences of which the accused had been acquitted. When retrial is ordered on the ground that the opinion of the jury was not taken individually as Assessors, the retrial will be confined only to offences triable with Assessors and not of the Jury offences already acquitted, 6 Pat. 208.

Assessors.—In the early days of British administration Judges who administered justice were not fully equipped with the knowledge of the customs and habits of parties and their witnesses. It was therefore thought necessary to appoint two or more respectable Indians possessing special knowledge to assist the Judge. See Bengal Regulation VI of 1832, Subsequently Act VII of 1843 extended the system to the Presidency of Madras and is now applicable to the whole of British India. The opinion of Assessors has lost much of its weight since the passing of the Code of 1872 and is now in the same footing as the opinion of persons specially skilled. The law makes no distinction as to the procedure at the trial between a trial by Jury and one with the aid of Assessors except as to summing up in the case of the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinion of the Assessors in the latter are respectively taken. It is at this latter point there as a signature of the ways and if the accused who is tried, does not intervene at that crucial point and put the procedure applicable to trials with the aid of Assessors enforced, he cannot be heard to complain. But if that was not done and the Judge was allowed to deal with the whole case as one tried by a jury, it cannot be successfully urged subsequently that the Judge's action should be corrected, 23 B. 422 at 425-427.

Trial before Court of Session to be conducted by Public Prosecutor

270. In every trial before a Court of Session the prosecution shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor.

Public Prosecutor.—For definition of Public Prosecutor see S. 4 (1), (2) supra, and see Chapter XXXVIII, infra, as to appointment, of duties and powers of Public Prosecutor.

Shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor.—The word "shall" here is merely directory. An accused person will not be entitled to an acquittal merely on the ground that a public prosecutor did not conduct the prosecution or that there was a defect in his appointment, a defect which can be cured by S. 437, infra, 1837 P.R. (Cr. J.) 35. Counsel instructed by a private party cannot conduct the prosecution. A Public Prosecutor may avail himself of his services and once the assistance had been accepted that cannot be excluded at any stage of the trial, 11 B.H.C.R. 102. See S. 433, infra, no special permission of the District Magistrate is necessary for an Advocate of the High Court to appear on behalf of the prosecution and the High Court directed a Sessions Judge to permit the Advocate to appear and conduct the prosecution on behalf of the complaint, see 23 W.R. (Cr.) 14. The practice of allowing police officers to conduct prosecution in the Sessions Court is highly objectionable, 13 W.R. (Cr.) 18.

B—Commencement of proceedings.

Preliminary proceedings that are referred to as 'commencement of proceedings,' e.g., the swearing in of the Jury, the reading out of the charge to the Jury referred to in the heading of this section are not any part of the actual trial referred to in the heading of S. 286 as 'trial' of the case, 20 Bom. L.R. 204=28 Cr.L.J. 402=101 Ind. Cas. 178; 6 Lah. 262. But see 35 M. 701 at 703 and 15 D. 514.

271. (1) When the Court is ready to commence the trial, the accused shall appear or be brought before it, and the charge shall be read out in Court and explained to him, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty of the offence charged, or claims to be tried.

Place of guilty.

(3) If the accused pleads guilty, the plea shall be recorded, and he may be convicted thereon.

When the Court is ready to commence the trial.—When a Judge is of opinion that there is an absence of evidence to warrant a commitment of the accused to the Court of Session he has no power to withdraw the case, a power specially conferred on the High Court only, of withdrawing a case from the Jury. The proper procedure for the Sessions Judge in such a case is to make a reference to the High Court to have the commitment quashed under S. 416, supra, & C.W.N. 411. The hearing or trial must be taken to include all proceedings taken to determine a case and the first step in the hearing at a Sessions trial is the reading and explaining of the charge to the accused, 35 M. 701 at 703, but it was held in 15 B. 514 that the actual trial does not begin until the charge has been read and explained to the accused and he claims to be tried. The trial begins only after the Assessors or Jurors have been chosen, 6 Lab. 262.

Trial with the aid of Assessors does not commence with the reading of the charge, for it is only when the accused has refused or does not plead to the charge and claims to be tried that the Sessions Court is to proceed to choose Assessors under S. 272, infra, 15 B. 514.

The accused shall appear.—The trial, conviction and sentence on an accused person by the Court of Session even in a case where the accused appeared before the committing Magistrate but absconded after commitment of the case to the Court of Session is not warranted by law and is wholly illegal and must be set aside, 23 Cr. L.J. 971=103 Ind. Cas. 633.

Charge shall be read out in Court and explained to accused.—The Judge is bound to read out and explain the charge to the accused and he ought to satisfy himself by interrogating the accused that he fully understands the responsibility he assumes by making a plea of guilty, 18 Cr. L.J. 742=40 Ind. Cas. 742. There must be a record of charge read out and explained in Court to the accused and where there is none, the record should contain an explanation for its absence and such absence of a written charge cannot be considered an irregularity cured by s. 537 infra, 21 Cr. L.J. 410=58 Ind. Cas. 53. The plea of the accused also should be recorded and when no plea is on record the conviction is bad and a new trial will be ordered, 1908 A.W.N. 54=5 A.L.J. 157=5 M.L.T. 75=7 Cr. L.J. 295. The ultimate responsibility of settling the charge vests on the Sessions Judge who can modify or alter the same, 16 Bom. L.R. 83=15 Cr. L.J. 292=23 Ind. Cas. 500. Mere reading out the charge is not sufficient but it must be explained to him, and where a charge is not explained to the accused the conviction is liable to be set aside, 9 M. 61 see also 19 A. 119 and 30 B. 611; 18 A.L.J. 812. When arraigning an accused person and before receiving his plea the Court should be careful to insure the explanation of the charge in a manner sufficiently explicit to enable the accused to understand thoroughly the nature of the charge he is called upon to plead, 5 C. 826; 7 C. 93; Weir, II, 336, 337 and 339; 3 Bom. L.R. 439. See S. 255, supra, and the notes thereunder at p. 491-492.

He shall be asked whether he is guilty or claims to be tried.—This and S. 272, infra, contain all that is necessary as to pleading, and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature. The accused can plead "guilty" under this section, he can claim to be tried, or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried. The plea of "not guilty" is thus one not recognized by the Code and this has been the law since 1872 at least, and this is intentional and is designed to get rid of a great mass of English law relating to criminal pleadings which for more than half a century has been discredited and is in fact falling into oblivion. It is not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except "guilty" or "claim to be tried". If an accused claims to be tried, subject to special provisions he can take any objection to his trial or conviction at any time before verdict, at any rate and in any form that the Court sees fit to allow. S. 503, infra, has nothing to do with pleading, but is in terms a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court, 41 C. 1072 at 1085. A plea of guilty must be a distinct admission of each and every fact necessary to constitute the offence charged and unless the Judge himself finds on the admission made that the offence charged is legally established, he should record evidence and come to a decision thereon Weir II, 336. After an accused had claimed to be tried, any admission made by him, admitting his guilt cannot be taken to be a plea of guilty and upon which the Judge could base a finding Weir II, 336; 7 Bom. L.R. 731. Where the accused instead of pleading guilty makes a rambling statement more or less admitting guilt, it would be much safer if the Judge recorded a formal plea of "not guilty" and proceeded with the trial in the ordinary way recording evidence, 1908 A.W.N. 54=5 A.L.J. 157=7 Cr. L.J. 295. Before a Judge makes up his mind to convict on a plea of guilty, it is his duty since the passing of the Code of 1872 and is now in the same footing as the opinion evidence of persons specially skilled. The law makes no distinction as to the procedure at the trial between a trial by Jury and one with the aid of Assessors except as to summing up in the case of the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinion of the Assessors in the latter are respectively taken. It is at this latter point there is a departure of the ways and if the accused who is tried, does not intervene at that crucial point and get the procedure applicable to trials with the aid of Assessors enforced, he cannot be heard to complain. But if that was not done and the Judge was allowed to deal with the whole case as one tried by a jury, it cannot be successfully urged subsequently that the Judge's action should be corrected, 33 B. 423 at 424-425.

Trial before Court of Session to be conducted by Public Prosecutor.

270. In every trial before a Court of Session the prosecution shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor.

Public Prosecutor.—For definition of Public Prosecutor see S. 4 (1), (i) supra, and see Chapter XXXVIII, infra, as to appointment, of duties and powers of Public Prosecutor.

Shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor.—The word "shall" here is merely directory. An accused person will not be entitled to an acquittal merely on the ground that a public prosecutor did not conduct the prosecution or that there was a defect in his appointment, a defect which can be cured by S. 537, infra, 1887 P.R. (Cr. J.) 38. Counsel instructed by a private party cannot conduct the prosecution. A Public Prosecutor may avail himself of his services and once the assistance had been accepted that cannot be excluded at any stage of the trial, 11 B.H.C.R. 102. See S. 493, infra, no special permission of the District Magistrate is necessary for an Advocate of the High Court to appear on behalf of the prosecution and the High Court directed a Sessions Judge to permit the Advocate to appear and conduct the prosecution on behalf of the complaint, see 23 W.R. (Cr.) 14. The practice of allowing police officers to conduct prosecution in the Sessions Court is highly objectionable, 13 W.R. (Cr.) 18.

B—Commencement of proceedings.

Preliminary proceedings that are referred to as 'commencement of proceedings,' e.g., the swearing in of the Jury, the reading out of the charge to the Jury referred to in the heading of this section are not any part of the actual trial referred to in the heading of S. 286 as 'trial' of the case, 29 Bom. L.R. 204=28 Cr.L.J. 402=101 Ind. Cas. 178; 6 Lah. 262. But see 35 M. 701 at 703 and 13 B. 514.

271. (1) When the Court is ready to commence the trial, the accused shall appear or be brought before it, and the charge shall be read out in Court and explained to him, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty of the offence charged, or claims to be tried.

Commencement of trial.

Plea of guilty.

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the plea shall be recorded, and he may be convicted thereon.

When the Court is ready to commence the trial.—When a Judge is of opinion that there is an absence of evidence to warrant a commitment of the accused to the Court of Session he has no power to withdraw the case, a power specially conferred on the High Court only, of withdrawing a case from the Jury. The proper procedure for the Sessions Judge in such a case is to make a reference to the High Court to have the commitment quashed under S. 215, supra, 5 C.W.N. 411. The hearing or trial must be taken to include all proceedings taken to determine a case and the first step in the hearing at a Sessions trial is the reading and explaining of the charge to the accused, 35 M. 701 at 703, but it was held in 15 B. 514 that the actual trial does not begin until the charge has been read and explained to the accused and he claims to be tried. The trial begins only after the Assessors or Jurors have been chosen, 6 Lah. 262.

Trial with the aid of Assessors does not commence with the reading of the charge, for it is only when the accused has refused or does not plead to the charge and claims to be tried that the Sessions Court is to proceed to choose Assessors under S. 272, infra, 15 B. 514.

The accused shall appear.—The trial, conviction and sentence on an accused person by the Court of Session even in a case where the accused appeared before the committing Magistrate but absconded after commitment of the case to the Court of Session is not warranted by law and is wholly illegal and must be set aside, 23 Cr. L.J. 971=105 Ind. Cas. 633.

Charge shall be read out in Court and explained to accused.—The Judge is bound to read out and explain the charge to the accused and he ought to satisfy himself by interrogating the accused that he fully understands the responsibility he assumes by making a plea of guilty, 18 Cr. L. J. 742=40 Ind. Cas. 742. There must be a record of charge read out and explained in Court to the accused and where there is none, the record should contain an explanation for its absence and such absence of a written charge cannot be considered an irregularity cured by s. 537 infra, 21 Cr. L.J. 410=56 Ind. Cas. 58. The plea of the accused also should be recorded and when no plea is on record the conviction is bad and a new trial will be ordered, 1908 A.W.N. 54=5 A.L.J. 157=5 M.L.T. 75=7 Cr. L.J. 295. The ultimate responsibility of setting the charge vests on the Sessions Judge who can modify or alter the same, 16 Bom. L.R. 87=15 Cr. L.J. 292=23 Ind. Cas. 500. Mere reading out the charge is not sufficient but it must be explained to him, and where a charge is not explained to the accused the conviction is liable to be set aside, 9 M. 61 see also 19 A. 119 and 30 B. 811; 18 A.L.J. 812. When arraigning an accused person and before receiving his plea the Court should be careful to insure the explanation of the charge in a manner sufficiently explicit to enable the accused to understand thoroughly the nature of the charge he is called upon to plead, 5 C. 826; 7 C. 93; Weir. II, 336, 337 and 339; 3 Bom. L.R. 439. See S. 255, supra, and the notes thereunder at p. 491-492.

He shall be asked whether he is guilty or claims to be tried.—This and S. 272, infra, contain all that is necessary as to pleading, and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature. The accused can plead "guilty" under this section, he can claim to be tried, or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried. The plea of "not guilty" is thus one not recognized by the Code and this has been the law since 1872 at least, and this is intentional and is designed to get rid of a great mass of English law relating to criminal pleadings which for more than half a century has been discredited and is in fact falling into oblivion. It is not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except "guilty" or "claim to be tried". If an accused claims to be tried, subject to special provisions he can take any objection to his trial or conviction at any time before verdict, at any rate and in any form that the Court sees fit to allow. S. 403, infra, has nothing to do with pleading, but is in terms a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court, 41 C. 1072 at 1084. A plea of guilty must be a distinct admission of each and every fact necessary to constitute the offence charged and unless the Judge himself finds on the admission made that the offence charged is legally established, he should record evidence and come to a decision thereon Weir II, 336. After an accused had claimed to be tried, any admission made by him, admitting his guilt cannot be taken to be a plea of guilty and upon which the Judge could base a finding Weir II, 334; 7 Bom. L.R. 731. Where the accused instead of pleading guilty makes a rambling statement more or less admitting guilt, it would be much safer if the Judge recorded a formal plea of "not guilty" and proceeded with the trial in the ordinary way recording evidence, 1908 A.W.N. 54=5 A.L.J. 157=7 Cr. L.J. 295. Before a Judge makes up his mind to convict on a plea of guilty, it is his duty to consider whether the plea is really one of "guilty" in other words, whether accused fully understands the nature of the charge and the consequences which will ensue if his plea of guilty is accepted, and it is not advisable to accept a plea of guilty in murder cases, 20 A.L.J. 326=23 Cr. L.J. 233=66 Ind. Cas. 427, followed in 26 Cr. L.J. 1316=89 Ind. Cas. 260. A plea of guilty by a pleader appointed by the Court to defend the accused on a charge of murder is not binding on the accused. The position of a pleader so appointed is the same as a pleader appointed by the accused, 2 Bom. L.R. 751. The section lays down that the accused may be convicted on a plea of guilty and thereby leave it open to the Court to refuse to accept the plea of guilty and have the question of the guilt of the accused tried by the Court, 13 C.W.N. 532=9 C.L.J. 291=10 Cr. L.J. 484=4 Ind. Cas. 57, where 19 B. 195; 28 A. 53 and 30 A. 540 are referred to; 19 A. 119. The accused should be asked to plead separately on each count and not alternatively, Ratanlal 327; 10 B. 124. It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural consequence would be a sentence of death, 19 Bom. L.R. 356=18 Cr. L.J. 639=40 Ind. Cas. 699, following 8 Bom. L.R. 240=3 Cr. L.J. 337. A man may plead that he hit some one who thereby died and that he did it for the purpose of taking away the ornaments of the person injured without necessarily admitting he committed murder, 2 Bom. L.R. 240; 5 C. 824; 9 M. 61. As a matter of practice in Sessions trials, especially in murder cases many Judges very properly prefer not to accept the plea of guilty but proceed to take evidence just as if the plea had been one of not guilty and decide the case upon the whole evidence including the accused's plea, 23 M. 151 at 154; 19 B. 195; 22 M. 491. Where there is a doubt the Court will do well to proceed with the trial, 5 A.L.J. 157=1908 A.W.N. 54=7 Cr. L.J. 285. The statement must be taken as a whole, 11 C. 410; 25 W.R. (Cr.) 23; 7 W.R. (Cr.) 39; 14 B. 564; Ratanlal 532 and 668; 11 W.R. (Cr.) 53.

Sub-section (2).—Under this sub-section all that is incumbent on the Court is to record the plea of guilty. It is not obligatory on the Court to convict him thereon. When an accused pleads guilty if the Judge does not accept the plea and decides to proceed with the trial, the Code does not lay down explicitly that he should record reasons for so doing. Therefore it is not illegal for the Court to proceed with the trial of an accused who has pleaded guilty without previously placing on record its reasons for so doing, 18 Cr. L.J. 742 at 746=40 Ind. Cas. 742. The conviction on a plea of guilty is discretionary, 24 A.L.J. 318=27 Cr. L.J. 449=93 Ind. Cas. 241. The plea is to be recorded in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter, 5 C. 826, and the accused should be asked to plead by his own mouth and not through his counsel or pleader, 6 Bom. L.R. 861, referred to and distinguished in 50 B. 250 at 257; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 42. The Judge is not bound to convict on the plea of "guilty." The term used is "may" convict and a wide discretion is allowed to the Judge. Where the plea is not equivocal but a complete plea of "guilty" the Judge is entitled to act upon such a plea and convict the accused. If the Judge does not accept the plea of "guilty" and convicts the accused he should proceed with the trial and take all the evidence in order to determine whether he committed the offence charged, 4 B.L.R. Appx. 101. A trial does not end till the accused is convicted or acquitted, 23 M. 151. If the Court considers it is unsafe to accept the plea of guilty and to convict the accused on such plea no special procedure is laid down in the Code. As a matter of practice the trial proceeds as if the plea was one of not guilty and when the Judge decides to try the case he should direct the accused to enter a plea of not guilty as is the practice in England. The recording of a plea of guilty after the Judge had decided to try the case would be meaningless unless he accepts it. If on the other hand he accepted it there was nothing in issue between the Crown and the prisoner at the bar whom he has to try, 9 C.L.J. 55 at 72. The plea of guilty is a plea to the charge and does not necessarily amount to a confession of all the facts alleged. The Court is not bound to act on it but it may convict on such a plea. The plea operates as a bar in certain cases to the preferring of an appeal except to the extent and legality of the sentence under B. 412, infra. The plea of guilty may also stand by analogy in the accused's way of filing a revision, 43 Cr. L.J. 432 at 434.

May be convicted.—Under the Code the Court is not bound to convict an accused person on his plea of guilty, 23 M. 151 at 153; 13 C.W.N. 552. This section though it directs that the plea shall be recorded does not direct that the accused shall be convicted thereon but only that he may be convicted, that is to say, it is left to the discretion of the presiding Judge by each particular case to determine whether in spite of the plea it is or it is not desirable to enter upon the evidence, 19 Bom. L.R. 355=18 Cr. L.J. 699=40 Ind. Cas. 619. The Judge has a discretion to convict the accused on his plea of guilty and that discretion ought to be exercised as soon as the plea of guilty is offered and recorded, 18 Cr. L.J. 742=40 Ind. Cas. 742. This section though it directs that the plea shall be recorded does not direct that the accused shall be convicted thereon but only that he may be so convicted that is to say, it is left to the discretion of the presiding Judge in each particular case to determine whether in spite of the plea it is or is not desirable to enter upon the evidence, It cannot too strongly be impressed upon learned Session Judges that in cases under S. 302, I.P.C., it is undesirable to accept a plea of guilty and to bring the trial to an end thereon, The trial does not necessarily end if the accused pleads guilty, but evidence may and should be taken in cases of murder as if the plea is one of not guilty and the case decided on the whole evidence including the accused's plea. It is not in accordance with usual practice to accept the plea of guilty where the natural consequence would be a sentence of death, 30 Cr. L.J. 508=115 Ind. Cas. 532 referring to 8 Bom. L.R. 245=3 Cr. L.J. 337; 19 A. 119; 19 Bom. L.R. 356=18 Cr. L.J. 699=40 Ind. Cas. 699. In 24 A.L.J. 318 it was held that the Magistrate has a discretion to accept the plea of guilty and convict the accused on such plea. If a Judge refuses to convict the accused on a plea of guilty the only alternative left is to proceed with the trial of the accused and cannot acquit the accused without a trial, 18 Cr. L.J. 742 at 745=40 Ind. Cas. 742.

272. If the accused refuses to, or does not, plead, or if he claims to be tried, the Court shall proceed to choose jurors or assessors as hereinafter directed and to try the case :

Refusal to plead or claim to be tried.

Trial by same jury or assessors of several offenders in succession.

Provided that, subject to the right of objection hereinafter mentioned, the same jury may try, or the same assessors may aid in the trial of, as many accused persons successively as the Court thinks fit.

Scope of the section.—A Court of session can proceed to trial of an accused person only in the circumstances specified in this section, that is to say when the accused either (1) refuses to plead (2) does not plead, or (3) claims to be tried. When the terms of S. 271, supra, are taken into consideration there is no possible way of avoiding the conclusion that where a Judge does not convict on the plea of guilty, the only course open to him is to try the accused, 18 Cr. L.J. 742 at 745=40 Ind. Cas. 742.

Refuses to plead.—An accused is not bound to answer any question put to him and if he likes decline to plead and if he does so the case goes on just the same. S. 179, I.P.C., has nothing whatever to do with the conduct of accused persons in Court, 47 M. 396. When the accused person refuses to plead, that is to be taken as equivalent to his claiming to be tried and the trial should proceed, 41 C. 1072 at 1084. The actual trial does not begin until the charge has been read and explained to the accused and his plea is recorded, 15 B. 514. If the accused refuses to plead or claims to be tried, then the Judge shall proceed to choose Jurors or Assessors to try the case.

Claims to be tried.—If an accused person pleads not guilty, it is after so pleading that he claims to be tried. In such cases if he confesses, a Judge is not entitled to convict him on the confession without taking the verdict of the jury after laying before them all the evidence including the confession.

Proviso to the section.—By this proviso, it is enacted that when one trial is to follow the other i.e., on the conclusion of one trial, the same Jury may proceed to try the accused in the next case. The law does not contemplate that two trials should be conducted piecemeal in such a manner that at their conclusion the Jury shall be called upon to decide at one and the same time two distinct class of evidence which, though they have points in common, require careful determination as bearing upon the guilt or innocence of two sets of accused, no Jury ought to be placed in such an embarrassing position. It is only fair to the prisoners that the sole issues on which they are to be tried and the evidence bearing upon those issues should be laid before the jury and the minds of the Jury should not be encumbered by consideration of foreign and irrelevant matter 6 C. 96 at 99, but the hearing of the two cases should not be simultaneous, 23 Cr. L. J. 49=64 Ind. Cas. 833.

273. (1) In trials before the High Court, when it appears to the High Court, at any time before the commencement of the trial of the person charged, that any charge or any portion thereof is clearly unsustainable, the Judge may make on the charge an entry to that effect.

Entry on unsustainable charges.

(2) Such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge or portion of the charge, as the case may be.

Effect of entry.

Before the commencement of the trial.—The trial does not begin until the charge has been read out and explained to the accused and he claims to be tried. The hearing or trial must be taken to include all the proceedings taken to determine a case and the first step in the hearing of a sessions case is the reading and explaining the charge to the accused, 35 M. 701 at 703; 15 B. 514; but see 29 Bom. L.R. 204=28 Cr. L.J. 432=101 Ind. Cas. 178; 6 Lah. 262.

Effect of entry—An entry made under this section has not the effect of an acquittal which could be pleaded in bar to a subsequent trial under B. 403, infra, In 21 C 97 a charge under B. 379, I.P.O., when not made out, the learned Judge thought it was his duty to act under this section to stay the proceedings by making an entry as contemplated by this section and the accused was discharged from custody. The power under this section is to be invoked in the exercise of the ordinary original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court, 9 C. 397. Such an entry has the effect of postponing proceedings finally. For other instances of stay of proceedings, see Bs. 145 (5) 240, 464 (2), 465 (1) infra.

C—Choosing a Jury.

Trial by Jury is an ancient institution of almost all European races inhabiting Europe, and European Colonies in America and elsewhere where every criminal is tried by Jury. The origin of the trial by Jury is not traceable to any single Legislature or to any particular period. It seems to have had its beginnings in certain primitive customs of the Northern European races and received special developments from different nations. By the Anglo-Saxons, a person who was accused of crime, was permitted to summon twelve of his neighbours called compurgators who swore to his innocence. This was the origin of an institution which took settled and vigorous form after the Norman conquest gradually developing into its present form . . . In the United States, in Canada, and other British Colonies, Jury trials are essentially the same as in England. In France they are only applicable to criminal cases. Trial by Jury is in force in Italy and in the German Empire, 8 Lah. 262. The origin of the English Jury is attributed to a national recognition of the principle that no man ought to be condemned except by the voice of his fellow citizens, Forsyth, His of Try by Jury, p. 5. "With respect to jury system as a means of protecting innocence, it may safely be averred that it is the rarest of accidents when an innocent man is convicted in this country. To say that it never happens would be to give to a human tribunal the attributes of infallibility, and to fly in the face of recorded facts. But so long as a man's judgment is liable to err, such cases must now and then occur, whatever precaution is taken to prevent them. And before such a catastrophe can happen, how strong must be the evidence which implicates the accused. . . . But it can with equal truth be asserted that Juries never acquit in ordinary cases when they ought to condemn. I fear not there is no doubt in the vulnerable point of the system, that feeling of compassion for the prisoner or of repugnance to the punishment which the law awards are sometimes allowed to overpower their sense of duty. But it is an error at which humanity need not blush; it springs from one of the purest instincts of our system and is a system of kindness of heart which as a national characteristic, is an honor. Consequently laws which are totally repugnant to the feelings of the community are changed. Forsyth His trial by Jury p. 430 431. The object of the provisions of the Code as to the choosing of Jury is to secure an impartial trial by rendering it impossible any intentional selection of Jurors to try a particular case and that an accused person has a right to claim to be tried by a Jury chosen with such regard to all the safeguards provided by law to secure perfect impartiality. 46 C. L.J. 160 at 166=31 C.W.N. 1102=25 Cr. L.J. 859=104 Ind. Cas. 903.

274. (1) In trials before the High Court
Number of jury. the jury shall consist of nine persons.

(2) In trials by jury before the Court of Session the jury shall consist of such uneven number, not being less than five, or more than nine, as the Local Government, by order applicable to any particular district or to any particular class of offences in that district, may direct :

Provided that, where any accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons, and, if practicable, of nine persons.

Amendment.—The word “three” has been changed into “five” and the proviso has been newly added by Act XII of 1923.

Jury.—The term “jury” generally signifies a body of men sworn to inquire into a matter of fact and to declare the truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered to them. Jury form a tribunal or body with a foreman and the verdict is the verdict of the body and when there is no unanimity among the members of the body, the opinion of the majority prevails as the verdict of the body. The jurors are sworn after the foreman is appointed, and after the Judge has finished his charge, the Jury may retire to consider their verdict and if they are not unanimous, he may require them to retire for further consideration. If in the course of a trial any juror unavoidably absents himself, or if it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or the language in which it is interpreted, any new juror shall be added or the Jury discharged and a new Jury chosen. But in either case the trials shall commence anew, 24 M 523 at 536 537.

Sub-section (2).—When the Local Government by a notification under this sub-section has fixed the number of Jury at five, a trial held before Jury of seven persons in accordance with a cancelled notification was held to be wholly invalid, 23 A. 211.

The proviso is new. Under this section where an accused is charged with murder triable by jury in Calcutta, the Jury shall consist of not less than seven persons and if practicable, of nine persons. The number to be summoned by the District Magistrate should not be less than the double the number required for such trial 55 C. 791.

275. (1) In a trial by Jury before the High Court or Court of Session of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, a majority of the jury shall, if such person before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist, in the case of an European British subject, of persons who are Europeans or Americans and, in the case of an Indian British subject, of Indians.

(2) In any such trial by jury of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, a majority of the jury shall, if practicable, and if such European or American before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans.

This section was amended by Act XII of 1923. The Racial Distinctions Act, and provides for mixed Jury for the trial of Europeans and Indian British subjects and Europeans and Americans. "The same law as to the composition of the Jury shall apply to Indians as to Europeans, that is to say, the majority of the Jury if an Indian accused so desires shall consist of persons who are not Europeans or Americans. This is already the law in Sessions Courts and S. 275, is so amended as to make it apply to the High Court also"—Rept. Sel. Committee para. 23. See S. 284A infra as to trial with the aid of Assessors of such persons. The right conferred by this section is a substantive right to be obtained not by a luck of the ballot but the process of challenging as of right, 52 C. 347 at 353. A claim to be tried as an Indian British subject is a different and distinct one from the claim to be tried by a majority of Indian Jury as mentioned in this section though it can only be put forward by a person who has in the language of the section been found under the provisions of the Code to be an Indian British subject and the section further requires that such a claim has to be expressly put forward before the first Juror is called and accepted before it can be listened to, 51 C 930; see also 5 Lah. 515 (F.B.). Where certain Mahomedan accused were charged with abduction of a Hindu girl applied to the Sessions Court for a mixed Jury of Hindus and Mahomedans alleging that Hindus bear a sort of instinctive hatred or prejudice against them in a case of this nature and would not get a fair trial before a Jury composed entirely of Hindus, the application was rightly rejected as there is no provision of law for a mixed jury of this character on communal basis and the accused were not entitled to get what they asked for, 29 C W.N. 526=26 Cr. L.J. 1009=87 Ind. Cas. 833.

Sub-section (2) This sub-section which deals with special privileges provides that the accused should not merely assert that he belongs to a particular nationality but he must be one who has been found under the provisions of the Code to belong to that nationality, 29 Cr. L.J. 721=110 Ind. Cas. 577.

276. The jurors shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as such in such manner as the High

Jurors to be chosen by lot.

Court may from time to time by rule direct :

Provided that—first, pending the issue under this section of rules for any Court, the practice now prevailing in such Court in respect to the choosing of jurors shall be followed ;

existing practice maintained.

secondly, in case of a deficiency of persons summoned, the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present ;

persons not summoned
when eligible.

thirdly, in a trial before any High Court in the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court—trials before special jurors.

(a) if the accused person is charged with having committed an offence punishable with death, or

(b) if in any other case a Judge of the High Court so directs, the jurors shall be chosen from the special jury list hereinafter prescribed ; and fourthly, in any district for which the Local Government has declared that the trial of certain offences may be by special jury, the jurors shall, in any case in which the Judge so directs, be chosen from the special jury list prescribed in section 325.

Amendment.—The opening words of the third proviso are new.

Scope and object of the section.—The object of this section coupled with Ss. 279 and 326, infra, is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of Jurors to try a particular case, and an accused person has a right to claim to be tried by a Jury chosen with strict regard to the safeguards provided by law to secure perfect impartiality. When the required number of Jurors not being present, the deficiency was made up from other persons who were present in Court, though they were not in the Jury list and were not chosen by lot, being called to serve as Jurors, the trial is not vitiated on that ground, 29 C.W.N. 652=26 Cr. L.J. 819=86 Ind. Cas 467. This section with all its provisos is a general section dealing with the general nature of the procedure and details of that procedure, 55 C. 371 (F.B.) ; 7 Pat. 61 & 50. The section means what it says, the Jurors are to be chosen from among the persons summoned to act as such, that is to say, it states the source from which and the method by which the Jurors are to be chosen, the sources, the persons met by proviso 2 which enables the Judge to go to another source of supply, viz., the other persons present in Court and in that event the method of chance is no longer used. S. 279, infra, indicates how the choice is to be exercised, the method being a rational method of selection, 7 Pat 61 dissenting from 44 C.L.J. 541. This section provides in the first instance, for a ballot among the persons summoned under S. 326, infra, all of whom may or may not be present. When their names have been exhausted, if a Jury has not been empanelled, the Court may, in its discretion, allow the number requisite to complete the Jury to be chosen from among the bystanders or may adjourn the case for a fresh Jury to be summoned. As each name is drawn and called aloud, if the person summoned answers or as each Juror is chosen from among the bystanders, should that point have been reached and that course be permitted, the accused shall be asked, if he objects to be tried by such Juror. Should the objection be allowed, the Court shall proceed as laid down in S. 279 (2) infra adopting the course prescribed according as there are or not persons left from among those summoned whose names have not been drawn, 55 C. 371 (F.B.) where 44 C.L.J. 541 and 46 C.L.J. 160 are overruled.

Shall be chosen by lot.—The name of each person summoned to act as a Juror under S. 326, Cr. P.C., shall be written in a slip of paper and the slips of paper bearing the names of persons so summoned shall be placed in a box or bag and shaken together. The proper ministerial officer of the Court shall then draw out the slips of paper, one by one from the said box or bag until the requisite number of Jurors has been obtained, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 42. The provision of choosing Jurors by lot is applicable only when the persons summoned to act as Jurors are present in such number as to make it possible to choose them by lot and when such number is not present the Judge is to take the help of persons present in Court to form the Jury, 54 C. 1025. When instead of choosing jurors by lot and then hearing and deciding objections as provided by law the Judge proceeded at once to exempt some of the persons present merely on their own representation and tried the accused with the rest and no selection was made as required by S. 326, infra, it was held that such a grave irregularity in the selection of the Jurors affects the constitution of the Court and is not cured by S. 537, infra. 7 C.W.N. 188. where 8 C. 739 was distinguished, on the ground that in that case no objection was taken to the Judge himself selecting the jurors and no prejudice was shown by the accused. Jurors are judges of facts and the absence of a properly constituted Jury as required by the imperative provisions of this section is an illegality which cannot be cured by S. 537, infra, 33 A. 333 but there is nothing to show that any objection was taken in that case, see 44 C.L.J. 541=23 Cr. L.J. 191=93 Ind. Cas. 930 following 33 A. 385; 29 C.W.N. 652=26 Cr. L.J. 819=86 Ind. Cas. 467; the Full Bench decision in 55 C. 371 also held that the omission to choose jurors by lot was an illegality which vitiated the whole trial and the conviction and sentence was set aside and a retrial was ordered. See also 48 C.L.J. 479=30 Cr. L.J. 135=113 Ind. Cas. 328; but in 30 Cr. 537, infra.

Proviso second.—The position contemplated by the proviso is that out of the persons summoned a complete jury has not been obtained, whether it be by reasons of persons summoned having been excused or by reason of their having failed to attend and the jury box is short of a definite number of jurors to try the case. It is short by reason that there are no more persons whose names can be yielded by the ballot box. In that position it is open to the Court to adjourn the proceedings, re-summon a sufficient number and in this way obtain a jury in the ordinary course but this course will often be highly inconvenient and the power given by the proviso to fill up the Jury box to the necessary number by calling in the service of one or more of the bystanders and this process in no way defeats the right of the accused to object to any member of the Jury, 53 C. 371 (F.B.) This proviso clearly indicates that in case of a deficiency of persons summoned the procedure laid down in the first part of the section namely choosing by lot need not be followed and the number of jurors may be chosen from such persons as may be present. In other words, the provision as to choosing Jurors by lot is applicable only when the persons summoned to act as Jurors are present in such number as to make it possible to choose them by lot and when such number is not present the Judge is to take the help of persons present in Court to form the Jury, 54 C. 1026; this proviso is enacted to meet the difficulty which arises when the number chosen by lot is less than the number of Jurors required by enabling the Judge to go to another source of supply viz, the other persons present in Court, and in that event the method of chance is no longer to be used. S. 279 (2), supra, indicates how the choice is to be exercised in the case, the method being a rational method of selection, 7 Pat. 61. The words used in the first part of the section 'chosen by lot' and the word 'chosen' occurring in this proviso cannot be held to convey the same meaning, viz., selection by ballot and there is no logical justification for so holding. The two expressions cannot be regarded as synonymous unless there is no other possible construction to be placed upon them, 53 C. 371 (F.B.).

In case of deficiency of persons summoned, the number of jurors required.—The central idea is to have a Jury chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as jurors. In ordinary cases five persons are to be chosen by lot to act as Jurors out of ten persons summoned and in case however of a deficiency of persons summoned, i.e., where the persons attending in obedience to the summons are less than the number summoned, then the number required may with the leave of the Court be chosen from persons present in Court. The word 'deficiency' indicates the number by which the number of persons answering their names in Court and empanelled falls short of the number of persons of which the Jury should consist. It is only when such shortage occurs the proviso begins to operate and on that point being reached, the Court has to exercise a discretion to adjourn the case or to allow persons present in Court to be chosen in sufficient numbers to supply the deficiency.

This discretion should be exercised by the Court in such a way as to secure to the prisoner a fair and impartial trial, 53 C. 371 (F.B.).

With the leave of the Court.—These words give a wide discretion to the Court to proceed or not to proceed in the way indicated in this proviso namely by allowing persons present in Court to come in as Jurors according as it thinks fit and it is not difficult to imagine cases in which such a procedure will not be resorted to.

Chosen from such other persons as may be present.—The word used is 'chosen' and not chosen by lot. In case of deficiency in the required number of Jurors the Court is permitted to empanel other persons present in Court. The Court is not entitled to send for persons not present in Court to fill up the vacancy and such procedure is illegal, 30 Cr. L.J. 120 = 113 Ind. Cas. 250 followed in 43 C.L.J. 479 = 30 Cr. L.J. 133 = 113 Ind. Cas. 323 where it was held that persons who were asked to attend Court were not persons present in Court and so could not be chosen to serve as jurors and the whole trial was held illegal and a re-trial was ordered. See also 33 C.W.N. 722.

Special Jury.—As to the preparation of the list of Special Jurors, see S. 325, infra.

277. (1) As each juror is chosen, his name shall be called aloud, and, upon his appearance, the accused shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such juror.

Names of jurors to be called

(2) Objection may then be taken to such juror by the accused or by the prosecutor, and the grounds of objection shall be stated:

Objection to jurors.

Provided that, in the High Court, objections without grounds stated shall be allowed to the number of eight on behalf of the Crown, and eight on behalf of the person or all the persons charged.

Objection without grounds stated.

Name shall be called aloud.—The prisoner having put himself upon the country the next proceeding is to call the jury which an officer of Court does in the following or like terms "you good men, who are returned and empanelled to try the issue joined between our Sovereign Lord the King and the prisoner at the bar answer to your names and save your fines." Arch. Cr. Pl. and Ev. Pr. p. 174. Then the names of Jurors are called. No such formulae is used here but the name of each individual Juror is called aloud by an officer of Court and the Juror steps forward when his name is called.

Upon his appearance.—This may mean, either simultaneously with or after the act of the Juror appearing in the witness box. It cannot possibly refer to any act done before the Juror puts in his appearance. In England the challenge of a Juror either by the Crown or by the prisoner must be before he is sworn. As a matter of practice, here in India Counsel challenges the Juror immediately he hears the Juror's name called aloud and sees him emerging from the crowd collected in the Court room ready to get into the Jury-box.

Objection to jurors.—This section deals with what is known in England as challenges to the polls (capita), viz., exception to the individual Jurors. They are classified under four heads (1) where a Lord of Parliament is empanelled on a Jury, (2) where an alien born who is incompetent is empanelled or one who is not possessed of sufficient estate to qualify as a juror is empanelled, (3) on the well grounded suspicion of bias or partiality (4) where one is convicted of some offence that affects his credit and renders him infamous is empanelled Forsyth Hist. Trial by Jury p. 179 180. The right of challenge is almost essential for the purpose of securing perfect fitness and impartiality in a trial. Forsyth Hist. Trial by Jury, p. 175. In the case of a prisoner challenging, he must do so as each Juror comes to the box and before he is sworn. But the King need not assign his cause of challenge until the whole panel is gone through and unless there cannot be a full Jury without the persons so challenged, and it is then that the Counsel for the Crown must show cause, otherwise the Juror shall be sworn. The practical effect of this rule is that the Crown has the benefit of peremptory challenge provided it takes care that a sufficient number are left on the panel unchallenged so as to make up a full Jury, Forsyth Hist. of Trial by Jury, p. 232.

Accused shall be asked if he objects.—The omission to ask the accused whether he has any objection to each Juror whose name is called aloud and upon his appearance, is a very serious one, though it may not necessarily vitiate a conviction unless the accused has been actually prejudiced, 13 C.W.N. cxi.

Proviso—This proviso enables the accused as well as the Crown in the High Court Sessions only, to peremptorily challenge without grounds stated to the extent of eight persons, but this principle of peremptory challenge is not allowed in trials before Court of Session. "In charges of treason and felony a prisoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge, because he may challenge peremptorily upon his own dislike without showing any cause," Forsyth Hist. of Trial by Jury, p. 231.

278. Any objection taken to a juror on any of the following grounds, if made out to the satisfaction of the Court, shall be allowed :—

Grounds of objection

- (a) some presumed or actual partiality in the juror ;
- (b) some personal grounds, such as alienage, deficiency in the qualification required by any law or rule having the force of law for the time being in force, or being under the age of twenty-one or above the age of sixty years ;
- (c) his having by habit of religious vows relinquished all care of worldly affairs ;
- (d) his holding any office in or under the Court ;
- (e) his executing any duties of police or being entrusted with police-duties ;
- (f) his having been convicted of any offence which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him unfit to serve on the jury ;
- (g) his inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given, or when such evidence is interpreted the language in which it is interpreted ;
- (h) any other circumstance which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him improper as a juror.

If made to the satisfaction of the Court.—The burden of proof of a challenge is on the person who makes it and he is not entitled to question a Juror before challenging him when a challenge has been made, the trial proceeds by witnesses called to support or defeat the challenge, Arch Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pra., p. 190

Presumed or actual partiality.—A Court is bound to allow an objection by the accused to a Juror where there are reasonable grounds for presuming partiality in the Juror. There need not be actual partiality, 7 Pat. 50 ; 28 Cr. L.J. 843=104 Ind. Cas. 459.

Holding any office in or under the Court.—This refers to the Court trying the case. The words "in or under the Court" are significant. The fact that a person is a clerk in the District Magistrate's office is no ground for objection for his sitting on the Jury in the Sessions Court, 7 Q. 42.

Any other circumstance which in the opinion of the Court renders him improper.—The Court even without challenge, may and ought to excuse a Juror on the panel when called, if he is obviously unfit to perform his duty from physical or mental infirmity or seems from expressed indifference, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr. p. 192 (25th Ed.).

279. (1) Every objection taken to a juror shall be decided by Decision of objection. the Court, and such decision shall be recorded and be final.

(2) If the objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be

Supply of place of juror against whom objection allowed. supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in manner provided by section 276, or if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors, or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury :

Scope of the section.—The position when a successful objection to a Juror has been made is dealt with by this section. In the first instance, the place, of the Juror is to be supplied by any other Juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen as S. 276 provides that is by ballot. If no such Juror is present, the place of the Juror to be supplied shall be filled up by another person present whose name is on the jury list or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury, subject of course to a successful objection, as stated in the proviso to this section. Here no ballot is possible, 55 Q. 371 (F.B.).

Shall be decided by the Court.—In India every objection taken to a Juror shall be decided by the Court. But in England, it is otherwise. If the challenge is to the first juror called, the Court may select any two indifferent persons as triers. If they find against the challenge, the Juror will be sworn in and be jointed with the triers in determining the next challenge. But as soon as two Jurors have been found indifferent and have been sworn every subsequent challenge will be referred to their decision. The burden of proof of a challenge for cause is on the person who makes it and he is not entitled to question a Juror before challenging him. When the challenge has been made the trial proceeds by witnesses called to support or defeat the challenge; the Juror objected to may also be examined on the voir dire as to his qualification or the leaning of his affection, but he cannot be interrogated as to matters which tend to his own discredit, as whether he had been convicted of felony, etc., nor whether he has expressed a hostile opinion as to the guilt of the defendant. Arch. Pl. Ev. and Pr. p. 190 (25th Ed.). This section says that when objection is taken to a Juror by a party the place of such Juror shall be supplied by another Juror attending in obedience to the summons or if there is no such other Juror by any other person present in Court whose name is in the list of Jurors, or whom the Court considers to be a proper person to serve on the jury, 54 Q. 1026.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section contemplates an ordinary normal case of Jurors summoned attending but by reason of challenges or other causes such as some of them being excused, no summoned Juror is left to take the place of the last challenged Juror. In such an eventuality some other persons present in Court may be empannelled. This sub-section introduces an exception to the general rule but it is only in exceptional conditions challenge until the whole panel is gone through and unless there cannot be a full Jury without the persons so challenged, and it is then that the Counsel for the Crown must show cause, otherwise the Juror shall be sworn. The practical effect of this rule is that the Crown has the benefit of peremptory challenge provided it takes care that a sufficient number are left on the panel unchallenged so as to make up a full Jury, Forsyth Hist. of Trial by Jury, p. 232.

Accused shall be asked if he objects.—The omission to ask the accused whether he has any objection to each Juror whose name is called aloud and upon his appearance, is a very serious one, though it may not necessarily vitiate a conviction unless the accused has been actually prejudiced, 13 C.W.N. cxi.

Proviso—This proviso enables the accused as well as the Crown in the High Court Sessions only, to peremptorily challenge without grounds stated to the extent of eight persons, but this principle of peremptory challenge is not allowed in trials before Court of Session. "In charges of treason and felony a prisoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge, because he may challenge peremptorily upon his own dislike without showing any cause," Forsyth Hist. of Trial by Jury, p. 231.

278. Any objection taken to a juror on any of the following

Grounds of objection grounds, if made out to the satisfaction of the Court, shall be allowed :—

- (a) some presumed or actual partiality in the juror ;
- (b) some personal grounds, such as alienage, deficiency in the qualification required by any law or rule having the force of law for the time being in force, or being under the age of twenty-one or above the age of sixty years ;
- (c) his having by habit of religious vows relinquished all care of worldly affairs ;
- (d) his holding any office in or under the Court ;
- (e) his executing any duties of police or being entrusted with police-duties ;
- (f) his having been convicted of any offence which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him unfit to serve on the jury ;
- (g) his inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given, or when such evidence is interpreted the language in which it is interpreted ;
- (h) any other circumstance which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him improper as a juror.

If made to the satisfaction of the Court.—The burden of proof of a challenge is on the person who makes it and he is not entitled to question a Juror before challenging him when a challenge has been made, the trial proceeds by witnesses called to support or defeat the challenge, Arch Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pra., p. 190

Presumed or actual partiality.—A Court is bound to allow an objection by the accused to a Juror where there are reasonable grounds for presuming partiality in the Juror. There need not be actual partiality, 7 Pat. 50 ; 28 Cr. L.J. 843=104 Ind. Cas. 459.

Holding any office in or under the Court.—This refers to the Court trying the case. The words "in or under the Court" are significant. The fact that a person is a clerk in the District Magistrate's office is no ground for objection for his sitting on the Jury in the Sessions Court, 7 C. 42.

Any other circumstance which in the opinion of the Court renders him improper.—The Court even without challenge, may and ought to excuse a Juror on the panel when called, if he is obviously unfit to perform his duty from physical or mental infirmity or semble from expressed indifference, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr. p. 192 (25th Ed.).

279. (1) Every objection taken to a juror shall be decided by the Court, and such decision shall be recorded and be final.

(2) If the objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in manner provided by section 276, or if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors, or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury :

Provided that no objection to such juror or other person is taken under section 278 and allowed.

Scope of the section.—The position when a successful objection to a Juror has been made is dealt with by this section. In the first instance, the place of the Juror is to be supplied by any other Juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen as § 276 provides that is by ballot. If no such Juror is present, the place of the Juror to be supplied shall be filled up by another person present whose name is on the jury list or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury, subject of course to a successful objection, as stated in the proviso to this section. Here no ballot is possible, 55 C. 371 (F.B.).

Shall be decided by the Court.—In India every objection taken to a Juror shall be decided by the Court. But in England, it is otherwise. If the challenge is to the first juror called, the Court may select any two indifferent persons as triers. If they find against the challenge, the Juror will be sworn in and be jointed with the triers in determining the next challenge. But as soon as two Jurors have been found indifferent and have been sworn every subsequent challenge will be referred to their decision. The burden of proof of a challenge for cause is on the person who makes it and he is not entitled to question a Juror before challenging him. When the challenge has been made the trial proceeds by witnesses called to support or defeat the challenge; the Juror objected to may also be examined on the voir dire as to his qualification or the leaning of his affection, but he cannot be interrogated as to matters which tend to his own discredit, as whether he had been convicted of felony, etc., nor whether he has expressed a hostile opinion as to the guilt of the defendant. Arch. Pl. Ev. and Pr. p. 190 (25th Ed.) This section says that when objection is taken to a Juror by a party the place of such Juror shall be supplied by another Juror attending in obedience to the summons or if there is no such other Juror by any other person present in Court whose name is in the list of Jurors, or whom the Court considers to be a proper person to serve on the jury, 54 C. 1028.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section contemplates an ordinary normal case of Jurors summoned attending but by reason of challenges or other causes such as some of them being excused, no summoned Juror is left to take the place of the last challenged Juror. In such an eventuality some other persons present in Court may be empanelled. This sub-section introduces an exception to the general rule but it is only in exceptional conditions stated and in emergent circumstances, 31 C.W.N. 1102-23 Cr. L.J. 839-104 Ind. Cas 905. This sub-section deals with a case where there is no effective lot, the case where the Jurors present are all exhausted without completing the number and it provides how the number is to be completed. The method to be adopted here is a rational method of selection and not the method of chance contemplated by S. 276, supra, 7 Pat. 61.

Foreman of jury.

280. (1) When the jurors have been chosen, they shall appoint one of their number to be foreman

(2) The foreman shall preside in the debates of the jury, deliver the verdict of the jury and ask any information from the Court that is required by the jury or any of the jurors.

(3) If a majority of the jury do not, within such time as the Judge thinks reasonable, agree in the appointment of a foreman, he shall be appointed by the Court.

281. When the foreman has been appointed, Swearing of jurors. the juror shall be sworn under the Indian Oaths Act, 1873.

The oath to be administered is in the following form :—" You shall well and truly try and true deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King-Emperor of India and the prisoner at the bar and true verdict give according to the evidence. So help you God." S. 6 of the Indian Oaths Act enacts that where a Juror is a Hindu or a Mahomedan or a person who has objection to taking an oath, shall, instead of making an oath, make an affirmation and the form prescribed is as follows : " I solemnly affirm in the presence of Almighty God that I will judge truly between the King-Emperor of India and the prisoner at the bar and will give a true verdict according to the evidence "

282. (1) If, in the course of a trial by jury at any time before the return of the verdict, any juror, from any sufficient cause, is prevented from attending throughout the trial, or if any juror absents himself and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, or if it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted, a new juror shall be added, or the jury shall be discharged and a new jury chosen.

Procedure when juror ceases to attend, etc.

(2) In each of such cases the trial shall commence anew.

Scope of the section.—This section does not permit the discharge of the Jury in the middle of a trial and commencing the trial anew with a fresh Jury when an adjournment is asked for on account of the absence of a defence witness who was summoned to appear, 4 Bom. L R. 839. This and the next section do not provide for the discharge of the Jury for improper conduct during the trial. Where the question of misconduct on the part of the Jury or other sufficient cause arises, a Sessions Judge has inherent power to discharge the Jury and empanel another. The Code does not provide for such circumstances. The presumption that Jurors will discharge their duties without impropriety may explain the omission. Such a power is not to be exercised lightly unless the Judge on inquiry finds reasonable grounds for exercising such a right. Unless the Judge had the power to discharge the Jury in cases of misconduct, great difficulties must arise and in many cases a serious miscarriage of justice will happen. 50 C. 872. See also 55 C. 279 where it was held referring to 50 C. 872 that during the course of a Sessions trial exception is taken to the conduct of a Juror, the Judge has undoubtedly jurisdiction to inquire into the conduct of the Juror. See also Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr., p. 214 (25th Ed.) where it is stated discovery of misconduct on the part of a Juror or Jurors before verdict is a good ground for discharging the Jury. If a Jurymen is taken ill so as to be in the opinion of a competent witness incapable of attending through the trial, the Jury may be discharged and the prisoner tried de novo; another Jurymen may be added to the rest but in that case the prisoner should be offered his challenge over again as to the eleven and the eleven should be sworn and that trial begun de novo, Ros. Cr. Ev. & Pr., p. 168 (13th Ed.). When a trial has begun with a Jury and a Juror is unable to attend on account of illness, the Judge may postpone the hearing to enable the Juror to attend or discharge the Jury and empanel a fresh Jury. It is undesirable to re-summon Jurors after considerable lapse of time except on very special circumstances. If a Judge exercises his discretion under this section and discharges the Jury, the High Court will not interfere in revision with the exercise of that discretion. 31 C.W.N. 144=23 Cr. L.J. 141 (2)=99 Ind. Cas. 349 (2). This section refers only to absence of a juror and not to witness, 4 Bom. L.R. 939. This section applies to the case where the Judge in the course of the trial found out that a Juror was deaf and partly blind and the Judge was entitled to try the case afresh with another Jury, 19 M. 375. On a trial by a Jury after two witnesses have been examined one of the Jurors was discovered to be deaf and was discharged by the Judge and another Juror sworn in his place, the trial was not commenced afresh but the evidence given by the two witnesses were read over and admitted by them to be correct, held that the procedure adopted by the Judge contravened the provisions of this section and therefore the trial was invalid, 36 A. 431. See 11 Cr. L.J. 402=6 Ind. Cas. 777 as to the temporary illness of a Juror during trial.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section enacts an important direction that when a new juror is added or when the Jury is discharged and a new Jury is chosen, the trial commences anew. If during the trial the prisoner be taken so ill that he is incapable of remaining at the bar the Jury may be discharged without verdict and a different Jury empanelled on his recovery, Ros. Cr. Ev. & Pr., p. 180 (13th Ed.).

Discharge of jury in case of sickness of prisoner.

283. The Judge may also discharge the jury whenever the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar.

Where a prisoner was by sudden illness rendered incapable of remaining at the bar the Jury were discharged and the prisoner on recovering was tried before another Jury, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr. pp. 201-02 (25th Ed.).

D—Choosing Assessors.

284. When the trial is to be held with the aid of assessors, not less than three and, if practicable, four shall be chosen. Assessors how chosen.

Assessors—their duties and functions.—Assessor means one who sits beside, the assistant of a Judge and comes from the word assidere, one who sits by another as next in dignity or as an assistant or advisor; an associate. The principle underlying the institution of Assessors which is the same as that in England, is this: Europeans administering justice in a foreign land, and being deficient in their knowledge of the customs and habits of the parties and witnesses appearing before them and also deficient in judging their demeanour in the witness box should have the benefit of the opinion of two or more respectable natives of the land as Assessors possessing such knowledge and judgment. Their opinion stands on the same footing as opinion evidence of a person specially skilled in foreign law, science or art, 24 M. 523 at 543-544. Assessors are not chosen by lot as Jurors and there is no provision made for challenging them as in the case of Jurors. There is no express provision for objecting to the selection of Assessors but there is no reason why an objection of presumed or actual partiality should not be allowed at the time of the selection, 22 Cr. L. J. 282=60 Ind. Cas. 662. In choosing Assessors the Judge must have regard to the nature of the case, to the person who is to be tried, to the nature of the evidence to be brought against him and to the public feeling which must have been caused by the occurrence. The Assessors ought not to be young men fresh from college, devoid of experience and rather theoretical than practical men. They ought to be persons of independent condition in life, men of judgment and of experience 23 W.R. (Cr) 36 at 39. It is not surely too much to ask from Indian Gentlemen of position and rank that they should assist in the administration of justice as the sitting as an Assessor can, if the list be properly prepared, occur very rarely and probably only once in the course of three or four years, 35 A. 570 at 571. It is very desirable to maintain the position of Assessors in public estimation and to make their duties as little irksome as possible. No Assessor should be summoned too frequently. Notice should be sent to him in a regular and formal manner and they should be treated with consideration and respect. A proper place should be provided for them to wait in, when their presence in Court is not necessary Bom. H.C. CrI, Circular. A Court constituting a Judge and two or more Assessors by which every person must be tried before a Court of Session when he is not tried by Jury, appears to be a compromise between a trial by Judge and Jury and by a single Judge. It is a constitutional privilege, the benefit of which is not confined to the subject, for in an appeal by a person convicted in an Assessor's case, the Crown can as well rely on the opinion of the Assessors if it is in favour of a conviction as the prisoner can when their opinion is the other way, 24 M. 523 at 531. Assessors do not form members of the Sessions Court and that therefore the Sessions Court was not illegally constituted if an Assessor who had absented himself for some days when the trial went on was allowed to resume his seat as an Assessor subsequently. Ibid at 533. In trials with the aid of Assessors, it is imperative that the Judge should commence his trial with the aid of at least two Assessors and that at least one of them should continue to attend the trial throughout, this being mandatory, the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to commence the trial, and his jurisdiction to continue the trial are dependent upon his choosing at least two assessors to aid him and on the continuation of at least one of them throughout the trial. The above two requisites are conditions precedent to the exercise of his jurisdiction and therefore any finding or sentence passed in contravention of either of those requisites will not be one passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction and the defect is not one which can be cured by B. 537, infra, or by S. 167, Indian Evidence Act, Ibid at 533. The object and purpose of the provisions of the Code with regard to the summoning and selection of Assessors is that there must be no room for suspicion that any one of the Assessors sitting on a particular trial has been "planted" on the Court by any one interested in the success or failure of the prosecution, 7 Cr. L. Rev. 267=17 Cr. L. J. 17=32 Ind. Cas. 145. Assessors do not form a body and each acts and expresses his opinion individually and the Judge is to invite the opinion of each separately and record it. The Judge is the sole Judge of law and fact, the responsibility of the decision rests only with him, though in the decision of the case he is expected to take into consideration the individual opinion of each Assessor and during the trial he may also consult them on any point in connection with examination of the witnesses, or otherwise. Assessors are not to retire for consultation and form their opinion. The Judge should have before him the individual and independent opinion of each Assessor, 24 M. 523 at 527.

Assessors, like Jurors, are not members of the Court. They are appointed to assist the Court and the discussion and statement of points by a Judge sitting with Assessors cannot be said to be otherwise than in furtherance of the object of getting at the best assistance for the proper adjudication of the case, 7 B. L. R. 63 at 68. When a trial commences with only one Assessor, there is no legal trial as required by this section and the error vitiates the whole proceedings, B. 537, infra, does not apply as there was no properly constituted Court to hold a trial, 25 B. 694 at 696. A trial properly commenced with two Assessors does not become invalid if one Assessor absents himself during the trial. The absent assessor ceases to occupy the position of one aiding the Court and his opinion ought not to be taken, 6 C.W.N. 715, but if he was permitted to be present subsequently and to give his opinion and the Judge took his opinion into consideration, it was held that it was merely an irregularity cured by S. 537 infra, 24 M. 523. See S. 321 as to the preparation of the list of Assessors. Where after commencing trial it was discovered that one of the Assessors chosen is interested and unfit to sit as an Assessor the proper procedure for the Judge is to refer the matter to the High Court for orders, to have his order in choosing the Assessors set aside and then proceed a de novo trial after receiving the order of the High Court, [1912] M.W.N. 378=13 Cr. L.J. 473=15 Ind. Cas. 313.

Chosen from persons summoned to act as such.—Where in a trial only one Assessor was summoned to act as such at the Sessions, the trial is illegal as there is no lawful trial before a lawful tribunal and the conviction cannot stand, 35 A. 570 where 1894 A.W.N. 207 is followed. See also 11 Cr. L.J. 724=3 Ind. Cas. 874 and notes under S. 326, infra.

Not less than three, etc.—The section as amended requires that there shall at least be three Assessors. It has always been held that a trial commenced and held throughout with less than the minimum number of Assessors prescribed by law is not a Court properly constituted and S. 537, infra, cannot apply to such a case, 26 Cr. L.J. 359=84 Ind. Cas. 711. It is even necessary if practicable four assessors should be chosen to aid the Court and where four Assessors are not chosen, it is proper the Judge gives his reasons in the order sheet explaining the omission. A trial held without four but with three Assessors without recording reasons is still in accordance with law and does not offend against provisions of this section, 26 Cr. L.J. 713=86 Ind. Cas. 153.

284A. (1) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, if the European or Indian British subject accused, or, where there are several European British subjects accused or several Indian subjects accused, all of them jointly, before the first assessor is chosen so require, all the assessors shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians.

Assessors for trial of European and Indian British subjects and others.

(2) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject or an American, all the assessors shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first assessor is chosen so requires, be persons who are Europeans or Americans.

This section is new and was added by Act XII of 1923—The Racial Distinctions Act.

This section is analogous to the provisions contained in S. 275, supra, which relate to trial by Jury before the High Court or Court of Session of an European or Indian British subject with this distinction that in the case of trial with the aid of Assessors the accused whether European or Indian British subject may claim that all, not one half before the amendment, the Assessors shall be European British subjects or Indians as the case may be. Similar right is conferred on Europeans and Americans also whenever such a course is practicable.

285. (1) If in the course of a trial with the aid of assessors, at any time before the finding, any assessor is, from any sufficient cause, prevented from attending, throughout the trial, or absents himself, and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, the trial shall proceed with the aid of the other assessor or assessors.

(2) If all the assessors are prevented from attending, or absent themselves, the proceeding shall be stayed, and a new trial shall be held with the aid of fresh assessors.

Sub-section (1).—A trial to be valid should commence with not less than two Assessors. When one Assessor is from sufficient cause, prevented from attending throughout the trial, or it is not possible to enforce his attendance, the trial held with the aid of the other assessor alone is valid in law. The trial cannot begin and end with one Assessor, for, in that case, there is no properly constituted Court to hold the trial, 25 B. 694, 21 A. 106. If an assessor who was absent during the course of the trial was allowed to resume his seat as an Assessor and to give his opinion which the Judge took into consideration it was held that the procedure adopted was only an irregularity and did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court, 24 M. 523. See also pages 406-407.

Sub-section (2).—A trial held when both the Assessors who were absent during the course of the trial was held bad as the law contemplated the continuous attendance of at least one Assessor throughout the trial, 13 A. 337; 6 C.W.N. 715. A conviction based on evidence recorded after the discharge of the Assessors was held bad on the ground that the evidence was recorded by a Court not properly constituted to record the same, 15 A. 135.

The proceeding shall be stayed.—The stay contemplated here is only till a new trial is held. In B. 933, infra the stay may result in the discharge of accused and such discharge may amount to an acquittal if the presiding Judge so declares. But that section is a special provision applicable to the High Court only.

DD.—Joint trials.

285A. In any case in which an European or American is accused jointly with a person not being an European or American, or an Indian British subject is accused jointly with a person not being an Indian, and such European, Indian British subject or American is committed for trial before a Court of Session, he and such other person may be tried together, but if he requires to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275 or section 284A and is so tried, and the other person accused requires to be tried separately, such other person shall be tried separately in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

This section is new and was added by Act XII of 1923—The Racial Distinctions Act, and allows separate trials to European, or American or Indian British subjects when accused jointly, at their option, in accordance with the provisions of ss. 275 or 284A, supra.

E.—Trial to Close of Cases for Prosecution and Defence.

286. (1) When the jurors or assessors have been chosen, the prosecutor shall open his case by reading from the Indian Penal Code, or other law the description of the offence charged, and stating shortly by what evidence he expects to prove the guilt of the accused.

(2) The prosecutor shall then examine his witnesses.

When Jurors or Assessors have been chosen.—The trial of an accused person in the Court of Session begins after the Jurors or Assessors have been chosen, 6 Lah 282 following 15 B. 514. After the Jurors or Assessors have been chosen and sworn, the trial cannot be postponed to enable the prosecution to examine a witness on commission. The case must be proceeded with, 19 C. 113, wherein a trial before the High Court sessions, the Jury were chosen and sworn, the charge was read over and the counsel for the prosecution had opened the case by reading the sections of the Penal Code and stating some of the material facts of the case but before he could proceed further the Court rose for the day and the learned Judge could not attend Court the following day owing to illness and another Judge was deputed to preside at the trial by the Chief Justice which was commenced from the point where it was left the previous day, it was held that the trial on the following day from the point it was left the previous day was regular and the omission to proceed with the trial de novo was at the most an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, 29 Bom L R. 204=28 Cr L.J. 402=101 Ind. Cas. 178.

The prosecutor shall then open his case.—It is usual except in simple cases where the prisoner is undefended for Counsel to make an opening statement. When the prisoner is given in charge to the jury, the Counsel for the prosecution, or if there are more than one, the senior Counsel to open the case to the Jury, states the leading facts upon which the prosecution rely. In doing so he ought to state all that is proposed to prove, as well as declarations of prisoners as facts, so that, the Jury may see if there are any discrepancies between the opening statements of counsel and the evidence afterwards adduced in support of them. Declarations amounting to confessions should not be placed in the opening of the case before the Jury. The reason for this rule is that the circumstances under which the confession is made may render it inadmissible in evidence. General effect only any confession said to have been made by the prisoner ought therefore to be mentioned in the opening address. When any additional evidence mentioned in the opening address is discovered in the course of the trial, Counsel is not allowed to state it in a second address. In opening a case for murder Counsel for prosecution may put hypothetically the case of an attack upon the character of any particular witness for the Crown and say that should any such attack be made, he shall be prepared to meet it Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Fr. p. 194 (25th Ed.). A prosecutor should in fairness to the accused in his opening address state the names of the witnesses whom he proposes to call, who have not already been examined under S. 208 or, 219, supra, and what each is going to depose 1889 P R. (Cr.) 10. The opening for the prosecution should always be confined to matters which are necessary to enable the jury to follow the evidence when it is brought before them. This is not the stage of a case at which doubtful questions of admissibility should be either raised or decided. Whether a document is admissible or inadmissible is a matter which should always be ruled upon at the time the document is being proved or put in or the question asked of the witness. In many cases the thing may be good evidence at one stage of the case and inadmissible at another. It is frequently necessary to give evidence to lay the foundation which justifies a question or the putting in of a document. The opening speech of the Counsel for the prosecution does not afford a proper occasion for the determining of such questions, 50 C.L.J. 106 (F.B.) at 116.

Stating shortly by what evidence he expects to prove guilt of accused.—The object is to prevent new evidence being sprung on the accused. The prosecutor should state in his opening of the case for the prosecution the names of the witnesses he proposes to call and the purpose for which each witness is to be produced. S. 203, supra, refers to the taking of evidence of the prosecution witnesses before the Committing Magistrate and S. 213, supra, empowers the Magistrate to examine supplementary witnesses after commitment.

Sub-section (2).—The examination of the witnesses contemplated by this section is the oral examination of the witnesses present in Court. The demeanour of the witnesses may be important for the Assessor or Juror of the Judge for forming an opinion as to their credibility. It is unnecessary to go into the many reasons why the rules should be followed. It is sufficient to say "it is the rule, and is founded on reason and justice," 9 M. 83 at 85. Reading the depositions taken before the Committing Magistrate as examination in chief of the prosecution witnesses and allowing the accused's Attorney to cross-examine the witnesses in the Sessions Court without examining the witnesses is not permitted by law although the accused's Attorney requested the Court to adopt such a procedure, and the Public Prosecutor also consented to the same, 9 M. 83; 43 M. 766; Weir II, 360. When the accused is on his trial on a capital charge it is inexpedient that he should be convicted on a plea of guilty recorded before the trial of the Court itself. As a matter of practice the Court should read and consider evidence putting aside the plea of the accused not only as to the guilt of the accused but as to the precise nature of the offence committed and the appropriate sentence to be passed, 20 A. L. J. 669 and 326. There is no provision of law in the Code authorising a Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined one day and permitting the cross-examination of those witnesses to be reserved to a subsequent date and such a practice is irregular and inconvenient, Weir II, 361. But in 41 C. 299, a slightly different view was taken. There in a charge of murder the defence counsel applied after the examination-in-chief of the first prosecution witness for a postponement of the cross-examination of the witness till the next day on the ground of his unpreparedness but did not ask for an adjournment of the trial itself, it was held that the application was a reasonable one which the Judge should, under the circumstances have allowed, though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right. The Court may in a proper case grant the indulgence when the result of such a refusal has been that the first six witnesses for the prosecution were not cross examined at all and of these at least four were important witnesses and the remaining witnesses had not been efficiently cross-examined owing to the circumstances under which Counsel who defended the accused undertook their defence, the accused were prejudiced inasmuch as they lost the opportunity of a cross examination and a trial was ordered by another Judge. As a general rule, the prosecution is bound to call all the witnesses who were actually present at the commission of an offence and he is not free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court, 8 C. 121 at 124; 14 A. 521, 18 A. 84; Ratnial 581; 10 Cr. L. J. 321 = 3 Ind. Cas. 522 = 21 Cr. L. J. 83 = 54 Ind. Cas. 241. All persons who are alleged to have personal knowledge of a crime ought to be brought before the Court and examined, 10 C. 1070; 11 Cr. L. J. 410 = 6 Ind. Cas. 817; 21 Cr. L. J. 733 = 58 Ind. Cas. 247. The practice of tendering important eye witnesses cited by the prosecution is not a practice which should be encouraged. An eye-witness to the occurrence when he would prima facie be able to speak to important facts material to the case from his personal knowledge and observation should not merely be tendered for cross-examination instead of being put into the witness-box. The proper procedure to follow is to put him into the witness box and ask him to give evidence on oath as to the facts known to him even though other witnesses might have spoken to the same facts. Merely tendering a witness for cross-examination is not a practice which should be encouraged especially in murder cases as it would be very unfair to the accused and the practice in vogue in the Districts should be put an end to, 30 L.W. 701 at 709-10 = 1929 M.W.N. 799 at 806, where 10 C. 1070 at 1072 is referred to. A Public Prosecutor is not bound to call witnesses who in his opinion will not speak the truth or will not support the prosecution case, 7 A. 904; 15 A. 6; Weir II, 378; 11 Bom. L.R. 1162 = 10 Cr. L. J. 833 = 4 Ind. Cas. 273; 80 C. 318; 2 Pat. 309; 17 Cr. L. J. 267 = 34 Ind. Cas. 987; 3 Lah. 144.

Sub-section (2).—A conviction of an accused person by a Sessions Judge on the evidence recorded by an Assistant Sessions Judge is illegal as he had no jurisdiction to do so, 35 A. 63.

287. The examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the Committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence.

Examination of accused before Magistrate to be evidence.

Examination of accused duly recorded shall be tendered.—The examination of the accused before the Committing Magistrate must be given in evidence at the Sessions trial whether it tells for or against the accused, and it is not optional with the prosecution to put in such statements. If it is not tendered the Judge is bound to call for the same, 15 M. 352. The statement of an accused person before the Committing Magistrate should be read as part of the case for the prosecution and marked as an exhibit before the case for the defence is entered upon. A note to that effect that this has been done should be entered upon the Record Rule 211 Mad. Cr. R. of Pr. It seems to have been the intention of the Legislature that the examination of the accused should be received as evidence whether it told for or against the prisoner and if the Counsel for the prosecution did not produce it the Judge ought to call for it and require it to be put in, 13 W.R. (Cr.) 63. This section refers only to the examination of the accused duly recorded and it should not be confounded with the deposition of an approver. This section permits the examination of the accused before the Committing Magistrate to be read as part of the prosecution case. This refers only to the statement relating to the subsequent offence and not to a previous conviction, 5 Pat. L.J. 706 at 708. It is advisable that Sessions Judges themselves should examine carefully the accused persons even in cases where they are satisfied that the Committing Magistrate has examined them with great care. It makes a considerable difference to listeners like the Jury whether a statement made in the lower Court is read over by the Court interpreter or whether the accused is carefully examined in the presence of the Jury and his answer and demeanour noted by them so that the defence of the accused and its hollowness where it is untenable, may be fully impressed on the mind of the Jury, 28 Cr. L.J. 1576=90 Ind. Cas. 536. A written statement filed by the accused with the Superintendent of Jail with a request that it might be placed on record and with regard to which he was examined by the Magistrate can be read in evidence under this section, 32 M. 3 at 15. Where a Committing Magistrate admitted a confession not admissible in evidence and then examined the accused with respect to it; it was held that such examination, the questions put and the answers elicited were not duly recorded within this section and so inadmissible in evidence at the trial, 8 Cr. L.J. 62=4 L.B.R. 244. Though it is not imperative on a Magistrate to examine the accused, yet this section and S. 342, infra, contemplate such an examination for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him, and such examination should be filed before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence, Weir II, 381; 46 M. 449 (F.B.)

Before the Committing Magistrate—The phrase "Committing Magistrate" in this section is merely a compendious way of referring to the Magistrates or Magistrate who held the preliminary inquiry on which the committal is made. Where a Sub-Magistrate who inquired into a case discharged the accused, but the District Magistrate under S. 437 infra committed the accused for trial, the examination of the accused and the statements of the witnesses before the Sub-Magistrate were held to be recorded by or before the Committing Magistrate within the meaning of this and S. 288, infra, 31 M. 40. See also 7 Lah. 70. Where the accused when asked by the Committing Magistrate if he wished to make a statement said he had none but subsequently made one to the superintendent of the Jail and asked him to place it on record and it was sent to the Magistrate who on the next day sent for the accused and examined him with reference to the statement and the accused wanted it to be placed on record it was held that the statement in the circumstances was admissible in evidence under this section, 32 M. 3 at 15.

And read as evidence.—The whole of the examination taken before the Magistrate must be read as evidence, 5 M.H.C.R. (Appx.) 4; 15 M. 352. But it is not necessary for the Judge to read out to the accused confessions made by them before the Magistrate and ask them if they have any objection to their reception as evidence. The attestation of the Magistrate is sufficient proof of the circumstances under which they were made, 14 W.R. (Cr.) 9. The statement must be taken in its entirety especially when it is to be used against the accused 8 W.R. (Cr.) 33; 25 W.R. (Cr.) 15 & 18 A. 73; 9 M.L.T. 315=[1911] M.W.N. 12 Cr. L.J. 142=9 Ind. Cas. 793; 5 M.H.C.R. Appx. 4.

288. The evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under chapter XVIII may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

Evidence given at preliminary inquiry admissible.

Amendment.—The additions newly made define more clearly the use which may be made at the Sessions trial of the evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under chapter XVIII. The words under chapter XVIII have been newly inserted instead of the words before the committing Magistrate to cover the case of evidence recorded by a Magistrate other than the committing Magistrate under S. 219, supra.

Scope and object of the section.—The object of the Legislature in framing this section is merely to authorise the Court to take a particular statement made by a witness before the Committing Magistrate as the true statement, notwithstanding his denial or making a statement inconsistent therewith by the witness before the Court itself, if the Court could see from the evidence of that same witness before itself or other witnesses before itself that the original statement was worthy of belief, not that the Court should discard wholly the testimony of the witness before it and have the testimony of some persons given elsewhere. The discretion is to be exercised upon substantial materials rightly placed before the Court and reasonably sufficient to guide the Judgment of the Court to the truth of the matter and not upon mere speculation and conjecture, 12 B.L.R. Appx. 15=21 W.R. (Cr.) 49 at 51. This section applies only to evidence taken in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII, viz., inquiries into offences triable by the Sessions Court. The evidence recorded in the absence of the accused is inadmissible under this section, 35 A. 250. An exception is made in S. 512 infra, when the accused is absconding. The object and effect of this section is to place the deposition in the committal inquiry on exactly the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court, 43 M. 766 at 768. This section is intended to provide for the contingency which may arise when a witness produced in the Sessions Court withholds information and evidence and gives a different story from what he gave at the preliminary inquiry. It is only in extreme cases of delay or expense that personal attendance of witnesses in the Sessions Court ought to be dispensed with and the evidence given before the Magistrate to be referred to, 2 A. 645. This section has no application to the evidence of a witness not produced and examined before the Court of Session, 21 Cr. L.J. 455=55 Ind. Cas. 582, nor can the provisions of the section apply to statements of witnesses recorded under S. 164, supra, which is admissible in evidence for the purpose of impeaching the credit of the witness by virtue of Ss. 145 and 151 of the Ind. Ev. Act and cannot be used for any other purpose, e.g., as substantial evidence against the accused. Statements under S. 164, supra, are made behind the back of the accused when he had no opportunity of cross-examination and this section enacts a special provision for admitting as evidence against the accused at the sessions trial of statements made by witnesses before the Committing Magistrate after the accused has had a reasonable opportunity of cross-examination, 25 A.L.J. 691. See also 8 Pat. 625. This section makes the previous evidence of a witness taken before the Committing Magistrate admissible at the subsequent trial and the limitation imposed on such admission by the introduction of the words "Subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act "merely means as laid down in 3 Pat. 781, that such evidence can be used for all purposes so long as the evidence is evidence within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act. In other words the deposition recorded by the Committing Magistrate can be utilized at the trial if the matter contained therein is in accordance with the rules laid down by the Indian Evidence Act as to evidential value. To limit the admissibility of such evidence at the trial only to cases where the evidence is admissible under the Indian Evidence Act is to frustrate the object of this section. The law has been correctly laid down in 47 M. 232, as to the weight to be attached to such evidence, 27 Cr. L.J. 591=81 Ind. Cas. 233. This section is not an exception to the rule in S. 286, for it contemplates that the evidence taken in the presence of the accused by the Magistrate may in the discretion of the Judge, if the witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence and there is abundant authority for holding that this evidence once admitted at the discretion of the Judge stands on exactly the same footing as any other evidence in the case, 43 M. 753 at 771 and 43 B. 97 following 28 A. 633; 24 M. 414; and 11 B.H.C.R. 231; 13 L.W. 703=26 Cr. L.J. 1033=83 Ind. Cas. 7; 6 Lah. 199, followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 73=100 Ind. Cas. 583; 1837 P.R. (Cr.) 31. This section does not dispense with the examination of the witnesses as directed by S. 286. The examination contemplated by this section is examination of a witness in the ordinary way, vis, orally in reference to the case. The provision is not that the evidence before the Magistrate may be put in as the evidence of the witness if he is tendered for cross-examination but it is that such evidence before the Magistrate may be treated as evidence in the case, if the witness is examined; that is examined as a witness and not if he was cross-examined or tendered for cross-examination. The rule appears to contemplate that the witness shall first have been examined and that after that his evidence before the Magistrate may be treated as evidence, 9 M. 83 at 85. This section does not extend to Magistrates other than the Magistrate, who held the inquiry under Chapter XVIII infra and the deposition must be taken in the presence of the accused, see 31 M. 127; 7 A. 862; 21 A. 111; 22 A. 443; 23 C. 36.

Evidence duly recorded in the presence of accused under Chapter XVIII.—The words "duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII" have been newly substituted by the amending Act of 1923 for the words "duly taken in the presence of the accused before the Committing Magistrate." The amendment is intended to cover cases where evidence may be recorded by the Committing Magistrate but not for the purpose of commitment as under S. 219, supra. There is no special procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII for recording evidence and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial is evidence recorded in the presence of accused under Chapter XVIII, 53 C. 181. Evidence of the witnesses must be duly recorded in the presence of the accused, 35 A. 260 at 263. Any statement recorded in the absence of the accused is inadmissible in evidence, 16 Cr. L.J. 132=27 Ind. Cas. 196. If no opportunity is allowed to the accused to cross-examine witnesses for the prosecution the evidence of such witnesses cannot be said to have been duly recorded in the presence of the accused. Where the accused who had been given an opportunity of cross-examining, declined to do so on the ground that he was unwell and when the witnesses were tendered again and been cross-examined they resiled from their first statements and supported the accused it was held that the first statements made by the witnesses were duly recorded within the meaning of this section and they could be treated as evidence at the trial, 28 Cr. L.J. 33=99 Ind. Cas. 63. To require the presence of the accused merely to hear the ex parte statements of witnesses without allowing him to show by cross-examination that they are untrue or unreliable, defeats the real object of the law, for it deprives the accused of any substantial benefit of being present, 21 C. 612 at 663; 7 A. 852. An exception is made in S. 512, infra, to record evidence behind the back of the accused if he is absconding, and in all other cases evidence must be recorded in the presence of the accused in Court, 7 A. 862; 22 A. 443; 23 C. 351. To expedite a Sessions trial, the Attorney for the accused suggested that the depositions of the witnesses for the prosecution taken before the Committing Magistrate should be read out in Court and treated as examination-in-chief of the witnesses and he should be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses. The Public Prosecutor also consented to such a course and the Court adopted the procedure suggested. It was held by the High Court that the procedure was illegal but inasmuch as it had not occasioned a failure of justice a retrial was not ordered, 9 M. 83. See 1915 M.W.N. 534=6 Cr. L. Rev. 65=16 Cr. L.J. 615=30 Ind. Cas. 439 where a witness examined before the Committing Magistrate was merely tendered for cross-examination and the evidence before the Magistrate was marked as an exhibit in the Sessions Court, it was held that the procedure was illegal. See also 45 M. 766; 11 Bom. L.R. 1162=10 Cr. L.J. 538=4 Ind. Cas. 273. see the weighty remarks condemning the practice of tendering important prosecution witnesses for cross examination in the Sessions court instead of examining them in chief in 30 L.W. 701 at 709-10=1923 M.W.N. 789 at 806.

For the expression "before the Committing Magistrate" the words "under Chapter XVIII" have been substituted. Where a witness makes a statement to a police-officer or to an investigating Magistrate it is no evidence against the accused. Even if the statement to the investigating Magistrate is made in the presence of the accused this section will not apply as it was not made under Chapter XVIII, 31 M. 127 at 130. The testimony of a witness given before the Committing Magistrate alone can be accepted as substantive evidence if the witness is examined at the Sessions trial and his testimony before the Committing Magistrate may be preferred to the evidence which he gives at the trial. But any statement made by him on any other occasion cannot be treated as evidence., e.g., the statement made by a witness during a search which he subsequently retracts cannot be used as evidence under this section, 36 M. 159. The expression "Committing Magistrate" which existed before in this section and now retained in S. 287 means merely a compendious way of referring to the Magistrate or Magistrates who hold the preliminary inquiry under Chapter XVIII on which the committal was made. Where, therefore, a District Magistrate himself commits for trial in the exercise of his powers under S. 437, infra, setting aside an order of discharge, the evidence of the witnesses and the statement of the accused recorded by the Committing Magistrate who discharged the accused will be receivable in evidence under this section or S. 287, supra, 31 M. 40. See S. 350, infra, which permits a committal to be drawn up by a Magistrate who succeeds the Magistrate who held the preliminary inquiry and recorded the evidence. The statement of an approver made before the Committing Magistrate and retracted in the Sessions Court is admissible under this section, 21 A. 178.

May in the discretion of the presiding Judge.—The discretion is to be exercised upon substantial materials rightly before the Court and reasonably sufficient to guide the judgment of the Court of the truth of the matter, and not upon mere speculation or conjecture, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 49 at 51. Where a Sessions Judge directed the previous statement of a witness to be transferred to the record of the trial under this section the moment the witness denied having made any such statement without calling upon him to explain the discrepancy and considering whether any satisfactory explanation for the discrepancy was forthcoming, it was held that the procedure adopted was not proper, 29 Cr. L.J. 1047=112 Ind. Cas. 371. Before a Judge can use as evidence the statement of a witness before the committing Magistrate he is bound to let his intention or the possibility that he may do so, be known to the accused and the prosecution in order to afford both sides an opportunity of testing such evidence by cross-examination or otherwise dealing with the statement as part of the case which may be taken into consideration by the Judge; otherwise it is impossible for the prosecution or for the defence to deal with the matters which may influence the Judge's mind in coming to a conclusion 1836 A.W.N. 258. There must be great caution on the part of the Judge before acting under his section, 4 C.W.N. 49 at 55; 22 A. 443; 27 C. 295 at 300. Such a statement should be accepted with great caution like every other statement of a person who has changed his story at different stages, 45 M. 766 at 769. The exercise of the discretion by a Judge under this section considering it, as a matter of fact or law, is open to review by the High Court in appeal, and the High Court may order a new trial in special cases on the ground that there has been a misuse by the Sessions Judge of his discretion which may have caused a failure of justice, 11 B.H.C.R. 231. See 53 C. 191 which practically overrules the decisions in 21 W.R. (Cr.) 49 and 27 C. 295.

If such witness is produced and examined.—Unless the witness is produced and examined at the trial this section has no operation, 24 W.R. (Cr.) 11. The previous deposition cannot be filed and treated as evidence in the case if the witness is merely tendered for the purpose of cross-examination at the Sessions trial but not produced and examined, 1915 M.W.N. 544=16 Cr. L.J. 615=30 Ind. Cas. 439. See 30 L.W. 701=1929 M.W.N. 799 where the practice of tendering important prosecution witnesses for cross-examination without examining them in chief is condemned as illegal and improper. This section is not an exception to S. 286, supra. It does not dispense with the production and examination of the witness at the trial, 9 M. 83. The former deposition ought not to be read until the examination of the witness in Court, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 14. See also 21 Cr. L.J. 486=56 Ind. Cas. 582.

Be treated as evidence in the case.—Statements made before Committing Magistrate when a witness retracts them in the Sessions Court may be used as evidence, 46 B. 97; 43 M. 766. A statement when once duly admitted in evidence was on the same footing as any other piece of evidence on record, 47 M. 232. There is nothing in the section which prescribes the value or weight to be attached to the evidence so admitted. Once admitted, the power given by this section is exhausted and the evidence is on the same footing as rest of the evidence in the case, i.e., it is to be considered by the Jury or by the Assessors and the judge according to the nature of the trial. Its value is beyond the scope of this section, 1887 P.R. (Cr.) 51. Its value as evidence is a question in each particular case for the Jury and for the Assessors subject to the directions of the Judge in summing up, or for the Judge in cases where he is the sole Judge of facts. Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence so admitted is entitled to credit and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based on it wholly or in part are important questions for the Jury or Assessors or the Judge as the case may be but they are in no way affected by this section. It may be treated as substantive evidence on which a conviction can be based, 28 A. 683. It was contended in 24 M. 414, that such a statement could not be used as substantive evidence but only be used to contradict evidence on record, but the Court held that if this view was accepted the provision would be quite unnecessary and superfluous inasmuch as such evidence could be adduced for the purpose stated under the Indian Evidence Act. A Sessions Judge would not be justified in basing a conviction solely on the statements made before the Committing Magistrate and retracted before him, more especially when the evidence given at the Sessions trial has been found to be false, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 49; 27 C. 295; 12 M. 123; 47 M. 232. Such statements are admissible in evidence and if the High Court is satisfied that they are true and the subsequent statements before the Sessions Judge are false, it is open to the High Court to uphold the conviction relying on such previous statements, 47 A. 276 where 21 A. 111; 22 A. 443 and 28 A. 683 are referred to. The evidence of a medical witness duly taken before the Committing Magistrate ought not to be admitted in evidence under this section unless the witness resiles from his original deposition, 4 C.W.N. 49 at 53.

For all purposes.—The addition of these words newly made must be with a set design and for the purpose of attaining a definite object. These words are added to remove the limitation to the value of that evidence as fixed by the cases such as 27 C. 295; 3 Pat. 781; 22 A. 445; 28 A. 683; 5 Lah. 324; 6 Lah. 199; 29 Cr. L.J. 73=106 Ind. Cas. 583; 27 Bom. L.R. 113=26 Cr. L.J. 705=86 Ind. Cas. 445. The use of the words 'for all purposes' was clearly intended to remove the previous conflict and make the statements admissible in evidence for all purposes and not for the limited purpose of corroboration or contradiction, 49 A. 251; 25 A.L.J. 126=27 Cr. L.J. 1365=98 Ind. Cas. 485. But statements made before the Magistrate including the statement before the Committing Magistrate which has not been transferred to the Sessions record under the provisions of this section can only be used to corroborate or contradict the statement of the witness at the Sessions trial, 27 Cr. L.J. 239=92 Ind. Cas. 577; 29 Cr. L.J. 73=106 Ind. Cas. 583; where a witness before the Committing Magistrate admits having made a certain statement under S. 164, supra, and his deposition before the Committing Magistrate is put in under this section, the statement admitted by him to have been made under S. 164, supra, cannot thereby be treated as substantive evidence in the case and be used as evidence to base a conviction of the accused, 28 Cr. L.J. 279=100 Ind. Cas. 359. Under the present section as amended it must be held that the evidence received by the Committing Magistrate if admitted under this section must be treated as evidence for all purposes, even as a basis of a finding or verdict and on a par with any other evidence before the Sessions Court or as substantial evidence on which a verdict of the Jury or a judgment of the Judge can be based, 42 C.L.J. 205 at 210. The rule that in the absence of corroboration in material particulars the evidence admitted under this section should not form the basis of a conviction is a mere rule of practice and not a rule of law, 47 M. 232 at 213; 6 Lah. 199 and 171. A Judge is bound to put to the witness whom he proposes to contradict by his previous statement made before the Committing Magistrate the whole of his deposition as he intends to rely on in his decision so as to afford him an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that he made such statement, 7 M. 862. So also if a Counsel for the defence desires to use previous statements made before the Committing Magistrate by prosecution witnesses, he must have drawn their attention to such contradictions so as to afford them an opportunity to explain them, 31 C. 142 (F.B.), 7 A. 862; [1922] Pat 159=23 Cr. L.J. 218=65 Ind. Cas. 1002.

Subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act.—These words were newly added merely to prevent the admission of irrelevant evidence inadvertently recorded by the Committing Magistrate, 49 A 251=26 Cr. L.J. 1063=88 Ind. Cas. 7. These words mean nothing more than that such statement should not contain matters which would be irrelevant or inadmissible under the Ind. Ev. Act, 27 Cr. L.J. 1365=93 Ind. Cas. 485, where 3 Pat. 781 is followed. The question of the admissibility of such evidence should be determined first and reasons should be recorded if the Judge decides to admit the evidence taken before the Committing Magistrate, 1 Bom. L.R. 156. Where a deponent denies having made the statement before the Magistrate, the presumption raised by S. 80, Ind. Ev. Act, cannot be availed of but it is incumbent to prove by direct testimony that the conditions of S. 80; Ind. Ev. Act, have been complied with, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 5. It is certainly difficult to understand correctly what the amendment intended to effect. Sections 22, 33, 145, 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act cannot have any bearing. There is indeed in the Evidence Act nothing at all which permits the use of the evidence taken before a Magistrate as evidence at a trial. What however is really meant by the amendment is that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can be used for all purposes in a trial Court so long as the evidence is evidence within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act, or in other words, that Magisterial deposition can be utilised in a trial Court as of evidential value, only if the matter contained therein is according to the rules of evidence laid down in the Indian Evidence Act, of evidential value, e.g. hearsay evidence in a Magisterial deposition cannot be used by the Sessions Judge as of evidential value at the trial, [1926] Pat. 167=27 Cr. L.J. 593=9 Ind. Cas. 258. This section as it now stands does not prevent the Sessions Judge from utilising the Magisterial depositions subject to the provisions laid down in the Evidence Act as to evidential value. But unless there is clearly present, besides the evidence given before the Magistrate, evidence which will show that the evidence given before the Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for that given before the Sessions Judge, the evidence given before the Magistrate cannot be effectively utilised in support of the conviction, 3 Pat 781 where 7 A. 862; 27 C. 293; 24 M. 414; 7 C.W.N. 343; 28 A. 683, 45 B. 97 are referred to; 37 A. 276; 5 Lah. 324; 27 Cr. L.J. 438=93 Ind. Cas. 230; 42 C.L.J. 111=26 Cr. L.J. 1533=90 Ind. Cas. 433; 26 Cr. L.J. 1063=87 Ind. Cas. 7. Before a Judge can exercise his powers under S. 83, Ind. Ev. Act, there must be independent evidence to prove that a witness is dead or his presence cannot be secured without unreasonable delay or expense, 28 M.L.J. 329=17 M.L.T. 214=16 Cr. L.J. 294, 41 C. 601, 2 A. 846; 3 M. 5. The addition of the words 'for all purposes' by the new amendment removes the limitation to the value of the evidence and the evidence recorded by the Committing Magistrate, if admitted under this section must be treated as evidence for all purposes even as the basis of founding a verdict and on a par with any other evidence before the Sessions Court or as substantial evidence on which the verdict of a Jury or judgment of the Judge can be based, 53 C. 181. See also 47 M. 232; 6 Lah. 199; 27 Bom. L.R. 113=26 Cr. L.J. 705=86 Ind. Cas. 145; 29 Cr. L.J. 73=106 Ind. Cas. 595.

Procedure after examination of witnesses for prosecution.

289. (1) When the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and the examination (if any) of the accused are concluded, the accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence.

(2) If he says that he does not, the prosecutor may sum up his case; and, if the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, it may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, record a finding, or, in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

(3) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence, and the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, record a finding, or, in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

(4) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence, and the Court considers that there is evidence that he committed the offence, or if, on his saying that he does not mean to adduce evidence, the prosecutor sums up his case and the Court considers that there is evidence, that the accused committed the offence, the Court shall call on the accused to enter on his defence.

Scope of the section.—The language of sub-sections (1) and (2) suggests that they contemplate the case where there is only a single accused, while sub-sections (3) and (4) contemplate the case of more than one accused when one or more of them express an intention to adduce evidence. Where there is only one accused before the Court the procedure laid down by this section is quite clear, but when there are more than one accused and they adopt different defences and mean to adduce evidence, a real difficulty arises as to the procedure to be adopted by the Court. Where there are several accused and one of them stated that he meant to adduce evidence, the procedure to be followed so far as his case is concerned must be adopted also in the case of all the other accused who did not want to adduce evidence and the prosecutor will not be entitled to sum up under sub-section (2) of this section even against those who did not want to adduce evidence; and the prosecutor will have a right of reply under S. 292, infra, even in the case of those who did not want to adduce evidence, 18 B. 354. This section lays down the procedure to be followed in a Sessions trial and it clearly says that the Judge has no power to withdraw a case from the Jury but in certain circumstances he is entitled to direct the Jury to return a verdict of not guilty on the ground specially mentioned in sub-section (2), namely, when there is no evidence, 30 Cr. L. J. 519 at 520=115 Ind. Cas. 692.

Examination (if any) of the accused is concluded.—After examination of the prosecution witnesses, under S. 342, infra, the Court may examine an accused for the purpose of explaining any circumstances appearing in evidence against him, but the Court should not do so until all the prosecution evidence is taken and the accused called upon to enter upon his defence. The result of such examination of the accused by the Court should appear on the record and the nature of the defence entered on behalf of the accused should be indicated and duly considered by the Court, 9 M. 224 at 244. This section relates to the procedure to be followed after the examination of the prosecution witnesses. The words "if any" are significant. It is not imperative for a Sessions Judge to examine an accused under S. 342, infra, especially when the accused admits his guilt. The words "if any" clearly indicate that such an examination is not necessary in all cases, 9 C.L.J. 55=10 Cr. L.J. 325=3 Ind. Cas. 623, but Sessions Judges will do well if they examine the accused persons in their own Courts even in cases where the Committing Magistrate has examined the accused with great care. It makes considerable difference to listeners like the Jury whether a statement is read over by the Court Interpreter or whether the accused person is examined carefully in the presence of the Jury and his answers and demeanour noted by them so that the defence of the accused and its hollowness, if untenable, may be fully impressed in the mind of the jury, 26 Cr. L.J. 1576=90 Ind. Cas. 536. The examination of the accused and recording the same close the case for the prosecution and after that the prosecution is not entitled to call further evidence except through Court under S. 540, infra. When it is intended to use against an accused person a letter not proved to be in his handwriting it is fair that in the exercise of the powers conferred by this section and S. 342, infra, to examine the accused about it and put such questions as will enable him to explain its significance and where such a course is not followed, the letter must be ignored or the fairest construction possible should be put upon it, 36 M. 159.

Accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence.—When, on being asked under this section the accused stated he meant to adduce evidence but on further consideration did not do so, the Court is not entitled to make a presumption adverse to the accused from his failure to adduce evidence, 10 C. 140. The question whether the accused has any evidence to adduce should be put to the accused himself and not to his pleader and the question and answer of the accused should be recorded as required by S. 364, infra Rule 242, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section deals with the case of the accused who says he does not mean to adduce evidence and the prosecutor is entitled to be heard before the accused is acquitted. Even though an accused says he does not mean to adduce evidence and the prosecutor sums up his case under this sub-section he is not precluded from changing his mind and adducing evidence. When the accused is called upon to enter upon his defence under sub-section (4) and enters on it, he may call defence evidence although the prosecutor had disclosed all his points at the earlier stage. The right to sum up under this sub-section is quite distinct from that given under S. 292, infra, which though termed reply, is a summing up of the whole case, 18 B. 364. The right under S. 292, infra, arises after the accused has been called upon to enter on his defence and adduces evidence in support of his defence under S. 290, infra. A Judge is not entitled to ask the Jury after all the direct evidence had been taken whether they wish to hear further evidence. No final opinion as to the falsity or sufficiency of the evidence for the prosecution ought to be arrived at by the Judge or Jury until the whole evidence is before them and has been considered, 20 M. 345.

There is no evidence.—The words "no evidence" must not be read as meaning no satisfactory trustworthy or conclusive evidence. A Jury may be satisfied with the minimum of proof and it is beyond the power of the Court in such cases to interfere with its verdict but when there is nothing which can, if believed, amount to proof, the case should not be put to the Jury at all as a verdict of guilty in such circumstances cannot be sustained, 16 W. R. (Cr.) 19; 7 W. R. (Cr.) 39. In such a case it is not necessary to record the opinion of the Assessors, 7 B. H. C. R. (Cr. Cn.) 82. If there is evidence, the trial must go on to its close. When the trial is by Jury, the Jury and in other trials the Judge after consulting the opinion of the Assessors have to find on the facts, 16 B. 414 at 422-423; 10 A. 414; Weir II, 382; 12 A. 531; 1888 A. W. N. 153. When all the evidence recorded even if true would not amount to legal proof of the offence charged, then the Judge is entitled to record a finding of not guilty without consulting the Assessors, 10 A. 414. When there is no evidence, it is not clear what purpose will be served in asking the accused whether he means to adduce evidence without which he is entitled to an immediate acquittal. A scientific of evidence is not sufficient. There must be some evidence from which a Jury could reasonably come to a conclusion, 19 C. W. N. 653. "It is for the Jury to say whether and how far the evidence is to be believed. And if the facts as to which evidence is given are such that from them a further inference of fact may legitimately be drawn, it is for the Jury to say whether that inference is to be drawn. But it is for the Judge to determine, subject to review, as a matter of law, whether from those facts that further inference may legitimately be drawn" per Lord Blackburn in 3 A.O. 193 at 207. There may arise any one of the four different situations, (1) There may be no evidence at all not even a scintilla, (2) there may be some evidence, a scintilla perhaps, yet none that ought reasonably to satisfy the Jury, (3) there may be evidence which is not of the standard of certitude desired but on which the Jury may reasonably and properly conclude the fact in question established, (4) the evidence may approach the standard of certitude. The evidence need not be satisfactory, trustworthy and conclusive before a Jury can be asked to arrive at their verdict, 7 Pat. 15 relying on 10 A. 414; 16 B. 414; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 46; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 19.

Sub-section (3).—If the accused says he means to adduce evidence, the prosecutor is not given at this stage a right to sum up as in sub-section (2). The Court proceeds at once to consider whether there is any evidence to support the charge. This section applies only where there is no evidence and cannot apply to a case where the Court considers the charge to be improper, 12 A. 551 at 552. If the Court is of opinion that there is no evidence, it will record an order of acquittal, but if it considers that there is evidence, it will call upon the accused to enter upon his defence. This sub-section therefore permits an abrupt termination of the trial in the middle, and a consequent acquittal of the accused. There is no warrant under the Code to record a finding of "not proven." The proper course is to record a finding of "not guilty," Watr. II, 331. A Sessions Judge is not competent to exclude the Assessors from their share of the trial before him without consulting the opinion and using the judgment of the Assessors by finding the evidence was not to be believed and by directing an acquittal. It is clear that it is not the intention of the Legislature that the Judge should have such a power, or that the Assessors might be confined to the function of giving their opinion on the evidence in those cases only in which the Judge was inclined to believe the evidence for the prosecution, 10 A. 414 at 416. An accused person cannot be convicted solely on the evidence adduced by his co-accused, where there is no evidence for the prosecution that he committed the offence charged against him, 5 M.L.T. 75=10 Cr. L.J. 68=2 Ind. Cas. 525. See 1929 M.W.N. 391; 42 A. 323.

Sub section (4).—The expression 'the Court shall call upon the accused to enter on his defence,' the context shows what it means. It means that if the accused calls no witnesses, the accused (or his pleader if any) is to make his final address to the Jury. If he is calling witnesses he may open his case and proceed to call them 28 Cr. L.J. 297=100 Ind. Cas. 377. If the Court does not act under sub-sections (2) and (3) it is bound to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence. This is not a mere formality but is an essential part of a criminal trial. Non-compliance with this sub-section must be deemed to have occasioned a failure of justice, 23 C. 252 but see 16 A.L.J. 41. The close of the prosecution and the entering of the accused upon his defence is a well-known stage in a criminal trial after which the prosecution is not entitled to adduce evidence except through Court under S. 540, infra, 4 C.L.R. 338 at 340. Once the accused has entered on his defence his right to call evidence is unaffected by the fact that at an early stage he stated that he did not mean to adduce evidence under sub-section (2) of this section. S. 290, infra governs the case at this subsequent stage.

290. The accused or his pleader may then open his case, stating the facts or law on which he intends to rely, and making such comments as he thinks necessary on the evidence for the prosecution. He may then examine his witnesses (if any) and after their cross-examination and re-examination (if any) may sum up his case.

The accused or his pleader may open the case. It is the right of the accused under, S. 540, infra, to be defended by a pleader and once a pleader has been retained, the conduct of the case should be left to him by the accused. Under this section the case may be opened by stating the facts on which it is intended to rely, the commenting on the prosecution evidence and examining the witnesses. The right to have the last word with the Jury really depends on what the accused does under this section. If there are more accused than one and if one of them adduces evidence, the prosecutor gets a right of reply by the action of several accused. It is contrary to the administration of justice and practice of criminal law that Counsel for prisoners should state to the Jury as alleged existing facts, matters which are told to them in their instructions, on the authority of the prisoner but which they do not propose to prove in evidence, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr., p. 197 (25th Ed.) A prisoner's Counsel in addressing the Jury will not be allowed to state anything which he is not in a position to prove or which is not already in proof. After his Counsel has addressed the Jury, the prisoner will not be permitted to make any statement to the Jury; both cannot be heard. Roscoe Cr. Pl. and Ev. p. 185; See also 15 Cox, 122. "The duty of Counsel for the defence is to act as an Advocate and not to any extent as a Judge. His object is to get an acquittal of the accused. He is to put himself in the place of the accused and is not under any obligations which the accused would not be under. Thus he is not obliged to divulge facts which he may be acquainted with but which are unfair to the prisoner." See also notes under S. 340, infra, 'Duty of Advocate appearing for defence.'

291. The accused shall be allowed to examine any witness not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance; but he shall not, except as provided in sections 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial.

Right of accused as to examination and summoning of witnesses.

May examine his witness if any.—An accused person owes no duty to any one but himself and therefore he cannot be convicted because he has not tried to explain the circumstances by adducing legal evidence sufficiently clear, say in a charge of murder how death was caused, Ratanlal 686; 41 C. 350; an accused is not bound to account for his movements at about the time of the commission of a particular offence, 10 C. 970 and no inference adverse to him can be drawn from his failure to adduce defence evidence, 8 C. 121 at 125. The burden of proof in a criminal prosecution is on the Crown and unless the prosecution evidence is such as to enable the Court to come to a definite conclusion as to the guilt of the accused, the accused ought not to be called upon to make his defence and much less a Judge to convict the accused, Ratanlal 772 and 779; 4 C.L.R. 338; 7 W.R. (Cr.) 45. An accused in a criminal case is merely on the defensive and unless there is any positive admission of fact by him, omission on his part to explain what indeed cannot be explained without his explanation should not be pressed against him, 28 B. 533.

Right of accused to obtain summons for his witnesses is subject to the restriction contained in this and proviso to S. 216, supra. It is not open to a Judge to decide on the credit to be attached to the evidence of witnesses before he had an opportunity of hearing the same, 19 M. 375 at 381. Nor can a Magistrate inquire generally as to the nature of the defence with a view to abstain from summoning the witnesses after knowing the nature of the defence, 3 C. 573 at 583; Weir II, 263. A Judge is not entitled arbitrarily to limit the quantity of evidence that shall be adduced by the accused who alone is to decide the question affecting his interest, 7 C.W.N. 188. A Judge has power if he thinks it proper to summon witnesses other than those whose names were given in the list to the committing Magistrate, 8 A. 668. See 16 W.R. (Cr.) 13. It is the duty of the Judge to secure the attendance of the witnesses once summoned and served and he cannot discharge a Jury in the middle of the trial simply because a defence witness is absent, 4 Bom. L.R. 939. The Magistrate is bound to summon the witnesses mentioned in the first list given by the accused, 11 C. 762; 12 W.R. (Cr.) 22; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 54. A party has a right to call upon the Court to compel the attendance of his witnesses who had been summoned but neglected to attend, 6 G.W.N. 548 ; 10 C. 931 ; 4 M. 329 ; Ratanlal 593. If before the conclusion of the trial the accused requests for a short adjournment to secure the attendance of his witnesses who were not present not being properly served, such application should be granted, Welr II, 393 ; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 34 ; 18 W.R. (Cr.) 20 ; 4 Bom. L.R. 939 ; 47 C. 758. A Court will exercise a wise discretion in allowing a well-known treatise such as Taylor on Medical Jurisprudence to be referred to on behalf of the accused in cases depending upon medical evidence, 10 C. 140.

Prosecutor's right of reply.

292. The prosecutor shall be entitled to reply—

(a) if the accused or any of the accused adduces any oral evidence ;

(b) with the permission of the Court, on a point of law ; or

(c) with the permission of the Court, when any document which does not need to be proved is produced by any accused person after he enters on his defence:

Provided that, in the case referred to in clause (c) the reply shall, unless the Court otherwise permits, be restricted to comment on the document so produced.

Amendment—The words in italics are newly added. The words "any evidence" has been altered into "any oral evidence" thereby overruling 10 C. 140 and other decisions giving a right of reply in cases where documentary evidence is produced for cross-examining prosecution witnesses. The new amendment seeks to define more clearly as to the circumstances, in which the prosecution is entitled to reply and to reconcile the various conflicting rulings. The amendment is to do away with the objectionable practice of having a right of reply to the prosecution when the accused in cross-examining a prosecution witness puts in a document in the shape of a previous statement contradicting his evidence or otherwise proves a document produced before the Committing Magistrate but withheld by the prosecution.

Object of the Section.—The object of the law as laid down in this section is that each side should have an opportunity of commenting upon the evidence of the other side, 10 C. 140 ; 30 B. 421 at 425. This section is intended to give a right of reply to the prosecution whenever, at any stage evidence is recorded, for the defence of which the prosecution cannot be deemed to have had notice, and the prosecution is presumed to have had notice of all relevant facts within the knowledge of its witnesses. This dictum has no application to those cases where the accused actually leads evidence under S. 289, supra. In such cases, the section directly applies and the question of notice to the prosecution is immaterial, 8 Cr. L.J. 215. The right of reply would seem to depend not in what may be said, but on what is done and if no evidence is produced there should be no right of reply by the prosecutor, Ratanlal 938. The right of reply is now confined to the three cases mentioned in this section as amended.

Entitled to Reply.—The word "reply" in this section must mean reply generally on the whole case. It cannot be that the prosecutor is to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence and reply only on the evidence that may have been adduced by the others, 18 B. 363 at 365.

All or any of the accused adduces Oral Evidence.—To adduce evidence is to lead evidence and not merely an intention to adduce evidence which was not eventually done, 30 B. 421 at 425. Mere putting in a document through a witness for the prosecution in the course of ordinary cross-examination is not adducing any evidence within this section, 11 Bom. L.R. 177 at 190 = 9 Cr. L.J. 234 = 1 Ind. Cas. 280, but tendering documents not forming part of the record sent up by the Committing Magistrate may constitute adducing evidence, 31 C. 1030. When documents are put in by defence under S. 155 (3) of the Indian Evidence Act to contradict a prosecution witness while under cross-examination, this is not adducing evidence. This section and S. 289, supra should be read together. The right to reply arises only if the accused or any of the accused takes advantage to adduce evidence after the case for the prosecution is concluded. The right of reply is not lost by putting in some documents in cross-examining a prosecution witness, 43 C. 426; with the permission of the Court, the prosecutor is to have the right to reply on a point of law and also in a case where a document which need not be proved is produced by any accused after he enters on his defence. In these cases there can possibly be no prejudice to the defence by the right of reply being granted by the Court; on the other hand such a course will further the ends of justice.

Proviso to the section.—The proviso makes it clear that when an accused in cross-examining any witness for the prosecution either proves a previous statement of such a witness for contradicting him or proves any document produced either before the committing Magistrate or at the trial, such accused shall not be deemed to have adduced evidence within this section so as to give the prosecution a right to reply. 31 C. 1030; 10 Cr. L.J. 24. But if a document not coming under either of these two categories is proved by the defence by prosecution witnesses while under cross-examination, that would be adducing evidence within this section entitling the prosecution a right to reply, 16 A. 88 at 101; 11 M. 339; 30 B. 321; 43 C. 426.

293. (1) Whenever the Court thinks that the Jury or Assessors should view the place in which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed, or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred, the Court shall make an order to that effect, and the Jury or Assessors shall be conducted in a body, under the care of an officer of the Court, to such place, which shall be shown to them by a person appointed by the Court.

View by Jury or Assessors.

(2) Such officer shall not, except with the permission of the Court, suffer any other person to speak to, or hold any communication with, any of the jury or assessors, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, they shall, when the view is finished, be immediately conducted back into Court.

If a view of the place of alleged occurrence is thought necessary or desirable, the Judge should give notice to the parties and should proceed thither with the Assessors and the parties, and not after the close of the case and after recording the opinion of Assessors, 1 C.L.R. 153. If in the course of a trial the Judge was of opinion that the Assessors should view the place of occurrence, he is at liberty to make an order under this section and he might have himself accompanied them but once the Assessors had given their opinions, it only remained for the Judge to give judgment according to S. 309 (2), infra. He is not entitled thereafter to visit the locality alone with the record of the case and plans filed before him and to draw conclusions from what he saw and use them to discredit the defence evidence, 17 Cr. L.J. 500=36 Ind. Cas. 368. The Jury should be conducted in a body under the care of an officer of the Court. A Judge cannot delegate his function of examining witnesses on the spot to the Assessors, 5 W.R. (Cr.) 39. It is competent to the Judge even without the consent of the prosecutor to permit the Jury to view the locus in quo at any time during the trial. Arch. Pl. Ev. & Pr. p. 200 (25th Ed.). See 37 C. 343 as to the object of local inspection, viz., better understanding of the evidence adduced in Court.

294. If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted, with any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross-examined and re-examined in the same manner as any other witness.

May be sworn and examined.—Jurors are no longer allowed to give verdicts upon their own knowledge and it is laid down as a rule that where they were acquainted with any facts material to be known, they ought to inform the Court, so that they may be sworn as witnesses and it has been said that "a fair way is to tell the Court before they are sworn that they have evidence to give" Forsyth His, Tr. by Jury, p. 165. A Juror may give evidence of any fact material to be communicated in the course of the trial but, of course, he must be sworn. Generally it is most undesirable that any one appearing in one capacity at a trial should appear in any other, Ros. Cr. Ev. & Pr. p. 108. It is undoubtedly a well established rule that a Juryman may be sworn and examined as a witness and is not disqualified by reason of his having given evidence from continuing to sit as a Juryman or taking part in delivering the verdict, 4 B.L.R. (Ap. Cr.) 15 at 17=13 W.R. (Cr.) 60.

295. If a trial is adjourned, the jury or assessors shall attend at the adjourned sitting, and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial.

Jury or Assessors to attend at adjourned sitting. A Judge is not justified in discharging a Jury merely on the ground that a defence witness who was summoned was absent, 4 Bom. L.R. 939, but he may adjourn the case when the witness summoned is absent, especially if he is a material witness in the case, Weir II, 383; 6 B.L.R. Appx. 89; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 34; 18 W.R. (Cr.) 20; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 53. Sections 318 and 332 provide punishments for non-attendance of Juror or Assessor and the Court is also empowered to remit the fine wholly or in part for sufficient cause being shown. See S. 344, infra which empowers the Court to postpone or adjourn proceedings on account of the absence of a witness or any other reasonable cause.

296. The High Court may, from time to time, make rules as to keeping the jury together during a trial before such Court lasting for more than one day; and subject to such rules, the presiding Judge may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes.

In England under 60 and 61 Vict. Ch. 18 (Juries Detention Act, 1897), the Court may allow a Jury in a criminal case to separate, if the charge is not one of murder treason, or treason felony, but in India such a rule is not observed and Jurors in all cases are allowed to return to their respective homes every day without any restriction whatever. The Jury are not entitled to talk to persons connected with the accused during the progress of the trial and even apart from the provisions of Ss 293 to 300; 78 Cr. L.J. 783=104 Ind. Cas 111.

F.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried by Jury.

297. In cases tried by Jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the Jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

Scope and object of the section.—The object of the heads of charge is to inform the Court of Appeal, should occasion arise, of what direction the Judge gave in law to the Jury and the nature of his summing up the evidence not only for the prosecution but also for the defence. The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge might have addressed the Jury. The Judge is not bound to address himself in every particular and in every detail to every suggestion put forward by the defence. It is the duty of the Judge, fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and the defence respectively. In doing so he is entitled to take into consideration the speeches made on both sides in presenting the evidence to the Jury. The heads of charge should record in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness the points of law and the directions given by the Judge to the Jury, and the record should represent with accuracy the substance of the charge, 47 C. 794 followed in 3 Pat. 626, 7 Pat. 361; 53 C.L.J. 537; 26 C.W.N. 996; 32 C.L.J. 504. Speaking generally the summing up should be such that it ought not to be said that the Judge found the facts for himself and left the law to the Jury as was said of a summing up in England, 31 C.W.N. 171=45 C.L.J. 584=28 Cr. L.J. 201=99 Ind. Cas. 937; 31 C.W.N. 387=28 Cr. L.J. 431 (1)=101 Ind. Cas. 606 (1) An eminent writer describes the duty of summing up to the Jury thus: "The Judge states the substance of the charge, divesting it of all technical phraseology which may encumber, direct the attention of the Jury to the precise issue they have to try and applies the evidence to that issue." Sir James Fitz James Stephen says "After the evidence is concluded the Judge sums up. His position from first to last is that of a moderator between two litigants. He permits or forbids certain things to be done; but he originates nothing. His summing up may and generally does indicate his opinion but it is an opinion which is the result of the evidence laid before him and not of an independent inquiry." The charge must be recorded in such a way as would enable a Court of Appeal to say whether the facts and circumstances of the case are properly placed before the Jury, as also whether the law has been correctly explained, 34 C. 638; 25 C. 735; 47 C. 46; 53 C. 373; 31 C.W.N. 387=28 Cr. L.J. 418=101 Ind. Cas. 626 (1); 33 C.W.N. 84=33 Cr. L.J. 912=118 Ind. Cas. 331.

When case for defence and Prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded.—"In summing up a case the Advocate should endeavour to convince the Jurors by logical argument of the justice of his cause. He should confine his address to the evidence in the case, should point out any discrepancies in the testimony of witnesses on the opposing side and bring out clearly the points which have been established in favour of his client. Advocates often soar away over the heads of the Jury, are too diffuse and wander far afield from the real issues involved in the case. Facts must be marshalled in a convincing manner avoiding lofty style and very lengthy arguments. Speeches must not be long winded, but pithy and concise and directly to the point." There is nothing illegal in adjourning a case after the prosecutor and the defence Counsel have addressed the Jury if such adjournment is necessitated by the intervention of certain holidays, or the Judge sent off on special duty. In such cases there is no provision of law under which a fresh address of Counsel at the resumption of the hearing can be had, 28 Cr. L.J. 950=105 Ind. Cas. 662.

Court shall proceed to charge Jury.—The Court in summing up the case after the conclusion of the evidence and arguments, usually directs the Jury, as to the law applicable and may go through and comment on the absence of evidence given and may even comment on the absence of evidence which might have been given. But a summing up is not an essential part of the trial where the facts are clear and the law simple that the Court of Appeal will necessarily quash the conviction where there has been no summing up. The facts must be left to the Jury to decide and the Judge must not usurp their function but he is entitled to express his opinion strongly in a proper case provided he leaves the issues to the Jury, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr. p. 202 (25th Ed.), 12 Cr. App. Cas. 211. Every party to a trial by Jury has a legal and constitutional right to have the case which he made, either in pursuit or in defence fairly submitted to the consideration of that tribunal, 1896 A.C. 44. The summing up by the Judge as contemplated by law is a fairly full and distinct statement of the evidence with such advice as to the legal bearing of that evidence and the weight which properly attaches to the several parts of it, as a sound judicial discretion would suggest. The Judge in a proper summing up must formulate and specify simple issues for consideration, and collate the evidence pro and con bearing upon the issues in order to assist the Jury to arrive at the correct decision thereon. Merely summarising the evidence, examination-in-chief, cross-examination, and re-examination of the different witnesses who have deposed at the trial and putting before the Jury all that has been said by the witnesses or by the lawyers appearing on the two sides and huddling together important facts as well as trivial points without any attempt at discrimination, instead of aiding the Jury only confuse them, 29 C.W.N. 526=26 Cr. L.J. 1009=87 Ind. Cas. 833. As the term 'heads of charge' itself implies it means that the Judge must faithfully record the lines upon which he addressed the Jury, both on the evidence and on the law and the object of these heads of charge is to inform the High Court should occasion arise, of what direction he gave in law to the Jury and the nature of the summing up of the evidence on both sides. They do not purport nor are they intended by Statute to be exhaustive detail in every particular of what the Judge may have addressed to the Jury. It is undoubted law that it is the sole function of the Judge to direct the Jury on all matters of law and they must take their directions in law from the Judge. It is equally certain that the Judge must present the main case for the prosecution and for the defence fairly for the consideration of the Jury. But this does not mean that he must in every particular and in every detail address himself to every suggestion put forward by the defence. His duty is fairly and candidly to put out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and the defence. And in doing so he is entitled to take into consideration the speeches made upon both sides, in considering his presentation of the evidence to the Jury. The function of these heads of charge is for the guidance and the information of the High Court and it is for the Judges in appeal to construe them as prepared by the Judge and to see if from such heads the Judge has fairly and properly directed the Jury in point of law and whether he has fairly and properly reviewed the evidence in support of the prosecution and of the defence. The heads of charges should record in an intelligible form and with sufficient fairness the points of law and the direction given by the Judge to the Jury and the record should present with accuracy the substance of the charge. In considering the language used one must not peruse the heads of charge as if they were an indictment. The method of expression and its form may be unsatisfactory but if in substance one can see from the frame of the heads of charge what were the directions given and that they were right and proper, then there can be no ground of complaint even though the phraseology and form adopted may be open to question. What one has to see and consider from the heads of charge used, is the directions given and to see whether they were fair and right. Mere informality in expression or in form would not be sufficient. The charge is to be construed by the High Court as best it can and the High Court must bring its reason and common sense when considering the document. 1 P L J. 317 at 320-22=17 Cr. L.J. 353 at 355=35 Ind. Cas. 657 following 34 C. 693; 36 C. 281; 12 A L.J. 143=14 Cr. L.J. 638=21 Ind. Cas. 656. A Judge in charging the Jury shall endeavour to speak in a manner simple and direct. The charge must not be involved and in extravagant language, 11 Cr. L.J. 538=7 Ind. Cas. 915. Intemperate language should be avoided, 53 C. 372. The duty of the Judge is to state the principal points in the evidence and how they bear for or against the accused. In short to render the Jury every assistance in his power towards coming to a correct conclusion 6 W.R. (Cr.) 72. The heads of charge must be in such a form as to enable the Court of appeal to say that it was delivered with sufficient fullness to the Jury and that it was such as to enable the Court of Appeal to say that all the points of law and facts were clearly and correctly explained to the Jury having regard to the evidence adduced in the case, 31 C.W.N. 387=28 Cr. L.J. 478 (1)=101 Ind. Cas. 606 (1). It is not necessary that a charge should be reduced to writing before delivery but should represent with absolute certainty the substance of what was charged by the Judge to enable the High Court in the event of an appeal to see that the case was fairly and properly placed before the Jury, 23 W.R. (Rules) 7; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 32; 34 C. 658; Weir II, 385; 1 Pat. L.J. 317=17 Cr. L.J. 353 at 355=35 Ind. Cas. 657; 36 C. 281; 12 A L.J. 143=14 Cr. L.J. 638=21 Ind. Cas. 656; 33 C.W.N. 84=30 Cr. L.J. 912=118 Ind. Cas. 351. The Judge in his charge to the Jury should not be dogmatic as to the view of the evidence nor is it his province to ridicule the defence story. Even when

-expresses his own opinion, he must warn the Jury that it is not binding on them but they are entitled to form their own opinion. He must not make an appeal or exhortation to the Jury and he is bound to direct the attention of the Jury on all the salient features of the case, 25 Cr. L.J. 781=81 Ind. Cas. 249; 26 Cr. L.J. 567=83 Ind. Cas. 711; 28 Cr. L.J. 278=100 Ind. Cas. 358; 27 Cr. L.J. 1038=96 Ind. Cas. 990 following 34 C. 693; 36 C. 281; 26 C.W.N. 996=35 C.L.J. 437=24 Cr. L.J. 8=71 Ind. Cas. 56. "Every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively. This Court does not sit to consider whether this or that phrase was the best that might have been chosen, or whether a direction which has been attacked might have been fuller or more conveniently expressed or whether other topics which might have been dealt with on other occasions should be introduced" per Lord Alverstone C.J., in 73 J.P. 352. "We do not criticise summing up by saying something has been omitted which might have been said or that some statement has been made which it would have been better to omit or saying that we ourselves should not have said what was in fact said. We do not criticise summing up from those points of view. But when we find in a summing up substantial misdirection that may have led to injustice then this Court will interfere" per Lord Alverstone, C.J., in 73 J. P. 223. "It is not fair to criticise and this Court never does criticise summings up as if the Judge were writing an accurate treatise on the branch of criminal law with which he was then dealing"—per Pickford, J., in 73 J. P. 250. A Judge's record of his heads of charge to the Jury is not a matter to be treated cavalierly or lightly thrown away on the ground of insufficiency or misdirection. S. 537 infra expressly provides that no finding, sentence, or order on account of the faulty nature of a charge to the Jury shall be set aside unless a failure of justice was occasioned, while S. 423 (2) states that a verdict of a Jury shall not be altered or reversed on appeal unless the appellate Court regards such verdict as erroneous owing to misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding by the Jury of the law as explained to them by the Judge & Pat. 626. An appellate Court will naturally be cautious in treating an omission in the heads of charge to the Jury as amounting to misdirection for two reasons; (1) In order to constitute misdirection the point omitted must be of such importance that an omission to refer to it renders the summing up unfair. (2) The Judge is not required to make a verbal transcript of his summing up. It is only the heads of charge to the Jury which he is required to record. Heads of charge must indicate the matters on which he proceeded but many matters which find a place in the charge will not find a place in the record. 27 Cr. L.J. 785=95 Ind. Cas. 333 where 1 Pat. L.J. 317=17 Cr. L.J. 353=33 Ind. Cas. 657, is referred to. Expressions in the charge verging on politics should not be used. It will be an evil day for the administration of justice if political considerations should, influence the judicial mind of the Judge which should be free from all taint of bias on political, racial, social or personal grounds, 30 C.W.N. 693=49 C.L.J. 537. Lord Meadowbank's charge to the Jury as to what the Jury should do is worth reproducing "Our business is to do justice and you in particular have to weigh the evidence calmly and deliberately and should you doubt of that evidence being sufficient to bring the charges here made home to the prisoner, to give him the full benefit of that doubt. But to entitle you to do so, these doubts must be well considered and circumstances on which they are founded deliberately weighed. To doubts that are not reasonable you have no right whatever to yield. You are not entitled to require at the hands of the prosecution direct proof of the facts laid in the charge. In no case such be exacted. The circumstances laid in evidence must be put together and it is your duty then to consider what is the rational and reasonable inference to be drawn from the whole of them. In short whether it be possible to explain them upon grounds consistent with the innocence of the party accused or whether on the contrary they do not necessarily lead to the result directly the reverse." see Forsyth Hist. of Tr. by the Jury 338-339. This section specifically enacts that the Judge shall only charge the Jury when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply are concluded i.e., after all the evidence had been taken on both sides and Counsel on both sides have finished addressing the Jury. Where therefore a Judge heard arguments and took verdict as regards the remaining accused, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Judge was illegal although the Judge was no doubt swayed by the laudable desire to save time which object admittedly not obtained, 36 M. 583 at 588. A charge which is one calculated to suggest to the Jury that there was no use in considering the matter from any point of view other than the one presented by the prosecution and in the events which had happened, there was only one course open to them viz to return a verdict of guilty offends against the most elementary rules to be observed in summing up to the Jury and the accused are entitled, as a matter of right, to proper summing up. 46 C.L.J. 31=23 Cr. L.J. 742=104 Ind. Cas. 790. Where certain persons were tried for the offence of dacoity, the Judge after examining five witnesses asked the Jury whether they wished to hear any more evidence and on their stating that they did not believe the evidence and wished to stop the case, the Judge recorded a verdict of acquittal, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Judge was not warranted by any provision of law, as the Judge could not ask the opinion of the Jury until he had duly recorded the whole of the prosecution evidence. The High Court further remarked that no final opinion as to the falsehood or insufficiency of the prosecution evidence ought to be arrived at by the Judge or Jury until the whole of that evidence is before them and has been considered, and the Jury ought to have been cautioned by the Judge to that effect. If however at the end of the prosecution evidence, the Public Prosecutor waives his right to sum up the evidence where he has such right, and the Jury then express their opinion that the evidence is incredible, and the Judge agrees with them it may not be necessary for the Judge to go through the formality of summing up the case to the Jury, and their opinion might in that case be accepted as a verdict, 20 M. 445 at 446. Nor is it open to a Judge after hearing one witness for the prosecution to tell the Jury that it would be unsafe to convict, and there is no necessity to hear further evidence. Unless the Public Prosecutor withdraws the charge with the leave of the Court, the Judge is bound to allow the evidence to be placed before the Jury, Weir II, 381. To allow a Jury to pronounce their verdict before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence is illegal although the Judge omits to charge the Jury at all under this section. S. 537 infra will not cure such a defect, 23 G. 252.

The Court shall proceed to charge the Jury.—The right course for a Judge is to charge the Jury himself but in cases where the Judge was not sufficiently acquainted with the vernacular say urdu, so as to be understood by the Jury and the Judge did not feel competent to address the Jury himself with any confidence that they would understand what he had to say in view of the technical language necessary to describe the offence when he wrote out the charge in English which was translated into Urdu and read over to the Jury by the Public Prosecutor it was held that there was illegality as an officer who cannot express himself in vernacular must resort to some other means, 28 Cr. L.J. 950=105 Ind. Cas. 662. It is necessary that the Court interpreter or the Judge should explain the charge to the Jury who do not know English or understand it imperfectly, 47 C. L.J. 449=29 Cr. L.J. 638=109 Ind. Cas. 910. To a charge to the Jury in the mufassal it is not correct to apply the criticism which would apply to a charge of a Judge in England. It is sufficient to see the general tendency of the charge as a whole, 12 W.R. (Cr.) 80, 4 C.W.N. 196; 10 B.H.C.R. (Cr.) 75.

In summing up a case a Judge is allowed a certain amount of latitude. It is not necessary for him "to repeat all the evidence and to give a precis of the argument of Counsel. His actual duties are laid down in this and the next section but these sections are not exhaustive. They must be read together with the numerous judicial decisions which have found defects in the summing up of Judges. The first point which a Judge should observe is whatever he says to the Jury must be true. If he states that such and such fact is contained in the evidence, the Jury are bound to believe him. It is also necessary that the Judge should obtain from the Jury a decision on all the material points which go to establish a particular offence. He should not omit to call the attention of the Jury to matters of prime importance especially if they favour the accused, merely because they were discussed by his Advocate, 23 Cr. L.J. 683=103 Ind. Cas. 411; 5 W.R. (Cr.) 80 (F.B.); 17 Bom. L.R. 1059; 18 C.W.N. 180.

Summing up the evidence for prosecution and defence.—Mere reading of the evidence in extenso is not sufficient for a proper summing up. The Judge should sum up the evidence on both sides and place the case succinctly before the Jury an analysis of the evidence and place before the Jury such points as can legitimately arise in favour of the accused, 46 C.L.J. 21=28 Cr. L.J. 742=103 Ind. Cas. 790. The duty of the Judge in summing up, is to place the entire evidence, for or against the accused before the Jury and leave the ultimate decision of the question of fact to them. He is not debarred from expressing his own opinion upon the evidence but it should be done in such a way as not to create any impression in the mind of the Jury that it was a direction from the Judge which they should follow; and such opinion should not be expressed as has been observed in 34 C. 693; 36 C 281; 26 C.W.N. 996, strongly and dogmatically. Under this section it is the duty of the Judge to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence. He should explain to the Jury the issues of fact, which the Jury are to determine upon the charge on which the prisoner is being tried and having made the Jury understand these issues, the more convenient mode of summing up the case for him to adopt is, to present to the Jury as materially and impartially as he can, a summary of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from the evidence as they appear both on the negative and the affirmative side of the case. It is impossible, of course, for any Judge to state every item of evidence or to draw the attention of the Jury to every fact which has been deposed; but he is without difficulty to give a summary of the leading points of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from the evidence on one side or the other. Merely telling the Jury that there are material discrepancies without telling them that they are material is a clear misdirection. Further telling the Jury over and over again about their moral conviction as to the guilt of the accused is also a misdirection as they have not to return verdict of guilty upon their moral conviction but upon legal proof of facts constituting the offence, 49 A. 201. It is not the business of a Judge to assume the part of the defence counsel. His duty is to place the evidence before the Jury as he found it and though the reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is to disbelieve it, still it is open to the Jury to believe the evidence and act upon it 29 Cr. L.J. 497 at 499=109 Ind. Cas. 225. A charge to the Jury should be read as a whole; a Judge should give a fair summary of the evidence in his address and it is not to be expected that he would go on repeating what he had already said in a previous part of the charge when dealing with the case of individual accused, 54 C 539. A charge should be construed reasonably and see whether the evidence has been placed properly before the Jury, 10 Bom. L.R. 565, 1903 A.W.N. 132, 34 C. 693. In a case where a charge to the Jury he no doubt open to criticism yet the verdict will not be set aside unless the charge taken as a whole cannot be supported, 48 C.L.J. 473 at 476. A careful summing up may often change the hasty and superficial impression of a Jury, Ratnaul 288. Any advice from the Judge to ignore or neglect any evidence is improper. The entire evidence should be left for consideration to the Jury, 43 C.L.J. 433=27 Cr. L.J. 1038=96 Ind. Cas. 990, 33 C.W.N. 451. The summing up must give a fair summary of the evidence, on both sides pointing out to the Jury the flagrant contradictions in the evidence naturally recalling to them any explanation of the contradiction which has been suggested and leaving it to them to decide on its adequacy, 24 A.L.J. 506=27 Cr. L.J. 785=95 Ind. Cas. 385. A Judge is not bound to point out to the Jury every bit of evidence and it is enough if he directs their attention to the salient portion of the evidence for prosecution and defence, 23 Cr. L.J. 47. Where the Judge does not sum up the evidence at all, the conviction cannot be sustained and a new trial will be ordered on the ground of misdirection, 9 W.R. (Cr.) 51; 23 C. 551; 30 C. 822; 4 C.W.N. 193. The Judge is bound to lay carefully and plainly before the Jury the evidence as recorded by him, noting discrepancies and inconsistencies and pointing out generally the way in which it is favourable or unfavourable to the accused, 25 W.R. (Cr.) 54. A Judge in summing up is entitled to have regard to the elaboration and skill with which the rival contentions have been placed before the Jury by the Advocates on both sides, but he should not in doing so omit pointedly to call the attention of the Jury to matters of prime importance, especially if they favour the accused, merely because they have been discussed by the Advocate. Such an omission would amount to non-direction on the part of the Judge in summing up the evidence, 27 B 544 at 545, but omission to draw the attention of the Jury to matters of prime importance which affect the truthfulness of the important witnesses amounts to a misdirection, 25 L.W. 487=23 Cr.L.J. 307=100 Ind. Cas. 531; 44 C.L.J. 233=28 Cr. L.J. 19=99 Ind. Cas. 51. A Judge is to put to the Jury a case in favour of the accused which arises on the evidence whether such a case is raised by or on behalf of the accused or not. A particular line of defence adopted by the accused or his Counsel will not relieve the Judge of his duty, 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.)=16 Cr. L.J. 561=30 Ind. Cas. 113; 17 Cr. L.J. 19=32 Ind. Cas. 147; [1915] 1 K.B. 13; [1915] 2 K.B. 431; 43 C.L.J. 133 at 142. See 29 C. 379 where it was held that it was immaterial how often the Jury may have been addressed by the pleaders on both sides upon the law, and the responsibility of laying down the law for the guidance of the Jury lay entirely with the Judge and in the absence of such a direction the verdict was invalid. It is absolutely the duty of the Judge to give a narrative and history of the case and to place before the Jury the facts and evidence in a clear way so as to enable them to grasp the details and to come to a right decision, 6 Bom. L.R. 31. Where the charge as a whole is distinctly in favour of the defence it is not enough for establishing misdirection that more stress could have been laid by the Judge on the defects in the prosecution case, 27 Cr. L.J. 176=91 Ind. Cas. 960. In every case of a serious nature, the evidence of the principal, if not of all, the witnesses should be read over to the jury. This is a practice universally adopted by English Judges to preclude the possibility of the Jury coming to a decision without having all the facts fresh in their memory, 5 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 85, but it was held in 35 C. 231 that there is nothing that makes it incumbent upon any Judge to read the whole of the depositions of the witnesses to the Jury. Failure on the part of the Judge to read material portions of the evidence to the Jury in itself is not sufficient for a reversal of the verdict of the Jury, and the question in such a case will be, whether the omission was such as to mislead the Jury, and the Court of appeal will not interfere unless the accused is prejudiced thereby, 27 Cr. L.J. 217=92 Ind. Cas. 169. It would be a clear misdirection if the Judge calls the attention of the Jury to all the evidence against the prisoner and omits altogether to allude or call attention to the evidence in his favour, 5 W.R. (Cr.) 30 (F.B.), but where the charge is on the whole favourable to the accused and most of the points of importance in his favour were more or less dealt with by the Judge, the mere fact that some of the points were omitted or not dealt with sufficiently will not render the verdict bad. 27 B. 626. When important witnesses for the prosecution have not been called as witnesses, it is the duty of the Judge to point out that fact to the Jury 6 Pat. 50. Where the Judge omitted to call specific attention of the Jury to the defence evidence in the case, it was held to be a misdirection as he failed to comply with the provisions of this section, 33 C. 531; 18 M.L.J. 541. It is a misdirection if the defence is not adequately put before the Jury and admission of evidence which ought not to have been admitted, 27 Cr. L.J. 176=91 Ind. Cas. 960. So also if the Judge fails to mention to the Jury the case of each of the accused, 30 C. 822; 18 M.L.J. 250, and the evidence against each of the accused, 29 C. 782; 30 M. 44. Putting the accused's case to Jury does not mean putting to the Jury every argument and comment of the counsel for the defence, 38 C.L.J. 411; 27 Cr. L.J. 735=93 Ind. Cas. 383. When directing a Jury the Judge is clearly entitled to express his own opinion on the facts of the case, provided he leaves the issues of fact to the Jury to determine 12 Cr. App. Cas. 221; 28 Cr. L.J. 177=99 Ind. Cas. 849; 26 A.L.J. 296 at 297; 23 B. 316; 4 C.W.W. 576; Ratanlal 743; 1 W.R. (Cr.) 2 and 23; 10 C. 970; 25 C. 320; 35 C. 531; 29 Cr. L.J. 721=110 Ind. Cas. 577. But he should not express his opinion on the facts too dogmatically and too unqualified a manner 28 Cr. L.J. 843=104 Ind. Cas. 459; 1 W.R. (Cr.) 2 and 25. The Judge is only to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and he is not entitled to express an unqualified opinion of his own. If a Judge attempts to take the case out of the province of the Jury by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon them, it is a case of misdirection but if he simply states his opinion which the law allows him to state in such a manner that an intelligent Jury should see for themselves it is not necessary to add as a safeguard that it was only his opinion and they are perfectly at liberty to form their own opinion, 29 Cr. L.J. 721 (2)=110 Ind. Cas. 577 (2). The question of believing the evidence is for the Jury, 7 C.L.J. 246; 35 C. 531. A direction by the Judge in the beginning of his charge to the Jury that they are the Judges of facts and they are not bound by his opinion cannot cure the defects in the charge which has the effect of withdrawing the determination of the facts from the jury, 31 C.W.N. 831=46 C.L.J. 31=23 Cr. L.J. 742=103 Ind. Cas. 790. See also 13 W.R. (Cr.) 31; 1 W.R. (Cr.) 2, 10 C. 970; 4 C.W.N. 195; 14 A. 23; 23 B. 316. The Judge's duty is to present the facts in their natural aspect, and not to suggest farfetched explanations on points that tell in favour of or against either party, Weir II, 386. It is very improper on the part of the Judge to suggest to the jury when a witness's answer is in favour of the defence that the answer might have been given without properly understanding the question put. If a witness possibly misunderstood a question put to him the facts which led to the inference that the witness might have so misunderstood should be placed on record and then submit the same for the jury's consideration, 30 Cr. L.J. 120=113 Ind. Cas. 280. It is improper for a Judge to tell the Jury that there is no sufficient evidence to establish the plea of the accused, 20 B. 215 at 224. Nor can a Judge direct the Jury to neglect any portion of the evidence as they are to give their verdict upon the whole evidence recorded, 6 Bom. L.R. 31; 43 C.L.J. 488. Non-direction when it consists in omission to put material facts or to put the defence to the Jury is sufficient to cause the Court to quash the conviction if the Court comes to the conclusion that it is reasonably probable that the verdict of the Jury was affected thereby. A grave omission to direct the Jury to a cardinal point in the case cannot be made good by Counsel calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up, 50 C.L.J. 106 (F.B.) at 126. It is one thing to indicate agreement with a submission made by Counsel. It is another thing to direct Jury effectively. The line of defence adopted by Counsel does not relieve the Judge of his duty to draw the attention of the Jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence notwithstanding it may have escaped the attention of the Counsel for the accused. Even in a case where the defence counsel did not press seriously the defence evidence it will not relieve the Judge of his duty to sum up the evidence for the defence, 38 C.L.J. 411; 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.) In giving a warning to a Jury not to disbelieve a mass of otherwise consistent evidence because in one or two minor immaterial points the witnesses made contradictory statements, a Judge exercises a wise discretion and affords no ground for objection, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 17. Where there is no evidence against the accused it is the duty of the Judge to charge the Jury for an acquittal and not to leave it to the Jury whether the accused is guilty or not 7 Pat. 15; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 19; 19 C.W.N. 653=21 C.L.J. 377=16 Cr. L.J. 561=30 Ind. Cas. 113 but he should not tell the Jury that there is no evidence when the prosecution wanted an adjournment to produce their witnesses to prove their case, 30 C.W.N. 190, where the evidence is purely circumstantial it is the duty of the Judge to point to the Jury that the accused cannot be found guilty unless the circumstances are such that there can be no reasonable possibility of the innocence of the accused, 30 Cr. L.J. 120=113 Ind. Cas. 280.

Laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided.—Summing up the evidence is distinct from laying down the law. What does laying down the law mean? The offence charged is given in technical terms in the charge which convey little to the Jury. The Presiding Judge is to lay down the law by which the Jury are to be guided. If the Jury have heard discussions of the law applicable to the offence charged from the opposing counsel and have heard detailed criticism of the evidence to the essential ingredients of the offence, it is obvious that it is inoperative that the possibility of doubt and confusion in their minds should be removed and they should be told authoritatively what the law is. They must for a proper understanding of the evidence and a due appreciation of its bearing on the offence be told what the law is and what constitutes the offence charged and what matters must be produced to their satisfaction to constitute the offence. This the Legislature has provided in this section and this is why it is imperatively necessary for the Judge to expound the law, 11 Cr. L.J. 340 at 342=5 Ind. Cas. 981. It is the duty of the Judge to explain the application of the law to the facts of the case while laying down the law, to enable the Jury to return a correct verdict, 19 C.W.N. 653=27 C.L.J. 377 (F.B.). Laying down the law does not signify laying down the whole law on the subject irrespective of the facts of the particular case. A reasonable construction of this section is that the judge should lay down the law so far as it bears upon the evidence adduced in the particular case. The mere fact that the defence Counsel failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case cannot justify an omission on the part of the judge to draw the attention of the Jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused, 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.)=21 C.L.J. 377; 16 Cr. L.J. 561=30 Ind. Cas. 113. It is no doubt attended with difficulty to bring before the Jury all the combinations of which numerous facts are susceptible and to place in a distinct point of view the application of the rule of law according as all or some only of the facts and inferences from the facts are made out to their satisfaction ; but the task is not impracticable and it must be performed by the Judge who endeavours correctly to administer the law. Forsyth His. of Tr. by Jury, p. 285. It is a serious misdirection vitiating the charge to tell the Jury that finding of recently stolen property in accused's possession is sufficient to prove they were thieves or dacoits, a rebuttable presumption which by adducing sufficient proof the accused are to establish their innocence, 53 C. 157 where 52 C 223 and 24 C.W.N. 619=31 C.L.J. 310 are followed. It is necessary for a Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the Jury, if he purports to give what are the provisions of the section, and then, if necessary, to explain what is the meaning of the section, 36 C.L.J. 171 at 174. It is not sufficient for the Judge merely to read to the Jury the definition of the offence from the statute and leave it to them to find out whether the evidence for the prosecution made out a case against the accused. It is his duty to call their attention to the elements constituting the offence and to deal with the evidence by which it is proposed to make the accused liable, 25 C. 711. It should appear on the face of the record that the law bearing on the charge under trial has been explained to the Jury. It is incumbent, on the Judge to explain the law to the Jury, mere reference to sections unless Jurors are trained men cannot be of much assistance to them, 25 C. 561 ; 4 C.W.N. 193 ; 8 M.L.T. 82=11 Cr. L.J. 432=7 Ind. Cas. 431 ; 11 Cr. L.J. 222=6 Ind. Cas. 14 ; but it is not his duty to explain to the Jury questions of law which do not arise on the facts or on the plea set up, 31 C.W.N. 314=45 C.L.J. 131=29 Cr. L.J. 334=100 Ind. Cas. 718 ; 7 Pat. 361. Where the Judge charged the Jury to the effect "nature of the charge is no doubt familiar to you all. It must be proved that there was robbery committed by five people or more and also that each of the accused took part in the robbery," it was held that this amounted in no sense to laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided within the meaning of this section and the omission is not merely an irregularity but the failure to comply with an express provision of law which vitiated the trial and conviction, 25 Cr. L.J. 1129=81 Ind. Cas. 953. It is the duty of the Judge to explain to the Jury the offence with which the accused is charged and in doing so he should keep before him the words of the section defining the offence, 27 Cr. L.J. 1181=97 Ind. Cas. 951. Where several persons are tried for rioting and other offences the Judge should tell the Jury the common object alleged by the prosecution and the defence of each accused should be separately dealt with, 27 Cr. L.J. 1164=97 Ind. Cas. 748 ; 6 Pat 572. Omission to give a detailed definition of the offence charged does not amount to misdirection when it is clear that the nature of the offence has been described in detail and its constituent factors fully understood by the Jury, 25 Cr. L.J. 1032=81 Ind. Cas. 808. The Judge in his heads of charge to the Jury should state at length how he explained the various relevant sections of the I.P.O. to the Jury and not merely state that those sections had been read and explained. He should also explain the sections by applying them to the facts of the case and also tell them what is necessary for them to find with reference to the facts of the case in order to give a verdict on the various charges, 26 Cr. L.J. 1279=83 Ind. Cas 1055. The duty of the Judge is to lay down the law in reference to the case presented to the Court and not to perplex the mind of the Jury with the considerations that are outside the legitimate scope of the inquiry. It is also his absolute duty to keep the Jury in proper limits and to simplify the issues fairly and properly before the Court, to direct their mind to those issues and to them alone, 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.)=21 C.L.J. 377 ; 7 Pat. 361. It is not sufficient for the Judge to state in the records of the heads of charge to the Jury that he referred to certain sections of the I.P.O. and explained to the Jury the law in regard to the offence charged. He should set out the directions which he in fact, gave to the Jury with regard to the law, 7 Pat. 361 following 47 C. 795. The Judge must give sufficient direction on the law as bearing upon the fact and the explanation must be sufficiently comprehensive to enable them to decide the particular issue, 5 C. 739. In laying down the law for the guidance of the Jury it is sufficient if he informs them what facts must be found by them before they can bring a verdict of guilty. It matters not whether he tells the Jury that the offence consists of such and such elements or that such and such elements are necessary to constitute the offence. The Jury are not concerned with the law, except to know what facts are necessary for them to find for the offence to be established. They are not concerned with the reasoning by which the Judge is led to the conclusion of law which he lays down before them. The misdirection in law is that the Jury could not have been sufficiently informed as to what facts they had to find in order to bring a verdict of guilty. There are cases to show that stating the law to the Jury is a misdirection unless the Jury are given to understand what facts they must find in order to bring a verdict of guilty, but there is no cases in which a verdict has been set aside on the ground of misdirection in law, where all the facts which are in dispute and which were necessary to constitute the offence were clearly put to the Jury, 11 Cr. L.J. 340 at 344= 5 Ind. Cas. 981. Where the charge as a whole is distinctly in favour of the defence it is not enough for establishing misdirection that more stress could have been laid by the Judge on the defects in the prosecution, 27 Cr. L.J. 176= 91 Ind. Cas. 960. It is immaterial how often the Jury may be addressed by the pleaders on both sides upon the law. The responsibility of laying down the law for the guidance of the Jury rested entirely with the Judge, and the verdict arrived at by the Jury in the absence of such direction on the law by which they should be guided cannot be accepted as a valid verdict, 29 C. 379. Where a charge to the Jury stated that the law on the subject has already been presented to them by the Public Prosecutor and that in the opinion of the Judge no different point of law arose in the case, it was held that it was not a sufficient compliance with this section which required the Judge to lay down the law by which the Jury are to be guided, 26 Cr. L.J. 1090= 83 Ind. Cas. 178. The mere fact that the Counsel for the defence thought it unnecessary to place reliance on the defence evidence and failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case cannot justify the omission on the part of the Judge to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence, 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.)= 21 C.L.J. 377; 23 C.W.N. 426. If there is evidence from which a right of private defence could possibly be raised, the Judge must put the case of private defence to the Jury even though the accused had not expressly set up that plea, 43 C.L.J. 139 at 142; 53 C. 990. A Judge should not hand over a copy of the Penal Code to the Jury nor allow them to study a commentary on the law but should himself explain any point on which they might have expressed and he had given an opinion on them. Where the Jury is in need of directions, and the Judge made over to them a copy of the Indian Penal Code leaving them to decide under what sections the offence fell it was held that he had failed in his duty of 'laying down the law,' 6 Bom. L.R. 258 at 260-261. It is the duty of the Judge to ascertain their doubts and explain the law applicable to the facts of the case, 14 C. 164 and 43 C.L.J. 537. Where the principles or rules of law on any matter have been laid down in general terms by the Legislature, a Judge will in most cases be wise to refer to the exact terms of the law and then instruct the Jury with regard to its application to the facts of the case before them, instead of adopting as principles passages from text-books, (however eminent the writer may be) which briefly refer to what is laid down (or is supposed to be laid down) in reported cases or even to passages from judgments of reported cases themselves which may mislead by not being correctly understood in relation to the facts of the particular case, or possibly even by not containing an accurate exposition of the law, 26 M. 1 at 16. A large number of cases should not be cited to the Jury, for such a course is calculated to confuse them and to lead to a miscarriage of justice, 1 C.L.J. 159= 2 Cr. L.J. 157. Rulings are not to be cited to the Jury asking them to differentiate between them. It is for the Judge and the Judge only to lay down the law. The minds of the Jury should never be confused by having a number of conflicting authorities or any authorities laid before them. By confusing the Jury by laying before them a number of conflicting authorities and leaving it to them to choose between them amounts to a misdirection, 16 C.W.N. 46= 13 Cr. L.J. 26= 13 Ind. Cas. 218. The Judge ought not to discuss and argue points of law with the Jury but he is merely to state the law as it stands; such discussion and argument, however careful and learned as to what the law is, invariably tend to confuse and mislead the Jury, 8 W.R. (Cr.) 87; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 71 at 73. There is no prohibition in law forbidding a Judge to read to the Jury in his charge from a judgments. In practice it is not desirable to refer and to read from several law reports as it may have the effect of confusing the minds of laymen. But in explaining the dividing line between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, Judges have frequently read, in their charge, a passage from some wellknown judgments as accurately illustrating the distinction. In so doing they are acting very properly, 4 Ran. 438 (F.B.). Omission (1) to state the elements of theft, 6 M.L.T. 324, or (2) to explain what constitutes robbery, 30 M. 44; 2 Cr. L. Rev. 210-11 Cr. L.J. 164-4 Ind. Cas. 1081; 23 C. 379, or (3) to explain the difference between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, 35 C. 531; 36 C. 281, or (4) omission to direct Jury as to right of private defence of property under S. 103, I.P.O., 33 C.L.J. 525, or (5) to lay down the elements which constitute fraudulent possession of a forged document, 16 B. 163, or (6) omission to explain wrongful gain and loss showing intention in a case of breach of trust, 15 Cr. L.J. 257-23 Ind. Cas. 465, or (7) omission to state that accused is not bound to call defence evidence but can rely on the weakness of the prosecution, 15 C.W.N. 198-11 Cr. L.J. 557-8 Ind. Cas. 52, or (8) to give directions as to accomplice's testimony, 5 W.R.Cr. 80 (F.B.); 12 M. 196; 5 M.L.T. 355-1 Ind. Cas. 547; 29 C. 782; 10 B. 319; 12 Cr. L.J. 537-12 Ind. Cas. 513; 8 A. 306 and 509 (but it has been held in 52 C. 595 that an approver need not be corroborated as regards every single statement and if the Judge directs the Jury that if the approver was corroborated on some points they might act on his evidence, it is no misdirection), or (9) omission to warn Jury to pay attention to the result of previous proceedings; 31 C.L.J. 305-21 Cr. L.J. 554-56 Ind. Cas. 558 or (10) to state the value to be attached to retracted confessions, 21 M. 83; 26 M. 33; 31 M. 127; 20 A. 133; 11 Cr. L.J. 538-7 Ind. Cas. 915; 33 M. 46; 26 Cr. L.J. 360-84 Ind. Cas. 712; 26 Cr. L.J. 1146-83 Ind. Cas. 453; 4 Cr. L.J. 502, or (11) to direct a Jury to give benefit of doubt to the accused 1 M.L.T. 350, but in 27 Cr. L.J. 217-92 Ind. Cas. 169, it was held that such omission is not a misdirection vitiating the trial although as a matter of practice it is usual to end the charge with these words (12) omission to put to the Jury the law as to right of private defence arising on admitted facts and to direct their attention as to whether the accused was and if so, how far justified in attacking his opponent to save himself, 53 C. 980; 43 C.L.J. 138 at 142; 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.) (13) omission to draw pointed attention of the Jury to the considerable time which had elapsed between the theft and the recovery of stolen property from the possession of the persons charged, 1929 M.W.N. 577; (14) failure to mention to the Jury that a witness was an accomplice, 28 Cr. L.J. 278-103 Ind. Cas. 358, will be non-compliance with this section amounting to misdirection. But failure to mention to the Jury when dealing with individual accused's case that approver's evidence should be received with caution but when he had mentioned it previously it is no misdirection), 54 C. 539, when 'reasonable doubt' was explained as lacuna in the prosecution evidence and at the same time the Judge mentioned to the Jury that the prosecution evidence was full and sufficient in all particulars not giving rise to any reasonable doubt but if the Jury were of opinion that something was lacking in the evidence there would be room for reasonable doubt, it was held that there was no misdirection 31 C.W.N. 410-101 Ind. Cas. 661. It was held to be a misdirection for the Judge to tell the Jury that there was no evidence and ask them to return a verdict of not guilty, when he refused an adjournment applied for by the Public Prosecutor, empannelled a Jury and asked the Public Prosecutor to open the case, the Public Prosecutor stating that he had no witnesses present in Court, 30 C.W.N. 190. Omission to point out all the points in the accused's favour on the question of identification of property is not a non-direction justifying the reversal of the verdict when the evidence has, on the whole been, fairly put to them, 52 C. 223. A mere omission or a mis-statement in a summing up is not itself a mis-direction when the case has been fully heard by the Jury but it will be otherwise if a mis-carriage of justice has occurred by such omission or mis-statement, the Jury having been probably misled by it, 23 Cr. L.J. 177-99 Ind. Cas. 849. Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection. Those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was not said which was left to be understood. Every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions raised by Counsel on both sides, 19 C.W.N. 693 (F.B.)-21 C.L.J. 377-16 Cr. L.J. 561-30 Ind. Cas. 113; 17 Cr. L.J. 353 at 360-35 Ind. Cas. 657-1 Pat. L.J. 317. The charge to the Jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions of law in it, these will of course be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the Jury, it must needs be, that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the proceedings in black type. It would however not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as misdirections, if upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the Jury's province . . . These observations are made in order to discountenance the idea that in the region of fact unless something gross amounting to a complete misdescription of the whole hearing of the evidence has occurred, there should not be any interference, 41 C. 1023 (P.C.) at 1062-63 followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 721=110 Ind. Cas. 577. Omission to charge the Jury on points of capital importance telling in favour of the accused, 17 Bom. L.R. 1059; 18 C.W.N. 180=15 Cr. L.J. 147=22 Ind. Cas. 723; 11 Cr. L.J. 13=4 Ind. Cas. 597 or omission to direct the Jury on an important point which may serve to help the defence, 44 C.L.J. 253, is a misdirection. See also 28 Cr. L.J. 19=99 Ind. Cas. 51. A Judge should tell the Jury that absconding is a matter which is equally consistent with innocence as with guilt and it could be considered only with the rest of the evidence and that by itself, it is of no weight, 11 Cr. L.J. 557=8 Ind. Cas. 52.

Appeals.—S. 418 lays down that where the trial was by Jury, appeal shall be on a matter of law only and S. 423 (1) (b), infra, deals with the powers of the Appellate Court. Where the Appellate Court is satisfied that there was a misdirection to the Jury, it is not bound to order a retrial solely on the ground of misdirection. The question for further consideration is whether the accused has been in fact prejudiced thereby and whether upon a proper summing up of the entire evidence, the Jury would have come to a different conclusion, 8 W.R. (Cr.) 80 (F.B.) at 90; 1 W.R. (Cr.) 51; 25 M. 1; 25 C. 230; 30 C. 822; 29 C. 782. In a case where the Judge had not sufficiently explained the law to the Jury, a retrial need not necessarily be ordered if the Court is of opinion that the Jury accepted the evidence which was placed before them and on the evidence the Jury had returned a proper verdict, 7 Pat. 361.

Duty of Judge.

298. (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge—

(a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove, and the admissibility of evidence or, the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties; and, in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties;

(b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial;

(c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given;

(d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury, and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors.

(2) The Judge may, if he thinks proper, in the course of his summing up, express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact or upon any question of mixed law and fact, relevant to the proceeding.

Illustrations.

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible.

It is for the Judge, and not for the Jury, to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved.

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document, the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed.

Province of the Judge and Jury.—"The distinction between the province of the Judge and that of the Jury is in the English law, clearly defined and observed with jealous accuracy. The Jury must in all cases determine the value and effect of evidence which is submitted to them. They must decide what degree of credit is to be given to a witness, and hold the balance between conflicting probabilities. The law throws upon them the whole responsibility of ascertaining facts in dispute and the Judge does not attempt to interfere with the exercise of their unfettered discretion in this respect. But on the other hand the Judge has his peculiar duty in the conduct of a trial. He must determine whether the kind of evidence offered is such as ought or ought not to be submitted to the Jury and what liabilities it imposes. Where any questions of law arise he alone determines them, and their consideration is absolutely withdrawn from the Jury who must in such cases follow the direction of the Judge, or if they perversely refuse to do so, their verdict will be set aside and a new trial granted. If in order to determine this, it is necessary to have recourse to evidence, as for instance to show that a proposed witness is incompetent, this evidence must be received by the Judge, and adjudicated upon by him alone. The rule cannot be better or more concisely enunciated, than as laid down in a recent case. . . . If the evidence offered at the trial by either party is evidence by law admissible for the determination of the question before a Jury, a Judge is bound to lay it before them and to call upon them to decide upon the effect of such evidence. But whether such evidence when offered is of that character and description which makes it admissible by law, is a question for the determination of the Judge alone and is left, solely to his discretion. Whether there is any evidence is a question for the Judge but whether the evidence is sufficient is a question for the Jury. So when a question arises, as to the admissibility of evidence the facts on which its admissibility depends are to be determined by the Judge and not by the Jury," Forsyth His. of Tr. by Jury, pp. 282-83. Where the Judge charges the Jury to the effect that there is not sufficient evidence to establish the plea of the accused he is really trenching upon the peculiar province of the Jury who are the sole judges of fact, 29 B. 215, what the Jury are to receive is for the Judge and what they are to believe is for the Jury, Ratanlal 452; when there is no evidence against the accused the Judge ought to charge the Jury for an acquittal and not to leave it to the Jury to say guilty or not guilty, 7 W.R. (Cr.) 39. A jury may be satisfied with minimum proof but where there is nothing which amounts to proof the case should not be put to the Jury, 16 W.R. (Cr.) 19. It is for the Judge to say that such and such witness does in fact corroborate. That is the function of the Jury and depends upon whether they believe the particular witness or not, 32 C.W.N. 245 at 950. It is for the Jury to say how far the evidence is to be believed and if the facts as to which evidence is given are such that from them a further inference of fact may legitimately be drawn, it is for the Jury to say whether that inference is to be drawn or not. But it is for the Judge to determine subject to review as a matter of law whether from these facts that further inference may legitimately be drawn—per Lord Blackburn in 3 A.C. 193. What a Judge says to the Jury upon the law is absolute and binding direction on them. What he addresses to them upon the facts are only such observations, as he thinks necessary and proper, in assisting them to arrive at a conclusion upon the evidence which is wholly their province to deal with as they think—per Markby, J., in 20 W.R. (Cr.) 41. The Jury should take the law from the Judge, 6 Bom. L.R. 258; 14 C. 164. The Jury, as has been pointed out in several cases are the only persons who can pronounce a definite opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused who are tried before them. They cannot abdicate their function in favour of the Judge. They cannot return a verdict to the effect that they agree with whatever opinion the Judge may form as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, 43 C.L.J. 477=30 Cr. L.J. 54 (1)=113 Ind. Cas. 70 (1).

They cannot return a verdict to the effect that they agree with whatever opinion the Judge may form as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, 48 C.L.J. 477=30 Cr. L.J. 54 (1)=113 Ind. Cas. 70 (1).

Scope of the section.—This section does not lay down any principles on the of misdirection but it lays down what are the duties of the trying Judge in a criminal tried with a Jury both in the course of the trial and in the summing up. It is laid down at the close of the section that the Judge may, if he thinks proper, express to the Jury his opinion on a question of fact or upon any question of mixed law and fact relevant to the case. Many of the Indian decisions have laid down qualifications which are in the nature of legislation than interpretation of the section. A Judge has a right to express his opinion and if such expression of opinion is unfair and prejudices the accused, the appellate Court can and should interfere to remove the consequences of such action by finding misdirection; but to this clear and sound rule of law some Courts have added the condition in effect that every word that a Judge says wherein he expresses his opinion should be qualified by most elaborate safeguards pointing out to the Jury that it was for them to decide a particular fact, 29 Cr. L.J. 721=110 Ind. Cas. 577. The law of evidence is a part of general law. The question of what is or what is not evidence, that is to say what amounts to or does not amount to in law to evidence is a question to be decided by the Judge, as is the question whether there is any evidence in law to go to the Jury. Similarly the question as to what is or what is not, what amounts or does not amount to corroborative evidence in law is a question to be decided by the Judge. Similarly it is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the Jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's testimony which corroborates or does not corroborate in some material particulars tending to show that the accused committed the offence charged, 32 C.W.N. 913 at 919-50. What the Jury are to receive it is for the Judge to decide and what they are to believe is for the Jury, Ratanlal 452.

Judge to decide questions of Law.—The questions (1) whether a communication is privileged, 10 W.R. (Cr.) 14; Ratanlal 730; (2) whether the offence of rape was committed when complainant was found to be a consenting party, 19 B. 735; (3) whether a child is competent to give evidence, are questions of law, for the Judge to decide; but a question as to a previous conviction of the accused is a question of fact for the Jury to decide, 8 W. R. (Cr.) 60; 20 W. R. (Cr.) 40. It is the duty of the Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of a trial. If his decision is erroneous it is liable to be corrected by a superior tribunal in appeal or in revision; but as long as the case is before the Judge, he is responsible for the decision and he cannot relieve himself of that responsibility by seeking advice or instructions even from a superior Court. It is on this principle the Privy Council in 28 C. 621 disapproved, the procedure adopted by the Judges of the High Court consulting a brother Judge as to the construction of a Bengali document 18 Cr. L. J. 913=42 Ind. Cas. 145. Whenever from a given state of facts found by the Jury to be true, the law has settled that a certain inference shall be drawn, it is the duty of the Judge to pronounce what the legal inference is and not to leave it to the Jury to determine. In other words, if a statutory enactment or uniform course of decisions has put a particular construction on proved or admitted facts, it is the province of the Judge to declare that construction where the circumstances of the case are such that it applies to them, Forsyth His. Tr. by Jury, p. 287. See also ibid. pp. 284 & 285.

Judge to decide questions as to relevancy of facts.—It is for the Judge and not for the Jury to decide all questions as to the relevancy of facts. As to relevancy of facts see Es. 4 to 16 of the Indian Evidence Act. The question as to the relevancy of a confession is for the Judge to decide, 28 M. 33.

The admissibility of evidence.—In a Sessions trial what the Jury are to receive is for the Judge and what they are to believe is for the Jury. The question whether a confession was voluntarily made or not, has to be decided by the Judge for admitting or excluding it in evidence. The Judge must admit it if it was made voluntarily and not caused by inducement, threat or promise, 11 Bom. L. R. 332=10 Cr. L. J. 63=2 Ind. Cas. 517. Whether there be any evidence is for the Judge and whether sufficient evidence is for the Jury, Roa. Cr. Ev. & Pro., p. 98 (13th Ed.), see also 20 B. 215. So also whether the accused was in police custody so as to make the confession admissible in evidence, 31 M. 127. It is also for the Judge to determine whether confessions retracted at the trial are admissible, Ratanlal 730. The admissibility of a confession is for the Judge and its truth or falsity is for the Jury. If a confession is voluntary but false, the Judge must admit it in evidence and put it to the Jury with proper directions as to its falsity for the purpose of appraisal of its worth. If the Court doubts the voluntariness of a confession, it must be excluded from evidence, 52 C. 67. It is in the province of the Judge to judge the intention of the accused as it is in the province of the Jury to weigh the evidence as to the truth or falsity of the same, 3 W. R. (Cr.) 59. Under this section it is the duty of the Judge to decide the admissibility of the evidence and he has to discharge this duty irrespective of the question whether objection has or has not been taken by the parties. When a confession is retracted, he has to decide whether it has been duly recorded and free from infirmities and made voluntarily, 26 Cr. L. J. 606=85 Ind. Cas. 830. Where a Judge said that if the confession were true it was enough to warrant a conviction without stating its relevancy or otherwise, it was held that the Judge had misdirected the Jury, 26 M. 33. See also Ratanlal 812.

Propriety of questions asked—In this connection see (1) Ss. 141 to 143 Indian Evidence Act as to leading questions, (2) S. 146 as to lawful questions in cross-examination, (3) S. 151 as to indecent and scandalous questions, (4) S. 152 as to questions intended to insult or annoy, (5) S. 121 questions regarding conduct as Judge or Magistrate.

In his discretion prevent production of inadmissible evidence.—It is the duty of the Judge to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence whether objected to by the parties or not. That duty will be best fulfilled in cases of confessions, by the Judge inquiring from the accused or if he is represented by a pleader from his pleader whether the confession proposed to be put in is or is not objected to. If objected it is for him to decide its admissibility or otherwise. He ought not in any circumstances to throw on the Jury the duty of saying whether the confession is voluntary or not. It may be that the Jury in considering all the circumstances may take the question of the voluntariness of the confession into consideration but the question of the voluntary character of the confession and its admissibility is not to be left to them by the Judge. The weight to be attached to a confession admitted in evidence by the Judge may be left to the Jury, 11 Bom. L.R. 332=10 Cr. L.J. 63=2 Ind. Cas. 517. The Judge is given a discretion to prevent the letting in of inadmissible evidence. The moment a witness begins to give hearsay evidence which is inadmissible, it is the duty of the Judge to stop the witness. It is not enough if the Judge subsequently asks the Jury to reject such hearsay evidence and decide on legal evidence, 7 W.R. (Cr.) 23; and 8 M.L.T. 372=11 Cr. L.J. 633=8 Ind. Cas. 573. It is the duty of the Judge to see that the evidence which should not be allowed to go in, say a privileged communication under Ss. 126 and 127 of the Indian Evidence Act, statement to a pleader or his clerk, is not let in, though no objection is raised by the accused, 25 C 736; 52 C 67 at 77. Where material evidence which ought not to have been admitted is allowed to go in along with other legally admissible evidence, it would be mere speculative refinement to hold that the Jury must have relied upon the latter and rejected the former, 27 B 626 at 633. There are certain exceptions to the law regulating the admissibility of evidence which apply only to criminal trials and which have acquired their force by the constant and invariable practices of Judges when presiding in criminal trials. They are rules of prudence and discretion and have become so integral a part of the administration of the criminal law as almost to have acquired the full force of law. A familiar instance of such a practice is to be found in the direction of the Judges to Juries strongly warning them not to act upon the evidence of an accomplice unless it is corroborated. Such practice has found its place in the administration of criminal law, because Judges are aware from their experience that in order to ensure a fair trial for the accused and to prevent the operation of indirect but not the less serious prejudice to his interest, it is desirable in certain circumstances to relax the strict application of the law of evidence—per Lord Reading in 1914 A.C. 564.

Sub-section (1) (b).—The construction of written documents (except in the case of innuendoes in libel) is entirely for the Court which must determine what the legal effect of the instrument is, but where it contains words of technical art, or which have by any local usage a particular meaning, this is submitted to the Jury who have to pronounce what that meaning is; and then the Judge, having had the language thus as it were translated to him, defines the legal consequences which follow from the document itself, Forsyth His. Tr. by Jury, p. 284-85.

Meaning and construction of documents.—Interpretation and application are two distinct things falling under different categories. Interpretation of a document is for the Judge and its application to a particular case is the function of the Jury. A Judge is entitled to draw attention to an alteration on the face of a document alleged to be false, 17 W.R. (Cr.) 58. It is for the Judge to point out to the Jury the legal effect of a document or a portion of it relied on by the prosecution or defence, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 69.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section enables the Judge to express his opinion to the Jury as to the effect of certain portions of the evidence, but at the same time he must be careful to add that they are not bound by his opinion, but that it is for the Jury to form their opinion on the evidence on record, 10 C. 970; 34 C. 698; 13 C.W.N. 153; 7 C.L.J. 599; 4 C.W.N. 196 and 576; 26 M. 467; 14 A. 25; 23 B. 316; 28 Cr. L.J. 177=99 Ind. Cas. 849; 6 Bom. L.R. 31; 35 C. 531; 25 C. 230. A Judge while directing the Jury is clearly entitled to express his opinion on the facts of the case, provided he leaves the issues of fact to the Jury to determine, 12 Cr. App. Cas. 221; 26 A.L.J. 296 at 297; but he should not express his opinion on important matters of fact so positively as to leave to the Jury no loop-hole for taking any other view 1 W.R. (Cr.) 2 and 23; Ratanlal 743 and 728. If a Judge attempts to take a case out of the Jury's province by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon the Jury, it is a case of misdirection; but if he simply states his opinion which the law allows him to state in such a manner that intelligent Jurymen should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else. It is not necessary for him to add as a safeguard a remark that it is only his opinion and they are perfectly at liberty to form their own. If such presumption were made the Jury system would stand condemned. If the Jury were not wanting in ordinary intelligence and are not servile, it is clear that a Judge who expresses his opinion on a point of fact as his own opinion does not require to add the qualification that the Jury need not accept that opinion unless they wish to do so. On questions of fact the Judge's opinion in no way binds the Jury but the Judge has a right to express his opinion so that the Jury may know what it is. The principle underlying the rule by which the Judge is permitted to give his opinion in his summing up and the manner in which that opinion should be given is stated thus by Sir James Fitz James Stephen "After the evidence is concluded the Judge sums up; his position from first to last is that of a moderator between two litigants. He permits or forbids certain things to be done, but he originates nothing. His summing up may and generally does indicate his opinion, but it is an opinion which is the result of the evidence laid before him and not of an independent inquiry." In the case of Judges in India who are permitted to call witnesses independently in cases where they think it necessary they do occasionally originate. To all intents and purposes the fact remains that the opinion of the Judge in summing up in India is almost invariably the opinion on the evidence laid before him, 29 Cr. L.J. 721 at 723=110 Ind. Cas. 577. When a Judge lays down that there is not sufficient evidence to establish the plea of the accused, he, in fact, trenches upon the peculiar province of the Jury, 20 B. 215. The Judge should not state his own view of important matters of fact so positively as to leave to the Jury no loop-hole for taking any other view, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 23; Ratanlal 743; 13 W.R. (Cr.) 34; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 41. Native Juries are in all cases too apt to follow what they imagine to be the opinion of the presiding officer and any expression of the Judge's own sentiments should be avoided. The most that a charge should contain is a statement of the evidence pro and con with a running commentary as to its agreement or disagreement with the other facts of the case, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 26. They are too apt to take what they think of the Judge's opinion as their guide without paying any attention to the facts of the case and so a Judge should go no further than a general commentary on the evidence and a statement of what is the legal offence proved should such evidence be credited, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 2 at 3. But in the matter of sifting evidence and of weighing of probabilities the Judge may probably have more experience than the Jury and there is no reason why the Jury should not have the benefit of that experience, 1864 W.R. (Cr.) 6. It is no objection that the Judge lets the Jury know the impression which the evidence has made on his mind and at all events the party objecting to such a course should show that the impression entertained by the Judge was not justified by the evidence, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 83 (F.B.) at 87.

Any question of mixed law and fact.—For example (1) the question whether there is any evidence to go to the Jury, (2) the question as to the reasonable time for postponing a trial under S. 344, infra, (3) the question whether a child of tender years is competent to give evidence, (4) the question as to bona fides, negligence, reasonable cause, due diligence etc. In a trial by Jury, it is the function of the Jury to find the facts upon the evidence laid before them and for that purpose to be guided by the Judge as to the law which is applicable to the case and in all cases it is the duty of the Judge to point out to them the law. The law of evidence is a part of the general law. The question is what is or what is not evidence, that is to say, what amounts or does not amount in law to evidence is a question of law to be decided by the Judge, as is the question whether there is any evidence in law to go to the Jury. Similarly the question as to what is or not, what amounts or does not amount to corroborative evidence in law is a question of law to be decided by the Judge, 32 C.W.N. 945 at 949.

Duty of jury.

299. It is the duty of the jury—

(a) to decide which view of the facts is true, and then to return the verdict which under such view ought, according to the direction of the Judge, to be returned ;

(b) to determine the meaning of all technical terms (other than terms of law) and words used in an unusual sense which it may be necessary to determine, whether such words occur in documents or not ;

(c) to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact ;

(d) to decide whether general indefinite expressions do or do not apply to particular cases, unless such expressions refer to legal procedure or unless their meaning is ascertained by law, in either of which cases it is the duty of the Judge to decide their meaning.

Illustrations.

(a) A is tried for the murder of B.

It is the duty of the Judge to explain to the Jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, and to tell them under what views of the facts A ought to be convicted of murder, or of culpable homicide, or to be acquitted.

It is the duty of the Jury to decide which view of the facts is true, and to return a verdict in accordance with the direction of the Judge, whether that direction is right or wrong, and whether they do or do not agree with it.

(b) The question is whether a person entertained a reasonable belief on a particular point—whether work was done with reasonable skill or due diligence.

Each of these is a question for the Jury.

To decide which view of the facts is true—"The law does not demand that they (Jury) should act on certainties and upon certainties alone. In the passage of our lives, in our acts, in our thoughts, we do not deal with certainties—we act on just and reasonable convictions, founded upon justice and reasonable grounds"—per Lord Coleridge. The whole view of the facts alleged, is to be taken into consideration and then decide whether taken of the facts by the prosecution leads to the conclusion as to the guilt of person. See the illustrations to the section. For example, in a case obvious disadvantage which might appertain to any other form of procedure by allowing them to disperse after delivery of the charge will open the door to all kinds of possible abuses such as the chance of an improper communication being made to the Jury by persons, or by the Jury to persons interested in the subject matter of the trial. Where, after Judge's charge to the Jury, the Jury were allowed to disperse for several hours and then permitted to return to consider and deliver their verdict the trial was held bad. 26 Cr. L.J. 861=86 Ind. Cas 717. See also 22 C.W.N. 730=27 C.L.J. 553=19 Cr. L.J. 737=46 Ind. Cas. 513. At the conclusion of the trial the Jury are not allowed to separate until they have considered and returned their verdict or have been discharged for failure to agree. The verdict is to be delivered by the foreman and the assent of the Jurors to a verdict pronounced by the foreman in the presence and hearing of the rest without their express dissent is to be conclusively presumed. Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr., p. 203 (25th Ed.) If a Juror after the summing up separates himself from his colleagues and not being under the control of the Court converses or is in a position to converse with other persons, it constitutes an irregularity which renders all the proceedings abortive, and the only course open to the Court is to discharge the Jury and commence the proceedings afresh. If the Jury are unable to agree upon their verdict without retiring from their box they may withdraw to a convenient place appointed for that purpose, an officer being sworn to keep them, and to suffer none to speak to them without leave of the Court or speak to them himself except only to ask them whether they are agreed. During the retirement of the Jury no officer of Court may enter into any discussion with the Jury as to the case or answer any question put to him by them. If any further assistance is required by them it must be given in open Court by the Judge in the presence of the accused. Ibid. 211. The Jury are not entitled to discuss the case which is being tried before them nor can they talk to any one connected with the accused, 55 C. 279 at 284.

301. When the jury have considered their verdict, the foreman shall inform the Judge what is their verdict, or what is the verdict of a majority.

Delivery of verdict.

The law does not prescribe any particular form in which the Jury ought to return their verdict, and they are at liberty to deliver it in any form which they think fit, 14 W.R. (Cr.) 59. The Jury may ignore the grave charges and return a verdict of guilty on a lesser charge, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 41. A Jury trying an offence has authority under S. 238, supra, to find as an incident in such trial, that certain facts only which constitute a minor offence have been proved and return a verdict of guilty of such offence, though such minor offence be not triable by Jury and the accused is not discharged with such minor offence, 26 M. 243. If the Jury wish to say something in addition to their verdict, they must be allowed to do so, e.g., a recommendation for mercy, and a Judge ought not to stop them the moment the verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty" is delivered by the foreman. In this country it is undesirable to stop the Jury at such a stage of the proceedings, for it may so happen that before the verdict is recorded, the foreman of the Jury may make some observation in respect of that verdict which may show to the presiding Judge that the Jury have not properly understood the case and that it would be the duty of the Judge not to record the verdict but to re-charge the Jury so as to lay the case properly before them, and when the words which the foreman attempted to add were very material, the High Court ordered a retrial, as the accused was prejudiced 30 C. 435. The verdict of the Jury should be the collective opinion of the Jury as a body arrived at after mature consideration and ascertained and announced by the foreman. Individual opinion cannot be asked by the Judge even where they are sitting as Assessors on some of the charges, 36 M. 535 at 538. Where there are more than one accused and where there are several charges, it would be a convenient course if the officer of the Court were to take the verdict of the Jury upon each charge separately, 50 C. 658 at 663. The sworn statements of Jurors and the evidences of admission by them as to the mode in which their verdict has been arrived at are inadmissible but the evidence of other persons as to the same is admissible. 40 C. 693.

302. If the jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration. After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable, the jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous.

Procedure where jury differ.

This section lays down the procedure to be followed when the Jury differ. It is only in cases where the Jury are not unanimous in their verdict that a Court may require them to retire for further consideration but after delivery of the verdict, the Judge cannot direct the Jury to retire for further consideration. Where it is unanimous, it must be received by Judge unless it is contrary to law, 5 C. 871 at 873; 13 Cr. L. J. 678=25 Ind. Cas. 1006; 3 Cr. L. J. 1. When the Jury are not unanimous in the verdict, the proper course for the Judge is to require them, under this section, to retire for further consideration giving them further direction on matters of law, 6 Bom. L.R. 258 at 261; 8 C. 739 at 754. In cases of disagreement among the Jury the individual opinions of the members are never intended to be disclosed, 36 M. 585. In cases of disagreement among the Jury, the individual opinion of the Jurors by name are not intended to be disclosed, and such a procedure is irregular, 26 Cr. L. J. 1316=89 Ind. Cas. 386 where 36 M. 585 is followed. When the Judge agrees with the verdict of the majority such a verdict in law, has the same effect, as a unanimous verdict, 19 C.W.N. 633 (F.B.)=16 Cr. L. J. 561=30 Ind. Cas. 113.

303. (1) Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, the jury shall return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried, and the Judge may ask them such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is.

Verdict to be given on each charge.
Judge may question jury.

(2) Such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

Questions and answers to be recorded.

Scope of the section.—This section enacts the principle of English law laid down by Blackburn, J. in L.R. 1 Q.B. 289 at 319. "It is the duty of the Judges to take care that the verdict of the Jury is not imperfect and if the Jury have completely omitted to answer the questions left to them, they ought to point out the omission and to have it corrected. When, however, the Judge receives an imperfect verdict, it is clear that the Judge has made a mistake; and he ought not to have discharged the Jury. But one good verdict is given the case is res judicata. If the verdict of the Jury is not imperfect, the Judge has no right to question the Jury to find out the reason for their verdict." A clear and concise finding of the Jury on the main facts submitted to them should be accepted even though a verdict of not guilty has been delivered 7 Pat. 55. The verdict is to be received in the form in which it is given. The law does not prescribe any specific form in which the Jury are to give their verdict. They may give it in any form they think fit and if it is not exhaustive it is the duty of the Judge to question and elicit a complete finding, 3 Cr. L.J. 1 at 3 (F.B.)=3 L.B.R. 73, the Judge has no power to control it, 7 W.R. (Cr.) 22; 2 A.L.J. 475=2 Cr. L. J. 357. The Indian authorities preponderate against questioning the Jury where their verdict is general and has been delivered without ambiguity and without incompleteness and where there is no reason to suspect a misconception or disobedience of the doctrines of law, 9 C. 53; 8 C. 739 at 754; 5 C. 871; 7 W.R. (Cr.) 22; 19 B. 733; 6 Bom. L.R. 258; Ratanlal 244 and 442; 11 Cr. L.J. 557=8 Ind. Cas. 52; 21 Cr. L.J. 829=58 Ind. Cas. 829, but to ascertain the true verdict questions may be put to the Jury and such questions and answers are to be recorded, 8 C. 739 at 754; 50 C. 653 but where a clear verdict is given there is no power to question the Jury, 9 C. 53; 30 M. 469; 2 A.L.J. 475=2 Cr. L.J. 357.

Shall return a verdict on all the charges—If the Jury return a verdict on some counts but disagree on others, it would seem that the accused can be retried on counts on which the disagreement has taken place, even after judgment on the counts on which he has been convicted or acquitted as each Count is a separate indictment but where the counts are not distinct offences but a single transaction, the accused is entitled to plead autre fois convict or acquit on the second trial, Arch. Cr. Pl. & Ev. Pr. p. 212 (25th Ed.) When the verdict given by the Jury was confused and unintelligible it was the duty of the Judge to obtain from them a proper and correct verdict before accepting the same. When an accused was charged under Es. 304 and 352 I.P.O. and the Jury returned a verdict of not guilty under S. 304 and on being asked their verdict on the other charge returned a verdict of guilty under S. 334, I.P.O., it was not proper for the Judge to have accepted that verdict, 43 C.L.J. 537.

The verdict may be general or special. A general verdict is the ordinary verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty" but a special verdict is one where the Jury state their findings on all questions of facts which are necessary to decide the case and it remains for the Judge to apply the law to those findings under S. 299 (a), supra. Verdict means the collective opinion of the Jury as a body arrived at after mutual consultation ascertained and pronounced by their foreman, 26 Cr. L.J. 1346 (1)=89 Ind. Cas. 386. The Jury are not bound to return the verdict in any particular form. See also 36 M. 585. Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, the Jury are bound to return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried, 41 C. 1072 at 1038. The requirements of the law are satisfied if in returning the verdict the Jury returns a verdict of guilty on a minor offence forming part of one of the charges, 5 C. 871 at 873.

Judge may ask such questions as are necessary—This section which permits questions to be put to the Jury in order to ascertain what their verdict is negatives by implication a power on the part of the presiding Judge to question them otherwise, 29 M. 91. This section no doubt empowers the Judge to ask the Jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is, but it was never contemplated that on ascertaining that the Jury are not unanimous the Judge should make minute inquiries to learn the nature of the majority and its opinion as a verdict according as it coincides with his own opinion or not. Whatever may be the opinion of the Judge if he does go so far as to ask the Jury what is the exact majority, he ought to receive their verdict without hesitation and if he differs from it, he ought to proceed under S. 307, supra, 10 C. 140; 15 B. 453. It is only when it is necessary in order to ascertain what their verdict really is that Judge is justified in putting questions to the Jury. Unless a necessity of the kind truly exists the questions are not justified in law. No doubt the Legislature has thought that it would be very dangerous to give to the Judge the power of cross-examining the Jury after they had delivered their final verdict with a view to show that the conclusions which they had arrived at were not logical or were inconsistent or in order to provide materials, upon which the Judge be enabled to dispute the finality of the verdict, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 1 See also 7 Pat. 85. There is no provision of law which empowers a Judge to question the Jury as to their reasons for an unambiguous verdict, 28 B. 412; 15 B. 432; 30 M. 453; 13 Cr. L.J. 586=15 Ind. Cas. 1002; 22 M.L.J. 338=13 Cr. L.J. 235=14 Ind. Cas. 669. The Judge may question the Jury to ascertain what their verdict really is, e.g., where there is apparently some lurking uncertainty in their mind, but he must not cross-examine them for the purpose of showing that the verdict is unreasonable or with a view to afterwards dispute the finality of the verdict, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 1. Where the verdict is ambiguous, it is the duty of the Judge to ascertain what they meant, and for this purpose he may question them, 7 C.W.N. 139. Where three known and named persons were charged with dacoity with two other unknown persons and the Jury while acquitting one found the other two guilty of dacoity, it was held that it was open to the Jury while holding that one of the accused was not properly identified to find that the total number of persons who took part in the occurrence was five and when the Jury while acquitting one found the other two guilty of dacoity, the Judge should have asked the Jury definitely whether they considered the possible result of their acquittal and whether they still found the number of persons who took part was five, 33 M.L.J. 732=1927 M.W.N. 833=29 Cr. L.J. 5=103

Ind. Cas. 341. This was followed by Madhavan Nair and Reilly, JJ. in another case holding that the principle laid down in the above decision was a salutary rule to be followed by the learned Sessions Judges. See also 1929 M.W.N. 778 which followed 53 M.L.J. 732. See also 28 Cr. L.J. 1007-105 Ind. Cas. 831. The Judge has no right to put questions to the Jury when they had returned a plain simple verdict of "not guilty", 27 C.W.N. 625. It may have been erroneous but it certainly was not ambiguous and the duty of the Judge was to receive it and record it without asking questions about it, 9 C. 53; 32 C. 739. Where the Jury returned a verdict "of guilty but not voluntarily" in a trial under S. 326 I.P.C., and the Judge without further questioning them accepted the verdict as one of guilty and convicted the accused under S. 338, I.P.C., it was held by the High Court that the verdict was in effect a verdict of "not guilty" and the Judge was wrong without further questioning the Jury in treating it as a verdict of "guilty," 12 C.W.N. 530. When the Jury returned a verdict on a general issue of "guilty" or "not guilty" and there is ambiguity as to the precise offence of which the accused are convicted or acquitted, this section does not authorise the Judge to question the Jury, as the only questions he is entitled to put to the Jury are such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is, 30 M. 459 applied in 13 Cr. L.J. 586=15 Ind. Cas. 1002: 43 M. 744; 27 C.W.N. 626; 2 A.L.J. 475. But where the verdict returned was not a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty but a special or qualified verdict to ascertain the exact scope and import of which it was the Judge's duty to ask the Jury such necessary questions, the Judge's omission to question will create a difficulty in the High Court deciding whether the verdict was proper or not, it being not in a position to know the materials on which the verdict is based or what it really means, 26 Cr. L.J. 532=85 Ind. Cas. 372. Where a Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under S. 304, I.P.C., the Judge was entitled to question the Jury as to which part of S. 304 I.P.C. their verdict came under as that section embraces a more severe and a less severe portion, 4 Ran. 438 (F.B.) where a Jury returned a verdict of 'doubt'—a verdict unknown to law and the Judge asked them their further opinion as to a particular part of the case to which the foreman of the Jury after some hesitation replied that they had not considered that particular part of the case and the Judge therefore sent back the Jury to consider that part of the case and the Jury after consideration returned a verdict of guilty, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Judge was proper, 28 Cr. L.J. 950=105 Ind. Cas. 662 but when the Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty and the Judge thereupon questioned them and charged them again and the jury thereupon altered their verdict and unanimously found the accused not guilty and it appeared even that the Judge had written out a letter of reference to the High Court differing from the Jury on their first verdict it was held that the procedure adopted by the Judge was illegal and not warranted by the Code and 'a retrial of the case was ordered, 32 C.W.N. 144. This section does not give any power to Judge to call upon the Jury to give their reasons for their verdict to make a reference to the High Court under S. 307, infra, 42 M. 744. In 38 C.L.J. 153 at 158 it was held that whatever may be the proper practice as regards asking jury for their reasons in a case where they return a verdict of not guilty, it cannot be left out of sight, the fact that the Jury had reasons for their verdict which they had not mentioned, which the High Court may take into account before setting aside their unanimous verdict. Where a Judge directed the Jury to give a clear verdict in respect of offences under Ss. 147, 148, 304, 325, and 326 I.P.C., and they returned a verdict of guilty under S. 147 against some, and under S. 148 against the rest and added none of them guilty under S. 149 it was held that the verdict was incomplete and the Judge was justified under this section in putting them further questions to ascertain precisely their verdict as to other offences and the further verdict of the Jury that the accused were guilty under S. 326 read with S. 149, I.P.C., was legal, 50 C. 653. Where the unanimous verdict of the Jury was incomplete, the Jury was questioned by the Judge and the answers to the questions disclosed the fact that they did not understand the law applicable to the case, it is the duty of the Judge to send back the Jury for reconsideration and he is bound to accept the second verdict when it is unanimous and proper, 4 Ran. 433 (F.B.) but when the Jury returned a verdict 'guilty of stabbing' but without the intention of committing murder, it is certainly a verdict not contrary to law though ambiguous and the Judge in such a case is not entitled to send back the Jury with instructions to return a verdict of 'guilty or not guilty of murder' and he acted improperly in accepting the verdict of guilty subsequently given and in sentencing the accused to death, 3 Cr. L.J. 1 at 3 (F.B.)=3 L.B.R. 75. This section limits the power of the Judge to question the Jury only in cases in which it is necessary to ascertain what the verdict is, that is where the verdict being delivered in ambiguous terms or with uncertain sound the meaning is not clear. There is no provision of law which empowers a Judge to question the Jury as to their reasons for a unanimous verdict, where there is nothing ambiguous in the verdict itself and no lurking uncertainty in the mind of the Jury themselves regarding it, 28 B. 412; 22 M.L.J. 355=13 Cr. L.J. 285=14 Ind. Cas. 669; 6 Bom. L.R. 238; 15 B. 452 20 B. 215; 30 M. 469; 36 M. 595; 13 Cr. L.J. 586=15 Ind. Cas. 1002. 7 Pat. 25 following 23 Cr. L.J. 421=67 Ind. Cas. 581, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 1. Sessions Judges often go beyond legitimate limits and put questions to the Jury which are quite unwarranted especially in cases where the verdict is not acceptable to them and this practice seems to be very much in vogue but it is not only inexpedient but illegal. The practice has been strongly condemned in 7 Pat. 55 and the view expressed therein may be said to be consistent with the recognized principle of law that the Jury are the sole judges of fact and the opinion of the Jury is their verdict and not the reasons upon which the verdict is based. It may be of very great assistance to a Judge to know the reasons for the verdict of the Jury to make up his mind whether it is necessary to differ from their verdict or not but the mischief likely to result if such a course is allowed is manifold and therefore in accordance with the fundamental principle and scheme of trial by Jury, the Legislature has made it illegal for a Judge to question the Jury, to find out the reasons for their verdict, 32 C.W.N. 1xiii. There is no justification to question the Jury after they have given a unanimous verdict, 15 C.W.N. 198=11 Cr. L.J. 557=8 Ind. Cas. 52. But after they have given a clear and unambiguous verdict even though not unanimous and the Judge differs from it he has no power to question them but the proper procedure is to make a reference under S. 307, infra, 15 Cr. L.J. 678=25 Ind. Cas. 1006.

Sub-section (2).—When it becomes necessary to question the Jury, the questions and the answers are to be recorded, (1911) 1 M.W.N. 190 at 191=9 M.L.T. 345=12 Cr. L.J. 140=9 Ind. Cas. 783; 8 C. 739; 14 W.R. (Cr.) 59. A statement that the verdict is one of guilty where there are several charges without eliciting from the Jury a separate verdict on various charges recording the questions put and the answers under this section is not a sufficient compliance with law, 26 Cr. L.J. 1090=83 Ind. Cas. 178.

304. When by accident or mistake a wrong verdict is delivered, the jury may, before or immediately after it is recorded, amend the verdict, and it shall stand as ultimately amended.

Amending verdict.

Object of the section.—In England if by mistake the Jury deliver a wrong verdict (as when it is delivered without concurrence of all) and it is recorded and a few minutes elapse before they correct the mistake, the record of verdict may be corrected. When a verdict of not guilty was entered by the clerk purely by mistake and the prisoner discharged, the mistake was immediately corrected and the prisoner brought back and sentenced, the Court of Crown Cases Reserved held the verdict was properly amended. Ros. Cr. Ev. & Pr., p. 189 (13th Ed.). This section obviously contemplates cases where the verdict delivered is not in accordance with what was really intended by the Jury and does not apply to a case where the Jury owing to a misunderstanding of the law arrive at a wrong conclusion, but there is no accident or mistake in the delivery of the verdict. If the Jury returned a verdict owing to a misapprehension of the law it can be corrected by the Judge disagreeing with the Jury and referring the case under S. 307 infra to the High Court, 28 B. 412.

(2) When in any such case the jury are satisfied that they will not be unanimous, but six of them are of one opinion, the foreman shall so inform the Judge.

Discharge of Jury in other cases.

(3) If the Judge disagrees with the majority, he shall at once discharge the jury.

(4) If there are not so many as six who agree in opinion, the Judge shall, after the lapse of such time as he thinks reasonable, discharge the jury.

Under English Law the verdict must be unanimous and if the Jury are unable to agree the Court may discharge them and have the prisoner retried by another Jury. It is established law that a Jury sworn and charged with a prisoner, even in a capital case, may be discharged by the Judge at the trial, without giving a verdict, if the necessity i.e., a high degree of need for such discharge is made evident in his mind. When the Jury after several hours being locked up stated when sent for into Court that it was impossible that they should ever agree, the Judge's discharging them was held good. It is for the Judge alone to decide whether there was a necessity. Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr. p. 214 (25th Ed.) The unanimous verdict of a Jury in a case tried before the High Court Sessions the Judge is bound to accept. The question of option comes in only when they are not unanimous. Then the Judge may take one of the courses specified in this section, 16 Cr. L.J. 676=30 Ind. Cas. 724. A Judge is not entitled to discharge the Jury where he obtains a verdict from the Jury prematurely and with which he disagrees and then to try the accused by a fresh Jury, Weir II, 497. The fact that in a charge of dacoity the Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty of abetment of robbery does not necessarily invalidate the verdict. 16 Cr. L.J. 676=30 Ind. Cas. 724.

Discharge the Jury.—Before discharging a Jury who are divided in opinion the Judge is bound to ascertain their opinion. The discharge of the Jury is not equivalent to a verdict of acquittal and the prisoner can be remanded for a fresh trial, a former trial which had been abortive with a verdict, there has been neither a conviction nor an acquittal which alone can be pleaded in bar. Arch Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr. p. 216 (25th Ed.)

306. (1) When in a case tried before the Court of Session the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors, he shall give judgment accordingly.

Verdict in Court of Session when to prevail.

(2) If the accused is acquitted, the Judge shall record judgment of acquittal. If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

The words in italics in sub-section (2) are new. This section must be read along with S. 307, infra, under which if the Judge in a case tried with a Jury disagrees with the verdict of the Jurors or a majority of the Jurors and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court he shall do so recording the grounds of his opinion. Manifestly this section does not impose an obligation on the Judge to refer a case to the High Court except when the conditions set out in S. 307, infra, are satisfied. The disagreement referred to in this section is the same disagreement as impels the Judge to take action under S. 307, infra, & Pat. 344. See also S. 473. This section says that when the Judge does not think it necessary to express his disagreement with the verdict of the Jurors, he shall give a judgment accordingly. That shows, as indeed is obvious, that

It is not a necessary part of the function of the Judge to have an opinion of his own about mere questions of fact and to assert it. His power only arises when having an opinion contrary to that of the Jury he thinks it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, 32 C.W.N. 673 at 676=47 C.L.J. 483 at 487. Once the verdict of the Jury is accepted by the Judge and the case is postponed for sentence only, it is not open to him to reconsider his order, any more than it would be for the Jury to reconsider their verdict once given and recorded, and refer the case to the High Court under S. 207, infra, 4 C.W.N. 683. Mere sex of the criminal is no ground for not passing a sentence appropriate in the case of a man, 16 Cr. L.J. 20=26 Ind. Cas. 324. The Judge is not entitled to pass a nominal sentence because he does not agree with the verdict of the Jury as to accused's guilt. By so doing he usurps the function of the Jury; he must pass an adequate sentence, Weir II, 37; 3 W.R. (Cr. L.J.) 16.

307. (1) If in any such case the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jurors, or of a majority of the jurors, on all or any of the charges on which any accused person has been tried, and is clearly of opinion, that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion, and when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed, and in such case, if the accused is further charged under the provisions of section 310, shall proceed to try him on such charge as if such verdict had been one of conviction.

(2) Whenever the Judge submits a case under this section, he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried, but he may either remand such accused to custody or admit him to bail.

(3) In dealing with the case so submitted the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and, if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session.

Amendment.—By the new amendment it is made clear that when a Judge accepts the verdict of the Jury in respect of some of the accused but not of others, he needs only refer the case of the latter to the High Court. Power is also given to pass orders under S. 562, infra. If the Judge decides to make a reference to the High Court he is enabled, where there is a further charge, to complete the record by trying the further charge.

Scope and object of the section.—This section is intended to provide the way by which a mis-carriage of justice by a perverse verdict can be remedied by the High Court and the discretionary power should always be exercised when the Judge is of opinion that the verdict is not supported by the evidence inasmuch as a failure on his part to make the reference will result in the conviction of persons on evidence as to the sufficiency of which he is very doubtful, 13 M. 343. This section clearly gives to the Judge a discretion in referring a case to the High Court and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall so submit it. If he is not the High Court should consider the evidence not so much with a view to form its own opinion on the facts but to see whether the verdict of the Jury was such as could not be come to by a reasonable man, 51 M. 956 (F.B.) overruling 45 M.L.J. 406=18 L.W. 432=1923 M.W.N. 695. See also 56 C. 132; 32 C.W.N. 783; 30 Cr. L.J. 570=116 Ind. Cas. 297. See also 50 A. 625 (F.B.). The High Court should not interfere with an unanimous verdict of the Jury unless it can say decidedly that the verdict is clearly wrong, 51 C. 347; 29 C.W.N. 842=26 Cr. L.J. 1298=89 Ind. Cas. 242 and with a verdict of acquittal, unless it is perverse and clearly and manifestly wrong, 46 A. 265. The functions of both Judge and Jury are cast upon the High Court and this differentiates its position from that of the Courts in England, 1 B. 10, followed, in 50 A. 625 (F.B.). The High Court on a reference under this section combines in itself the functions both of the Jury and of the Judge and is entitled to come to an independent finding of its own and is not bound to accept the verdict of the Jury. The whole case is open before the High Court for consideration, 30 Cr. L.J. 390=115 Ind. Cas. 229. It is more than doubtful whether the English authorities were present in the mind of the Indian Legislature when enacting the provisions in the Code specially adapted to India as to Jury trials, 15 B. 542. The High Court when acting under this section can exercise all the powers of an appellate Court, 23 C. 123; 23 C. 852; 50 A. 625; 30 Cr. L.J. 390=115 Ind. Cas. 229. The language used in this section is totally inappropriate and inconsistent with a limited power of the High Court in dealing with a reference under this section. Where there has been an unsatisfactory verdict by a Jury, it cannot be said that the High Court's power is restricted to a consideration of some question of law or some misapprehension of law, 26 A.L.J. 321 (F.B.) at 326; 50 A. 625 (F.B.), and the High Court found the verdict which is unsatisfactory to be wrong and set it aside, 84 C. 703 following 23 C.W.N. 876 & 38 C.L.J. 1=24 Cr. L.J. 897=75 Ind. Cas. 145. Considering the important changes introduced by the amendment in 1923 especially S. 449, infra, where it is laid down that notwithstanding the provisions of S. 418 or S. 423 (2), infra, or the Letters Patent of any of the High Courts an appeal may lie to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law. Thus in a case tried under Chapter XXXIII of the Code the finding of the Jury on a question of fact is no longer final and it cannot therefore be safely said that the High Court will not interfere in a case referred under this section unless the verdict is shown to be perverse or unreasonable, 6 Lah. 93; 54 C. 708; 3 Luck. 456; 29 Cr. L.J. 432=108 Ind. Cas. 900; 29 Cr. L.J. 933=112 Ind. Cas. 103; 10 Bom. L.R. 632=8 Cr. L.J. 143; 2 C.L.J. 1; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 16; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 38. No trial can legally speaking be complete until the judgment and sentence are passed and the trial of a case referred by the Sessions Judge to the High Court remains open for the High Court to conclude and complete either by maintaining the verdict of the Jury and causing judgment in accordance with it or setting aside the verdict and entering a judgment in accordance therewith, 9 A. 420. There is no acquittal or conviction by the Sessions Judge in a case referred to under this section. It is for the High Court to acquit or convict the accused, 30 M. 134. In 1 B. 10; 1 C.L.R. 275; 15 C. 269; 29 C. 123; 54 C. 708; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 16; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 38; 3 Luck. 456; 10 Bom. L.R. 632=8 Cr. L.J. 143; 2 C.L.J. 1; 29 Cr. L.J. 432=103 Ind. Cas. 900; 29 Cr. L.J. 933=112 Ind. Cas. 103, the High Court interfered with the verdict of the Jury in most instances of acquittal by Jury on a reference under this section and found the accused guilty and passed sentence on them according to law. Where the Judges hearing a reference under this section differ in their opinion, the fact that the verdict of the Jury is assented to by one Judge is ordinarily sufficient to show that the case is not such a clear one as would justify an interference by a third Judge when the matter is placed before him under S. 429, infra, 32 C.W.N. 733.

Sub-section (1).—There are three things which appear clearly from the provisions of this section: (1) It is entirely within the discretion of the Judge as to whether he would make a reference or not, (2) a reference is called only when the Judge is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit a case to the High Court, (3) the Judge must disagree with the verdict of the Jury or of a majority of Jurors, 6 Pat. 817; 8 Pat. 344. See also 50 C. 653 at 664; 32 C.W.N. 673=47 C.L.J. 433 at 437. If the Judge is not clearly of opinion that the conviction is wrong as to make it necessary to submit the case to the clearly of that opinion his failure to submit a case is not a subject of interference by the High Court on appeal, 5 Pat. 817; 50 C. 658 at 663. It is not the function of the Sessions Judge to have an opinion of his own on questions of fact and to assert it by making a reference under this section differing from the verdict of the Jury. His power only arises when he thinks that the verdict is clearly unsustainable and the ends of justice do require a reference to the High Court. This power of reference should be exercised with due regard to the fact that the constitutional tribunal to decide questions of fact is the jury and not the Judge, 32 C.W.N. 673=47 Cr. L.J. 483 at 487; 29 Cr. L.J. 819=111 Ind. Cas. 323. The discretion should always be exercised where the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. It is no longer the law that before making a reference the Judge must be satisfied that the verdict is perverse. It is sufficient if he is clearly of opinion that the ends of justice require a reference, 41 C.L.J. 329=25 Cr. L.J. 1006=87 Ind. Cas. 606; 27 Cr. L.J. 398=93 Ind. Cas. 46; 52 C. 937. It is open to a Judge to disagree with the Jury and it is his duty to do so if he is clearly of opinion that such a course is necessary for the ends of justice; but this does not require that he should make reflections upon their conduct which are not supported by evidence on record. Such reflections are unfair as they are made behind the back of the Jurors, without their knowledge and after they have finished their labours especially as they are labouring under a disadvantage of having no opportunity to state the grounds of their opinion. These reflections are unfair to the Judge himself as they detract from the value of his opinion. They are unfair to the accused who are entitled to have due weight attached by the High Court to the opinion of the Jury as expressed without any aspersions against them. They are unfair to the High Court, whereon the duty is imposed to consider the entire evidence and acquit or convict the accused after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and Jury. Such opinion of the Judge is his opinion on the merits of the case on the evidence placed before him, and does not include his speculation as to what might or might not have influenced the Jurors, 51 C. 418. The point of view from which references under this section should be considered has been the subject of numerous judicial decisions. They seemed to vary from the extreme view that the High Court should be very reluctant to interfere with the verdict of the Jury to the view that the High Court in dealing with these references is to be guided by the plain words of the Code. It is upon far firmer ground if the strict words of the Code are adhered to and not to try to interpret the Code in the light of the practice in other countries where the law and conditions are different. Here the Code is clearly explicit. The High Court shall after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinion of the Judge and of the Jury acquit or convict the accused. The Code would not seem to put the opinion of the Jury on any higher plane than the opinion of the Judge. Both should be given due weight. There is no suggestion that more weight should be given to the opinions of the Jury than that of the Judge. As a general rule one would be inclined to attach more weight to the opinion of the Judge who equally with the Jury had heard the witnesses and seen their demeanour. He has been trained to weigh and appreciate evidence and further he must give reasons for his opinion. The Jury a body of laymen unaccustomed to weigh and appreciate evidence give no reasons for their opinion. Obviously an opinion supported by reasons is likely to carry more weight than an opinion expressed unsupported by reasons, 53 C. 877 at 885-886. In dealing with a case referred to the High Court under this section, the High Court is first called upon to consider the entire evidence and then give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and that of the Jury and then acquit or convict the accused. The opinion of the Jury is the verdict of the Jury. The measure of relative weight to be attached to these two factors, the opinion of the Judge and that of the Jury cannot be crystallised into an inflexible formula. The answer must depend upon the circumstances of each case. When the Judge is not unanimous the weight to be attached to it necessarily diminishes. Where the corresponding is the verdict as to some accused and not to others, his opinion is weakened in a reference under this measure, 51 C. 347; 43 M.L.J. 406=13 L.W. 492=(1923) M.W.N. 693. In a unreasonable case, this section it is necessary to show that on the evidence the verdict is plainly and heard the witnesses, until that is shown, it is not possible for the High Court which had not seen and heard the witnesses to set aside the verdict 32 C.W.N. 891. The High Court should not interfere with the verdict unless it is such that no reasonable man could have come to and the High Court should consider the evidence not so much with a view to form its own opinion on the facts but to see whether the verdict of the Jury was such as could not be come to by a reasonable man, 51 M. 956 (F.B.) overruling 45 M.L.J. 406=18 L.W. 432=1923 M.W.N. 695. See also 56 C. 132; 32 C.W.N. 783; 30 Cr. L.J. 570=116 Ind. Cas. 297. See also 50 A. 625 (F.B.). The High Court should not interfere with an unanimous verdict of the Jury unless it can say decidedly that the verdict is clearly wrong, 51 C. 317; 29 C.W.N. 852=26 Cr. L.J. 1293=89 Ind. Cas. 242 and with a verdict of acquittal, unless it is perverse and clearly and manifestly wrong, 46 A. 285. The functions of both Judge and Jury are cast upon the High Court and this differentiates its position from that of the Courts in England, 1 B. 10, followed, in 50 A. 625 (F.B.). The High Court on a reference under this section combines in itself the functions both of the Jury and of the Judge and is entitled to come to an independent finding of its own and is not bound to accept the verdict of the Jury. The whole case is open before the High Court for consideration, 30 Cr. L.J. 390=115 Ind. Cas. 229. It is more than doubtful whether the English authorities were present in the mind of the Indian Legislature when enacting the provisions in the Code specially adapted to India as to Jury trials, 15 B. 542. The High Court when acting under this section can exercise all the powers of an appellate Court, 23 C. 128; 23 C. 852; 50 A. 625; 30 Cr. L.J. 390=115 Ind. Cas. 229. The language used in this section is totally inappropriate and inconsistent with a limited power of the High Court in dealing with a reference under this section. There is no acquittal or conviction by the Sessions Judge in a case referred to under this section. It is for the High Court to acquit or convict the accused, 30 M. 134. In 1 B. 10; 1 C.L.R. 275; 15 C. 259; 23 C. 123; 54 C. 703; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 16; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 39; 3 Luck. 456; 10 Bom. L.R. 632=8 Cr. L.J. 143; 2 C.L.J. 1; 29 Cr. L.J. 452=103 Ind. Cas. 900; 29 Cr. L.J. 933=112 Ind. Cas. 103, the High Court interfered with the verdict of the Jury in most instances of acquittal by Jury on a reference under this section and found the accused guilty and passed sentence on them according to law. Where the Judges hearing a reference under this section differ in their opinion, the fact that the verdict of the Jury is assented to by one Judge is ordinarily sufficient to show that the case is not such a clear one as would justify an interference by a third Judge when the matter is placed before him under S. 429, infra, 32 C.W.N. 733.

Sub section (1).—There are three things which appear clearly from the provisions of this section: (1) It is entirely within the discretion of the Judge as to whether or not he will make a reference or not, (2) a reference is called only when the Judge is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit a case to the High Court. It is not necessary that the Judge must disagree with the verdict of the Jury or of a majority of Judges. See also 50 C. 653 at 664; 32 C.W.N. 673=47 C.L.J. 433 at 434. The Judge is not bound of opinion that the conviction is wrong as to make it necessary to refer the case.

High Court then the position is described in S. 306, supra. The words are 'If the Judge does not think it necessary,' to express disagreement. His opinion will be irrelevant and he will be well-advised to keep it for himself. Learned Judges do not seem to appreciate that they are given an overriding power not that they pose as critics but in order that miscarriage of justice may not take place. If the Judge really disagrees with the verdict i.e., he has a settled and considered opinion against the guilt of the accused it is his clear duty in the interests of justice to make a reference. If the Judge does not think it necessary, his disagreement cannot be a reality at all. To administer properly the provisions of this and S. 306, supra, practical good sense is required not only as regards what is to be done but also as regards what is to be said and as a matter of practical sense acquittals and convictions raise for the present purpose considerations which, while covered equally by the phrase 'the ends of justice' are never quite the same, 33 C.W.N. 71. It is not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which a view different from that of the Jury can be entertained on the evidence that a reference under this section is to be made to the High Court, but the verdict of the Jury should be manifestly wrong before such a reference is made, 8 B. 731; 9 M.L.T. 291; 9 M.L.T. 103=12 Cr. L.J. 48=9 Ind. Cas. 288. It is not sufficient to show that another Jury might have formed a different opinion but what has to be shown is that no reasonable body of men would have returned the verdict complained of, 27 Cr. L.J. 1031 at 1039=97 Ind. Cas. 17 following 25 Cr.L.J. 856=86 Ind. Cas. 712. See 51 M. 956 (F.B.); 56 C. 132; 50 A. 625 (F.B.) If the High Court is to interfere in every case of doubt, in every case in which it may with propriety be said that the evidence would have warranted a different verdict, then a real trial by Jury is absolutely at an end, and that the verdict of the Jury has no more weight than the opinion of Assessors, 41 C. 521 at 631; 50 C. 41; 28 Cr. L.J. 211=83 Ind. Cas. 995. Great weight undoubtedly attaches to the unanimous opinion of the Jury on question of fact, 27 Cr. L.J. 1341=98 Ind. Cas. 413; 32 C.W.N. 673=47 C.L.J. 483 at 487 and the High Court will not legally interfere with findings of fact arrived by the Jury, 19 W.R. (Cr.) 43 but only in exceptional cases, 13 B.L.R. (Appx.) 19. If the High Court is not entitled to interfere with the verdict of the Jury on a reference under this section unless the High Court was of opinion that it was not possible for the Jury to take the view that they did take, then the High Court as a Court of reference will cease to function, its duty being confined only to reject references. Where the evidence is of such a nature that a Jury as reasonable men can possibly take the view they have taken the High Court should not interfere. Human opinion honestly held may differ in all questions. But the test to be applied with regard to the honesty of such opinion is whether any reasonable man on the materials before him can hold it. The test therefore that has to be applied in estimating the verdict of the Jury is whether the opinion is such as could on the particular facts and evidence of the case have been held by reasonable men however much the Judge may differ from that view and in the particular case the High Court set aside the verdict of not guilty as wrong, 54 C. 708 following 28 C.W.N. 876=25 Cr. L.J. 1231=82 Ind. Cas. 336; 38 C.L.J. 1=24 Cr. L.J. 697=75 Ind. Cas. 133. See also 53 C. 879 at 885 86. The Madras High Court also in 51 M. 956 (F.B.) took the same view and overruling the earlier decision in 43 M.L.J. 496=18 L.W. 482=1913 M.W.N. 695 held that in a reference under this section the High Court was not bound to decide for itself whether the evidence on which the Jury based their verdict was sufficient and the High Court should not interfere with the verdict unless it was such that no reasonable men could have come to that decision. After the decision of the Full Bench the case came back to the Division Bench which held that the High Court should consider the evidence not so much as to form its own opinion on the facts but to see whether the verdict of the Jury was such as could not have been come to by a reasonable man. The Allahabad High Court in 50 A. 625 (F.B.) has taken a different view and considering the provisions of this, S. 423 S. 426 infra has held that the High Court can resort to all the powers of an appellate Court and may if it thinks fit shall proceed after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and Jury acquit or convict the accused. See also 32 C.W.N. 781 29 Cr. L.J. 432=108 Ind. Cas. 900; 29 Cr. L.J. 983=112 Ind. Cas. 103; 3 Luck 456; 29 Cr. L.J. 1035 at 1039=112 Ind. Cas. 353. The conditions laid down in this section are not merely that the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the Jury but must also clearly be of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to make reference. The Judge is either clearly of opinion or not and according as he acts in that matter, the consequences must be. It is quite impossible to direct the learned Judge to be clearly of a certain opinion and the language used by the statute shows that the Judge's view on that point is to be final for that purpose and the High Court cannot enquire into the question whether or not the learned Judge ought to have been of opinion that it was necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case and the High Court cannot direct the learned Judge to submit a case nor can it act as though he has, in fact, submitted the case, 47 C.L.J. 483=32 C.W.N. 673. In order to justify a reference, it is not necessary that the Judge should be able to describe the verdict of the Jury as perverse. The language of the section is reasonably plain and should be adhered to. No translation or substitution of other phrase is necessary. Where in the opinion of the Judge the verdict of the majority of the Jury is not unwarranted by the evidence he is quite within his rights in not making a reference, 27 Cr. L.J. 1402=98 Ind. Cas. 714. Where a Judge accepted a verdict of guilty remarking that if he had been a Jury then he would have been in favour of a verdict of not guilty and failed to make a reference under this section, it was held that the Judge did not act illegally and that the High Court had no power to interfere with the action of the Judge and direct him to make a reference, 23 Cr. L.J. 819=111 Ind. Cas. 323. A reference could only be made when the Judge is clearly of opinion that he should do so for the ends of justice, 25 C. 555; 50 C. 658. The discretionary power to refer the case to the High Court should always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. It is the only way by which a miscarriage of justice owing to a perverse verdict can be remedied as there is no appeal on facts, 13 M. 343; 14 M. 36; 4 M.L.T. 493; 10 C. 1029. Where several accused were tried together before a Judge and Jury for the same offence and the evidence was the same against all and the Sessions Judge summed up in favour of the defence, but the Jury returned a verdict of "guilty" against five of the accused and "not guilty" against one and the Judge agreeing with the Jury acquitted the one and convicted the rest, held that the Judge should certainly have referred the verdict as flagrantly perverse, 23 L.W. 90. It is not always true that a Judge having accepted the Jury's verdict on graver charges cannot make a reference with a view to have some of the accused convicted on a minor charge, 37 C.L.J. 34; 42 C. 789. If the Jury has returned an erroneous verdict owing to misapprehension of law, the mistake can be corrected only by the Judge making a reference under this section, 23 B. 412. It is necessary when the charge to the Jury is meagre that the Judge should state in his reference the evidence for the prosecution and the defence. He should also state the facts which in his opinion are proved upon the evidence recorded and the conclusions to which those facts lead him. The High Court ought to have the opinion of the Judge upon the evidence, before it can deal with the case, 6 Bom. L.R. 599; 10 Bom. L.R. 173; 7 C.W.N. 345. Where the Judge in his reference merely stated that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and expressed no other opinion, it was held he ought to have set out portions of the evidence or of facts disclosed by the evidence on which in his opinion, the accused should have been convicted, 7 C.W.N. 345. The referring order should certainly be in the nature of a judgment which would give the High Court a proper summary of the evidence for the prosecution and the reasons of the Judge for holding it to be credible or incredible. The charge to the Jury obviously cannot supply the Court with the necessary information as to the evidence and the opinion of the Judge in regard thereto. In directing a Jury it is, of course open, to the Judge to state his opinion as to the value of that evidence but when he disagrees with the verdict of the Jury, it is obviously desirable that he should state his reasons much more fully 50 A. 625 (F.B.) By a reference the whole case is opened out and the functions of both Judge and Jury are cast upon the High Court and this differentiates the position very widely from that of the Courts in England, 1 B. 10 followed in 50 A. 625 (F.B.). A Judge in his letter of reference should state the exact offence of which in his opinion the accused should have been convicted, 3 C. 623; 20 W. R. (Cr) 16; under this section only the Judge who tried the case can refer and not his successor, 2 C. L. J. 43 but a reference is in order even if made by one who has vacated office at the date of the reference, 2 C. L. J. 43. The words 'recording the grounds of his opinion' mean that the Judge making the reference should, in effect, show reasons for convicting or acquitting the accused in as clear a manner as he could have done if the case had not been a Jury case and he had to write a judgment convicting or acquitting the accused. The High Court has not got the witnesses before it and it is impossible in many cases for the High Court to convict or acquit on the evidence which it has not heard unless it is assisted in examining that evidence by a judgment written by the Judge who heard that evidence. In referring a case the Judge takes on himself the responsibility of requiring the High Court 'to consider the entire evidence' as stated in sub-section (3) and if the Judge fails to write, what is in effect a judgment, there is a risk that he may too lightly put the High Court to the trouble of considering the entire evidence, 50 A. 540 at 542. The letter of reference must clearly state what witnesses the Judge believes, as he had an opportunity to see and hear the witnesses, 10 Bom. L. R. 173. Where the verdict of the Jury is brief and the Judge disagrees with it, he should before making a reference put such questions as may bring out their meaning more precisely, 16 Cr. L.J. 587=30 Ind. Cas. 139. A Judge cannot examine witnesses after the Jury had left the Court and in the absence of the accused to determine whether he should make a reference, 7 Bom. L. R. 979.

Sub-section (2).—Pending a reference to the High Court, there is no conviction or acquittal in the Sessions Court and the law before the amendment was that it was only after a conviction by the High Court that the accused can be called upon to plead to a previous conviction, and the Sessions Judge ought not to call upon the accused to plead, pending reference to the High Court, 30 M. 134 but now S. 310, infra, enables a Judge when the Jury or a majority of Jury gives a verdict of not guilty, in his discretion to proceed to try the accused on the charge of the previous conviction and, if he does so, to submit his finding along with the reference, and thus avoid the round-about procedure. A reference under this section is not invalid if made by an officer who held the trial, but who at the date of the reference has ceased to be a Judge 2 C.L.J. 43. The Judge who may make a reference under this section must be one who held the trial and heard the evidence, and not the officer who succeeds him as Judge. That this is a reasonable construction of the section seems to be clear from the procedure laid down in sub-section (3) which provides that the High Court is to give weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the Jury, 2 C.L.J. 43 at 49. The new amendment is in accordance with 42 C. 789, where it was held that this sub-section contemplates a reference in the case of those persons in respect of whom the Judge declines to accept the verdict.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section finally prescribes the function to be exercised by the High Court in dealing with a reference under this section, and provides the procedure to be followed by the High Court. The language of the section will be entirely meaningless if it is not intended to give to the High Court not merely a power but a direction to re-consider the entire evidence and to arrive at an independent conclusion of its own on the question of fact as well as of law in the interests of justice, 50 A. 625 (F.B.) ; 55 C. 879 at 885-86 ; 29 C. 123 at 133 but see 51 M. 956 (F.B.) and 54 C. 403 ; 48 C.L.J. 541 at 543, which took the view that where the Jury as reasonable men have taken a view of the evidence and come to a conclusion, the High Court should not go into the evidence and interfere with the verdict on a consideration of the evidence in the case. The High Court can only consider the evidence to see whether the verdict of the Jury was such as could be arrived at by reasonable men but see 30 Cr. L. J. 310=114 Ind. Cas. 433 which following 55 C. 879 hold that the Code would not seem to put the opinion of the Jury on any higher plane than the opinion of the Judge, both should be given due weight by the High Court in deciding the reference. This section lays down that in dealing with a case submitted thereunder, the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal and that, subject thereto, it shall after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the Jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it. The duty of the High Court accordingly is to consider the evidence on the record as it stands, to weigh the respective opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury and then to form its own conclusion. The verdict of the Jury is first in the field and S. 299. supra, makes it primarily the function of the Jury to decide which view of the facts is true and then return a verdict and to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact. On general principle, therefore, it appears that, when the process which this section directs has been carried out and the opinions of the Judge and Jury have been measured, the verdict of the Jury should stand unless the evidence and opinion of the Judge shows clearly that it is wrong and that in the interests of justice it ought to be reversed. But neither the Sessions Judge, nor the High Court would interfere with the verdict of the Jury unless there are strong reasons for doing so, 51 C. 169; 38 C.L.J. 1=24 Cr. L.J. 897=75 Ind. Cas. 143=referred in 23 Cr. L.J. 903=105 Ind. Cas. 231. A verdict of a Jury has more weight than the opinion of the Assessors and should not be set aside unless no sensible man could have arrived at that verdict particularly in the case of a verdict of acquittal, 29 Cr. L.J. 1033 at 1039=112 Ind. Cas. 363. This section requires the High Court to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury, after considering the entire evidence and then to acquit or convict the accused. It does not require the High Court to attempt to reconstruct the verdict of the Jury. In giving due weight to the opinion of the Jury the High Court should always hesitate to reverse an unanimous verdict unless it holds it to be unreasonable. 40 C.L.J. 135 at 142; 25 Cr. L.J. 785=81 Ind. Cas. 305. Ordinarily the verdict of the Jury to whom the decision of the case was primarily entrusted by law is entitled to very great weight and their verdict is not liable to displacement upon the mere ground that on a consideration of all the evidence, a Judge would have arrived at a certain conclusion different from that arrived at by the Jury. But where the verdict is perverse and patently erroneous and if it is established that it amounts to a gross mis-carriage of justice the High Court is entitled to draw its conclusions from the evidence as to the guilt of the accused. Where the verdict did not proceed upon a consideration of the evidence for the prosecution which was all one way and absolutely free from taint, the verdict was clearly perverse and justifies a reference under this section by the Judge differing from the verdict, 27 A.L.J. 509 following 2 A.L.J. 475; From the mere fact that the Jury are unable to give reasons for returning a verdict of 'not guilty' beyond saying that they give the benefit of doubt to the accused, the High Court cannot hold that the Jury had no adequate reasons for bringing the verdict of "not guilty." Even trained intellects often find it difficult to formulate and put before the Courts reasons for the opinion which they hold or which they wish to propound, 41 C.L.J. 35=26 Cr. L.J. 805=86 Ind. Cas. 453. In dealing with a case referred under this section the High Court is first called on to consider the entire evidence and then give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and that of the Jury. The opinion of the Judge is his opinion on the merits of the case and does not include speculations as to what external considerations if any which might have affected the judgment of the Jury. The opinion of the Jury is the verdict of the Jury. The measure of relative weight to be attached to these two factors cannot be crystallised into an inflexible formula. When the verdict of the Jury is not unanimous the weight to be attached to it necessarily diminishes. When the Judge accepts the verdict as to some accused and not to others his opinion is weakened in a corresponding measure, 51 C. 547 and 418; 45 M.L.J. 406=18 L.W. 432=(1923) M.W.N. 695. The duty of the High Court under this section does not end by merely finding that the defence story is one that cannot be accepted. It has to find whether on the evidence such as appears on the record it was possible for the Jury to take the view which they have taken in the case with reference to the accused whose case has been referred to the High Court. That is to say whether the Jury were entitled to discount the evidence which has been given by the prosecution witnesses because of the fact that the witnesses were highly interested. 38 C.L.J. 1. The view taken in 43 M.L.J. 406 to the effect that on a reference to the High Court, the whole case was reopened by the reference and the High Court was entitled to decide for itself whether the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict was doubted in Ref. No. 22 and 1924 of the Calcutta High Court also in 54 C. 708 and 51 C. 344. This necessitated a reference to the Full Bench. In 51 M. 956 (F.B.) it was held that the High Court should not interfere with the verdict of the Jury unless it was such, that no reasonable man could have come, to and the decision in 43 M.L.J. 406 was overruled. After the Full Bench decision in 51 M. 956

(F.B.) the case came before the division Bench which held that the High Court should consider the evidence not so much with a view to influencing its own opinion on the facts but to see whether the verdict was such as could not be come to by a reasonable man. So far as Madras is concerned the point is settled now. The Allahabad High Court in 50 A. 625 (F.B.) has taken a different view. See also 56 C. 132. In dealing with a case under this section the High Court which had not the opportunity of seeing the witnesses must act with great caution and will not be justified in interfering with the verdict of the Jury because in its opinion the evidence would have warranted a different verdict. "The most careful note must often fail to convey the evidence fully in some of its most important elements. It cannot give the look or manner of the witness, his hesitation, his doubts, his variation of language, his confidence or precipitancy, his calmness or consideration. It cannot give the manner of the prisoner, where that has an important bearing upon the statement of anything at a particular moment. It is in short, or it may be the dead body of the evidence without its spirit which is supplied when given openly and orally by the ear and eye of those who receive it," 51 C. 271 at 278. In a reference under this section it is not for the High Court to Judge of the case on the merits. Although the case is one of great suspicion, the High Court has to consider whether the verdict of the Jury should be set aside, 38 C.L.J. 135. The High Court should not interfere with a unanimous verdict of the Jury unless the verdict of guilty is clearly and manifestly wrong, 51 C 347; 27 Cr. L.J. 773=95 Ind. Cas 309; 29 Cr. L.J. 1035=112 Ind. Cas. 363. The High Court should not take upon itself the responsibility of deciding differently from those to whom the decision was primarily entrusted by the law, 10 B. 437; 20 B 215; 15 B. 452 (F.B.); 11 C. 85; 2 C.L.R. 518; 13 B.L.R. (App.) 19; 14 B.L.R. (App.) 1 and 13; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 43; 25 W.R. (Cr) 25; 3 C. 189; 48 C.L.J. 541; 51 M. 956 (F.B.) and any undue interference by the High Court may tend to diminish the sense of responsibility which is desirable that a Jury should cherish, 1 B 10, see also 13 B.L.R.(Ap.) 19=20 W.R. (Cr) 73; but it was held in 50 A. 625 (F.B.) that it was open to the High Court to revise the verdict of the Jury even though there had been no misdirection to the Jury or a misunderstanding by them of the law as laid by the Judge, relying on, 21 C. 935; 29 C. 128; 1 B. 10; 29 M. 91; 6 Pat. L.J. 264 and 46 A. 265. See also 55 C 877 and 54 C 708. But a verdict of acquittal should be perverse and clearly and manifestly wrong for the High Court to interfere, 41 C 632; 23 Cr. L.J. 758=31 Ind. Cas. 216; 46 A. 283; 16 Cr. L.J. 442=29 Ind. Cas 72. When the High Court is of opinion that the Jury's verdict is perverse it is entitled to substitute its own opinion on the evidence for the opinion of the Jury, 26 Cr. L.J. 211=83 Ind. Cas 935. The High Court on a reference under this section is reluctant to interfere with a unanimous verdict of Jury and if that verdict is not unreasonable and can on the evidence, be supported it should accept it even though it may not wholly agree with it, 30 C.L.J. 503. The High Court can interfere in cases of acquittal by Jury where the acquittal is patently bad and perverse, 29 Cr. L.J. 452=108 Ind. Cas. 900 29 Cr. L.J. 983=112 Ind. Cas. 103; 3 Luck 456; 54 C. 708 following 28 C.W.N. 876; 38 C.L.J. 1. The High Court before it can refuse to accept the verdict of the Jury in a case under this section has got to find that the verdict is unreasonable. 52 C. 987=48 C.L.J. 541 at 545. The effect of reference under this section is to open up the whole case and to render it the duty of the High Court to consider whether the evidence against the accused is sufficient to justify a conviction for all or any of the offences charged inclusive of the offences of which the Jury have acquitted the accused, 36 M 585 at 587, 50 A. 625 (F.B.) The High Court is not confined to the grounds of difference between the Judge and the Jury, but the whole case is thrown open to the Court and it must be decided after giving due weight to the opinion of the Judge and Jury, 10 Bom. L.R. 632=8 Cr. L.J. 143; 38 C. 629; 29 C. 128; 9 C.L.J. 432; 29 M. 91. By the expression "opinion of the Jury" in this section is meant the conclusion of the Jury, (i.e., the verdict and not the reasons on which that conclusion is based, 18 C.W.N. 613=18 C.L.J. 522=16 Cr. L.J. 31=22 Ind. Cas. 175; (1922) Pat. 218=23 Cr. L.J. 421=67 Ind. Cas. 581. There is nothing in this section warranting the interpretation that the term "opinion" in it means anything other than the respective conclusions of the Judge and Jury. In dealing with a reference, the High Court must consider the entire evidence and give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and Jury including the opinion of the minority of the Jury when the verdict is divided, 38 C. 629; 17 C.W.N. 1077=14 Cr. L.J. 558=21 Ind. Cas.

155; 16 Cr. L.J. 440=29 Ind. Cas. 72; 37 C.L.J. 30 at 32; 23 Cr. L.J. 244=66 Ind. Cas. 180 15 C. 269; Ratanlal 440. Without considering the entire evidence the High Court on a reference under this section could not be in a position to give due weight 'to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury, 29 C. 128 at 133; 50 A. 625 (F.B.). Before the High Court can substitute its opinion to that arrived at by the majority of the Jury, it must be able to say in the legal sense of the expression that the Jury's verdict is against the weight of evidence, that is to say, it is not such a verdict as reasonable men properly instructed could have arrived at, 43 C.L.J. 541 at 545; 54 C. 708; 55 C. 879; 51 M. 956 (F.B.). There is no provision to ascertain the opinion of the Jury, and a reference to the High Court when a Judge differs from the Jury will not be vitiated on account of its not containing the opinion of the Jurors, 18 C.W.N. 615. Apart from their verdict, the opinion of the Jury in this subsection is the conclusion of the Jury, and not the reasons on which that conclusion is based. In a reference under this section although it may be expedient to have before the Court the reasons of the Jury for the view taken by them when they have been given, but the circumstance that no such reasons have been ascertained does not warrant the High Court to decline to go into the evidence and arrive at its own judgment after giving due weight to the views taken by the Judge and Jury as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, 29 M. 91 (F.B.); 25 Cr. L.J. 145=76 Ind. Cas. 289; 41 C. 662; 20 Cr. L.J. 20=43 Ind. Cas. 500; 55 Ind. Cas. 282 and 29. The Court is also bound to consider the entire evidence and give weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and Jury. Failure on the part of the Judge to record the reasons of the Jury for their verdict enhances the responsibility of the High Court and requires it to go into the evidence more carefully, 6 Pat. L.J. 264 at 267. See 26 Cr. L.J. 856=85 Ind. Cas. 712, where it was held following 21 Cr. L.J. 829=58 Ind. Cas. 629, that it was not competent to the Sessions Judge after a clear verdict was returned by the Jury to ask them for their reasons, and the view expressed in 6 Pat. L.J. 264 and 23 Cr. L.J. 421=67 Ind. Cas. 581, to the contrary are disapproved. It is open to a Judge when he disagrees with a verdict and intends to make a reference to the High Court to ask the Jury the reasons for their verdict and he should record the same for the information and guidance of the High Court, 27 Cr. L.J. 773=95 Ind. Cas. 309 where 36 C. 629, Welr II, 389 are followed. See also 29 Cr. L.J. 963=112 Ind. Cas. 51. With regard to the opinion of the Jury most of the reasons given by the foreman may not commend themselves to the High Court or may not be very convincing and such reasons need not necessarily be taken as constituting all the grounds which the Jury may have had for their verdict. It is well-known that even trained minds find it difficult when asked off-hand to formulate all the grounds in support of the opinion they have formed. What the High Court has got to find, before it can refuse to accept the verdict, is that it is unreasonable, 52 C. 987. When a reference is made of the whole case under this section, where some of the offences are tried by the Jury and the others tried with the aid of Assessors, by the Judge differing from the verdict of the Jury and the opinion expressed by the Jurors as Assessors on the Assessor charges, the High Court while accepting the reference as to the verdict of the Jury returned the case to the Sessions Judge so far as the Assessor offences were concerned remarking that the Judge ought not to have joined them in the reference, 8 Bom. L.R. 599=4 Cr. L.J. 192; 9 Bom. L.R. 1057. See also 42 C. 789 but see 21 C.W.N. 435, which suggests a different procedure. When a reference is made to the High Court under this section, it has all the powers of an appellate Court and should form its own opinion, after considering the entire evidence, giving due weight to the opinion of the Judge and the Jury, 15 Cr. L.J. 513=24 Ind. Cas. 601; 29 C. 128; 9 C.L.J. 432=10 Cr. L.J. 57=2 Ind. Cas. 593. When a reference is made to the High Court the language of the Code does not justify any undue preference being given to the opinion of the Jury over that of the Judge. The High Court has to weigh both the opinions and consider the entire evidence on record just as it would do in any Criminal matter coming before it for decision, 23 Cr. L.J. 785=81 Ind. Cas. 305. The High Court is empowered on a reference under this section to convict the accused of an offence not triable by Jury but only by Assessors, on a consideration of the evidence and giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and Jury, 37 M. 236, where 22 M. 15; 24 M. 641, and the view of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in 26 M. 243 are followed. The power of the High Court under this section is not limited to interference on

questions of law, i.e., misdirection by the Judge or misapprehension of the law by the Jury as laid down by the Judge. The clear provisions of this section are not in any way curtailed or cut down by the provisions of S. 418, infra and it is open to the High Court to go into the facts in a case referred under this section, 9 A. 420; 44 C.L.J. 233=28 Cr. L.J. 19=99 Ind. Cas. 51. When a Jury has given their verdict on the facts of a particular case, it is open to the High Court on a reference under this section to revise that verdict even though it was not alleged that there had been a misdirection by the Judge or a misunderstanding by the Jury of the law as laid down by the Judge, 50 A. 623 (F.B.) referring to 21 C. 155; 2 C. 128; 1 B. 10; 29 M. 51; 6 Pat. L.J. 24 and 45 A 265, but the High Court will not interfere unless it was established in the clearest possible manner that the Jury were wholly miscarried in their conclusions upon the case, 20 W.R. (Cr.) 33 and 73; 11 C. 83; Weir II, 338, and the High Court will not interfere merely because it is of a different opinion from that arrived at by a unanimous verdict of the Jury, 2 A.L.J. 475; 9 C. 53. Where in a case there is evidence, if believed, sufficient to establish the guilt of the accused but on the other hand there were many circumstances which throw a doubt upon his guilty, it cannot be said that the Jury took a perverse view in returning a verdict of not guilty and the High Court will not be justified in interfering with the verdict even though the verdict may or may not be correct but not unreasonable, 21 Cr. L.J. 895=104 Ind. Cas. 411, but the High Court may, in view of the suspicious circumstances tending to show the falsity of the prosecution case acquit the accused refusing to accept the unanimous verdict of the Jury, 44 C.L.J. 233=28 Cr. L.J. 19=99 Ind. Cas. 51. Where one of two inferences is possible on the evidence, the Court of reference will not interfere with the finding of the Jury even though the High Court is of opinion that it would have drawn the other inference if it had been a Court of appeal. But where the inference drawn by the Jury is manifestly inconsistent with the documentary evidence and with the conduct of the parties it is obligatory on the Court to interfere, 27 Cr. L.J. 1041 at 1053=97 Ind. Cas. 17. The High Court is to accept the opinion of the Judge and Jury when they agree and it is not open to believe evidence disbelieved by both Judge and Jury, 41 C. 662. In a reference under this section the Judge should set forth in his letter of reference in some detail his own opinion regarding the evidence and should clearly state the material portions of the evidence he believes to be true and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions, to enable the High Court in the interests of justice, to convict the accused on the charges framed. A bare statement that the reasons are indicated in the heads of charge to the Jury is wholly insufficient, 30 Cr. L.J. 210=113 Ind. Cas. 694. When the Judges hearing a reference under this section differ in their opinion, the procedure to be followed is that laid down in S. 429 infra viz., the case shall be laid before a third Judge, 2 C.L.J. 77 (n); 15 B. 452.

Appeal.—No appeal lies from the judgment of the High Court passed on a reference under this section, Ratanlal 691.

G.—Re-trial of Accused after Discharge of Jury.

308. Whenever the Jury is discharged, the accused shall be detained in custody or on bail (as the case may be), and shall be tried by another Jury, unless, the Judge considers that he should not be re-tried, in which case the Judge shall make an entry to that effect on the charge, and such entry shall operate as an acquittal.

Practice.—It is well established law that a Jury even in a capital case may be discharged by the Judge at the trial without giving a verdict if a 'necessity' that, is a high degree of need for such discharge is made evident in his mind. It is for the Judge alone to decide whether a necessity exists and his decision is final. Where a Jury at a trial for murder after being locked up for several hours on their being sent for into Court stated that it was impossible that they should ever agree and it was the first day of business at the next Assizes town, the Judge discharging the Jury was held to be warranted by law. So also where misconduct on the part of a Juror was discovered before the verdict or in the course of the trial, one of the Jurors left the Jury box or where it was discovered that a person on the Jury was not on the Jury panel Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pra. p. 213-214 (25th Ed.).

Whenever the Jury is discharged.—This section will apply when a Jury is discharged for misconduct not provided for specifically, in the Code and it seems clear that the Judge must have such powers, 50 C. 872 at 873, if one of the Jury dies before the delivery of verdict the remaining eleven will be discharged and a new Jury may be sworn or a new Juror added to the eleven. So also if one of the Jurors is taken so ill that he is not able to proceed with the trial. Where misconduct on the part of one of the Jurors is discovered before verdict the Court may discharge the Jury. Where in the course of a trial one of the Jurors without leave left the Jury box and also the Court, the Jury had to be discharged. So also where in the course of a trial it was discovered that a person was in the Jury who was not on the Jury panel and who had by mistake been summoned as a Jurymen and when it is accidentally elicited during the course of the case for the Crown that the defendant had been previously convicted, the Jury is frequently discharged in the interests of defendant, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr., p. 214 (25th Ed.).

A Sessions Judge has inherent power to discharge the Jury and to empanel another for misconduct on the part of the Jury, 25 C.W.N. 210—33 C.L.J. 122; 51 C. 418; 26 Cr.L.J. 1009=87 Ind. Cas. 833. But such power to discharge should not be exercised lightly or until the Judge has satisfied himself from inquiry that reasonable grounds for exercising such a right exist. The matter is one for the Judge's own discretion, 37 C.L.J. 595; 7 C.W.N. 83. But the Advocate General may exercise his powers under S. 833 infra and, enter a nolle prosequi. The trial before a fresh Jury is a continuation of the first trial on the original plea, 41 C. 1072. The power of discharge while discretionary ought not to be exercised without strong reasons; yet it may be exercised without any absolute necessity e.g., a material witness for the prosecution persistently refused to answer questions put, and the Judge thereupon adjudged him guilty of contempt and fined and imprisoned him, the Jury was discharged against the will of the accused, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr. p. 214 (25th Ed.)

H.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried with Assessors.

309. (1) When, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court may sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and shall then require each of the assessors to state his opinion orally on all the charges on which the accused has been tried, and shall record such opinion, and for that purpose may ask the assessors such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their opinions are. All such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

Delivery of opinions of assessors.

(2) The Judge shall then give judgment, but in doing so shall not be bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors.

Judgment.

(3) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of section 502, pass sentence on him according to law.

Amendment.—The words in italics are new.

Scope of the Section.—The assessors are no doubt to assist the Judge, but nowhere in the Code of Criminal Procedure has the Legislature invested the Assessors with the power of appreciating the evidence so as to bind the Judge. The theory of trial with the help of Assessors is that the system of Assessors forms as it were a stage towards the ultimate introduction of trial by Jury. That was the object with which the Assessors' system was introduced in the earlier years of the introduction of Criminal Law by the British Indian Legislature in this country. The opinion of the Assessors must have no doubt, regard paid to it, but after all, it is the Judge who is to decide the case on the facts as well as law. His is the final responsibility, 14 Bom. L.R. 710 at 711=13 Cr. L.J. 677=16 Ind. Cas. 325 There is nothing in the Code authorising or forbidding the Judge to allow consultation between the Assessors and there is nothing prohibiting the Judge in his discretion to allow it. The opinion of Bashyam Ayyangar, J., in 24 M. 523 went to the extent of holding that the Judge is entitled to have before him each Assessor's individual and independent opinion, 16 Cr. L.J. 717=30 Ind. Cas. 1005.

May sum up.—A summing up of the evidence is not required in a case tried with the aid of Assessors, 11 W.R. (Cr) 39. The law gives the Judge a discretion to sum up the evidence for the benefit of the assessors if he thinks necessary, but it gives him no power to question them until they have delivered their opinions orally and he has recorded such opinions. If there is anything obscure in their opinion, there is no objection to the Judge asking questions to clear up such obscurity but he is bound to allow the assessors to express their opinion independently in their own words on the whole case before interfering with them in any way or asking them any questions whatever except "what is your opinion," 40 C. 163 at 163. The provision as to summing up should be availed of by Judges where facts are complicated and it may therefore be expedient to explain the same, 24 M. 523 at 537. The effect of summing up the evidence in a case tried with the aid of Assessors is to enable the Sessions Judge to place the evidence in a long and intricate case in an intelligible form, to assist the Assessors in arriving at a reasonable conclusion, 9 C. 875.

Require each Assessor to state his opinion orally.—If a Judge should decide a case without inviting the opinions of Assessors, he virtually holds the trial without the aid of Assessors, and his finding and sentence cannot be regarded as one passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction, 24 M. 523 at 535. See also Weir II, 301; 25 M 598; 21 M L J. 520; 10 A. 414; 9 C. 875; 22 W R. (Cr.) 35. The opinion of each Assessor shall be given orally and shall be recorded in writing. Such record shall contain not only the conclusion arrived at by each Assessor but also the grounds of his opinion, 9 C 875. In cases tried with the aid of Assessors, each of the Assessors should be asked to give his opinion clearly as to what happened and he should then, if necessary, give a further opinion on such matters as to intention, knowledge, etc., 30 Cr. L.J. 378=115 Ind. Cas 66. To state his opinion means, that the Assessor is required to give a definite opinion whether the prisoner is guilty of either, and if so which of the charges preferred against him and it is not sufficient if he should merely express his opinion that the accused did certain acts. It is imperative for a Judge to take the opinion of the Assessors on the charge, it is proposed to convict the accused on. It is not open to the Judge to put merely the charge of murder to the Assessors and when they give their opinion on that charge and that charge only, then on his own motion and without asking any further opinion of the Assessors find the accused guilty of some other offence quite distinct. When an accused is charged with a major offence and in the alternative with a minor offence being in effect an accessory to the crime the case will be different. 26 Cr. L J 394=84 Ind Cas. 933 where 25 Bom. L R. 231=25 Cr L J. 1343=82 Ind. Cas. 709 is distinguished. The Assessors ought not to be allowed to put in written opinions like judgments. They are to state their opinions orally and the Judge is to record them. To allow Assessors to put in written opinions defeats the intention of the section, 39 C. 119 at 122. But see the opinion expressed by the Privy Council, 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.) at 231, where their Lordships held if the Assessors gave their opinion in writing it has not been shown that it led to any miscarriage of justice at all. In order to comply with the provisions of this section the Judge should record the opinion expressed by the Assessors in writing when given in his own words by each Assessor. Where the accused is tried in one trial of two offences, one of which is a Jury case and the other an Assessors case and the Judge after recording the verdict of the Jury only took the opinion of two of the assessors on the other charge without taking the opinion of all the Jurors as Assessors as required by S. 269, supra, it was held that the conviction was bad and S. 537, infra, could not cure such a defect, 26 M. 593; 21 M.L.J. 520. Assessors are appointed to assist the Court in the trial and are to give their opinion, and when that opinion differs from that formed by the Judge, he should always ascertain the grounds of their opinion, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 21, and Assessors should be invited and encouraged by the Judge to state briefly the grounds of their opinion as well as the result, 2 Bom. L.R. 322. The addition in subsection (1) of the words "and for the purpose of ascertaining such opinion" shall ask each Assessor such questions, as he thinks necessary, such questions and answers thereto shall be recorded" assimilates the procedure by which the Assessors give their opinion to that adopted for ascertaining the verdict of the Jury, namely, by question and answer, to be recorded. See S. 303, supra.

On all charges on which the accused had been tried.—This section makes it obligatory on the Judge to require each of the Assessors to state his opinion orally on all the charges on which the accused had been tried and to record such opinion. The words "on all the charges" have been interpreted to mean that distinct opinion on each charge must be taken. A conviction for abetment of the offence charged without taking the opinion of the assessors on the point is not therefore permissible, 29 Cr. L.J. 561=109 Ind. Cas. 497.

The Judge may ask such questions.—Cross-examination of the Assessors is entirely contrary to law. This section gives the Judge no power to question the assessors until they have delivered their opinion orally and the Judge has recorded such opinion. If there is any obscurity in the opinion then there is no objection to ask questions to clear up the obscurity, 13 Cr. L.J. 497=15 Ind. Cas. 641; 41 C. 350. Grounds should be elicited by putting specific and pointed questions to the Assessors on the important and salient points on which the decision of the case really depends and in inviting their opinion thereon; the recording of the opinion of the assessors should be appended to the judgment Rule 245 Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

Shall record such opinion.—If a Judge should decide a case without inviting the opinion of the Assessors and recording the same, he virtually holds the trial without the aid of the Assessors and his finding and sentence cannot be regarded as one passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction, 23 M. 523; 26 M. 593; 21 M.L.J. 520; Weir II, 331; 10 A. 414; 22 W.R. (Cr.) 34; 9 C. 873. By the new amendment the power is given to the Judge to put such questions to the Assessors as are necessary to ascertain what their opinion is and to record such opinion. The grounds on which the Assessors have their opinion are also to be recorded especially when the Judge differs from their opinion. It is too much the custom to neglect the opinion of the Assessors and put them in such a shape that the High Court can make nothing of them. There is all the difference between the verdict of the Jury and the opinion of the Assessors. The former is the simple and conclusive verdict of guilty or not guilty. The other is not a verdict but an opinion and not having any legal validity the weight seems to depend solely on the reason and sense by which it is supported. In recording in writing the opinion of each Assessor as required by this section the Judge should not merely put in his judgment, that he concurs with or differs from the Assessors, but should separately record the opinion of each assessor and should invite and encourage each assessor to make that opinion more than a mere expression for or against the prisoner, but an opinion on the case stating the view that the Assessor takes of the facts and the consideration (in brief) on which his opinion is founded, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 6. The reasons for their opinion should also be briefly stated and not merely the result of their opinion which cannot in any way assist the Judge or the High Court on appeal, 2 Bom L.R. 322 at 323. See also 2 Bom L.R. 323 at 324. "State his opinion" means that the assessor is required to give a definite opinion whether the prisoner is guilty of either and if so which of the charges preferred against him and it is not sufficient if he should merely express an opinion that the accused did certain acts, 22 W.R. (Cr.) 34. Where the Assessors are not asked and apparently not allowed to give an independent opinion in their own words on the whole case, the trial is altogether bad, 13 Cr L.J. 497=5 Ind. Cas. 641. Once a trial has been held and the opinion of the Assessors recorded the Judge is not entitled to cancel the trial and order a new trial on the ground that a charge has been improperly joined. He has no option after recording the Assessors' opinion but to give judgment in accordance with this section, 17 Bom. L.R. 1074, when once a Sessions Judge differs from the opinion of the Assessors he should always record carefully the grounds on which the Assessors base their opinion and should make some reference to the matters in the judgment, 1903 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 192 p. 637, where a Judge differs from the opinion of the assessors or any of them it is desirable to have a record not merely of the opinion of each Assessor but also as far as possible, of the grounds on which the opinion is based as such record will be of use to the appellate Court and to Government in dealing with mercy petitions, Rule 213 Mad. Crl. Rules, of Pr.

The Judge shall then give judgment.—Under this section the Judge is bound to give judgment after recording the opinion of the Assessors. After taking the opinion, he is not entitled to take evidence and if he does so the trial is bad, 22 Cr. L.J. 127=39 Ind. Cas. 559; nor can he hold a local inspection after recording the opinion of Assessors, 1 C.L.R. 143; 9 L.B.R. 88, once the opinion is taken and the Assessors discharged they cannot be recalled by the Judge and then the charge against the accused be amended and he be convicted on the amended charge, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 40. The fact that the accused is charged in the same trial with another offence triable by Jury and the Judge disagrees with the Jury and makes up his mind to make a reference to the High Court will not absolve the Judge from his duty to give judgment on the charge tried with the aid of Assessors and when the Judge without doing so made a reference to the High Court, it was held that the reference was premature and the case sent back to rectify the error and then act according to law, 36 M.L.J. 452=9 L.W. 376 =26 M.L.T. 45=20 Cr. L.J. 352=59 Ind. Cas. 832. A Sessions Judge is not entitled to incorporate in his judgment the opinion of a surgeon obtained privately after he had taken the opinion of the Assessors and reserved his judgment. If he wants that evidence he ought to have the surgeon summoned, adjourn the case and examine him in the presence of the accused and the Assessors, 1889 A.W.N. 181; See also 15 A. 136; 1889 P.R. (Cr.) 29.

Shall not be bound to conform to opinion of assessors.—The opinion of an Assessor is certainly not a judicial opinion in any sense though one may not be so hypercritical as to object to its being characterized or referred to as quasi-judicial. Assessors are analogous to expert witnesses and in principle the opinion of an Assessor is substantially on the same footing as the opinion evidence of an expert witness, 24 M. 523 at 543. The Assessors like a Jury are not Judges of all questions of fact. The opinion of the Assessors must have no doubt, regard paid to it, but after all it is the Judge who is to decide the case on the facts, as well as law. The function no doubt is to assist the Judge but they are not invested with the power of appreciating the evidence so as to bind the Judge who must pay regard to their opinion but after all, he is to decide the case on the facts as well as the law. His is the final responsibility, 14 Bom. L.R. 710=13 Cr. L.J. 677=16 Ind. Cas. 325. Under the law the Jury is required to deliver its verdict, but Assessors are appointed to aid the Judge in the trial and are to give their opinion and when that opinion differs from that formed by the Judge the latter should always ascertain the grounds of the Assessor's opinion. The decision does not rest with them but they are to assist the Judge at the trial and in no better mode can they assist him than by stating the reason for their opinion when the case is one in which there may be a difference of opinion, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 21.

Under sub section (3) a Judge is now empowered expressly by the addition newly made to pass an order under S. 562, infra, releasing the accused on probation of good conduct or release him on admonition.

1.—Procedure in case of Previous Conviction.

310. In the case of a trial by a jury or with the aid of assessors Procedure in case of previous conviction. When the accused is charged with an offence and further charged that he is by reason of a previous conviction liable to enhanced punishment or to punishment of a different kind for such subsequent offence, the procedure prescribed by the foregoing provisions of this Chapter shall be modified as follows, namely:—

(a) Such further charge shall not be read out in Court and the accused shall not be asked to plead thereto, nor shall the same be referred to by the prosecution, or any evidence adduced thereon unless and until,

(i) he has been convicted of the subsequent offence, or

(ii) the jury have delivered their verdict, or the opinions of the assessors have been recorded, on the charge of the subsequent offence.

(b) In the case of a trial held with the aid of assessors, the Court may, in its discretion, proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction.

Amendment.—This section which deals with the procedure in the case of a trial by a Jury or with the aid of Assessors when a previous conviction has to be proved, has been recast in order to avoid the inconvenience which may at present arise in cases tried by Assessors (whose opinion is not binding on the Judge) and in cases in which a Judge decides to make a reference to the High Court under S. 307. Under the amendment, if a Jury delivers a verdict of not guilty on the charge of the subsequent offence for which the accused is primarily being tried, or in any trial held with aid of Assessors the Court is given a discretion to proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction.—Statement of Objects and Reasons

Scope of the section.—This section lays down a special form of trial of the issue of liability to enhanced punishment in consequence of previous conviction, and it is expressly made applicable to trials before the Courts of Session only, and does not apply to trials before Magistrates 50 C. 367 at 369. The provisions of this section are imperative and must be complied with. A charge of previous conviction should not be read out in Court, and the accused should not be questioned about it until he has been convicted or the opinion of the Assessors recorded on the subsequent charge and, when such a charge is allowed to be read in the presence of the Assessors in the very beginning of the trial and the accused's admission as to his previous conviction recorded in the presence of the Assessors, the trial and conviction were wholly bad and therefore set aside 28 Cr. L.J. 667 = 103 Ind. Cas. 203. It is not easy for Magistrates to keep their mind entirely free from prejudice, when the records show that the accused has been previously convicted. But this section insists that in Sessions trials the fact of a previous conviction is rightly to be withheld from the Jurors and Assessors until the accused has pleaded to the charge or has been found guilty. This shows the importance of complete exclusion of such knowledge in weighing the evidence as to the truth or otherwise of the charge against the accused S. 54 of the Indian Evidence Act also lays down that a previous conviction is inadmissible in evidence except where evidence of bad character is relevant, 1 Ran. 520.

Form of charge.—Care should be taken to clearly and accurately state the previous conviction and something like the following form may conveniently be adopted "I—further charge you—" "with having on the—day of—19 at—before the—Judge or Magistrate" " (as the case may be) been convicted of an offence under section—of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment or transportation for—years" 1831 A.W.N. 144. The charge need not show the extent of the former punishment, & M.H.C.R. Appx. 11. Bare statement of the accused that the accused is an old offender is not sufficient, Welr II, 266.

Previous conviction.—Formerly it was merely an act of grace to suppress evidence of a previous conviction but now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, S. 16 enacts that an offender shall in the first instance be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence and at the conclusion of the subsequent offence he shall be asked and not before whether he has been previously convicted. See Roscoe, Cr. Pr. & Ev. p. 190. The question of previous conviction is one of fact which ought to be determined by the Jury, 21 W.R. (Cr.) 40. When the verdict of Jurors or majority of Jurors has been delivered, or the opinion of the Assessors has been recorded on the charge of the subsequent offence, the accused may be called upon to plead to the charge of previous conviction and evidence on that charge may be adduced now. Previous conviction may be proved if the accused denies the charges by the evidence of the Jailor or some other jail authority who identifies the accused as the person who underwent imprisonment in a particular jail, Ratanlal 52; 1903 A.W.N. 51 mere production of record is not sufficient. Identification of the prisoner with the person previously convicted as evidence by the records is quite necessary, 6 B L.R. (Appx) 151; 1881 A.W.N. 144 Also a discretion is given to the Judge to proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial after the Jury or majority of Jury have returned a verdict of not guilty on the charge on the subsequent offence. Before making reference under S. 307, supra, the Judge may now ask the accused to plead to the previous conviction and take evidence and the procedure suggested in, 30 M. 134, is not of much importance now. The High Court instead of remanding the case as it did in, 2 Bom. L.R. 336, to record the plea and to pass sentence, may now itself do so as the Judge has now to record the plea of the accused as to the previous conviction and take evidence in support of the same in the exercise of the discretion given to him. In cases tried with the aid of Assessors a discretion is given to the Court to proceed or not, with the charge of previous conviction.

Previous conviction by a Court outside British India cannot be charged, 7 Cen. Pro. L. R. 24; nor can a conviction under a special or local law be charged 1 Cr. L.J. 1031.

311. Notwithstanding anything in the last foregoing section, evidence of the previous conviction may be given at the trial for the subsequent offence, if the fact of the previous conviction is relevant under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

When evidence of previous conviction may be given.

See S. 511, infra, which provides for special means of proving previous conviction.

J.—List of Jurors for High Court, and summoning Jurors for that Court.

Number of special Jurors.

312. The High Court may prescribe the number of persons whose names shall be entered at any one time in the special jurors' list :

Provided that no definite number of Europeans or of Americans or of Indians shall be prescribed.

This section has been newly substituted by Act XII of 1923. The proviso restricts the power of the High Court prescribing a definite number of Europeans or Americans or Indians. The High Court is empowered only to prescribe the number of persons whose names shall be entered in the special Jurors' list.

313. (1) The Clerk of the Crown shall, before the first day of April in each year, and subject to such rules as the High Court from time to time prescribes, prepare—

Lists of common and special Jurors.

- (a) a list of all persons liable to serve as common jurors ; and
- (b) a list of persons liable to serve as special jurors only.

(2) Regard shall be had, in the preparation of the latter list, to the property, character, and education of the persons whose names are entered therein.

(3) No person shall be entitled to have his name entered in the special jurors' list merely because he may have been entered in the special jurors' list for a previous year.

(4) The Governor General in Council or the Local Government in the case of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal, and, in the case of other High Courts, the Local Government, may exempt any salaried officer of Government from serving as a juror.

(5) The Clerk of the Crown shall, subject to such rules as aforesaid, have full discretion to prepare the said list as seems to him to be proper, and there shall be no appeal from, or review of his decision.

Discretion of officer preparing lists.

314. (1) Preliminary lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and as special jurors, respectively, signed by the Clerk of the Crown, shall be published once in the local official Gazette before the fifteenth day of April next after their preparation.

Publication of lists, preliminary and revised.

(2) Revised lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and special jurors, respectively, signed as aforesaid, shall be published once in the local official Gazette before the first day of May next after their preparation.

(3) Copies of the said lists shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the Court-house.

315. (1) Out of the persons named in the revised lists aforesaid, there shall be summoned for each sessions in the town which is the usual place of sitting of each High Court as many of those who are liable to serve on special or common juries respectively as the Clerk of the Crown considers necessary.

Number of Jurors to be summoned.

(2) No person shall be so summoned more than once in six months unless the number cannot be made up without him.

(3) If, during the continuance of any sessions, it appears that the number of persons so summoned is not sufficient, such number as may be necessary of other persons liable to serve as aforesaid shall be summoned for such sessions.

This section provides for summoning Jurors for the High Court Sessions in the Presidency Towns.

316. Whenever a High Court has given notice of its intention to hold sittings at any place outside the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court for the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, the Court of Session at such place shall, subject to any direction which may be given by the High Court, summon a sufficient number of jurors from its own list, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for summoning jurors to the Courts of Session.

Summoning Jurors outside the place of sitting of High Courts.
This section provides for summoning of Jurors when a High Court intends to hold its Sessions in any place outside the Presidency Town. The Court of Sessions at such a place of sitting is to summon a sufficient number of Jurors from its own list subject to any direction which the High Court may give.

High Court has given notice.—See Es. 335 and 336, infra.

In the manner hereinafter prescribed.—See S. 326, infra.

317. (1) In addition to the person so summoned as jurors, the said Court of Session shall, if it thinks needful, after communication with the Commanding Officer, cause to be summoned such number of commissioned and non-commissioned officers in Her Majesty's Army or Air Force * resident within ten miles of its place of sitting as the Court considers to be necessary to make up the juries required for the trial of persons charged with offences before the High Court as aforesaid.

Military Jurors.

(2) All officers so summoned shall be liable to serve on such juries notwithstanding anything contained in this Code; but no such officer shall be summoned whom his Commanding Officer desires to have excused on the ground of urgent official * duty or for any other special * official reason.

318. Any person summoned under section 315, section 316 or section 317, who, without lawful excuse, fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Judge, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court after being ordered to attend, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt, and be liable, by order of the Judge, to such fine as he thinks fit; and, in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months in the civil jail until the fine is paid;

Provided that the Court may in its discretion remit any fine or imprisonment so imposed.

S. 205, supra enacts that if a trial is adjourned, the Jurors shall attend at the adjourned sitting and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial. See in this con-

* Added by Act X of 1927.

section 8. 332, infra which deals with similar cases before the High Court Sessions. See also 8 W.R. (Cr.) 83; 1897 A.W.N. 167; 1899 A.W.N. 13; 6 C.W.N. 107 as to the power of High Court to revise orders passed under this section fixing Jurors.

Amendment.—"For a term not exceeding six months", these words were added in the Code of 1893.

The proviso to the section was added in the Code of 1893 and gives a wide discretion to the presiding Judge to remit the fine or imprisonment imposed by him on a Juror who fails to attend in accordance with the summons.

K.—List of Jurors and Assessors for Court of Session and summoning Jurors and Assessors for that Court.

319. All male persons between the ages of twenty-one and sixty shall, except as next hereinafter mentioned, be liable to serve as jurors or assessors at any trial held within the district in which they reside.

Liability to serve as Jurors or Assessors.

or, if the Local Government, on consideration of local circumstances, has fixed any smaller area in this behalf, within the area so fixed.

Jurors must be persons of independent condition in life, men of judgment and experience, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 35.

If Local Government has fixed any area.—In the Madras Presidency the area fixed is within a radius of twenty miles from the place where trials before the Sessions Court are held in Districts in which there is no railway communication and in Districts where there is railway communication, all persons residing within the District are liable to serve as Jurors or Assessors if the journey to the town where the Sessions Court is situated from the town or village in which they reside, does not exceed a distance of fifty miles by rail and ten miles by road or water. But in the Districts of Malabar, Godavari and Kistna where exceptional facilities of water communication exist, the radius will be forty miles in the case of such towns or villages as are in direct communication by water with the Sessions station, G. O., No. 1781 dated 10—12—1909.

320. The following persons are exempt from liability to serve as jurors or assessors, namely:—

(a) officers in civil employ superior in rank to a District Magistrate;

(aa) members of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature and members of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act.*

(b) salaried Judges;

(c) Commissioners and Collectors of Revenue or Customs;

(d) police-officers and persons engaged in the Preventive Service in the Customs Department;

(e) persons engaged in the collection of the revenue whom the Collector thinks fit to exempt on the ground of official duty;

(f) persons actually officiating as priests or ministers of their respective religions;

(g) persons in Her Majesty's Army or Air Force † except when,

* Amended by Act XXIII of 1925, B. 2.

† Added by Act X of 1917.

by any law in force for the time being, they are specially made liable to serve as jurors or assessors ;

(h) surgeons and others who openly and constantly practise the medical profession ;

(i) legal practitioners (as defined by the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879), in actual practice ;

(j) persons employed in the Post-Office and Telegraph Departments ;

(k) persons exempted from personal appearance in Court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, sections 640 and 641 [Sections 132 and 133 of Act V of 1908] ;

(l) other persons exempted by the Local Government from liability to serve as jurors or assessors.

Scope of the section.—This section provides exemptions from liability to serve as Jurors or Assessors. There is a clear distinction between exemption and disqualification. The persons specified in this section are no doubt fully qualified and capable of serving on the Jury. But they are exempted. See S. 278, supra, which deals with disqualification to serve on the Jury.

Cl. (b) : Salaried Judges.—The word "salaried" was newly added in the Code of 1898. to make "Honorary Magistrates" who are "Judges" but not "salaried Judges" liable to serve as Jurors or Assessors.

Cl. (d) : Police-officers.—This was newly added in the Code of 1898.

Cl. (g).—Persons employed in the Army are generally exempted but when necessity arises, the Court is empowered to summon them as Jurors. See Ss. 316, 317 and 326 (4), infra.

Cl. (j).—This clause was newly added in the Code of 1898. Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys of the High Court are specially exempted in the Presidency of Madras—Fort St. George Gazette, 1876, Sep. p. 1 and Ibid., 1874, p. 105.

Cl. (k).—See Ss. 132 and 133, Civil Procedure Code, Act V of 1908.

Cl. (l).—G. O. No. 1734 Jud., dated, 10-12-1909. exempts the following persons from serving as Jurors or Assessors in Courts other than the High Court under Cl. (l) of this section :—(1) The Agent, the Chief Accountant and Cash-keeper of every branch of the Bank of Madras (Imperial Bank of India). (2) All officers and Subordinates of P.W.D. while actually in charge of P.W. ranges. (3) All members of the executive establishments of P.W.D. (4) Managers of offices of Superintending Engineer, P.W.D. and Head Clerks and Accountants of division offices. (5) All railway Engineers in charge of sections of Railway open to public traffic. (6) The Agent, the Chief Engineer, Dy. Chief Engineer, Loco, and Carriage Superintendent, General Traffic Manager, District Traffic Superintendents, Dy. Traffic Managers, Permanent Way Inspectors, Locomotive Foreman, Station Masters, Engine Drivers, Telegraph Inspectors, Signallers and Guards of M.S.M. & S.I.R. Railways. (7) Managers of the office of Engineers-in-chief and Head Clerks and Accountants of Divisional Offices of State Railways (8) All Treasury Deputy Collectors, Huzur Sheristadars and Cash-keepers. (9) Assistant and Sub-Assistant Inspectors of Schools, and Supervisors of Primary schools. (10) Assistant or Deputy Director of Survey, (11) All Superintendents of Jails and their subordinates (12) All Stamp Vendors, and Registration and Post Officers. (13) All persons who live at a distance further than 20 miles by road from the place where the trials before the Sessions Courts are held, provided where the means of communication by rail or water are available the distance may be proportionately increased, 2 miles by water and 5 miles by rail being taken as equivalent to 1 mile by road, Rule 45, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

321. (1) The Sessions Judge, and the Collector of the district or such other officer as the Local Government appoints in this behalf, shall prepare and make out in alphabetical order a list of persons liable to serve as jurors or assessors and qualified in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid to serve as such, and not likely to be successfully objected to under section 278, clauses (b) to (h), both inclusive.

(2) The list shall contain the name, place of abode and quality or business of every such person, and, if the person is an European or an American, the list shall mention the race to which he belongs.

This section provides for making a list of Jurors or Assessors qualified to serve as such. Due consideration ought to be given to the provisions of S. 278, cls. (a) and (b), supra, viz., presumed or actual partiality and personal disqualification, such as alienage, etc. In selecting persons, a Sessions Judge should choose persons of independent condition in life and men of judgment and experience, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 35 and persons of very high social position should not be placed in the list of Assessors as native sentiment is rightly or wrongly not in favour of such nomination, 1897 A.W.N. 167. The question will be in regard to property, character, and education and in case of superior qualification in any of these, such person will be included in the list of special Jurors.

322. Copies of such list shall be stuck up in the office of the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and in the Court-houses of the District Magistrate and the District Court and extracts therefrom in some conspicuous place in the town or towns in or near which the persons named in the extract reside.

323. To every such copy or extract shall be subjoined a notice stating that objections to the list will be heard and determined by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, at the sessions court-house, and at a time to be mentioned in the notice.

The section only says that to every such copy or extract shall be subjoined a 'notice' and does not contemplate personal service of notice stating that objections will be heard.

324. (1) For the hearing of such objections the Sessions Judge shall sit with the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and shall, at the time and place mentioned in the notice, revise the list and hear the objections (if any) of persons interested in the amendment thereof, and shall strike out the name of any person not suitable in their judgment to serve as a juror or as an assessor, or who may establish his right to any exemption from service given by section 320, and insert the name of any person omitted, from the list whom they deem qualified for such service.

(2) In the event of a difference of opinion between the Sessions Judge and the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, the name of the proposed juror or assessor shall be omitted from the list.

(3) A copy of the revised list shall be signed by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and sent to the Court of Session.

(4) Any order of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid in perparing and revising the list shall be final.

(5) Any exemption not claimed under this section shall be deemed to be waived until the list is next revised.

(6) The list so prepared and revised shall be again revised once in every year.

(7) The list so revised shall be deemed a new list, and shall be subject to all the rules hereinbefore contained as to the list originally prepared.

Hearing objection at the time and place mentioned in the notice.—Where the name of an exempted person appears in the list of Jurors and Assessors prepared under s. 321 supra and such person does not object at the time of revision of the list under this section, sub-section (5) lays down that he shall be deemed to have waived his objection until the list is next revised and sub-section (4) says that the revised list shall be final.

Strike out the name of any person not suitable in their Judgment.—A person whose name is included in the first list may be capable and fully qualified yet the revising authorities may if they think fit, strike out his name from the list.

325. In the case of any district for which the Local Government has declared that the trial of certain offences shall, if the Judge so direct, be by special jury, the Sessions Judge and the Collector of such district or other officer as aforesaid shall prepare, in addition to the revised list hereinbefore prescribed, a special list containing the names of such jurors as are borne on the revised list and are in the opinion of such Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education, fit persons to serve as special jurors:

Preparation of list of special Jurors.

Provided always that the inclusion of the name of any person in such special list shall not involve the removal of his name from the revised list nor relieve him of his liability to serve as an ordinary juror in cases not tried by special jury.

This section enables the preparation of special Jury-list out of ordinary Jury-list, and empowers the Local Government to direct that the trials for certain offences in particular districts shall, if the Sessions Judge so directs, be by special Jury.

326. (1) The Sessions Judge shall ordinarily, seven days at least

District Magistrate to summon Jurors and

before the day which he may from time to time fix for holding the sessions, send a letter to the District Magistrate requesting him to summon as many persons named in the said revised list or the said special list as seem to the Sessions Judge to be needed for trials by jury and trials with the aid of assessors at the said sessions, the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial and including where any accused person is an European or an American, as many Europeans or Americans as may be required for the purpose of choosing jurors or assessors for the trial.

(2) The names of the persons to be summoned shall be drawn by lot in open Court, excluding those who have served within six months unless the number cannot be made up without them; and the names so drawn shall be specified in the said letter.

(3) Where the accused requires, and is entitled to be tried under the provisions of section 275, there shall be chosen by lot, in the manner prescribed by or under section 276, from the whole number of persons returned the jurors who are to constitute the jury until a jury containing the proper number of Europeans or Europeans and Americans or of Indians, as the case may be, has been obtained :

Provided that, in any case in which the proper number of Europeans or Americans cannot otherwise be obtained, the Court may, in its discretion for the purpose of constituting the jury, summon any person excluded from the list on the ground of his being exempted under section 320.

(4) Where, under the proviso to sub-section (3), the Court proposes to summon as a juror any person in His Majesty's Army, the provisions of section 317 shall apply in like manner as they apply for the purpose of the summoning of military jurors for a trial under section 316.

Amendment.—The italicised words in sub-section (1), sub-sections (2) and (4) were added by Act XII of 1923, Racial Distinctions Act. "Seven days" has been substituted for "three days" in the Code of 1898.

Scope and object of the section.—S. 327 infra would seem to show that this section has in contemplation, viz., the summoning of a sufficient number of persons for attendance throughout the sessions and not to summon separate sets of persons for each particular trial and to fix dates accordingly, much in the same way as persons summoned under s. 316 supra to give their attendance at the High Court sessions. It is to be noticed that the phrase used in this section is "the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial," S. C. 371. The object of this and the other provisions is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional manipulation of the jury for a particular case, and an accused has a right to claim to be tried by a jury of 12 in all cases.

strict regard to all the safeguards provided by law to secure perfect impartiality, 7 C.W.N. 188. If a Judge is unable to comply with the provisions of this section, he will do well to postpone the trial. The duty of issuing a precept under this section cannot be performed by a Subordinate Judge doing current duties in the absence of the Sessions Judge, Ratanlal 148.

District Magistrate to summon.—The provisions of Chapter VI relating to service of summons apply to summoning Jurors and see Sch. V, Form No. 32 infra, as to the form of precept to District Magistrate, to summon Jurors and Assessors. Where a summons to a Juror was not served personally but a copy was affixed to the outer door of his house in his absence and he had no knowledge of such service of summons, it was held he could not be fined for non-attendance, 6 C.W.N. 887; 1899 A.W.N. 13. An Assessor cannot be held to have lawfully summoned to act as such on a particular day unless the summons issued to him was for his attendance on that day and no other. What the Legislature has contemplated as the ordinary or normal procedure is that all Assessors should be summoned on the first day on which the Sessions commence, however many trials it may propose to hold in the course of that Sessions. This procedure has been found to be unnecessarily burdensome for the persons summoned, in view of the length to which the Sessions are apt to run in many districts. The practice commonly followed, viz., to summon four Assessors for each date is not objectionable in law, but is far from being obligatory and is not even the normal procedure, 7 Cr. L. Rev. 267=17 Cr. L.J. 17=32 Ind. Cas. 145. Where a Judge had requested the District Magistrate to summon five Assessors to attend the Court on a particular day and when the case was taken up he found only one of those persons present and thereafter directed a search in the Court precincts of any person acquainted with English who could be required to act as an Assessor and a Nazir of the Court was produced, and he without any objection by the accused acted as an Assessor it was held that as the Nazir was not summoned to act as an Assessor and as there was nothing to show that he was on the list of Assessors and could be summoned, the trial was illegal and S. 537 infra cannot cure a defect as to the constitution of the Court even though the accused did not object to the course adopted, 11 Cr. L.J. 724=8 Ind. Cas. 874 where 15 B. 514; 25 B. 694 at 696; 3 Bom. L. R. 274 are referred to.

Not being less than double the number.—Where any accused is charged with an offence punishable with death, an offence triable by Jury in Calcutta (under the Jury notification), the District Magistrate shall summon a number of persons not being less than double the number of persons required for the trial under this section. The Jury in such a case is to consist of not less than seven and if practically of nine persons. It is contrary to the intention of the Code and the standard set by the Legislature if an unreasonable number of Jurors were summoned with the result that it was not possible to have a Jury properly and the whole proceedings should therefore have to be set aside and retrial was ordered, 55 C. 794 following 31 C.W.N. 1102=56 C.L.J. 160=28 Cr. L.J. 889=104 Ind. Cas. 905.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section is new. Before the amendment, S. 462, now repealed, dealt with summoning Jurors when a mixed Jury was claimed. Now under S. 275 supra Indian British Subjects can also claim like European British Subjects a trial by a Jury the majority of which is to be Indians in trials before the High Court. This provision is extended to trials in Sessions Court as well, by the amendment.

Sub-section (4).—This sub-section is also new. The power of the Court of Session to try European British Subjects is now extended and therefore the power is given to summon Military Jurors, a power which the High Court alone possessed before the amendment. S. 320 (g) exempts generally persons employed in the Army or in the Air Force but they can be summoned when necessity arises.

For Form of Precept to the District Magistrate to summon Jurors and Assessors, See Sch. V, Form No. 82.

327. The Court of Session may direct jurors or assessors to be summoned at other periods than the period specified in section 326, when the number of trials before the Court renders the attendance of one set of jurors or assessors for a whole session oppressive, or whenever, for other reasons, such direction is found to be necessary.

Power to summon another set of Jurors or Assessors.

328. Every summons to a juror or assessor shall be in writing, and shall require his attendance as a juror or assessor, as the case may be, at a time and place to be therein specified.

Form and contents of summons.

S. 68 supra is the only provision in the Code for service of summons and any other mode adopted for such service is illegal. The issue of a summons to an Assessor to attend the Sessions Court by registered letter is illegal and not authorised by law and the person summoned cannot be held guilty under S. 332, I.P.C., for non-attendance, 1 C.W.N. cxvi. See forms 32 and 33 of Sch. V for summons to Juror or Assessor.

329. When any person summoned to serve as a juror or assessor is in the service of Government or of a Railway Company, the Court to serve in which he is so summoned may excuse his attendance if it appears on the representation of the head of the office in which he is employed, that he cannot serve as a juror or assessor, as the case may be, without inconvenience to the public.

When Government or Railway servant may be excused.

Court may excuse attendance of Juror or Assessor.

Court may relieve special Jurors from liability to serve again as Jurors for twelve months.

330. (1) The Court of Session may, for reasonable cause excuse, any juror or assessor from attendance at any particular session.

(2) The Court of Session may, if it shall think fit, at the conclusion of any trial by special jury, direct that the jurors who have served on such jury shall not be summoned to serve again as jurors for a period of twelve months.

331. (1) At each session the said Court shall cause to be made a list of the names of those who have attended as jurors and assessors at such session.

(2) Such list shall be kept with the list of the jurors and assessors as revised under section 324.

(3) A reference shall be made in the margin of the said revised list to each of the names which are mentioned in the list prepared under this section.

List of Jurors and Assessors attending.

332. (1) Any person summoned to attend as a juror or as an assessor who, without lawful excuse, fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Court, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court, after being ordered to attend, shall be liable by order of the Court of Session to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees.

Penalty for non-attendance of Juror or Assessor.

(2) Such fine shall be levied by the District Magistrate by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such juror or assessor within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court making the order.

(3) For good cause shown, the Court may remit or reduce any fine so imposed.

(4) In default of recovery of the fine by attachment and sale, such juror or assessor may, by order of the Court of Session, be imprisoned in the civil jail for the term of fifteen days, unless such fine is paid before the end of the said term.

In preparing a list of Assessors, persons of high rank should not be included until it is known that they are willing to act as such, as native sentiment upon this point is rightly or wrongly against such nomination, 1887 A.W.N. 167.

An order under this section passed by a Sessions Judge fining an Assessor is not appealable, and the High Court cannot interfere in Revision where there was nothing illegal in the order passed, 8 W.R. (Cr.) 83, but if the Juror or Assessor fined by the Judge subsequently appears and gives good ground for his absence when his name was called on, such as illness etc., the Judge should reconsider the matter. See S. 318 supra which relates to failure to attend at the Sessions. See also 1899 A.W.N. 13; 1897 A.W.N. 167; 6 C.W.N. 887 as to powers of the High Court to revise orders fining Juror or Assessor.

Sub-section (3).—An Assessor on account of illness failed to attend Court, and a medical certificate as to his illness was produced, an hour or two after the order of the Judge fining him for non-attendance. In such a case there is no reason why it should not have been received and favourably considered by the Judge, to remit or reduce the fine imposed, 8 W.R. (Cr.) 83.

L.—Special Provisions for High Courts.

333. At any stage of any trial before a High Court under this Power of Advocate-General to stay prosecution.

Code, before the return of the verdict, the Advocate-General may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court on behalf of Her Majesty that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge; and thereupon all proceedings on such charge against the defendant shall be stayed, and he shall be discharged of and from the same. But such discharge shall not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs.

Scope of the section.—This section deals with the power of the Advocate-General to stay prosecution by entering what is called a nolle prosequi. Nolle Prosequi (not willing to prosecute) is an entry, on the record, of a statement that the prosecutor will not proceed further. This course is occasionally adopted (1) when it is desired to call the accused as king's evidence i.e., as an approver against another concerned in the crime (2) when a Civil suit is pending on the same facts (3) where the charge is clearly defective or of doubtful validity and cannot be sustained. The entry when made has not the effect of a judgment on the merits, but puts an end to the indictment on which the prisoner is brought before the Court and prevents the issue of further process therein. It is not equivalent to a pardon or an acquittal, for raising a plea of autrefois acquit. 'The prisoner cannot be proceeded against on the same charge, but the rule does not affect the legality or otherwise of any proceedings taken hereafter by the Crown against him, 52 C. 590. A nolle prosequi does not operate as a bar or discharge or acquittal on the merits, but the party remains liable to be re-indicted. The power of the Attorney-General in England is not subject to any control by the Courts; but that power does not interfere with the right of the Judge to allow a case to be withdrawn on the application of a private party. Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr., p. 121. (25th Ed.). Similarly the power of the Advocate-General in India is not subject to the control of the Court. The words 'if he thinks fit' indicate that the power is solely vested in him.

Advocate-General may inform Court he will not further prosecute.—For definition of the term "Advocate-General," see S. 4 (1) (a) supra. At the Criminal Sessions of the Calcutta High Court, the trial had commenced before Rampini, J., and evidence was partly recorded, when the presiding Judge retired from the case under S. 556 infra on account of personal interest, as being a share-holder in the prosecuting bank, but he did not discharge the Jury. The Chief Justice purporting to act under clause 13 of the Charter Act appointed Stevenson, J., to try the case and in answer to a question by the Judge the Standing Counsel intimated that he intended to proceed with the trial from where it had been left. An objection was raised on behalf of the accused, that Stevenson, J., could not proceed with the trial, as Rampini, J., and the Jury empanelled before him had still the held that where a presiding Judge, after swearing in of the Jury and the reading of the charge, and the counsel for the Crown had started opening his case by reading the sections of the I.P.C., fell suddenly ill, and another Judge was appointed by the Chief Justice to preside at the Sessions, the trial can validly proceed before the successor and no objection can validly be taken that it was necessary to discharge the Jury sworn in and a de novo proceedings should be commenced as the seisin of the case was with the Court as constituted when the Jury was formed, and until the Jury was discharged there cannot be another duly constituted Court to try the case. For similar instances where the Advocate General exercised his power under this section, see 7 C.W.N. xxxi; 8 C.W.N. xlviii. A nolle prosequi puts an end to the prosecution, but does not bar a second trial, see 41 C. 1072. Where the Judge disagreed with the verdict of the Jury who by a majority of seven to two returned a verdict of "not guilty" the Advocate General under this section entered nolle prosequi and the accused was discharged. A discharge under this section will not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs, 41 C. 1072. See also 40 C. 71; 29 C. 725. This is important, as a discharge does not debar a second trial, see S. 403, infra. An order of discharge does not operate as any bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon a complaint or police report or under S. 190 (1) (c) supra, whether such a discharge was by a Presidency Magistrate or a Provincial Magistrate or by a Court of Session or by the High Court. Where the Advocate General entered nolle prosequi in a case tried in the Calcutta High Court Sessions on objection being raised that the offence was committed outside the original jurisdiction of the High Court and the accused was discharged, it was held that the order of discharge did not prevent a Provincial Magistrate from starting fresh proceedings, 1 Cr. L. Rev. 164.

334. For the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, every High Court shall hold sittings on such days and at such convenient intervals as the Chief Justice of such Court from time to time appoints.

Time of holding sittings.

335. (1) The High Court shall hold its sittings at the place at which it now holds them, or at such other place (if any) as the Governor-General in Council in the case of the High Court at Fort William, or the Local Government in the case of the other High Courts, may direct.

(2) But it may, from time to time, in the case of the High Court at Fort William with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, and in all other cases with the consent of the Local Government, hold sittings at such other places within the local limits of its appellate jurisdiction as the High Court appoints.

(3) Such officer as the Chief Justice directs shall give notice before hand in the local official Gazette of all sittings intended to be held for the exercise of the original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section empowers the High Court with the consent of the Local Government to hold its sittings outside the Presidency town at any place within the local limits of its appellate jurisdiction in exceptional cases, such as prevalence of epidemics in the Presidency Town or in the case of an offence committed in a prison and to avoid excessive expense in summoning a large number of witnesses from distant places or in cases to ensure public safety, or to ensure a fair trial to the accused when the public mind is prejudiced by the publication of wild stories against the accused in the local dailies in the Presidency Town before the commencement of the inquiry etc., See S 316 supra which provides for Jurors being summoned in cases contemplated by this section. The Court of Session of the place where the sitting is to be held is to summon the Jurors from its own list.

336. Omitted by Act XII of 1923, S. 20.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GENERAL PROVISIONS AS TO INQUIRIES AND TRIALS.

This Chapter is headed general provisions as to inquiries and trials. "Some of the sections of this Chapter are not in accordance with the strict interpretation of the heading inasmuch as they do not deal with matters which either must or may arise in the course of an inquiry or trial (cf. Ss. 340, 350, 350A). Others deal with questions which are in nature general (e.g., tender of pardon to an accomplice (Ss. 337, 339A), compounding of offences (S. 345). Others, however, appear to be quite general and to be so expressed (exemptions or exceptions being made as necessary). The right to be defended by a pleader (S. 340), the rights of accused who cannot be made to understand the proceedings (S. 341), the right to be free from undue influence, threat or promise (S. 343), the power to remand (S. 344), detention of offenders attending Court (S. 351), Courts to be held in public (S. 352), these are all general provisions, as to inquiries and trials in the fullest sense of the phrase. The language in several of the sections is of studied generality (e.g., any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court S. 340 compare S. 351 and 352) and is appropriate to the subject matter. They are intended to be general provisions and not merely as miscellaneous provisions, 55 C. 297 at 298.

337. (1) In the case of any offence triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session, or any offence punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, or any offence punishable under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment which may extend to seven years, or any offence under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code namely, sections 216A, 369, 401, 435 and 477A, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class may, at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of the offence, with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof :

Provided that, where the offence is under inquiry or trial, no Magistrate of the first class other than the District Magistrate shall exercise the power hereby conferred unless he is the Magistrate making the inquiry or holding the trial, and, where the offence is under investigation, no such Magistrate shall exercise the said power unless he is a Magistrate having jurisdiction in a place where the offence might be inquired into or tried and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained to the exercise thereof.

(1A) Every Magistrate who tenders a pardon under sub-section (1) shall record his reasons for so doing, and shall, on application made by the accused, furnish him with a copy of such record :

Provided that the accused shall pay for the same unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

(2) Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any.

(2A) In every case where a person has accepted a tender of pardon and has been examined under sub-section (2), the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending shall, if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

(3) Such person, unless he is already on bail, shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial.

Amendment—Old sub-section (4) has been split up, first part of it coming in more appropriately at the end of sub-section (1) and the latter part is rendered unnecessary by the addition of the new sub-section (2A). It is now made clear that sub-section (2) applies to the Court of the Magistrate holding the original inquiry. Sub-section (1) has been redrafted with many additions to make the meaning of the section more clear.

Scope and object of the section.—This section does not suggest the idea that the only method of obtaining the evidence of a co-accused against another is by tendering him a pardon with all the safeguards mentioned in this section. This section does not govern S. 494 infra and it does not in any way abridge the wide language of that section. This section and S. 494 infra should be read together. This section deals with the granting of pardon to an under-trial prisoner in some serious cases. If he satisfies the conditions upon which the pardon is granted, he gets acquitted; if not he may be tried for the offence, 33 C.W.N. 458. The object of the section is, in cases involving offences of great magnitude liable to be punished with heavy punishments, to prevent the escape of the offenders from punishment. For attaining this object, conditional pardon is tendered to the accomplice for the purpose of obtaining evidence in grave crimes by holding out the hope to him that if he should disclose the truth as a witness at the trial and thus bring the offenders to justice, he will himself go unpunished. Such conditional pardon protects from prosecution the approver who makes a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and the offenders. If it should ever be laid down as a practical rule in the administration of justice that the testimony of an accomplice should be rejected as incredible, the most mischievous consequences must necessarily ensue because it must not only happen that many heinous crimes and offences will pass unpunished but great encouragement will be given to bad men, by withdrawing from their minds the fear of detection and punishment through the instrumentality of their partners in guilt and thereby universal confidence will be substituted for that distrust of each other which naturally possesses men engaged in wicked purposes and which operates as one of the most effectual restraints against the commission of those crimes to which the concurrence of several persons is required"—per Abbot, L.C.J., in his charge to Grand Jury in 1820. There is no law that every offender ought to be prosecuted and it is well known that offenders manage to conceal their misdeeds or that evidence to prosecute has often been found to be insufficient. There is nothing to prevent the prosecuting authority from refraining to prosecute any individual and that discretion is inherent in the authority to whom the law has entrusted the power of instituting prosecution. The competency of a person to whom an assurance of not prosecuting is given, to be a witness is in no way affected though it may affect his credibility, 26 Cr. L.J. 1487—89 Ind. Cas. 1035. The procedure laid down in this section is an exception to the general rule that the statement of an accused person is not to be used as evidence against a co-accused unless he implicates himself to the same extent and runs the same risk as those jointly accused with him. The tendering of conditional pardon under this section is different from the withdrawal of a charge under S. 494, infra. In the latter case, there is a discharge or acquittal of the accused unconditionally, while under this section the tender of pardon is made on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances connected with the offence and, if he fails to do so, the pardon may be forfeited and he can be tried for the same offence. The pardon can be granted only by any of the Magistrates mentioned in this section and for offences triable exclusively by High Court or Court of Session and punishable under certain sections herein mentioned, 1 Lah 102; 33 C. 1353. The pardon can be tendered even when the offence is under police inquiry, 3 Lah 431; 1904 P.R. (Cr.) 21 but where there is no inquiry into an offence no pardon can legally be tendered, 45 B. 61. The pardon tendered is of no avail unless the Magistrate is competent to tender the same, 20 A. 49. The fact that a case before a Magistrate was temporarily postponed under S. 526 (8) infra will not thereby render the Magistrate functus officio to tender pardon. This section does not say that the inquiry or trial should be in progress when pardon is tendered. The Magistrate is the only Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the case and although the inquiry is postponed he did not cease to be the Magistrate inquiring into the offence said to have been committed, 49 A. 181 at 183. Under this section as amended certain modifications have been introduced and pardon granted by a Magistrate inquiring into a case exclusively triable by a Court of Session with regard to some offences and others not so triable will not invalidate a pardon granted with regard to offences so exclusively triable and once a pardon is granted it extends to all charges and to all the accused, 26 Cr. L.J. 1045=87 Ind. Cas. 953. The Local Government has no power to offer a conditional pardon and the evidence of the accused taken on such a conditional pardon is wholly inadmissible, 10 C.W.N. 847. A pardon tendered by Government does not come within the purview of this section, 1905 P.R. (Cr.) 9=4 Cr. L.J. 282 S. 529 (g) infra enacts that if a pardon is tendered by a Magistrate not empowered but who acts erroneously but in good faith his proceedings will not be set aside. The words "a full and true disclosure . . . under inquiry" refer to the importance, when a pardon is tendered, for encouraging the approver to give the fullest details so that points may be found in his evidence which may be capable of corroboration, 11 A. 79. When a pardon is tendered and accepted, the fullest faith must be kept on both sides, 12 C.L.R. 226. An accused who has been discharged is a competent witness against the other accused and there is no illegality in the procedure of withdrawing the case against the discharged accused though the more reasonable and proper procedure would be to tender a pardon to him and make him an approver. When an accused is discharged there is no fear of any action under S. 339, infra, hanging over his head. For normally he could not be proceeded with in connection with the original offence under the ordinary law applicable, 27 Cr. L.J. 807=93 Ind. Cas. 471. The Code makes no provision for any inquiry by the District Magistrate or by any other Magistrate in connection with a tender of pardon to an accomplice. The Magistrate may make such formal inquiry as he thinks best for his own guidance and it is entirely a matter for him. Any such inquiry as he makes would not be an inquiry conducted under S. 4 (1) (k) supra, 46 B. 61.

Sub-section (1).—Before the amendment this section applied to cases exclusively triable by Court of Session or the High Court. But now other offences not so exclusively triable are within the scope of this section, 26 Cr. L.J. 1115=88 Ind. Cas. 283. This sub-section provides that certain Magistrates may tender a pardon on condition that the person concerned shall make a true and full disclosure of all the circumstances within his knowledge. It is nowhere laid down that such disclosures shall be in writing. If made orally the Magistrate may depose to it. As a rule of caution, however, the approver's statement is always formally reduced to writing. The disclosure may be made anterior to the inquiry before the Committing Magistrate as also be made at the time of the inquiry or trial. It is the disclosure inducing the pardon that is contemplated by S. 339. (2) To such disclosure S. 164 supra, has no application, 29 Cr. L.J. 413=108 Ind. Cas. 514. Conditions other than those mentioned in this sub-section are of no avail, e.g., it cannot be stipulated that the accomplice should testify to his having been present at the scene of murder when the offence was committed. The condition can only be of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge and of the person or persons concerned in the commission of the offence, Ratanlal 612. The words "suppose to have been directly or indirectly concerned or privy to the offence" are in accordance with the decision in, 6 W.R. (Cr.) 94. See in this connection, 16 Cr. L.J. 632=30 Ind. Cas. 456.

Sub-section (1A).—This sub-section was originally the first part of sub-section (4), now repealed. The recording of reasons by the Magistrate is not a condition precedent to the tender of pardon and its acceptance by the approver, 13 Cr. L.J. 589=15 Ind. Cas. 1004. The Magistrate is to record his reasons for doing so and he is also bound to furnish a copy of the same to the accused on his application. In 36 C. 629; 5 Cr. L.J. 142 and 5 C.L.J. 224, it was held that omission to record reasons was only an irregularity. It would not be sufficient to show that the Magistrate had omitted to record reasons but it should further be shown that the omission to record reasons had in effect occasioned a failure of justice, otherwise the alleged defect would be cured by S. 537 infra, 27 A.L.J. 227 at 228.

Sub-section (2).—Under this sub-section as now amended it is essential that the approver must be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any. It is not a sufficient compliance with the section if the approver is examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. The amendment appears to have been made to make it clear that the approver must be examined before the committing Magistrate and in the subsequent trial. Whether the non-compliance with the provisions of the sub-section vitiates the trial of a person, against whom the approver's evidence is sought to be tendered, need not be decided but the fact that the approver was not examined at the trial of the persons whom he sought to implicate is no breach on the part of the crown of the conditions upon which the disclosures are made, and pardon tendered, and the pardon so granted cannot be pleaded as a bar to his trial. He must be considered to have failed to comply with the conditions of his pardon as soon as it is proved that he has not made a full and true disclosure and this becomes apparent the moment he makes a statement entirely inconsistent with his previous statement on the strength of which pardon was tendered to him, 9 Lah. 608. The validity of a pardon tendered cannot be affected by the fact that a co-accused against whom the approver's evidence was used was ultimately convicted of a minor offence and even if the pardon was invalid it would not prevent the approver being examined in the Sessions Court when he is not committed with the other accused, 27 Cr. L.J. 1103=97 Ind. Cas. 367. In a case where a pardon was tendered and accepted by the accused in the Committing Magistrate's Court but by some oversight, his name was not removed from the list of accused and at the commencement of the Sessions trial, his plea was also taken and the Sessions Judge finding out the mistake, immediately corrected the same by removing him from the dock, it was held that the evidence given by the accused at the Sessions trial was not rendered inadmissible and there was no prejudice of any description caused to the accused by the procedure adopted, 53 C. 839. This sub-section provides that a person accepting the pardon is to be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence. That condition is fulfilled when the approver is examined as a witness before the Magistrate. This sub-section does not mean that it is compulsory to examine the approver in the Sessions Court if he has shown by his evidence in the Magistrate's Court that he is an untrustworthy witness. It is contrary to all principles that the Crown should be obliged to examine as a prosecution witness one who has shown himself by his evidence in a previous stage of the case to be untrustworthy, 42 C. 886 at 870; 24 M. 321; 29 A. 24; 33 M. 514, 25 B. 675, 13 Cr. L.J. 33=13 Ind. Cas. 273. An accused person who after accepting the conditional pardon shows an intention not to give the evidence which he has led the prosecution to expect, ought not to be put back in the dock without being examined as a witness under this sub-section and then dealt with under S. 339, infra. Such a person should, if tried, be tried separately and after the trial of the other accused, 31 M. 272. See also the new proviso to S. 337 (1) which enacts that the trial is to be separate and not with the other accused.

Sub-section (2A).—The word "him" occurring in this sub-section does not refer to the person who has accepted a tender of pardon but refers to the accused. What the provision of law means is, that whenever an approver is examined, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial, but must commit the accused to the Court of Session. It does not mean that the approver should be committed for trial along with the accused person. It is the common rule of interpretation that the pronoun refers to the person immediately preceding, which herein is the accused and not the approver. The direction is that the approver unless he is already on bail shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial, a direction for which there is no necessity if he is to be committed along with the accused to the Court of Session, 26 Cr. L.J. 4216=88 Ind. Cas. 736, followed in 30 Cr. L.J. 567=116 Ind. Cas. 193. In a case where two persons were charged with murder and all the evidence for the prosecution was recorded in the presence of the accused who had full opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses the Magistrate for reasons recorded by him tendered pardon to one of the accused on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge but immediately accepting the pardon, he when examined a witness, refused to make a statement saying he knew nothing; the Magistrate therefore revoking the pardon proceeded with the inquiry and ultimately committed the accused to the Court of Session, it was held that there was no illegality in the procedure and the commitment was valid, 3 A.L.J. 613=4 Cr. L.J. 142. A Magistrate especially empowered was trying a case against persons including an approver, and meanwhile the Amended Act came into force and the Magistrate had closed the evidence. The Magistrate was therefore bound under S. 347, infra, to commit the case to the Court of Session and he should not try the same, 26 Cr. L.J. 549=85 Ind. Cas. 645. This sub-section enacts that if after examination of the approver under sub-section (2) the Magistrate is satisfied that there are grounds for believing that the accused is guilty, he may commit him for trial, but a District Magistrate empowered under S. 30, supra, who has not tendered the pardon may himself try the case instead of committing the accused. The prohibition contained in the proviso is in accordance with the ruling in 10 C.W.N. 847. It would not be sufficient to show that the Magistrate has omitted to record his reason under this sub-section. It would also be shown that such omission to record his reasons has in effect occasioned a failure of justice; otherwise the alleged defect would be cured by S. 537 infra, 27 A.L.J. 227 at 228. When a Magistrate empowered under S. 30 supra, tenders a pardon to one of the accused he must not try the case himself but should commit the accused to the Sessions Court, as this sub-section governs S. 30 supra, also, 25 Cr. L.J. 1341=82 Ind. Cas. 573. So also in a case of robbery where a Magistrate tendered pardon to an approver and is satisfied a prima facie case is made out, he must commit the case to the Court of Session under this sub-section, 26 Cr. L.J. 829=85 Ind. Cas. 477. There is no provision of Indian Statute Law nor is there any principle of natural justice which makes an accomplice as such, an incompetent witness at the trial of another person in respect of an offence. A refusal to admit his evidence merely because the case is outside the purview of this section would be a clear error of law, 21 A.L.J. 42; 25 Cr. L.J. 174=76 Ind. Cas. 393.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section contemplates only a case where there has been a commitment made by a Magistrate to the Court of Session or the High Court. It omits to consider the case where the Magistrate himself on his own responsibility discharges the accused person. It seems manifest that the meaning of this sub-section is merely that the approver shall not be set at large until the judicial proceedings pending against the accused are finished. It is for the purpose of this section immaterial, whether the proceedings are finished by the magisterial order of discharge before trial or by a Judge's order of acquittal after trial. In the case of the magisterial discharge the sub-section would be satisfied if the approver was detained in custody or on bail until the order of discharge was made. When the magisterial order of discharge was made, the provisions of this sub-section were spent and are inapplicable to any proceedings held thereafter, 37 B. 146 at 150. It was held in 30 B. 611 that at the termination of the trial either in the Sessions Court or in the High Court, the approver must be discharged immediately by the Court. It is not for the Court to exercise a discretion in the matter and to say that it will detain him in order that further proceedings be instituted against him. See also 37 C. 845; 46 B. 120. It is indisputable that unconditional release of an accomplice before the termination of a trial is attended with serious risks and is such as is likely to frustrate the very object of his being pardoned. Not only is he likely to abscond and not appear when he is wanted but there is every fear of his being tampered with and of his tampering with the prosecution evidence. Unless, therefore special circumstances exist for his being released on bail or his continuing to remain on bail if he has already been released, it is but just and proper that he should remain in custody. It is with that object in view and not with the express purpose of overriding the provisions of granting bail contained in Chapter XXXIX that sub-section (3) has been enacted. It is a corollary to sub-sections (1) and (2) and purports to enable the Magistrate granting pardon to detain the accomplice in custody notwithstanding his pardon. It however expressly provides that the fact that the accomplice has turned an approver, shall not ipso facto mean the cancellation of his bail bond if he is on bail. Whether such bail should be subsequently cancelled or not has been left untouched. The sub-section does not go further and does not deal either with the question whether the accomplice may not be released on bail by a superior Court subsequent to the grant of pardon under S. 498, infra or that if he is on bail that he may not be detained by order of the superior Court under S. 497 (5) infra. Sub-section (3) is an affirmative clause and though the use of the word 'shall' is primarily obligatory it is less significantly imperative than the expression 'must.'

There is nothing in the sub-section to suggest that the Legislature wished to favour accomplices who were on bail before their pardon or to place them on a better footing than those who had not got such pardon. If the admission of guilt puts an end to the privilege of being permitted to remain on bail it equally applies to both and if special circumstances exist which make it highly improbable that an accomplice will not abscond or be tampered with and entitle one who is released on bail before his pardon to continue on bail, there is no reason why the same circumstances should not enure to the benefit of another who has unfortunately been remanded to custody up to the time of his pardon. It is therefore more consistent that sub-section (3) should be interpreted as obligatory only on the Magistrate granting the pardon, requiring him to detain the accomplice in custody and as in no way affecting the powers of the superior Court. This interpretation is in conformity with the rule that the jurisdiction of the superior Court is not to be ousted except by express language, 28 Cr. L.J. 439=101 Ind. Cas. 471.

338. At any time after commitment, but before judgment is passed, the Court to which the commitment is made may, with the view of obtaining on the trial the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, any such offence, tender, or order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender, a pardon on the same condition to such person.

Power to direct tender of pardon.

Any time after commitment.—The words "after commitment" denote that a pardon could be tendered not only during the trial but before the trial actually begins.

Of any person.—These words will include an accused person before the Sessions Judge, S. 343, infra, supports this view and it is difficult to see any other case to which the section would apply, 7 Cr. L. Rev. 64=16 Cr. L. J. 632=30 Ind. Cas. 456.

Any such offence.—These words restrict the scope of this section to the offences referred to in the preceding section and a pardon cannot be tendered with regard to offences not specified in S. 337, supra. See 10 M.L.J. 147 (F.B.). A pardon may be tendered at any time after commitment and before judgment is passed. There is nothing to preclude a Sessions Judge tendering pardon to a person who has pleaded guilty to the charge and his being examined subsequently as a witness against his co-accused, 7 A. 160. The words "supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned" occurring in this and S. 337, supra must be taken merely as intended to exclude the case of a person who has been actually convicted, 7 A. 160; Ratanlal 750.

339. (1) Where a pardon has been tendered under section 337 or section 338, and the Public Prosecutor certifies that, in his opinion any person who has accepted such tender has, either by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, not complied with the condition on which the tender was made, such person may be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered, or for any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter :

Commitment of person to whom pardon has been tendered.

Provided that such person shall not be tried jointly with any of the other accused, and that he shall be entitled to plead at such trial that he has complied with the conditions upon which such tender was made ; in which case it shall be for the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with.

(2) The statement made by a person who has accepted a tender of pardon may be given in evidence against him at such trial.

(3) No prosecution for the offence of giving false evidence in respect of such statement shall be entertained without the sanction of the High Court.

Amendment.—(1) The Public Prosecutor is now to certify that in his opinion the conditions have not been fulfilled by the approver. (2) The approver is to be tried separately from the other accused. (3) The approver may plead that he has complied with the conditions of the tender. (4) It is for the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the conditions of the tender have been broken.

Scope of the section.—This section is an empowering section addressed to certain Courts of Justice and has nothing to do with the powers of discretion of an Executive such as a Local Government instituting or refraining from instituting any prosecution, 21 A.L.J. 42=25 Cr. L.J. 597=77 Ind. Cas. 961. This section contemplates a pardon being forfeited under it, but neither in it nor in any other part of the Code is it enacted that the forfeiture of pardon depends on the opinion of the Judge or Magistrate, 30 B. 611, followed in 12 Cr. L.J. 326=10 Ind. Cas. 622. No formal withdrawal and no formal declaration of forfeiture is necessary, 42 C. 756; 14 Cr. L.J. 401=20 Ind. Cas. 225. But now the Public Prosecutor is to certify that in his opinion the approver has not complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made. It is a matter of great importance which cannot be too emphatically insisted upon, that the strictest faith should be kept with the accomplice, even though his statement may reveal him to be one of the vilest of criminals and the mere failure of his evidence to procure conviction of his alleged associates in crime is clearly insufficient for withdrawing the pardon tendered and for putting him on his trial, 12 C.L.R. 226; 24 M. 321; 32 M. 173; 7 M.L.T. 121. It is open to an accused person who has accepted pardon in the first instance, to resile from that pardon and say that he does not want the pardon and that he is not willing to give evidence but wishes to be tried so that his character may be cleared. The acceptance of a pardon continues till the person pardoned actually gives evidence and it is only then, any question will arise whether he has forfeited his pardon by not giving true evidence. A pardon which though accepted for a time, is rejected by himself before he gave evidence cannot be treated as falling under this section and therefore there is no objection to such an accused being tried jointly with the other accused, 45 M.L.J. 613=18 L.W. 606=(1923) M.W.N. 697. It is for the prosecution to prove that the pardon has been forfeited, 32 M. 173 and the accused can plead the pardon in bar of his trial, 24 M. 323; 32 M. 173; 14 A. 336; 25 B. 675; 30 B. 611; 27 C. 137.

Sub-section (1).—It should be for the prosecution to decide whether the approver should be prosecuted. The Public Prosecutor is to certify that in his opinion the approver is to be prosecuted. The certificate of the Public Prosecutor is a condition precedent to the validity of the trial of the approver; and the absence of such a certificate, vitiates the trial of the approver, 5 Lah. 379; followed in 27 Cr. L.J. 940 (2)=96 Ind. Cas. 396 (2); 26 Bom. L.R. 1240=26 Cr. L.J. 469=85 Ind. Cas. 149, but the production of a certificate after commitment before the Sessions Court validates the trial even though the commitment was irregular, 3 Ran. 55. Where a Sessions Judge in a Sessions trial found out the absence of a certificate of the Public Prosecutor for prosecuting an approver as required by this section and adjourned the trial and on the adjourned day the certificate was produced and the accused was tried and convicted, it was held that the proceedings before the Magistrate was merely an inquiry and not a trial within this section and it was open to the Sessions Judge to accept the commitment even though it was irregular and the defect was cured by the production of the certificate in the Sessions Court before the trial, 3 Ran. 55. But in a case where a pardon has been declared forfeited by a Magistrate, this section cannot apply, 23 Cr. L.J. 1355=82 Ind. Cas. 715. The provision of law contained in this section aims at obtaining true evidence of offences by the grant of pardon to accomplices. It is nowhere laid down that if a witness first makes a full and true disclosure, he is at liberty to contradict his statement, deny its truth, without fear of forfeiting his pardon. The transaction is one of utmost good faith on both sides, and the approver commits a breach of the condition if he fails to make a full and true disclosure throughout. It is not enough for him to make such a disclosure before the committing Magistrate if he withdraws it in the Sessions Court, or to make it when examined-in-chief if he withdraws it in cross-examination, 33 M. 514 at 517. Whether the conditions of the pardon have or have not been complied with is a question of fact, 20 A. 529. There must be clear finding as to whether the accused had or had not complied with the conditions of the pardon. When the approver is a person of low intellect who would make what is familiarly known as a "bad witness" and made a very bad statement on the whole he cannot be held to have deliberately broken the conditions upon which he had been granted pardon, 27 Cr. L.J. 768=95 Ind. Cas. 288. The refusal of an approver to give evidence after accepting the conditional pardon amounts to a breach of the condition and his pardon may legally be withdrawn, 29 A. 24. If an approver denied all knowledge of the offence when examined as a witness the proper course is to try him for the offence which he is alleged to have committed with the certificate of the Public Prosecutor to the effect that he has not complied with the conditions of his pardon, 3 Ran. 244. The pardon is offered on two conditions (1) that the approver shall make a full and (2) true disclosure of all he knew about the crime. Pardon is forfeited if he fails to comply with these two conditions in two corresponding ways, first by concealing some material evidence, i.e., by not making a full disclosure, or secondly giving false evidence, i.e., by not making a true disclosure. The words "false evidence" must be read subject to the limitation of their contents as defining one of the modes of non-compliance with the conditions of the pardon and not in their literal sense, 30 B. 611 at 620; 32 M. 173. When a pardon was granted by the Magistrate in Calcutta which was never withdrawn, the accused was entitled to be protected from a trial at Benares on charges which related and closely mixed up with those tried at Calcutta. It must be borne in mind in countenancing these pardons to accomplices, the law does not invite a cramped and constrained statement by the approver; on the contrary, it requires a thorough and complete disclosure of all the facts within his knowledge bearing upon the offence or offences, as to which he gives evidence and he has given evidence. The question how far it is to protect him and what portions of it should protect him ought not to be treated in a narrow spirit, 11 A. 79 at 86. When at the conclusion of the trial a Sessions Judge directed certain approvers to whom pardons were tendered by the District Magistrate be committed for trial on the original charge it was held that the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to pass the order and the accomplices could plead their pardon and it was for the trial Court to decide whether the pardon had been forfeited, 1 Lah. 218. Where an accused person had been tendered a pardon for a dacoity committed in E. District and he made a confession admitting his complicity in the dacoity in question and also of another dacoity in another District one month previously it was held, there was nothing in this section which forbade the confession of the accused made before the Committing Magistrate being put in evidence and no pardon could legally be pleaded in bar of his trial in respect of the offence committed in the district other than the E. District, 45 A. 236 (F.B.) where 11 A. 79 is distinguished.

Proviso.—This new proviso expressly enacts that the approver is entitled to plead that he has complied with the conditions of the tender made to him. The Court has to try this issue first, 32 M. 173; 42 C. 856; 16 Cr. L.J. 234=27 Ind. Cas. 806, and he should be tried separately and not jointly with the other accused, and it is for the prosecution to prove that the approver had forfeited the pardon by a breach of the conditions, 32 M. 173. No action is to be taken until the conclusion of the trial and the proper course is to detain the approver in custody until the conclusion of the trial of the co-accused and then proceed against him if necessary, 10 Cr. L.J. 418=3 Ind. Cas. 922; 24 M. 321 at 324; 27 C. 137; 23 B. 443.

Sub-section (2).—Under the Code no formal withdrawal of a pardon and no formal declaration that the pardon has been forfeited are required, 42 C. 756 at 758. The words "or the statement made by person who has accepted the tender of pardon" are wide enough to cover a statement made before the pardoning Magistrate, 25 Cr. L.J. 1355=82 Ind. Cas. 715. The question whether a pardon is forfeited, which must be tried and found is one of fact, 26 B. 673. The statement made by the person who accepted the conditional pardon is not governed by S. 24 of the Ind. Ev. Act and can be used as evidence against him, 5 A.L.J. 691. "The full and true disclosure" contemplated by S. 337 (1) supra may be anterior to the inquiry before the Magistrate and may also be at the inquiry or trial. It is the disclosure inducing the pardon which is the statement referred to in this sub-section. The pardon may be offered before any inquiry has commenced before the committing Magistrate or it may be offered when he is under trial. It is not made under S. 164 supra and that section in no way governs such a statement and such a statement is not necessarily excluded from evidence by S. 24, of the Ind. Ev. Act. The sub-section makes by necessary implication a statement of the nature of an exception to the rule enacted in S. 24 the Ind. Ev. Act, so far as that section excludes confessions made as a result of inducement, or promise, 29 Cr. L.J. 413=108 Ind. Cas. 514, following, 1908 A.W.N. 259=5 A.L.J. 691=8 Cr. L.J. 433.

Sub-section (3)—The object of this sub-section is to safeguard persons whose pardons have been withdrawn, against a prosecution for false evidence unless and until the propriety of such prosecution has been sanctioned by the highest criminal tribunal of the Province. If an approver can be punished sufficiently by being charged for the original crime it is not necessary that he should be punished for perjury. Sanction therefore ought to be refused unless a conviction for the original crime is unlikely or a prosecution for it is undesirable for any other reason or on a conviction for the original offence, the sentence which would be passed will be too light to cover both offences. Before sanction is granted it must be clear that there was no intention to prosecute the approver for the original offence or that he has already been tried for it or has been acquitted or received only a very light sentence not sufficient to cover the offence of perjury. When the original offence is one of murder, he ought to be tried for it and without doing so, sanction application for perjury would be rather premature, 23 Nag. L.R. 35. Sanction of the High Court is necessary for the prosecution of the approver for perjury. The prosecution for perjury is an exceptional measure and sanction under this section ought not to be granted where material for contradiction has been provided by an unnecessary examination of an approver on oath which should not be encouraged. To grant sanction under such circumstances would be practically to approve the practice of making a special and separate examination of an approver on oath before examining him as a witness in order that in the event of his making contradictory statement in two examinations the materials furnished by his unnecessary examination can be used as a basis for prosecution for perjury, 3 Ran. 224. Sanction ought not to be given merely because there is a contradiction. Such person should be given every possible, locus penitentiae, 11 A.L.J. 963=15 Cr. L.J. 76=22 Ind. Cas. 428. But the granting of locus penitentiae is a matter for judicial discretion and the High Court refused to grant locus penitentiae 27 A.L.J. 227 at 229. The sanction is to be obtained before the commencement of the prosecution, 10 B. 190. The want of sanction of the High Court cannot be considered as a mere irregularity, but it is an illegality and S. 537, infra, cannot apply to this section, 27 C. 137. An application to the High Court for sanction must be made in open Court on motion on behalf of the Crown, 32 M. 47; 24 C. 492; and not by a letter of reference, 13 Cr. L.J. 451=15 Ind. Cas. 83 1893 A.W.N. 13.

person under S. 337.

339A. (1) The Court trying under section 339 a person who has accepted a tender of pardon shall—

(a) if the Court is a High Court or Court of Session, before the charge is read out and explained to the accused under section 271, sub-section (1), and

(b) if the Court is the Court of a Magistrate, before the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken, ask the accused whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of the pardon was made.

(2) If the accused does so plead, the Court shall record the plea and proceed with the trial, and the jury, or the Court with the aid of the assessors, or the Magistrate, as the case may be, shall, before judgment is passed in the case, find whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon, and if it is found that he has so complied, the Court shall, notwithstanding anything contained in this Code, pass judgment of acquittal.

This section is new and prescribes the procedure to be adopted in the trial of an approver on forfeiture of his pardon. The Court is bound to ask the accused whether he pleads his pardon in bar of trial, having complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made and if he so pleads the Court shall record the plea and proceed with the trial. The Court is also bound to record a finding whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of his pardon and if he has so complied, he ought to be acquitted. The section lays down that the Court trying a person who has accepted a tender of pardon, shall, if the Court is a Court of Session before the Charge is read out and explained to the accused, ask him whether he pleads that he has complied with the condition on which the tender of pardon was made. The terms of the section should be strictly complied with by making it clear to the accused that he could plead the pardon as a bar to his trial and the conviction had without strictly complying with the provisions of this section is illegal and cannot stand. 3 Lah. 379 followed in, 30 Cr. L.J. 559=116 Ind. Cas. 64.

Right of person against whom proceedings are instituted to be defended and his competency to be a witness.

340. (1) Any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court, or against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code in any such Court, may of right be defended by a pleader.

(2) Any person against whom proceedings are instituted in any such Court under section 107, or under Chapter X, Chapter XI, Chapter XII or Chapter XXXVI, or under section 552, may offer himself as a witness in such proceedings.

Amendment.—This section is re-drafted. The expression "person accused" may be read as referring only to persons accused of any offence. Now any person against whom proceedings under the Code are instituted is entitled to be defended by a pleader. It is also enacted that persons against whom proceedings under S. 107 and under Chapters X to XII, XXXVI or under S. 552 of the Code are pending do not labour under the ordinary disability of an accused person to be sworn, and they may be examined as witnesses in such proceedings.

Scope of the section.—The section as amended extends to the case not only of a person accused of an offence but applies to the case of any one against whom proceedings are instituted under the Code. The section not only contemplates that the accused should be defended by a pleader at the time of the proceedings actually going on but also implies that he should have a reasonable opportunity, if in custody, of getting into communication with his pleader for preparing his defence. The same policy is shown in S. 40 of the Prisons Act, X of 1874. No undue obstacle should be placed in the way of the accused in custody, preparing his defence by preventing his pleader having access to him. 50 B. 741 at 746. Prisoners in Police custody before being produced before a Magistrate are at liberty, at any time of the day, to see a pleader—due regard being taken against their escape. Access to prisoners in Jails by pleaders is for the officer-in-charge of the Jail to decide, Mad. Pol. Ord. Vol. I, p. 111. Sub-section (2) says as to who may be examined on oath by a criminal court.

May of right be defended by a pleader.—The word "pleader" used with reference to any proceeding in any Court means a pleader or a mukhtar authorized under any law for the time being in force to practise in such Court, and includes: (1) An Advocate, a Vakil and Attorney of the High Court. (2) Any other person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in such proceedings. The privilege under this section is not a question of indulgence but is a matter of a right. The object of the Legislature in allowing parties to be represented at trial by a Counsel is that Counsel must be heard before a final opinion is formed by the Court and it is not necessary for the Counsel to ask the Court for an opportunity to be heard. It is not an indulgence but of right. It is not necessary that the accused's Counsel should ask the Magistrate for the usual opportunity to be heard on the case, 6 Bom. L. R. 665. An accused person should be given an opportunity to be defended by a pleader and when he asks for time the proper course is to examine the prosecution witnesses in-chief and adjourn the case to enable him to engage and instruct a pleader to defend him, 47 A. 147. The defence of an accused should not be shut out on the ground he is represented by a Mukhtar 33 C. 488. A Counsel for the accused who adduced no evidence has a right of being last heard in the case; this means he is entitled to have an opportunity of being heard, 53 B. 119; the accused has a right to be defended by a pleader and he has also a right to be heard through his pleader; where at the conclusion of the evidence in a trial the pleader for the accused wished to argue the case for his client and the Court refused to hear the pleader, it was held that such a denial to hear the pleader was not a mere irregularity and the conviction and sentence must be set-aside, 55 M. L. J. 625-23 L.W. 636; the oral address of Counsel is a valuable right which every party accused of a Crime who engages to defend him is entitled to regard as such. By means of an address Counsel can be of great assistance to his client. Many points might escape his attention if he only wrote out a written argument. The advantage of an oral address is that Counsel is in direct touch with the Magistrate and can more effectively direct his remarks to such points, as from the demeanour of the Court might seem to him to require elucidation. ... In 5 Bom. L.R. 665, it was laid down as an elementary principle of law that no order should be made to a man's prejudice without hearing him and the very object of the Legislature in allowing parties to be represented at the trial by Counsel is that Counsel must be heard before final opinion is formed by the Court. It is not a question of indulgence but of right. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should be asked by Counsel to be heard. It is his duty to give to the Counsel the usual opportunity to be heard on the case. The right of Counsel is not not only that he should be heard but he shall be given an opportunity of being effectively heard, 53 B. 119 at 122-124; the High Court has condemned in more cases than one the practice of allowing Counsel to file a memo of written arguments. This is all the more to be condemned when the Court receives a written argument on behalf of the prosecution without the knowledge of the accused. The practice prevails in several places and the only way to put an end to such a practice is by setting aside all the proceedings as being highly irregular. It cannot be too strongly expressed the highly objectionable practice of allowing written arguments to be filed in Court, 23 L. W. 511 = 1927 M.W.N. 783 = 29 Cr. L. J. 923 = 111 Ind. Cas. 849 "If Judges would only appreciate that what an invaluable assistance it is for their minds to listen to those who have prepared their arguments and are perfectly familiar with facts, they would recognise that initial listening, at all events is most desirable"—per Lord Halsbury. The Court is bound to exercise a discretion in each case as to permitting or not permitting the appearance of an unauthorised pleader, Weir II, 400. A general rule excluding any particular class from appearing as a pleader is illegal. An order excluding any particular individual in any particular case on grounds stated is within the discretion of a Court, Weir II, 401. Under S. 4 (1) (r) supra and this section an accused person may appoint a private vakil with the permission of the Court to act for the accused, and if the Magistrate refuses permission, the person has himself no real grievance and the proceedings of the Magistrate could not be revised at his instance. The discretion vested in the Magistrate to accord permission is a judicial discretion to be exercised without being fettered by any general order issued by the District Magistrate prohibiting such permission to an individual generally, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 131. It is the duty of the Court to afford to an accused person every opportunity of making his defence and a Magistrate should not interpose between the accused and his pleader engaged to defend him, 1 Bom. L.R. 856, followed in 50 B. 741 and all facilities should be afforded to an accused person to engage a pleader, 1 B.H.C.R. (Cr.) 16. Where an accused charged with murder engaged a senior and a junior pleader to represent him before the committing Magistrate and at the Sessions trial the junior pleader in the absence of his senior applied for an adjournment which was refused and the junior pleader intimated to the Court his inability to proceed with the defence in the absence of his senior, the District Magistrate at the request of the Judge appointed a competent pleader to defend the accused and he took up the defence the senior pleader then appeared before the Judge and claimed to conduct the defence himself and refused to act as junior to the pleader engaged by the Crown, it was held that the refusal of the Judge to allow the pleader originally engaged by the accused to conduct the defence did not vitiate the trial when the defence had already been assigned to another pleader appointed by the Court, 43 Cr. L.J. 307. The Court is bound to hear the pleader if one is engaged by the accused, 23 C. 493. The Court has no power to tell the accused to engage another pleader on the ground that the pleader he has chosen did not know how to behave in Court, Ratanlal 861. It is an elementary principle of law that no order should be made to a man's prejudice especially in a criminal case without hearing him, 6 Bom. L.R. 665, followed in 30 Bom. L.R. 1530. If a pleader representing a party does not file a vakalat he shall be required to file a memo of appearance stating that he has been duly instructed to appear for the party and even that is not necessary where the party is present in person along with his pleader in Court, 5 M.L.T. 290=9 Cr. L.J. 303=1 Ind. Cas. 546. The right to be defended by a pleader applies to appeals also. A petition of appeal in a criminal case may be presented to the appellate Court by any person authorised by the appellant to present it, and the Code affords no authority for a contrary view, 1 M. 304. The Criminal Procedure Code unlike the Code of Civil Procedure nowhere prescribes the mode of appointment of pleaders and there is no authority for the proposition that in criminal cases a pleader must file an authority from his client in order to enable him to present an application or appeal on behalf of his client and to act for him in criminal cases Art. 10 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act prescribes a fee for vakalatnamas when presented to a criminal Court including a High Court. This merely means that when an authority is filed such authority should be stamped. It does not make it necessary that a vakalatnamah must be filed in Criminal cases. [1926] Pat. 125=27 Cr. L.J. 666=94 Ind. Cas. 714.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section makes special reference to the Chapter X. Public Nuisances; XI Temporary orders in urgent cases of nuisances or apprehended danger; XII. Disputes to immovable property; XXXVI. Of maintenance of wives and children. S. 552 deals with power to compel restoration of abducted females. Chapter VIII dealing with security for keeping the peace and for good behaviour comes within sub-section (1) "or against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code" In 23 C. 493; 21 A. 107; 27 C. 656; 23 A. 375; a person ordered to give security for good behaviour was held to be an accused person. The amendment is in accordance with 2 C.L.J. 143 where the decisions cited above were distinguished. See 50 C. 983. But in this sub-section S. 107 is specially mentioned and so persons proceeded against under good behaviour sections may not be examined on oath although they are not accused of an offence.

Duty of advocate appearing for defence.—The duty of an Advocate charged with the defence of an accused person indicted for a serious crime will be found dwelt upon by Lord Brougham in his celebrated defence of Queen Caroline where the topic of fidelity to the client is exhaustively discussed "An advocate in the discharge of his duty knows, but one person and that person is his client. To save that client all means and expedients at all hazards and costs to other person and among them to himself is his first duty and only duty and in performing his duty he must not regard the alarm, the torment, the deduction he may bring upon others." Entire devotion to the interest of the client, warm zeal in the maintenance and defence of his rights and the exercise of utmost learning and ability these are the points which can only satisfy the truly conscientious Advocate. Every man accused of an offence has a constitutional right to be tried according to law and the duty of his Counsel requires him to scan with legal knowledge the forms of proceedings against the accused, 38 C.L.J. 307 at 318. As to the duty of an Advocate to his client, a Counsel will not be acting properly if he embarks on a perilous adventure, as to inform the trial Judge in advance that he was satisfied that the prisoner had no defence to the charge. "A man's rights are to be determined by the Court, not by his Attorney or Counsel. A client is entitled to say to his Counsel, 'I want your advocacy, not your judgment. I prefer that of the Court;'" if an Advocate is to reject a story because it seemed improbable to him he would be usurping the office of the Judge, 38 C.L.J. 411 (F.B.) at 515-28 C.W.N. 170-25 Cr. L.J. 817-81 Ind. Cas. 353. It is the duty of an Advocate appearing for a party to call witnesses for the defence if his client insists on submitting their evidence to the Court, 3 Bom. L.R. 562. "Sir, you do not know a cause to be good or bad till the Judge determines it. An argument which does not convince you may convince the Judge to whom you urge it. It is the business of the Judge to Judge and you are not to be confident in your opinion that a cause is bad but to say all you can for your client, and then hear the Judge's opinion." A Lawyer's motto ought to be "to direct the doubtful, to instruct the ignorant, to prevent wrong and to terminate contention." It is his duty to show the same courtesy to the Judge and the Counsel appearing for the opposite party which he desires or expects to be shown, to himself and a pleader's neglect or default should not be visited on his client. "An Advocate should be fearless in carrying out the interests of his client but the arms which he wields are to be the arms of a warrior and not of the assassin. It is his duty to strive to accomplish the interests of his client per fas but not per nefas. It is his duty to the utmost of his power, to seek to reconcile the interests he is wanted to maintain and the duty, it is incumbent on him to discharge, is to be discharged with the eternal and immutable interests of truth and justice." As to the limits within which an Advocate for an accused may attack the prosecution evidence, no clear rule can be laid down than this, that he is entitled to test the evidence given by each individual witness, and to argue that the evidence taken as a whole is insufficient to amount to proof that the accused is guilty of the offence charged, 38 C.L.J. 411 (F.B.) at 515-28 C.W.N. 170. "It is only as an Advocate that one is entitled to address the Jury. As a man he has no right to trouble them." Sound arguments beget sound decisions. Many of the best judgments are but seasoned and authoritative summary of the cogent arguments addressed by Counsel to the Court.

understand the proceedings, the Court may proceed with the inquiry or trial; and, in the case of a Court other than a High Court, if such inquiry results in a commitment, or if such trial results in a conviction, the proceedings shall be forwarded to the High Court with a report of the circumstances of the case, and the High Court shall pass thereon such order as it thinks fit.

Scope of the section.—This section deals with the procedure to be followed in cases where the accused does not understand the proceedings against him i.e., to cases where the accused is deaf and dumb or is unable to understand or making himself understood from ignorance of the language of the place and does not apply to a person of unsound mind, 5 B. 262. "The law in England appears to be that though a great caution and diligence are necessary in the trial of a deaf and dumb person yet if it be shown that if such person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act he is liable to punishment. The decisions in 22 W.R. (Cr.) 33 and Ratanlal 696 are authorities to show that the same is the law and practice in India," 40 B. 393 at 599; 25 Bom. L.R. 43=25 Cr. L.J. 660=81 Ind. Cas. 143. A perusal of this section makes it absolutely clear that a reference can only be made if the accused, though not insane, cannot be made to understand the proceedings the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

(2) The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them; but the Court and the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just.

(3) The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial, and put in evidence for or against him in any other inquiry into, or trial for, any other offence which such answers may tend to show he has committed.

(4) No oath shall be administered to the accused.

Scope and object of the section.—This section has been enacted to safeguard the interests of accused persons. The Legislature contemplates that they should always get an opportunity of explaining any circumstances that may appear against them. So a duty has been cast upon criminal courts to examine the accused. At the same time it must be remembered that the accused is not bound to make a statement, 28 Cr. L.J. 226=99 Ind. Cas. 1026. The section is a part of a system for leading the Court to discover the truth and it constantly happens, that the accused's explanation or his failure to explain is the most incriminating circumstance against him. The result of the examination may be beneficial but it may equally be injurious to him. The principle involved in the maxim 'Audi alteram partem' and that of this section is that the accused should be heard on every circumstance appearing in evidence against him, 4 Nag. L.R. 163; the Legislature intended by this section to protect the accused from the ordeal of examination as a witness and rendering him capable of being punished for making false statements on oath, 19 A. 200; 12 M. 451. See also 54 C. 236 (F.B.). The object of the section is not to fill up gaps in the prosecution evidence but is to enable the accused to explain each and every circumstance appearing in evidence against him, 26 C. 49; 27 M. 238; 14 A. 242; 13 A. 345; 39 M. 770. A Judge or Magistrate should note every point which he thinks he will have to put into the scale against the accused and then question him on each point. Otherwise it is impossible for the accused to know what is in the Court's mind. Several points may be made by the prosecution, some of these the Court considers good, others are regarded as practically worthless, but the accused is not afforded any reasonable opportunity of clearing up the case by such a question as, "what have you to say, regarding the statement of the complainant's witnesses?" The specific point or points which weigh against him must be mentioned; for, if this is not done he cannot reasonably be expected to be able to explain it or them, 1 Ran. 689; 23 Cr. L.J. 12=48 Ind. Cas. 487. The real object of the power given by this section is to ascertain from time to time from the prisoner particularly if he is undefended, what explanation he may offer regarding any fact stated by a witness or after the close of the case how he can meet what the Judge may consider to be damaging evidence against him, 6 C. 98 at 102. The provisions of this section are based on the well known principle that no man should be condemned unheard, 29 Cr. L.J. 932=111 Ind. Cas. 852. The obvious reason for the provisions of this section is that an accused person cannot give evidence on oath in support of his case, 52 B 763. There is no provision in the Indian Law by which an accused person may give his sworn testimony in support of his case. Indeed the section prohibits the swearing of an accused person. The purpose and use of the examination of the accused is laid down in the Code and no one has a right to travel outside it. The accused under this section may be questioned from time to time, by the Court, during the progress of the inquiry or trial for the purpose of enabling him to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him. It further says that, for the same purpose the Court shall examine him generally after the prosecution evidence has been closed. It is clear that the examination is not meant to supply any deficiency that may exist in the prosecution evidence, 51 A. 313 at 321. See also 30 Bom. L R. 957; 54 C. 286 (F.B.) The main object being thus to ensure that the Court having heard one side, i. e., the prosecution should proceed to hear the other side also. For this purpose the Court must interrogate the prisoner and call upon him to explain if he can, the circumstances appearing in evidence against him. The right of interrogation is restricted, and there must be nothing in the nature of cross examination. The prisoner is thus protected against inquisitorial questions and to make this protection absolute it is laid down that he cannot be compelled to answer or to give true answers and failure to answer or give true answers will not render him liable. There is no possible connection between S. 73, of the Indian Evidence Act and this section since the taking of finger impressions is an entirely different matter from putting such questions. This section does not prohibit a direction to him to make finger impression any more than it prohibits a direction to him to face a witness in order that he may be identified, 1 Ran. 759 (F.B.) followed in 6 Pat. 623; 50 C. 985 at 991. Taking of a thumb impression is merely observing a characteristic feature of a man's body. When a thumb impression is taken, it is an observation made and recorded and in principle the position is the same as if the Magistrate had photographed the accused or noticed a deformity or scar, matters which might certainly be proved if they were relevant. The analogy between taking a thumb impression and asking a question to the accused and recording an answer within S. 132 Ind. Ev. Act does not exist. The right of a Magistrate to take the thumb impression of an accused whether he consented or not to the giving of the thumb impression were left undecided, 39 C. 343, but in 6 Pat. 623 it was held that the Court has the power to take a thumb impression whether the accused consented or not to have the impression for comparison and the Court may draw an inference adverse to the accused if he refused to do so. In 50 M. 462 also it was held that if the Judge thinks fit, he is entitled to take a thumb impression and use it to compare with an admitted impression of the accused and also to base a conviction on such comparison. The question of identity of thumb impression is a question of fact to be decided like any other fact on evidence, 1 Pat. 232 is not followed in the above cases. See also 46 M. 715, 28 Cr. L. J. 850-104 Ind. Cas. 626 following 30 C.W.N. 373-43 C.L.J. 403-27 Cr. L.J. 409-93 Ind. Cas. 73 where it was held that in view of S. 5 of Act XXXVII of 1920 (Identification of Prisoners Act) it is not wrong to take finger prints of accused in a case and have the same compared by an expert with the suspected print the subject of the charge against the accused and arriving at a conclusion on such expert opinion. The object of the Legislature in enacting this section is quite clear and the provision of the statute must be strictly enforced and the question of prejudice ought not to come in S. 537, infra, was certainly not inserted in the code for being invoked on any and every occasion as a shield against irregularity perpetrated by a subordinate criminal Court; the only way to secure proper observance of the law by subordinate Courts is for the High Court to interfere whenever any departure comes to its notice. So far as this section is concerned the matter is one of paramount importance and non-compliance with it cannot be passed over on the ground of technicality, 29 C.W.N. cxviii; 52 C. 522. What is necessary under this section is that accused should be brought face to face, solemnly with an opportunity given to him to make a statement from his place in the dock so that the Court may have the advantage of hearing his defence, if he is willing to make one with his own lips, but not to cross-examine the accused, 23 Cr. L. J. 1510-93 Ind. Cas. 294, 10 C. 140, 5 C.W.N. 864; 27 M. 238. The object of the section is to give opportunity to the accused if he so desires to tender any explanation he likes of his part in the case that is presented against him. There is no provision in the Code for the accused being warned of the consequence of the statement he makes. The main consequence of course would be that the statement he makes must be given in evidence against him. It would be a salutary amendment of the Indian Law, if it were not compulsory to put in evidence such a statement. If there were any danger of prosecutors unfairly keeping back a statement that helps the accused, the Judge is there to insist on its being put in. It is extremely desirable that some such form of caution as is prescribed in 11 and 12 Vict. Ch. 42, S. 18 should be introduced into the Code, 23 L.W. 384-27 Cr. L. J. 311-92 Ind. Cas. 693. The examination contemplated by this section is only after the commencement of any inquiry or trial. There is no justification for an examination of the accused before commencing an inquiry or trial and such examina-opportunity of making a statement direct to the Court, 29 C.W.N. 939=26 Cr. L.J. 1032=87 Ind. Cas. 920, but see 4 Ran. 506. A promise by the accused to file a written statement, made at the time of the plea, in no way absolves the Court from the duty of examining the accused at a later stage as required by this section. The intention of the law is that at a certain stage of the case the Court itself shall call upon the accused to state in his own way anything he desires to say, 50 C. 518, but see 1925 Pat. 112, where it was held that the filing of a written statement by an accused, relieved the Magistrate from the necessity of examining the accused orally with reference to the matters elicited in cross-examination and re-examination. Where the personal attendance of the accused is dispensed with under S. 205 supra, then there will be no objection in allowing the accused's pleader to make a statement under this section on behalf of the accused and his personal attendance to make the statement will not be insisted upon, 4 Ran. 506. In every case there is an imperative duty upon the Magistrate to put into operation the provisions of this section, the moment when the complainant and all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined in the full sense in which the word is used, 30 Cr. L.J. 530 at 535=115 Ind. Cas. 872. The word "examined" in this section includes cross-examination and re-examination and the omission to examine the accused after cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses vitiates the trial and conviction; 51 C. 924; 49 C. 1075; 27 Cr. L.J. 336=92 Ind. Cas. 752; 50 C. 939; 51 C. 933; 50 B. 42; 4 Ran. 361, see 4 Pat. 488; 4 Pat. 231; 6 Pat. L.J. 147 and 644; 50 C. 518; 27 Cr. L.J. 719=94 Ind. Cas. 811; 27 Cr. L.J. 727=95 Ind. Cas. 55; 50 C. 985; 52 C. 522; 29 C.W.N. cxviii; 38 C.L.J. 175; 39 C.L.J. 31; 14 L.W. 418; 1924 Pat. 193; 5 Pat. L.J. 430; 26 Bom. L.R. 149; 51 C. 924; 52 C. 403; 26 Cr. L.J. 760=86 Ind. Cas. 345; 26 Cr. L.J. 927=86 Ind. Cas. 991; 26 Cr. L.J. 1510=90 Ind. Cas. 294; 3 Ran. 139; 30 Cr. L.J. 18=112 Ind. Cas. 850. The provisions of this section are mandatory and their non-compliance vitiates the trial, 7 Lah. 64, followed in, 43 C.L.J. 591=29 Cr. L.J. 382=108 Ind. Cas. 381; 26 Cr. L.J. 716=86 Ind. Cas. 156 but see 31 C.W.N. 337=28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827 and S. 537 infra would not cure the defect. Where after examining the accused a new prosecution witness is examined, it is obligatory on the Magistrate to further examine the accused under this section and failure to do so vitiates the trial as it is an illegality which cannot be cured, 30 Bom. L.R. 385 following 27 Bom. L.R. 1405. See also 29 Cr. L.J. 382=108 Ind. Cas. 381. But where the accused filed a written statement at the close of the case for the prosecution and before entering on his defence, it is not essential for the Magistrate to question him generally on the case, 28 Cr. L.J. 480=101 Ind. Cas. 608. It is also not obligatory to examine the accused over again when a Court witness is examined under s 510, infra 30 Bom. L.R. 1086=29 Cr. L.J. 1057=112 Ind. Cas. 561 where 30 Bom. L.R. 651; 24 C. 167; 23 Cr. L.J. 354=71 Ind. Cas. 290; 50 B. 42 are followed but see 29 Cr. L.J. 932=111 Ind. Cas. 852, which takes a different view. The obligation to ask the accused whether he wishes the prosecution witnesses to be summoned and further cross-examined under S. 256, supra, is distinct from the obligation imposed by this section to examine the accused, 25 Cr. L.J. 690=86 Ind. Cas. 70. Cross-examination of the accused by putting questions to him to incriminate himself is a thing wholly unknown to law. 17 C.W.N. 354; 2 Lah. 129; 4 Lah. 85; 27 M. 238; 5 M.L.T. 216=11 Cr. L.J. 193=4 Ind. Cas. 1126; 15 Cr. L.J. 474=24 Ind. Cas. 562; S. 537 cannot cure an omission to comply with the express provision of law contained in this and S. 360, infra, 29 C.W.N. cxviii; 52 C. 522; 38 C.L.J. 281=28 C.W.N. 119; see 4 Pat. 488 where it was held that the test is whether the accused has been prejudiced by absence of judicial questions and whether S. 537 cures the defect. Omission to examine an accused person under this section is cured by S. 537, infra when the accused has not been prejudiced thereby, 27 Cr. L.J. 852=95 Ind. Cas. 932. See also 29 Cr. L.J. 932=111 Ind. Cas. 852 where 3 Pat. 1015 is explained. See also 31 C.W.N. 337=28 Cr. L.J. 347=100 Ind. Cas. 827; 30 Cr. L.J. 530 at 535=115 Ind. Cas. 872, but see 7 Lah. 564 where it was held that non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of the section vitiates the whole trial. Failure to examine the accused even though the accused were acquitted by the Judge vitiates the trial and such acquittal without a proper trial was set aside by the High Court, 4 Ran. 361. Recording statements collectively instead of separately is an illegality which vitiates the trial; 29 Cr. L.J. 469=109 Ind. Cas. 107, where 6 Lah. 554 is followed.

Sub-section (1).—The examination is for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and not to supplement the case, for the prosecution and to show that he is guilty, 10 M. 295; 12 M. 431; 29 A. 685; 10 Cr. L.J. 509—4 Ind. Cas. 160. What the section contemplates is that the Court may, at any stage examine the accused but the complainant can never put questions to the accused and such questions ought not to be put by the Court to convict the accused out of his own mouth, 10 M. 121 at 123. The object of the examination of an accused person under this section is only to enable him to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him. It has been repeatedly held that the examination ought not to be conducted in the manner of cross-examination of an adverse witness and that a Judge or Magistrate is not entitled to establish a sort of a Court of inquisition to force a prisoner to commit himself, by making some incriminating or embarrassing admissions after a series of questions the exact effect of which he may not be able to comprehend, 10 Lah. 223 following 10 C. 140; 6 C. 96; 2 Lah. 129; 10 M. 295 1 Fat. 680; 6 Bom. L.R. 94=1 Cr. L.J. 105. The accused cannot be asked to make admissions for the purpose of enabling the Crown to procure a legal decision. It is not the function of a Court of justice to supplement the deficiencies of the prosecution and the subject cannot be made to suffer because of the neglect or omission of the Crown in the mode in which it conducts a criminal proceeding, 5 Lah. 404. The object is therefore not to fill up gaps in the prosecution evidence but to enable the accused to offer any explanation, 4 Lah. 55; 27 M. 238; 25 C. 49; 27 Cr. L.J. 66=31 Ind. Cas. 242; 39 M. 770; 28 C. 689; 6 Fat. L.J. 241. Where a prima facie case is made out, an examination of the accused is imperative, 10 Bom. L.R. 201; 9 Bom. L.R. 356; 17 Bom. L.R. 892=16 Cr. L.J. 765=31 Ind. Cas. 365; Weir II. 403. The question ought not to be of an inquisitorial nature conducted in the manner of cross-examination and forcing him to make incriminating statements, 6 C.L.R. 521; 5 A. 253; 17 C.W.N. 354; 10 C. 140; 2 C.W.N. 702; 7 C.W.N. 347; 21 C. 642; 6 C. 96 and 279; 1 M.H.C.R. 199, 5 A.L.J. 515. The questions put must be confined strictly for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain circumstances appearing in evidence against him, 30 A. 540; 5 A. 253. It is entirely within the discretion of the Judge to take or not to take a statement from a co-accused after the accused had given an explanation under this section, 35 C. 853 at 869. Questions ought not to be put to elicit information in regard to statements made by a witness, 7 C.W.N. 345 or to know the nature of his defence, 14 A. 242. An accused person should not be examined by the Court where there is no evidence against him as the object of the examination is only to give him an opportunity to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him and not to make him supplement the prosecution case or to make incriminating statement, 9 M. 224; 10 M. 295 and 121; 27 M. 238; 28 C. 689; 39 M. 770; 1915 M.W.N. 413; 4 Lah. 55; 13 A. 345; 4 Cr. L.J. 471 (F.B.). This section will not enable a Court to question the accused about his previous convictions, 28 C. 689; 23 B. 129. The proper method is to draw the attention of the accused to specific matters which appear in evidence against him and ask him to explain them, merely questioning the accused generally whether they had anything to say or anything to add to what they said, before the committing Magistrate is not enough, 25 Cr. L.J. 572=85 Ind. Cas. 715. Under this section it is obligatory on the Magistrate to question the accused generally on the case after the close of the prosecution, i.e., when all the prosecution witnesses have been examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined although the accused has stated that he intends to file a written statement and he had done so. The examination of the accused after the charge and the examination-in-chief of only some of the prosecution witnesses is not a compliance with law and examination after cross-examination of only some of such witnesses is not a compliance with law and the trial is bad even though the accused is not prejudiced on the merits. Where a Magistrate has after such examination transferred the case for trial to another Magistrate who completes the cross-examination of the remaining prosecution witnesses, it is incumbent on the latter Magistrate to examine the accused again generally on the case and the omission to do so renders the trial bad in law, 30 C. 223 followed in 30 C. 518. Again in 30 C. 303 it was held that the examination of the accused, only after the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and before the close of their cross-examination and re-examination, is not a sufficient compliance with law and the conviction was set aside. See also 50 B. 42 and 27 C.W.N. 28. The Madras High Court in 45 M. 520 took the same view, that examination after further cross-examination was necessary and the omission was an illegality not cured by S. 537, infra but that decision was overruled by a later Full Bench of five Judges in 45 M. 449. There it was held, the examination of the accused is mandatory and failure to do so vitiates the trial, but when in a warrant-case the accused after examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses did not avail himself of the opportunity to cross-examine, the accused was then questioned generally on the case and he did file a written statement and after framing of charge, the accused cross-examined the prosecution witnesses under S. 256, supra, on a later date, and the witnesses were re-examined and accused adduced his defence evidence, but the accused was not further questioned generally on the case after cross-examination and re-examination, of the prosecution witnesses, there was sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section and the conviction was legal. Questioning the accused has to take place after the prosecution witnesses have been examined and before the accused is called on for his defence. "After the prosecution witnesses have been examined" means when the prosecution has finished calling evidence. Generally speaking, in most cases, the examination will include cross-examination and re-examination of prosecution witnesses if there be any. In Sessions cases, this will always be the case, but the position is different in proceedings before Magistrates. In warrant-cases the prosecution witnesses are to be re-called and can then be cross-examined on behalf of the accused and, if necessary, re-examined 25 Cr. L. J. 713-81 Ind. Cas. 201, 45 A.124 followed in 27 Cr. L. J. 405-93 Ind. Cas. 69. The prosecution witnesses called at this stage are generally the whole prosecution evidence and the prosecution case is closed. The Magistrate may then either dismiss the case on the ground that no case is made out, or after questioning the accused generally to enable him to explain any circumstances appearing against him from the evidence, formulate a charge under S. 254 infra. The charge is then read over and explained to the accused under S. 255 and he is asked whether he is not guilty or has any defence to make. It may be that accused is not going to ask the prosecution witnesses to be recalled for cross-examination under S. 256, but proposes to call at once his evidence, or, it may be, that he is not going to call any, but to rely on his address to the Court. In either event he would have been called on for his defence and by the words of the statute, the questioning has to be after the re-examination of the prosecution evidence and before he is called on for the defence. Although under S. 256 infra he has not availed himself of the first opportunity of cross-examining, he can ask the witnesses to be recalled for that purpose. That does not make that cross-examination part of the examination of the prosecution witnesses within the meaning of S. 342 nor does re-examination generally amount to giving fresh evidence. If new and material matter in support of the prosecution case is elicited in cross-examination or in the re-examination, it is desirable that the accused should again be questioned on the case and asked generally to explain the circumstances, and indeed if fresh evidence on material matters in support of the prosecution case is elicited in re-examination it would probably be obligatory on the Court to question the accused on that. It is open to the prosecution to call fresh evidence after the formulation of the charge and if that is done, on the termination of that evidence, the accused must be questioned generally under this section after this further examination of prosecution witnesses, 45 M. 449 at 455-457 (F.B.). When de novo trial is demanded by the accused on account of the change of Magistracy, the succeeding Magistrate should, not only examine over again the prosecution witnesses but also should examine the accused after the examination of those witnesses even though he was examined before. Such a failure vitiates the whole trial. It is not only a rule but a principle that a Magistrate who tries a case in the sense decides he must give the accused an opportunity to explain any points made out against him and must hear what he has to say himself, 29 Cr. L.J. 125-105 Ind. Cas. 717. An accused person should be examined after all the prosecution witnesses were examined and this is imperative even in a case where he has been examined at first, 50 B. 42, but see 25 A.L.J. 196 where it was held that as the omission did not occasion a failure of justice, S. 537 infra, applied to the case. Under this section it is left to the discretion of the Court after examining the accused generally on the case, whether specific questions on particular points in the evidence should be put to him, 26 Bom. L.R. 109-25 Cr. L. J. 1127-81 Ind. Cas. 951. The accused in a Sessions trial should be examined carefully by the Sessions Judge himself even though the committing Magistrate has done so with great care. It makes a considerable difference to listeners like the Jury whether a statement is read over by the Interpreter of the Court or whether the accused is carefully examined by Sessions Judge in the presence of the Jury and his answer and demeanour noted. Such examination will fully impress on the mind of the Jury the defence of the accused and its hollowness when untenable, 26 Cr. L.J. 1576=90 Ind. Cas. 536; 9 Bom. L.R. 730=5 Cr. L.J. 741; 9 Bom. L.R. 356. In a warrant case tried summarily this section requires that the Court should examine the accused. It is not necessary in such a trial to record each question put to the accused and his answers to the same, 6 Pat. 504.

The Madras High Court has also held in another Full Bench in 46 M. 758 that the provisions of this section do not apply to summons-cases, dissenting from the view taken by the Bombay High Court in 48 B. 441; 45 B. 672. See also 9 Lah. L.J. 109=28 Cr. L.J. 490=101 Ind. Cas. 608 which took the same view as 46 M. 758, but the Calcutta High Court has adopted the view of the Bombay High Court. See 54 C. 286 (F.B.). The former view is also opposed to that taken in Calcutta in 49 C. 1073; 51 C. 933; 54 C. 286; 33 C.W.N. 917, and in Patna, Allahabad and Lahore in 6 Pat. L.J. 174; 27 Cr.L.J. 405=93 Ind. Cas. 69; 10 Lah. 406 at 412, respectively, where it was held that the words "if any" occurring in S. 245, supra, do not exclude the operation of this section; See 26 Cr. L.J. 1554=90 Ind. Cas. 434. See also 27 Cr.L.J. 632=94 Ind. Cas. 408 following 46 M. 758. The prisoner in summons-cases does not enter on his defence as in warrant-case, and Chapter XX provides a complete procedure for the hearing of summons-cases, but in summons-cases there is no objection to a Magistrate questioning the accused generally, to enable him to explain circumstances appearing in evidence against him, and when unrepresented, and in complicated cases it is a desirable course, but it is not obligatory. So also in summary trials in summons-cases under Chapter XXII, 45 M. 766 (F.B.) followed in 28 Cr. L.J. 478=101 Ind. Cas. 606 and dissented from in 54 C. 286. (F.B.) See 43 M. 511. The Madras High Court has also held that failure to examine the accused a second time when the accused had filed an elaborate written statement will not vitiate the conviction. See 45 A. 124; 50 C. 223; 27 C.W.N. 399; 4 Lah. 61 at 65; 23 Cr. L.J. 697; 49 C. 1075; 24 Cr. L.J. 311=72 Ind. Cas. 71, 27 Cr. L.J. 403=93 Ind. Cas. 69; 27 Cr. L.J. 1335=98 Ind. Cas. 407.

At any stage.—Although it is not desirable to examine the accused at great length before the prosecution evidence has been closed yet such examination at that stage cannot be said to be illegal and is no ground for quashing the entire proceedings, 30 Cr. L.J. 18=112 Ind. Cas. 850. See also 54 C. 286 (F.B.).

Question him generally on the case.—The section does not lay down and has not been the practice in Madras that specific questions should be put to the accused in detail and he cannot be prejudiced by not doing so as the general questioning is followed by the specific charge, 26 L.W. 33=28 Cr. L.J. 383=100 Ind. Cas. 991 where 26 Cr. L.J. 714=86 Ind. Cas. 156 and 52 C. 522 are not followed.

After the prosecution witnesses have been examined.—These words do not occur in Ss. 244 and 250 supra. They refer without any ambiguity whatever to a definite stage in any kind of trial and their equivalent in the sections mentioned above leaps to the eye, 54 C. 285 (F.B.) The initial statement of the accused in summons-cases under S. 242 supra when he is called upon to show cause under S. 243 supra before evidence is led, does not dispense with the necessity for the examination after the prosecution evidence has been closed and such an omission is an illegality, 27 Cr. L.J. 1290=93 Ind. Cas. 156 following 45 B. 441 and 6 Pat. L.J. 430=21 Cr. L.J. 703=53 Ind. Cas. 43. See also 50 B. 42, but in 26 A. L.J. 196 a different view is taken holding S. 537 infra cured the defect.

Before he is called on for his defence—To call on the accused to enter on his defence is a necessary incident in every trial, 45 B. 672; 45 B. 441; and in this section the phrase is used not only without any special or limited intention but in a chapter which is expressly devoted to general provisions applying to any stage of an inquiry or trial, 54 C. 235 (F.B.).

Sub-section (2).—The sub-section guarantees perfect immunity to the accused. Neither in the language of the section nor on principle is there any valid reason for extending this immunity to a statement made otherwise than in answer to questions put to him, to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him by the Court. There is no law which confers upon an accused person immunity from prosecution in respect of a false affidavit in support of an application for transfer which can be made the subject of a charge for perjury, 6 Lah. 34 following 3 Lah. 46 dissenting from 28 A. 331; 19 A. 209. The Allahabad High Court in the decision reported in 29 Cr. L.J. 336 at 339=108 Ind. Cas. 121, held that according to the practice of that Court an accused person can legally tender his own affidavit in support of an application for transfer and he can be prosecuted for false statements contained therein. Having regard to the provision contained in S. 539A infra, it is submitted that the accused can now tender his own affidavit in support of a transfer application and the practice has now grown up to accept such affidavits in the High Court without objection. This sub-section ensures to the accused his right to offer no explanation, to answer no question but to say simply 'I reserve my defence prove me guilty, if you can. I am not bound to help you.' There is no legal obligation cast on him to answer questions put to him. Statements of a defamatory nature made by an accused person, in the course of his statement which he was asked to make, are privileged, 5 M.L.T. 236. See 36 M. 216 (F.B.). An accused in making a defamatory statement in his defence in answer to questions put to him by the Court is absolutely privileged and cannot be held liable for defamation and he is, protected by this sub-section, 50 A. 169 following 36 M. 216; 43 C. 383 and not following 50 B. 162 (F.B.) where absolute privilege is negatived, but this protection does not extend to statements in a written statement filed by the accused, 24 A L.J. 329=27 Cr. L.J. 253=92 Ind. Cas. 429. See also the Full Bench decision in 49 M. 728 which held against absolute privilege in criminal prosecutions. See also 29 Cr. L.J. 262=107 Ind. Cas. 561. The accused is not bound to answer. He has the right to refuse to answer the questions put to him, 41 C. 743 at 745. By his refusal to answer or by answering the questions falsely he does not render himself liable to any punishment, but the Court and the Jury (if any) may draw such inference from such a refusal to answer, as it thinks just. See S. 114, Indian Evidence Act, Illustration (h). But this section does not protect the accused when he goes out of the way, and makes to the Court which is trying him, a false charge against other persons, 23 Cr. L.J. 1194=82 Ind. Cas. 58.

A Counsel is no doubt within his rights when he advises his client in open Court, on being examined by the Judge, to say nothing in answer to the questions put to him and the accused taking the hint refuses to answer the questions put to him. Counsel commits no offence under S. 228, I.P.O., by asking his client to do so. A Counsel's position between his duty to the client and the respect due to the Court was a difficult one and he, believing that the questions put to his client were not warranted by the Code and the answers which may be given might possibly be damaging to his client, asks him not to answer the questions, he commits no offence, 1905 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 200 p. 671; See also 10 Cr. L.J. 509 at 512-513=4 Ind. Cas. 60.

Sub-section (3).—The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration at the trial and proper inference may be drawn therefrom and even in a subsequent trial for any other offence, they may still be used as evidence for or against the accused. From the answers given by the accused under this section explaining the evidence, all proper inferences may be drawn by the Court, 6 Pat L.J. 241 at 243. S. 30 The Ind. Ev. Act, refers to statements made before and proved at the trial and not to statements made at the trial. An accused is entitled to know what the evidence against him is before he is called upon to enter on his defence and the closing of the case for the prosecution is no mere form but with certain exceptions closes the door for further evidence against him. If a prior confession has to be proved, he can attack it by cross-examination of the witness who proves it. Against a confession made at the dock after close of prosecution case he has no protection whatever. A conviction cannot be supported on the mere confession of a co-accused from the dock at the trial without anything further, 1929 M.W.N. 391=30 Cr. L.J. 932=118 Ind. Cas. 512 following 45 A. 323 at 324 25 and not following 39 M. 302. The Code itself says in this sub-section that the statement may be taken into consideration, a phrase also used in S. 30, Ind. Ev. Act with regard to confession of a co-accused, and various decisions have held that the Court may take the confession into consideration to determine whether the issue of guilt is proved or not; to that extent it becomes practically on the same footing as other evidence although technically it is not evidence in the case according to the definition in the Ind. Ev. Act. Inference of guilt against the accused from his own conduct and his explanation to the same could be taken into consideration to decide the question of accused's guilt or otherwise, 49 B. 878 at 839 90. In a case where there are several accused with conflicting and varying defences, the Judge after taking a statement from an accused and comparing it with the defence of a co-accused took another statement from the co-accused, it was held that he was entitled to do so and the procedure was legal, 55 C. 838. The statement of an accused which is not clearly a confession cannot be taken into consideration as against a co-accused. A mere admission of certain facts from which an inference of guilt may be drawn is not a confession when it is itself exculpatory and therefore cannot be taken into consideration against his co-accused, 31 Bom. L.R. 645 at 655; 53 B. 479. It has been pointed out in many cases that a statement made by an accused person before it can be taken into consideration against a fellow prisoner as is provided in S. 30, of the Ind. Ev. Act, must amount to a confession on the part of the maker in respect to the offence with which all are charged. It must be a confession, or as was put in 2 A. 415 at 416, "the test under S. 30, of the Ind. Ev. Act, intended to be applied to a statement of one prisoner to be used in evidence as against another is to see whether it is sufficient by itself to justify the conviction of the person making it of the offence for which he is jointly tried with other or others against whom it is tendered. In fact to use a popular and well understood phrase, the confessing prisoner must tar himself and the person or persons he implicates, with one and the same brush." Where in a case of difficulty one of the accused stated that he went to the scene under pressure and threat of imminent death, that he took no part, that he stood outside the house and then went away, it was held that the statement being self exculpatory and not incriminating was not a confession and could not be taken into consideration against the other accused jointly tried, as the statement becomes admissible only if it is incriminating which involves the maker as it does those whom it incriminates, 47 C.L.J. 526 at 529. See also 1929 M.W.N. 391; 45 A. 823; [1910] 2 K.B. 658. The law laid down by Courts in India in regard to S. 30 I.E. Act is coloured by the dislike felt by the English lawyers for any provision in an Indian Statute that departs from English law. In 20 L.W. 202, the late Chief Justice described S. 30 as needless tampering of the wholesome rule of the English law. The Indian Statute does depart from the English rule and there is no reason why its effect should be whittled down till the two are indistinguishable, 30 L.W. 403. As to the use of the statement of the accused this section simply says that the Court may take the same into consideration. This is purposely wide. The Court is invited to come to the proper conclusion by taking into consideration not only the evidence for the prosecution and the defence (if any) but also the statement of the accused which if it satisfactorily explains the prosecution evidence there can be no conviction but if such statement and the defence evidence, if any, do not rebut the prosecution evidence and the Court feels justified in acting on the latter, it will convict the accused. But it is not open to the Court to supplement evidence, by itself selecting out of the statement of the accused passages which might corroborate the prosecution evidence and reject the passages which go to exonerate the accused, 26 A.L.J. 1334 at 1331 = 30 Cr. L.J. 101 at 105 = 113 Ind. Cas. 213 following 39 M. 770 and 7 C.W.N. 1343. Where two accused are tried jointly, each accused cannot be examined in the absence of the other so that neither of them might hear what the other said, and the statement so made cannot be taken into consideration against the other, 6 B. 121. The accused's statement may be taken into consideration and shall be put in evidence for or against him. The expression "may be taken into consideration" means that the statement of the accused is not to have the force

Sub-section (4).—The 'accused' herein means the accused under trial and examination of the Court. 3 Ran. 11; 64 C. 52 at 56; 45 C. 720 at 723. This intended to relate to the proceedings which are specified in this section, and S. 5 of the Indian Oaths Act, applies only to an accused person while he is under trial. It is going too far to hold, that because the applicant was an accused who was tried and convicted, was still an accused after his conviction, when applying for leave to appeal from the conviction to the High Court. He is competent to swear to an affidavit in support of his application for leave to appeal, 23 Cr. L.J. 431=101 Ind. Cas. 657 following 45 C. 720 at 723. No oath can be administered to the accused when examined under this section, 25 C. 413; 10 C.W.N. 962; 12 M. 153; 14 B 261. In India a person accused of an offence is not as in England a competent witness on his own behalf. This section influenced by the principles of Common law before they were modified by statute renders it clear that no oath can be administered and the accused shall not be liable to punishment for statements made during the inquiry or trial within the purview of the section. This safeguard was necessary because in the peculiar circumstances of this country the Legislature has decided to depart from the Common law by giving the Court, holding the inquiry or trial a power to put such questions to the accused as it considers necessary to enable the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and questions can be put at any stage without previous warning, 10 Cr. L.J. 509 at 512=4 Ind. Cas. 690. See also 52 B 768; 50 C. 518; 52 C. 522; 23 Cr. L.J. 417=101 Ind. Cas. 449; 51 A. 313 at 321. See S. 340, (2) newly added, which permits a person against whom proceedings are instituted under Chapters X, XI, XII and XXXVI and S. 552 of the Code, being examined on oath as a witness. Oath can be administered to a person accused with others not jointly tried, 20 A. 426; 23 B. 213. None of the parties to a proceeding under S. 146, supra, can be called accused persons, and therefore the provisions of this section do not prevent their examination on oath, 26 Cr. L.J. 70=83 Ind. Cas. 630.

Procedure when provisions of the section are not complied with.—When it is found that the mandatory provisions of this section have not been complied with the proper course for the appellate Court to follow is, to set aside the conviction and remit the case to the trial Court in order to comply with its provisions, 27 C.W.N. 28=25 Cr. L.J. 524=77 Ind. Cas. 933; 25 Cr. L.J. 119=81 Ind. Cas. 976. See also 17 Bom. L.R. 892; 9 Bom. L.R. 365, Weir II, 45. See also the cases cited at page 626.

343. Except as provided in sections 337 and 338, no influence, by means of any promise or threat or otherwise, shall be used to an accused person to induce him to disclose or withhold any matter within his knowledge.

No influence to be used to induce disclosures.

Except as provided by sections 337 and 338.—This section provides that except by way of pardon, no influence by means of any promise or threat or otherwise shall be used to an accused person. This section is not applicable to a case in which the inducement is offered to a person, not as an accused but as a witness. There are no words in this section to show that the prohibition contemplated by this section refers to the Court and not to any other person, and that an accused person within the meaning of this section is the accused under examination and trial, 18 Bom. L.R. 266 at 281; 25 B. 422. The provisions of this section are not applicable to a person who is not an accused person but who has been discharged. The accused person referred to in this section is the same accused person as specified in S. 342, supra, 27 Cr. L.J. 807=93 Ind. Cas. 471 where 18 Bom. L.R. 266=17 Cr. L.J. 258=34 Ind. Cas. 976 is followed.

344. (1) If, from the absence of a witness, or any other reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn any inquiry or trial, the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order in writing stating the reasons therefor, from time to time, postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody :

Remand. Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time.

(2) Every order made under this section by a Court other than a High Court shall be in writing signed by the presiding Judge or Magistrate.

Explanation.—If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand.

Scope of the section.—This section applies only to adjournments of cases from time to time and the Court has no power under this section to stay proceedings, 39 M.L.T. 103. See 50 M. 839. This section occurs in Chapter XIV of the Code which deals with general provisions as to inquiries and trials. It is applicable to cases even before the issue of process under S. 201, supra, and the Magistrate is entitled under this section, if there be a reasonable cause for doing so, to postpone any inquiry or trial, and to postpone the issue of process under S. 201, supra. S. 202, supra, deals with inquiries after a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence on complaint and before he dismisses under S. 203, supra, or issues process under S. 204, supra, and there is nothing in the law which prevents a Magistrate from postponing issue of process under S. 201 if there is reasonable cause for so doing, if the case be a warrant case. Magistrates should understand that the power under this section is a power which is to be exercised in cases which come really within the terms of the section. It is not a power to be exercised arbitrarily and not according to rule, 9 B.L.R. 354; no adjournments are to be granted in other cases, 17 W.R. (Cr.) 35; 21 W.R. (Cr.) 26. This section empowers the Magistrate not only to adjourn an inquiry or trial but also to postpone its commencement and 201 supra is one of the sections which come in the Chapter headed, commencement of proceedings before Magistrates. That being so, the Magistrate has power to postpone the commencement of the hearing under this section and this may include also postponement till the disposal of a Counter case, 43 C.L.J. 388. The power given to a Court to postpone the hearing is to be exercised when there is any reasonable cause for so doing and it is a matter of discretion and if the Magistrate does not exercise his discretion judiciously in postponing the case, High Court will interfere and set aside the order. But if the discretion is exercised in a sound and judicial manner, the High Court should not be interfering with the discretion. It is the policy of the law, that Courts, should proceed to inquire into and try the cases as soon as they take cognizance of a complaint, and it is only when reasonable grounds exist for postponing the inquiry or trial, they should do so, as there is no provision of law preventing such postponement. 26 Cr. L.J. 1178=53 Ind. Cas. 603 where 28 C.W.N. 437 is referred to. The Bombay High Court Criminal Circular (Bomb. Gaz. 1896 Pt. I, p. 1104) for prompt disposal of cases and as to the impropriety of undue protraction of trials before lower Courts is worth reproducing. "The Hon'ble Judges regret to observe that the trial of cases is at times unnecessarily and unduly protracted. Their Lordships therefore desire to point out for the guidance of Magistrates that it is their duty to despatch their criminal work with the least possible delay, it being essential for the proper administration of justice that it should be promptly dealt with. As far as possible, criminal work should be given precedence over other work, cases in which the accused are in custody being taken up for disposal in preference to those in which the accused are on bail. Magistrates should so arrange for the despatch of their criminal work that the hearing of one case should, as far as possible, not be allowed interfere with the hearing of another case, each being fixed for hearing for distinct days, due regard being had to their probable duration. Every effort, should be made to minimise delay and hardship to the parties and witnesses. When a case is once commenced, it should be heard de die in diem and completed with every possible despatch, the whole or as much of the working day as could be spared, being devoted to its hearing. Witnesses remaining over from one day should be examined at the first sitting of the Court on the following day. The practice of taking up a case for an hour or so and then dropping it again should be avoided and cases should be disposed of, as far as possible, in continuous sittings. Adjournments, should, as a rule, be avoided especially when the accused are likely to be prejudiced thereby, and if from any unavoidable cause an adjournment is deemed indispensable it should be for as short a time as possible. Any case once commenced should be continued from day to day, except in Sundays and other days when Public Treasuries are closed and days when Native usage absolutely requires the intermission of all business. Every Court should sit daily and punctually at the hour appointed for its opening, unless prevented by circumstances which should be recorded in its proceedings. When a Magistrate is on tour every care should be taken so as to obviate, as far as practicable, the inconvenience which must be caused to them by their being called away to long distance from their residences and the hearing of cases should, as far as possible be completed at the appointed place without obliging them to move from camp to camp with the Magistrate." This section which relates to inquiries or trials has nothing to do with police investigations, 22 B. 32 at 34. Public policy and public safety demand that every criminal trial should be conducted as expeditiously as possible. The adjournment must be to a day fixed and only in exceptional cases criminal trials are to be adjourned sine die, e.g., on account of prevalence of plague in the locality and such similar causes. (There is no authority for holding that once a date had been fixed for the hearing of a case that date cannot be altered to an earlier one. There is no reason why a case could not be heard at an earlier date due notice being given to the accused or to his pleader. The intention of the Code is that a criminal trial should proceed forthwith and should be continued from day to day until its termination. The section only provides for adjournments for definite reasons but where there is no longer any reason for an adjournment the trial should proceed and the changing of the date to an earlier one cannot be considered as even a technical irregularity, 29 Cr. L.J. 1092=112 Ind. Cas. 676. Once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a case his powers of postponement and adjournment are governed by this section, 23 C.W.N. 437 and 430=25 Cr. L.J. 63=93 Ind. Cas. 628. It is highly undesirable that the same dispute should be allowed to be fought out both in the criminal and civil Courts simultaneously and under these sections the criminal proceedings may be stayed during disposal of the civil dispute, 43 A. 60; 27 Cr. L.J. 1114=97 Ind. Cas. 526. See notes under next heading. This section contemplates a remand to jail and not to police custody contemplated by S. 167, supra, 23 B. 32 at 34. Under this section a Magistrate has jurisdiction to postpone sine die proceedings under S. 145, supra, but he must assign sufficient reasons for the same, 13 C.W.N. 601 at 603=11 Cr. L.J. 7. This section is applicable where a Judge desires to stay the trial in a case, pending an appeal in a connected case. The Public Prosecutor may, under S. 491, infra, withdraw with the permission of the Court from the prosecution, 6 M.L.T. 90=9 Cr. L.J. 493=2 Ind. Cas. 123. It is most inexpedient for a Sessions trial to be adjourned. The intention of the Code is that a trial before a Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously and adjournments when they become necessary should be granted only on strongest possible grounds and for shortest possible period, 35 A. 3. This section does not apply to appeals and costs cannot be awarded for adjourning an appeal, 21 Cr. L.J. 201=31 Ind. Cas. 953.

Any other reasonable cause.—Reasonable cause is same cause which will enable the Court to have before it all the materials relevant to the inquiry or trial, 1903 A.W.N. 234. It is impossible to lay down rules for the conduct of the Court. It must be left to the Court to decide in each case whether consistently with the rights of the parties and also the interests of justice it would be proper to grant an adjournment when the liberty of the subject is at stake. Every precaution should be taken to see that no unfair means is resorted to by the parties to get adjournments for purposes which may not be justifiable in law. A trial once opened should be proceeded with throughout the day, and as far as possible, from day to day until completed. Piecemeal method of dealing with cases necessitates the preparation of unnecessary voluminous records by giving to parties and witnesses opportunity for consultation and for concoction and fabrication of evidence. The system must necessarily result in much waste of public time, entailing upon the parties intolerable inconvenience, loss of time and expense, 19 C.W.N. 273 at 282. Absence of a witness is specially mentioned in this section as a reason for postponement of the trial. A trial held without giving the accused a reasonable opportunity to adduce evidence is bad, 19 M. 375 ; 5 M.H.C.R. Appx. 27 ; 11 W.R. (Cr.) 15. The power conferred by this section is to be exercised only in cases which come really within the terms of this section and not arbitrarily. The Magistrate being busy with the executive work in the interior of the district is not a "reasonable cause" 9 B L R 354=17 W.R. (Cr.) 55. Whether there are reasonable grounds are not, is a question which must be decided judicially, that is, there should be some tangible evidence on which the court might come to the conclusion that, if unrebutted, the accused might be convicted, 36 C. 174 at 178. An important ceremony in which the party is obliged to take part, or the death of a nearest relation, may justify an adjournment. So also the fact that the accused's Counsel had to fulfil a longstanding engagement in a criminal case at another place, and the Magistrate will not be justified in taking the extreme step of deciding the case without hearing the defence about such an engagement, 12 Cr. L.J. 474=12 Ind. Cas. 82. The explanation to this section shows what is a reasonable cause for a remand. There is no hard and fast rule that a criminal case should be adjourned pending the disposal of a civil suit in relation to the same matter. Pendency of a civil litigation with regard to the same subject-matter may be a reasonable cause of a postponement of the inquiry or trial within this section, Weir II 415 ; 1 M.H.C.R. 66 ; 17 Cr. L.J. 7=32 Ind. Cas. 133 ; 27 Cr. L.J. 1114=97 Ind. Cas. 426. Where a charge in a criminal case is the defence in a civil suit it is better that criminal proceedings should be adjourned and stayed provided there is a probability of a speedy termination of the civil suit, 15 Cr. L.J. 568=24 Ind. Cas. 976 ; See also 15 Cr. L.J. 433=24 Ind. Cas. 576 ; 13 Cr. L.J. 567=24 Ind. Cas. 976. No hard and fast rule can be laid down that a criminal trial should of necessity be stayed simply because a civil suit has been instituted between the parties in which some or all the matters in issue would have to be determined until the civil litigation is finally decided, 13 C.W.M. 393=11 Cr. L.J. 4=4 Ind. Cas. 495 where 34 C. 848 is referred to. See 50 M. 839 where it was held that there was no invariable rule that when the same issue is agitated both on the civil and the criminal side, the civil Court shall take precedence of the Criminal Court. Each case must be considered on its merits and the only general rule that can be adumbrated is, that every court should be left, as far as possible, to dispose of the cases on its file with the utmost expediency. The rule is in the interests not only of public administration but also of private individuals involved in criminal courts, for no one wishes to have a criminal case kept hanging indefinitely over his head but in cases arising from disputed title, it is difficult to draw the line between bona fide claim and a criminal trespass. If the title to property is already before the civil Court prior to the institution of criminal proceedings it may be advisable for the criminal Court to abide the result of the civil suit. See also, 23 Cr. L.J. 326=103 Ind. Cas. 710 ; 23 Cr. L.J. 47=106 Ind. Cas. 463 ; 1916 P.W.R. (Cr.) 8=17 Cr. L.J. 235=34 Ind. Cas. 317 ; 13 Cr. L.J. 175=13 Ind. Cas. 927 where 5 C.L.J. 233=5 Cr. L.J. 199 and 5 C.W.N. 44 are referred to. Criminal Courts have no authority to order an accused person to pay the cost of an adjournment consequent on his failure to appear on the date fixed for hearing of the complaint against him, 20 A.L.J. 280 ; where an adjournment was granted to suit the convenience of the police who were conducting the prosecution, a complainant cannot be ordered to pay costs of the accused, 24 Bom. L.R. 380. Even when the complainant has a reasonable cause, it is discretionary with the court to postpone the hearing ; when the Magistrate finds that the complainant was wasting the time and protracting the trial unnecessarily and therefore refuses to adjourn the case for examining further prosecution witnesses, an adjournment was rightly refused, 26 Cr. L.J. 933=87 Ind. Cas. 110. Trial held on a Sunday or other holiday is not necessarily invalid unless the accused is prejudiced, say, his being unable to secure the services of Counsel, 16 Cr. L.J. 752=31 Ind. Cas. 352.

Postpone any inquiry or trial.—This section enables the Court to postpone commencement of or adjourn any inquiry or trial. An appeal before a sessions Court strictly be said to be an inquiry or trial within the meaning of this section and costs be awarded under this section for the adjournment of an appeal, 21 Cr. L.J. 231=54 Ir 335, where 28 A. 207 and 1905 A.W.N. 59, are referred to Court may, if it thinks fit.—The words "if it thinks fit" have been added Code of 1893 and this gives the court a wide discretion to postpone the inquiry or trial is discretionary with the court to adjourn the inquiry or trial under this section a discretion is to be exercised not arbitrarily and not according to rule, 9 B.L.R. 333=1 (Cr.) 53.

Order in writing stating reasons therefor.—The order of adjournment must be in writing and must state grounds for such adjournment, 28 C.W.N. 437.

May adjourn on such terms as it thinks fit.—The expression "On terms" means something more than a mere power to adjourn. It implies that a court is granted to one side only on condition that the other side suffers in some manner. In criminal cases the right to award costs rests in every case on statute. There is no provision enabling criminal courts to award costs in favour of the prosecutor against the accused in a prosecution for an offence. In order to encourage due prosecution of offences criminal Courts have power to grant, to those prosecutors and witnesses for the prosecution who attend on recognisance or summons, such costs as will reimburse for the expenses they have incurred or shall incur. The power to award costs for granting an adjournment is vested in the court under this section 9 Cr. L. Rev. 338 where 28 A. 207; 9 C.W.N. 18 and Cr. R.C. Nos. 485 and 486 of 1916 (M.H.C.) are followed. These words are wide enough to cover an order making payment of costs by one party to another, a condition of granting an adjournment, and the power can be exercised even in a case initiated by a police officer. 40 M. 1130. Unlike the Civil Procedure Code there is no general clause in the code providing for costs in every case. The sections providing for costs are among others 88, 144, 483, 526 and 545, infra. Where there are specific instances in which power to grant costs is given the manner expressio unius est exclusio alterius applies with the result that any right of granting costs except that specially provided is excluded, 45 M. 913 (F.B.) = 1. The Code does not make a special provision for costs, in the course of a criminal trial. One thing seems to be perfectly clear, viz., that if this section is to be regarded as justifying order as to costs, it can only be where the circumstances are exceptional and where for reason or other the ordinary method of conducting criminal cases must be departed from. 42 B. 234. Where a Magistrate had to postpone a case owing to the failure of the complainant to take necessary steps to summon his witnesses, the Magistrate has power to direct the complainant to pay costs to accused or his witnesses. 9 A.L.J. 13 Cr. L.J. 268=15 Ind. Cas. 552. This section dealing with proceedings in criminal cases expressly empowers the Court to postpone or adjourn an inquiry upon such terms as it thinks fit. This clearly entitles a Court to award costs to a party who has been put to unnecessary expense by the conduct of the other side. It would be regrettable to be deplored if the Court has no such power. The Court has power to award costs and in proper cases it is a power that the Court should exercise, and a just exercise of the power would have the effect of preventing many useless adjournments. 28 A. 207 at 208. An order requiring an accused to pay the costs of an adjournment which a Magistrate in his discretion may make under this section, and when such an order is found to be not unreasonable under the circumstances of the case, it was not disturbed by the High Court, 9 C.W.N. 18. But when a case had necessarily to be adjourned on account of the absence of the accused the Court will not be justified in awarding costs in addition to the issue of a warrant of arrest. The question of imposing terms for adjournment can therefore possibly arise and it would be entirely opposed to the spirit of conducting criminal trials to impose such terms for adjournment, 1906 P.R. (Cr.) 8=3 Cr. L.J. 78; 12 Cr. L.J. 8 Ind. Cas. 851; 20 A.L.J. 239. A complainant ought not to be saddled with costs of adjournment consequent on his failure to produce evidence when one of the accused happens to be absent on that day, 27 Cr. L.J. 573=93 Ind. Cas. 140. An order as to costs can be made only against the person who gave the information to the police although the crown conducts the prosecution, 40 M. 1130.

May by a warrant remand accused to custody.—The word "remand" connote that the accused is brought up before the Court and re-committed to custody. Remand to jail must be distinguished from police custody which can be done on noncompletion of the investigation against the accused. To remand is to recommit to custody, and can be made only in the presence of the accused, Weir II 469. This section contemplates a remand to jail and not to police custody, 23 B. 32 at 34. The section clearly shows that occasions for remand to Jail custody of undertrial prisoners should be as few as possible, 27 Cr. L.J. 1063 at 1069=97 Ind. Cas. 39. This section does not empower the Magistrate to remand an accused in the custody of the Magistrate to police custody for the purpose of obtaining information as to the commission of the alleged offence, 4 Bom. L.R. 878. Detention is not intended to be penal but it is intended to secure attendance of accused, considering the gravity of the offence and the nature of the evidence implicating him, 35 C. 174. When the offence is bailable the accused ought not to be remanded but released on bail as the terms of S 496 infra are imperative, 8 C.W.N. 779. A remand should not ordinarily be ordered under this section without first recording some evidence, where such is already available, to show that good grounds exist for believing the accused to have committed a non-bailable offence. The ordinary course is to examine a police-officer to ascertain the complicity of the accused. When after one remand the accused is again brought up, some direct evidence of his guilt should be required to justify a refusal of bail, and with such remand the necessity of producing such evidence increases, 16 Cr. L.J. 705=30 Ind. Cas. 923, following 6 M. 69. Whether there are reasonable grounds for believing the accused guilty of the offence or not is a question which must be decided judicially, that is to say, there must be some tangible evidence on which a Court might come to the conclusion that, if unrebutted, the accused might be convicted. The detention of an accused under trial is not intended to be penal but its object is to secure attendance, 36 C. 174 at 178-179. The High Court in revision set aside an order of remand where the reason given was that the Magistrate was engaged on executive work in the interior of the District, 9 B.L.R. 354=17 W.R. (Cr). 55. Where a Magistrate remands an accused person to custody under this section he shall record reasons for his order. Rule 52. Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

Revision.—The High Court has power to revise an order under this section and to use the power freely, the wording of the section is purposely made wide, 40 M. 1131; see also 23 A. 207; 1902 A.W.N. 59; see also 26 L.W. 113; =28 Cr. L.J. 812=104 Ind. Cas. 252=39 M.L.T. 14, where it was held that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere if the Court below had exercised a judicial discretion in refusing to act under this section, see Weir II 415; see also 11 W.R. (Cr) 15 and 21 Cr. L.J. 201=54 Ind. Cas. 585 where the High Court in revision set aside the order of the Sessions Judge adjourning an appeal on condition that the appellant paid Rs 100 as costs to the Crown. Where the application is rejected without proper reasons the order can be revised, 24 Cr. L.J. 640=73 Ind. Cas. 529. But a reasonable order as to costs will not be interfered with by the High Court, 9 C.W.N. 18=2 Cr L.J. 1.

345. (1) The offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may be compounded of offences. compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table:—

Offence.	Sections of the Indian Penal Code applicable.	Persons by whom offence may be compounded.
Uttering words, etc., with deliberate intent to wound the religious feelings of any person.	298	The person whose religious feelings are intended to be wounded.
Causing hurt	323, 331	The person to whom the hurt is caused
Wrongfully restraining or confining any person	311, 342	The person restrained or confined,
Assault or use of criminal force ...	352, 355, 358.	The person assaulted or to whom criminal force is used
Unlawful compulsory labour ...	374	The person compelled to labour.
Mischief when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person.	426, 427	The person to whom the loss or damage is caused.
Criminal trespass	447	The person in possession of the property trespassed upon.
House trespass	448	Do.
Criminal breach of contract of service.	490, 491, 492	The person with whom the offender has contracted
Adultery	497	The husband of the woman
Enticing or taking away or detaining with criminal intent a married woman.	498	Do.
Defamation	500	The person defamed.
Printing or engraving matter, knowing it to be defamatory.	501	Do.
Sale of printed or engraved substance containing defamatory matter, knowing it to contain such matter	502	Do.
Insult intended to provoke a breach of the peace	504	The person insulted.
Criminal intimidation, except when the offence is punishable with imprisonment for seven years.	506	The person intimidated.
Act caused by making a person believe that he will be an object of divine displeasure.	508	The person against whom the offence was committed.

(2) The offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may, with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offence is pending, be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table :—

Offence.	Sections of the Indian Penal Code applicable.	Persons by whom offence may be compounded.
Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means.	324	The person to whom hurt is caused.
Voluntarily causing grievous hurt ...	325	Do.
Voluntarily causing grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation ...	335	Do.

Offence.	Sections of the Indian Penal Code applicable.	Persons by whom offence may be compounded
Causing hurt by doing an act so rashly and negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.	337	The person to whom hurt is caused.
Causing grievous hurt by doing an act so rashly and negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.	338	Do.
Wrongfully confining a person for three days or more.	343	The person confined.
Wrongfully confining a person in secret.	346	Do.
Assault or criminal force in attempting wrongfully to confine a person.	357	The person assaulted or to whom the force was used.
Dishonest misappropriation of property.	403	The owner of the property misappropriated.
Cheating	417	The person cheated.
Cheating a person whose interest the offender was bound, by law or by legal contract, to protect.	416	Do.
Cheating by personation	419	Do.
Cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property or the making, alteration or destruction of a valuable security	420	Do.
Mischief by injury to work of irrigation by wrongfully diverting water when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person.	430	The person to whom the loss or damage is caused.
House trespass to commit an offence (other than theft) punishable with imprisonment.	451	The person in possession of the house trespassed upon.
Using a false trade or property mark.	482	The person to whom loss or injury is caused by such use
Counterfeiting a trade or property mark used by another.	483	The person whose trade or property mark is counterfeited.
Knowingly selling, or exposing or possessing for sale or for trade or manufacturing purpose, goods marked with counterfeit trade or property mark.	486	Do.
Marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife.	491	The husband or wife of the person so marrying.
Uttering words or sounds or making gestures or exhibiting any object intending to insult the modesty of a woman or intruding upon the privacy of a woman	509	The woman whom it is intended to insult or whose privacy is introduced upon.

(3) When any offence is compoundable under this section, the abetment of such offence or an attempt to commit such offence (when such attempt is itself an offence) may be compounded in like manner.

(4) When the person who would otherwise be competent to compound an offence under this section is under the age of eighteen years or in an idiot or a lunatic, any person competent to contract on his behalf may with the permission of the Court compound such offence.

(5) When the accused has been committed for trial or when he has been convicted and an appeal is pending, no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court to which he is committed, or, as the case may be, before which the appeal is to be heard.

(5A) A High Court acting in the exercise of its powers of revision under section 439 may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section.

(6) The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded.

(7) No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section.

Amendment.—The offence under S. 508, I.P.O., has been added newly to the list of offences, under sub-section (1) and to sub-section (2) fifteen new offences, such as wrongful confinement, criminal misappropriation, cheating, mischief, house-trespass, using false trade mark, bigamy, uttering words to outrage modesty of a woman, etc., are added which are now made compoundable with the permission of the Court. In sub-section (4) for the word "minor" the words "under the age of eighteen years" are substituted and the guardian or a curator can compound only with the permission of the Court. By the new sub-section (5A) power is given to the High Court to permit the compounding of an offence and the addition of the words "with whom the offence has been compounded" in sub-section (6) make it clear that the composition with one accused will not work a composition with the other accused in the case.

Scope of the section—This section is divided into two sub-sections. Sub-section (1) deals with certain offences under the I.P.O. mentioned therein and these offences may be compounded by persons mentioned in column 3. Sub-section (2) contains a list of certain other sections of the I.P.O. and it provides that these offences can be compounded by the persons mentioned in column 3 only with the permission of the Court before which the prosecution is pending. It may be taken as settled law that this section is exhaustive on the subject of the composition of the offences mentioned therein. The case reported in 39 M. 936, lays down that if the parties in a pending case arrive at a compromise outside the Court and one of the parties resiles from, it is competent to the Court to inquire whether or not the parties had settled their dispute and if it finds that there has been a valid composition, the Court should pass an order of acquittal. In other words the jurisdiction of the Court to go on with the trial comes to an end when the parties had arrived at a valid composition. Under sub-section (1) as soon as the compromise has been arrived at by the parties the Magistrate has nothing more to do except to record a judgment of acquittal. In cases governed by sub-section (2) the permission of the Court before which the prosecution is pending is essential before the case is validly compounded. The Magistrate has to perform the judicial act of deciding whether in the interests of justice the parties should be allowed to compound the offence. In 41 M. 633, it was held that under sub-section (2), the operation of the composition is necessarily suspended until the Court sanctions it. In other words no effect can be given to a compromise as a plea in bar of conviction in cases covered by sub-section (2) unless the Court has given its sanction. Without the sanction of the Court the so called compromise arrived at between the parties outside the Court is of no legal effect and cannot be taken cognizance of, by any Court dealing with the offence. The jurisdiction of the Court to try the case on the merits remains unaffected and there is no rule of law based either upon express language or deducible from any general principles which would enable the court in a case falling under sub-section (2) to order an inquiry into the factum of a compromise alleged by one party and denied by the other.

other, 9 Lah. 400. It is not competent in every case to compound an offence under this section. Any person may act the criminal law in motion but it is only the person specified in the third column of the table attached to the section who can compound the offence, 51 B. 512 at 514. To compound an offence is to accept some consideration for forbearing to prosecute or continue to prosecute an offence. Any person who honestly considers that a criminal offence has been committed against him has a right to lay a complaint before a Criminal Court and on the other hand, any accused person is justified in pleading not guilty who considers the facts alleged cannot be proved or if proved they do not constitute an offence, 10 Cr. L.J. 228. The compounding of an offence does not mean that the offence has not been committed, but that it had been committed, though the victim is willing either to forgive or to accept some form of solatium as sufficient compensation for what he has suffered, 43 M. 257 at 259 where 17 C.W.N. 443 is distinguished. The principle of English law is that the composition of an offence is illegal if the offence is one which is of public concern, but if the offence is of a private nature and one for which the complainant might have recovered damages in a civil action the composition is lawful. The test for deciding whether the offence affects the individual rather than the State is the compoundability or non-compoundability of the offence charged, as laid down by this section, and Courts of Law cannot go beyond that test and substitute for it one of their own, 23 B 326 at 328; 14 Cr. L.J. 292=19 Ind. Cas. 948 following 23 B 326; 41 M 685; 1 B. 147; 6 Cr.L.J. 336=1517 P.R. (Cr.) 11; 9 Lah. 400. The composition referred in this section is in the nature of a contract, but does not require any consideration, 2 L.W. 1200=18 M.L.T. 602; 39 M. 945. This section is exhaustive of the circumstances and conditions under which a composition can be effected, 9 Lah. 400. No other meaning can be given to sub-section (7). This section makes provisions with regard to (a) the persons who may compound, (b) the nature of the offences that may be compounded; (c) the stage of the criminal proceeding at which composition is sought to be made; (d) it also provides that in regard to some offences which are specified, the mere consent of the injured person shall not suffice but the permission of the Court should be obtained, 39 M 604. The question whether a case is compoundable or not must be decided with reference to the state of the facts existing at the date of the application to compound and it is not possible for the Court to see what the ultimate result of the case will be. Where a case is one under S. 325, I.P.C., which could not at the date of the application be compounded without the leave of the Court and no orders were passed by the Court on the application, when presented, and the complainant withdrew her application after medical evidence was recorded and the petition was rejected by the Court and a charge under S. 323, I.P.C. was framed, and the accused ultimately convicted under S. 352, I.P.C., it was held that the accused was not entitled to an acquittal as the compromise petition was presented at a stage when the offence charged was not compoundable without the permission of the Court, and no petition was before the Court when the charge was found to be a compoundable one, 26 Cr. L.J. 1428=89 Ind. Cas. 900 where 3 C.W.N. 322. is referred to. A petition of compromise agreeing to be bound by the award of certain arbitrators and the grant of an adjournment by the Court for settlement of dispute without a valid award being passed and accepted by the parties, has not the effect of a compounding under this section, 26 Cr. L.J. 1584=90 Ind. Cas. 544. Compounding an offence is more than a mere promise to withdraw a prosecution. It supposes an arrangement by which the parties have settled their differences and in the more usual acceptance of the term implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification, for dropping the prosecution. Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply, the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court requires for proof of any agreement which is in issue, 21 C. 103 at 115. Where the accused alleges the composition of the offence with which he is charged the onus is on him to show that a real and valid composition with the person against whom the offence is committed had been arrived at, 51 B. 512 at 514 following 21 C. 103. Compounding signifies that the person injured has received some gratification, not necessarily of a pecuniary character, to act as an inducement for his deciding to abstain from a prosecution and the law provides that if the offence is compoundable a composition shall have the effect of an acquittal, 21 C. 103 at 112 followed in 43 M.L.J. 544=22 L.W. 390=1923 M.W.N. 753; 26 Cr. L.J. 1594=90 Ind. Cas. 666.

Where the parties wish to have a composition recorded under this section it is neither necessary for the accused to plead guilty nor is it the duty of the Court to inquire into the nature or value of the consideration given by the complainant for compounding the offence. The complainant may consider that his grievance has been redressed by the mere fact of respectable persons intervening, though he has received no money payment or even a direct apology from the accused. He is nevertheless at full liberty to compound the offence, 10 Cr. L.J. 223. It is not incumbent on the Court before allowing the case to be compounded and acquitting the accused to make an inquiry into the complainant's authority. The order of acquittal made without inquiring into such authority is a valid one made with jurisdiction and such order of acquittal operates as a bar to further proceedings, 22 A.L.J. 820. The essence of an offence under S. 143 or S. 147, I.P.C., is the combination of several persons united in the purpose of committing the offence and that consensus of purpose is itself an offence distinct from the criminal offence which those persons agree and intend to commit. The compounding of an offence does not mean that the offence has not been committed but it has been committed although the victim is willing either to forgive it or to accept some form of solatium as sufficient compensation for what he has suffered. The law allows the compounding of an offence under S. 447 I.P.C., but not an offence under S. 143 I.P.C., even though Criminal trespass was the common object of the unlawful assembly, 46 M. 257 where 17 C.W.N. 943 is accepted. The offence of rioting under S. 147 I.P.C. is a non-compoundable offence and the Magistrate cannot allow its composition. It is an offence against public tranquillity, primarily concerning the State more than the individual. That is probably one reason why it is not included in the list of compoundable offences by persons immediately affected, even with the permission of the Court. The reason that it was better for the complainant to be on good terms with the accused who wish to 'compromise or probably the case may ultimately turn out to be one under Ss. 323, 324 or 325, I.P.C., is no reason for allowing composition. The acquittal by the Magistrate under such circumstances is illegal and was therefore set aside and the Magistrate was directed to proceed with the trial, 6 Cr. L.J. 336=1907 P.R.(Cr.) 11. See also 37 B 369; 1 B 64; 24 Cr. L.J. 186=71 Ind. Cas. 602. When an accused is charged under S. 147 and 325, I.P.C., and permission is granted by Court to compound the offence under S. 325, I.P.C., this will not have the effect, of ipso facto operating as a compromise and acquittal of the offence under S. 147, I.P.C. S. 403 (2) and S. 235 (f) and illustration (g) to that section clearly show that the acquittal under S. 325, I.P.C. will not bar a subsequent trial for the offence under S. 147, I.P.C. If however circumstances seem to require that the accused should not be proceeded with, he may be discharged of the offence under S. 147, I.P.C., 26 Cr. L.J. 686=83 Ind. Cas. 62. It is not necessary that the composition should be arrived at after a complaint has been filed. The words of the section are 'The offences.....described in the first two columns of the table next following may be compounded by the person mentioned in the third column of that table.' An offence, say, wrongful restraint can be compounded by the person restrained. An offence is complete when the acts constituting the offence have been committed apart from whether any complaint or charge has been laid in Court or not. The allusion in para. 6 of this section to the 'accused', only describes his character at the time of trial, when the question of the effect of a composition is under consideration, 25 A.L.J. 396=28 Cr. L.J. 495 (2)=101 Ind. Cas. 671 (2). The question whether an offence could be compounded before a complaint is actually filed in Court came for consideration in 41 M. 683, where it was held that in cases where no permission of the Court is needed for the compounding of an offence, there can be a valid composition before a complaint was actually filed in Court. There is no apparent reason why the Legislature having permitted certain offences to be compounded by the parties themselves without any reference to the Court should insist that the composition should take place only after the accused has been brought before the Court. There is no necessity that for a valid composition it should be effected in Court. This section does not imply any such necessity at any rate in the case of offences mentioned in sub-section (1), 21 C. 103; 30 M. 946. A Magistrate has no power to prevent the compounding of offences mentioned in the table given under sub-section (1) even when cases are sent up by the police, 10 C. 551; 1884 A.W.N. 236. Permitting the compounding of an offence is a judicial power the exercise of which is vested in the Magistrate and the Police ought not to be allowed to interfere in the matter, Ratanlal 91 and the permission of the Court is not required for compounding such offences. Such permission will be required only with regard to offences specified in the table to sub-section (2). For distinction between withdrawal of a complaint under S. 219 and the compounding of an offence under this section, see notes under S. 218, supra at p. 470. When the parties compound the offence and produce a writing signed by them before the Court, the Court is bound to act on it and is not at liberty to call upon the parties to prove that the case has been compromised, 16 Bom. L.R. 833=16 Cr. L.J. 83=26 Ind. Cas. 1000, nor can the Court proceed with the case and convict the accused, 45 A. 145; 39 M. 915; 21 C. 103. But a Magistrate is not bound to accept an application for compromise at a very late stage of the case especially where some of the offences are not compoundable even with the permission of the Court and one of the parties had repudiated the compromise, 31 Bom. L.R. 789. Where a petition to compound the offence is presented, the Courts should at once pass orders on it and should not keep it pending for consideration at the close of the trial, 3 C.W.N. 543 and 322. Under this section a case may be compounded at any time before sentence is passed and, therefore a Magistrate cannot refuse to accept a petition of compromise presented to him while he is writing the judgment on the ground that it was presented at a very late stage, 45 C. 816. But after a conviction, composition is permissible only with the leave of the appellate Court which is not bound to recognise and give effect to an agreement entered into after conviction, 11 L.W. 33=20 Cr. L.J. 832=53 Ind. Cas. 832; 11 A.L.J. 13. Where after a charge has been framed under S. 500, I.P.C., through certain mediators, the accused and the complainant signed a muchlisika to arbitrate the dispute but no arbitration took place and no award was made, and the Magistrate dismissed the complaint on the ground that the offence was compromised by the signing of the muchlisika by both parties it was held that the muchlisika was only one step towards composition, which was not complete before an award, and till then muchlisika was a mere agreement, a preliminary step towards composition and not composition itself, 49 M.L.J. 544=22 L.W. 390=(1925) M.W.N. 753=26 Cr. L.J. 1591=90 Ind. Cas. 666. The only sections of the Code which contemplate the termination of a criminal prosecution by private arrangement are S. 218 and this section. The former deals with trial of summons cases only and in a warrant case relating to a non compoundable offence, it is not competent to a Magistrate on a private complainant's offering to withdraw from prosecution, to enter an order of acquittal, 37 B. 359. The general principle of law in England, that felonies and serious misdemeanours should not be compounded is embodied in this section and it is the duty of the Court to decide on the evidence that a compoundable offence has been committed before allowing a compounding, Ratanlal 699; 1 L.B.R. 319; 7 Sind L.R. 200. The composition is permissible only up to the time of the judgment and not after. Therefore a Magistrate cannot refuse to accept a compromise petition on the ground that it was presented when the judgment was actually being written by him, 45 C. 816. When a compoundable offence is compromised and the complaint is withdrawn, it may be revived if it appears that the compromise was the result of a promise on the part of the accused which he failed to fulfill. The fact of such a promise should be inquired into and if proved the complaint should be investigated 1904 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 94, p. 224.

Sub-section (1).—Under this sub section as soon as the parties have arrived at a compromise in a compoundable offence, the composition is complete and if one of the parties subsequently resiles from the composition, it is competent to the Court to take evidence as to the factum of the composition and give effect to it, if it is found to have been entered into by the parties. If such a contingency does not arise the Magistrate has only to accept the composition and record a judgment of acquittal, 9 Lah. 430 following 39 M. 915 and 41 M. 685. The offences are described in the first two columns of the table and they are all offences under the Indian Penal Code. The offences punishable under other laws are only compoundable, if punishable with imprisonment of not more than six months or with fine only, with the permission of the Court. See Schedule II for offences against other laws.

May be compounded by persons mentioned in third column.—It is not necessary that the person who has filed the complaint that can compound the offence but it is only the persons specified in the third column that can lawfully compound, 51 B. 512 at 514. Thus if hurt is caused to three persons and one of them dies the other two cannot lawfully compound with regard to the hurt caused to the deceased person, 31 A. 606. See also 37 A. 419. Even though a husband can complain of defamation of his wife, as an aggrieved person, still it is the wife who can lawfully compound the offence even without the consent of the husband, the complainant, and against his wishes, 14 M. 379 at 331; 25 B. 151 at 157. If the offence is compromised by any other, it will not be a valid compounding and the person so compounding may be held liable under S. 214, I.P.C. Compounding with one of the complainants will not work an acquittal so far as the other persons were concerned, 37 C.L.J. 234=27 O.W.N. 168=24 Cr. L.J. 578=73 Ind. Cas. 322, and this is in accordance with the new amendment in sub-section (6). So, in a case of hurt, the person to whom the hurt is caused is alone entitled to compound, 31 A. 606. Where a widow complained of hurt caused to her husband in consequence of which he died, and subsequently compounded the offence and the Magistrate thereupon acquitted the accused, it was held that the composition was invalid and the acquittal was wrong. Weir II, 418. In a fight between two sets of persons when hurt is caused to a person who dies subsequently, the offence cannot be compounded by the other members of the party to which the deceased belonged, 31 A. 606; 15 A.L.J. 467; 6 A.L.J. 882=10 Cr. L.J. 473=3 Ind. Cas. 24. An agent prosecuting under powers granted under S. 199, supra, for alleged abduction of another's wife, when he was in jail, is not legally competent to compound the offence under this section on behalf of the husband and an acquittal passed on such a composition is void, 24 C.L.J. 420=71 Ind. Cas. 248. The mere fact that the case has been sent up by the police cannot prevent the offence which is legally compoundable from being compounded. It is not the law that no Magistrate under any circumstances has power to allow such a case to be withdrawn, 10 C. 551 at 553; 1886 A.W.N. 256.

In cases of mischief the offence is compoundable only when loss or damage is caused to a private person. S. 425, I.P.C. which defines mischief includes also damage to the public and such an offence cannot be compounded, 22 B. 889. But now the aggravated form of mischief under S. 430, I.P.C., is compoundable with the permission of the Court. In cases of defamation under S. 500, I.P.C., S. 198 infra permits a complaint being preferred by the aggrieved party, say the husband. But if a husband prefers a complaint, the wife could compound the offence without the consent of the husband and even against his wishes. This was pointed out in 25 B. 151 (F.B.) ; 15 M. L.J. 224.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section contains a list of offences which may be compounded by persons mentioned in column 3, only with the permission of the Court before which the prosecution is pending. It may be taken as settled law that this section is exhaustive on the subject of the composition of offences mentioned in this, and sub-section (1). In cases governed by this sub-section the permission of the Court is essential before the case is validly compounded. The Magistrate has to perform a judicial act of deciding whether in the interests of justice the parties should be allowed to compound the offence. The operation of the composition is necessarily suspended until the Court sanctions it. In other words no effect can be given to a compromise as a plea in bar of conviction in cases covered by this sub-section, unless the Court has given its sanction. Without such sanction the so-called compromise arrived at by the parties is of no legal effect and cannot be taken cognisance of by the Court dealing with the offence. The jurisdiction of the Court to try the offence remains unaffected and there is no rule of law or any general principle which would enable the Court in a case falling under this sub-section to order an inquiry as to the factum of a composition alleged by one party and denied by another, 9 Lah. 400, following, 41 M. 685 and referring to, 39 M. 946; 21 C. 103. The permission of the Court is compulsory and not a mere formality and the fact that the Magistrate would have allowed the party to compound does not make the slightest difference, 4 Ind. Cas. 809=1908 (P.R.) (Cr) 109. The offences under Ss. 313, 316, 357, 403, 417 to 420, 430, 451 (first part), 482, 483, 486, 491 and 500, I.P.C., are newly added. The offences mentioned in this sub-section can be compounded only with the permission of the Court. The Court which has to grant permission is the Court before which a prosecution of such offence is pending. The Court has to exercise a judicial discretion for granting permission. Permission to compound shall be given by the Court if the parties are related very closely, viz., husband and wife and it is to their mutual interest to patch up their quarrels and the Magistrate by so permitting to compound will be restoring peace and goodwill between the parties, 30 Cr. L.J. 960=118 Ind. Cas. 681 relying on 26 C.W.N. 536=35 C.L.J. 353=24 Cr. L.J. 355=72 Ind. Cas. 355. It is the duty of the Magistrate to decide in each case whether he will or will not permit a compounding. The responsibility rests entirely with him, unless the offence is so serious that the punishment is absolutely necessary, the Magistrate would do well in his discretion in permitting a composition. Where without sufficient reason a composition was not permitted, the High Court in revision set aside the order and enforced the composition, 23 Cr. L.J. 85=65 Ind. Cas. 437. The only Court which has power to grant permission is the Court before which a prosecution for such offence is pending and that Court has to exercise a judicial discretion in granting permission. Where an accused was convicted of a compoundable offence but on appeal the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered, it is open to the complainant to compound the offence with the leave of the Court, 1906 A.W.N. 200. When an accused is convicted of a non-compoundable offence, but on appeal he is acquitted of that offence and found guilty of a compoundable offence, it is only fair that the accused should be given if possible, permission to effect a composition before he is convicted by the appellate Court. Where an accused is charged and convicted of hurt, a compoundable offence, and on appeal the conviction is set aside and a retrial ordered by the appellate Court, it is still open to the complainant in the same manner in which the case may be compounded before conviction and for effecting the composition no permission of Court is necessary, 3 A.L.J. 523=1906 A.W.N. 200=4 Cr. L.J. 33.

Sub-section (3).—The sub-section provides that abetments and attempts to commit the offences that may be compounded, may also be compounded.

Sub-section (4).—The change effected in this sub-section renders it necessary that the permission of the Court ought to be obtained to the compounding of an offence complained of on behalf of a person below eighteen years, idiot or lunatic, by a guardian or other person lawfully entitled to the care and custody of his person or property and thus safeguarding the interest of incapacitated persons.

Sub-section (5).—This sub-section was newly introduced in the Code of 1893 and refers to cases where an accused has been committed for trial or when he has been convicted, and an appeal against such conviction is pending 37 A. 127. In such cases, it is provided that a composition shall be allowed with the leave of the Court concerned. A compounding of the offence is permitted after conviction in the appellate Court and no reference was made in this section before the amendment, to the High Court exercising its powers of revision under S. 439, to allow a composition. Now the new sub-section (5A) empowers the High Court in revision to allow a composition in the revision stage. This is in accordance with the decision in 32 A. 153; 37 C.L.J. 254; 15 Cr. L.J. 557=24 Ind. Cas. 975.

Sub-section (5A).—This sub-section is newly added empowering the High Court to allow compounding in revision and the following decisions are no longer law,--37 A. 127; 43 C. 1143; 39 M. 604; 23 Cr. L.J. 80=65 Ind. Cas. 432; 18 C.W.N. 1212; 29 M.L.J. 521; 21 Cr. L.J. 447=56 Ind. Cas. 239; see 30 Cr. L.J. 960=118 Ind. Cas. 681, following 26 C.W.N. 536=35 C.L.J. 353=24 Cr. L.J. 355=72 Ind. Cas. 355. Under this sub-section the High Court acting in the exercise of its powers of revision under S. 439, infra, may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section, 45 A. 91. See Cr. A. No. 839 of 1923 and also Cr. M.P. No. 467 of 1925 (M.H.C.) where an offence of grievous hurt was allowed to be compounded by the High Court. Where two accused who were convicted under S. 325, I.P.C. had, pending an appeal from the convictions, settled their differences with the complainant and their application to compound the offence had been rejected by the appellate Court, the High Court in revision granted the necessary permission as there was no good ground for withholding the permission and the accused were accordingly acquitted by the High Court in revision, 55 C. 1190.

Sub-section (6).—This sub-section indicates that the composition has the same effect in a criminal trial as it would have in a civil suit. It operates as an acquittal putting an end to the prosecution, 14 Cr. L.J. 292=10 Ind. Cas. 493. When the composition effected is valid whether made in Court or outside it, the Court is bound under this sub-section to acquit the accused and it has no jurisdiction to convert the compoundable offence the subject of the charge before it into a non-compoundable offence holding that the complaint had also disclosed a non-compoundable offence, 27 L.W. (Sh. N.) 26. The effect of the composition of a compoundable offence is immediate acquittal of the accused and once a composition has been arrived at, the complainant cannot be permitted to withdraw from it, 25 Cr. L.J. 810=81 Ind. Cas. 316. Though the composition of an offence under this section has the effect of an acquittal of the person with whom the offence has been compounded, yet it is not an acquittal within the meaning of S. 250 supra to enable the Magistrate to award compensation under that section, Ratanlal 957 and 700. Where an offence under S. 324 I.P.O., has been compounded and the composition under this sub-section worked an acquittal, such an acquittal does not operate as a bar to the trial of the accused person for an offence of 'going armed' under S. 19 (c) of the Arms Act as the latter offence is a distinct one from the former as to which there was an acquittal, 31 Bom L.R. 356 following 40 B. 97 and 23 C. 174. When a withdrawal petition is presented, the Magistrate is to apply his mind to the question of the disposal of that petition and should not refer it to the police thus allowing himself to be guided by what the police thought about the matter. This procedure is highly improper. The Magistrate was sitting as a judicial officer charged with the duty of determining the matter judicially and it did not and ought not to have mattered to him the least what the police thought of the petition. Such a course will give rise to an impression that the Police have considerable influence with Magistrates as to the way in which cases are disposed of, and such an impression ought never to be allowed to exist, 27 Cr. L.J. 543=93 Ind. Cas. 1031. After a valid composition of an offence which can lawfully be compounded without the permission of the Court, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to go on with the trial of the case as he is bound to give effect to the composition as soon as the compromise petition is filed in Court. The fact that the prosecution evidence had been closed and a charge had been framed against the accused is no bar to the composition of the offence which can legally be done before the passing of the sentence by the Magistrate, 29 Cr. L.J. 1053=112 Ind. Cas. 562. Similarly where an offence of hurt was compounded and a ravarnama was presented to the Court by complainant's pleader the Court is not entitled to refuse to accept the composition and institute an inquiry whether the charge was not frivolous or vexatious under S. 250, supra and the Magistrate ought to have accepted the ravarnama and acquitted the accused, 10 Bom L.R. 1036. When a District Magistrate had made an order calling for the records in a case pending before a subordinate Magistrate with a view to transfer the case to another Magistrate the subordinate Magistrate on receipt of the order calling for records cannot record a composition when the offences are compoundable and acquit the accused, as his jurisdiction was suspended, the case being no longer on his file, 49 B. 533. The provisions of this sub-section indicate that the composition has the same effect in a criminal trial as it would have in a civil suit. It operates as a complete bar to the prosecution as if the accused has been acquitted. There is no necessity to the composition to be effected in Court in a criminal trial any more than in the civil suit. The section does not imply any such necessity, at any rate in cases which can be compounded without the sanction of the Court. This was the view taken in 21 C. 103, where the accused, pleaded, a composition out of Court and the Judges held that that if the composition was proved, the Magistrate would have had no jurisdiction to go on with the trial. See 41 M. 685; 14 Cr. L.J. 292=19 Ind. Cas. 943; 39 M. 946; 16 Cr. L.J. 81=25 Ind. Cas. 993. Before the amendment there was a conflict as to the exact scope of this sub-section. It was held that the moment a composition is voluntarily effected under the section, it operates as an acquittal of all the accused irrespective of the fact that process had been issued to one of the accused only. The compounding relates to the offence charged and not to any of the accused's offence. 7 C.W.N. 176 followed in [1921] Pat. 144. But this view was not accepted in 41 M. 323 where it was held that there was nothing in the language of the section to warrant the conclusion that the composition with one of several accused will effect an acquittal of the others. This decision was approved and followed in 1 Lah. 169, and the new amendment is in accordance with the decision in 41 M. 323; 45 B. 346 and 19 A.L.J. 374; 26 Cr. L.J. 238=24 Ind. Cas.

¶2; See also 7 Lah. 344. It is not necessary that any petition setting forth the compromise should be presented to the Court.

When a party to a compoundable offence alleges that the case had been compromised and the other denies the same, it is competent to the Court before which the case is pending to take evidence concerning the factum of the alleged compromise and decide whether a compromise had been arrived at, 2 L.W. 1200=18 M.L.T. 602=16 Cr. L.J. 808=31 Ind. Cas. 819. The onus is on the accused who disputes the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to prove that there was valid composition in law barring the trial, 21 C. 103. A composition under this section is not limited to any act done in Court nor to cases in which the parties continue to be of the same mind till the case comes on for further hearing before the Court, 2 L.W. 1200=18 M.L.T. 602=16 Cr. L.J. 803=31 Ind. Cas. 819, see also 41 M. 685. When a non-compoundable warrant case is dismissed the matter having been settled by the parties the dismissal is only a discharge and the composition will not prevent a revival of the prosecution, 1 B. 64; Ratanlal 330 and 391. A composition can be pleaded as accord and satisfaction and would be a complete bar to a Civil suit for damages, 6 Sind L.R. 285.

Sub-section (7).—Before this sub section was enacted in the 1882 Code considerable doubt existed as to what offences could be compounded, see 1 B. 147. It is now made clear that the offences mentioned in the section can alone be compounded 1891 P.R. (Cr.) 17, the prohibition contained in this sub section is a perfectly general one which governs the composition of offences whether any steps to prosecute the alleged offender have been taken or not, 46 Ind. Cas. 421. The words are "no offence shall be compounded except as provided for by this section." This sub section clearly shows that this section is exhaustive of the circumstances and conditions under which a composition can be effected, 39 M. 604. A Magistrate has no authority to allow any other offence than those mentioned in this section to be compounded, eg., an offence under S. 143, I.P.C., and he usurps jurisdiction not vested in him by law by allowing that offence to be compounded. The reason given by the Magistrate to allow a non-compoundable offence to be compounded, viz., that it would be better for the complainant to do so and the accused also desired the composition and probably the case in the end may turn out to be a compoundable offence is faulty, and any order so made is without jurisdiction, 4 Bom. L.R. 718.

346. (1) If, in the course of an inquiry or a trial before a Magistrate in any district outside the presidency-towns, the evidence appears to him to warrant a presumption that the case is one which should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate in such district, he shall stay proceedings and submit the case, with a brief report explaining its nature, to any Magistrate to whom he is subordinate, or to such other Magistrate, having jurisdiction, as the District Magistrate directs.

Procedure of Provincial Magistrate in cases which he cannot dispose of Magistrate in any district outside the presidency-towns, the evidence appears to him to warrant a presumption that the case is one which should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate in such district, he shall stay proceedings and submit the case, with a brief report explaining its nature, to any Magistrate to whom he is subordinate, or to such other Magistrate, having jurisdiction, as the District Magistrate directs.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may, if so empowered, either try the case himself or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction, or commit the accused for trial.

It is a general principle of the Code that evidence taken by a Magistrate is not evidence in a trial before another Magistrate unless some provision of law expressly makes it so. Mere consent of parties will not do, 17 L.W. 217. The word 'evidence' in this section is not restricted to the depositions recorded by the Magistrate. It includes all the facts and statements disclosed by the inquiry. For example, where a Magistrate directs an inquiry by another Magistrate or the Police under S. 201 supra, he is doing so in the course of his own inquiry into the offence and that his own inquiry is therefore already begun. He is entitled therefore to proceed upon the facts disclosed in the report made to him and then take action under this section, 28 Cr. L.J. 334=100 Ind. Cas. 992. This section applies only to Provincial Magistrates and to cases which they cannot dispose of. If a complaint states facts which disclose an offence which the Magistrate receiving the complaint is not competent to try he ought to send the case to the Magistrate or Court competent to try all the offences disclosed in the complaint, 17 M.L.J. 559=7 Cr.L.J. 6. A Magistrate may also be incompetent to try an accused due to some personal interest, S. 556, infra. It is only to such cases the section applies and not to a case in which a Magistrate is competent to make a valid commitment to the Court of Session, 7 C.W.N 457. A Magistrate when he finds, he has no jurisdiction, cannot discharge the accused but must proceed under this section, Weir II, 323. When during the course of the trial, aggravating circumstances are disclosed by the evidence, it is the duty of the Magistrate to act under this section, Weir, II, 421; 13 B. 502; 25 L.W. 86=28 Cr. L.J. 164 (2)=99 Ind. Cas. 596 (2). When a Magistrate finding that the offence constituted by the evidence on record is one which he is not competent to try and submits the case to a superior Magistrate who transfers the case to a Magistrate competent to try the same, the latter cannot act on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the offence and consequently submitted the case to the superior Magistrate, and the conviction based on a consideration of such evidence is bad in law, 55 C. 65. Where a Subordinate Magistrate after completing the trial is of opinion that he could not adequately punish the accused, send the case to the District Magistrate who after asking the accused, whether he wanted the witnesses to be re-called and heard, and the accused replying in the negative, proceeded to give judgment convicting the accused, without trying the case afresh, it was held, that the procedure adopted was illegal and the consent of the accused cannot dispense with the provisions of the Code and such an illegality cannot be cured by consent, 2 Cr. L.J. 369. A Magistrate cannot intentionally ignore facts disclosing circumstances of aggravation which show an offence beyond his jurisdiction, 10 C. 85. When the accused in an old offender, the Magistrate may act properly under this section, 1834 A.W.N. 200. But a conviction had, ought not to be set aside merely because the facts disclosed a more serious offence. The proceedings of the original Magistrate are not void and a re-trial ought not to be ordered after setting aside the conviction unless the accused has been really prejudiced, 25 M.L.J. 434. When a case is submitted under this section to another Magistrate, he may try the case himself or refer the case to any Magistrate subordinate to him, or he may commit the accused to the Court of Session. Where evidence was recorded by a Magistrate who sent up the case he having no jurisdiction to try the case it cannot be said that the superior Magistrate was trying the case himself, 17 L.W. 247. It was held in 12 C.W.N. 133=6 Cr. L.J. 427 that the Magistrate when he commits may act on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who submitted the case under this section and S. 531 infra and did not apply to such a case. When a Sub-Magistrate submits a case to a Sub-divisional Magistrate under this section, the latter has no power to refer the case back to the former, but is bound to dispose of it in one of the ways prescribed by this section, 45 M. 846; Ratanlal 439 and 534. Where the superior Magistrate to whom the case has been sent up, was of opinion that the facts of the case disclose a more serious offence which the subordinate Magistrate was not competent to try, he cannot remand the case for retrial, unless the accused was prejudiced or the sentence was inadequate where, the subordinate Magistrate had power to try the offences taken cognizance of by him, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 257 following 24 M. 675; 13 B. 502; 4 Cr.L. Rev. 393; 27 M.L.J. 594=14 Cr. L.J. 640=21 Ind. Cas 688.

347. (1) If in any inquiry before a Magistrate, or in any trial before a Magistrate, before signing judgment, it appears to him at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or High Court, and if he is empowered to commit for trial, he shall commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

(2) If such Magistrate is not empowered to commit for trial, he shall proceed under section 346.

The words "stop further proceedings and" have now been omitted to set right the conflict of rulings in Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, see 36 C. 43; 18 Cr. L.J. 43, 36 M. 321; 23 A. 264; 26 A. 177.

Scope of the section.—This section is couched in general terms and gives the Magistrate very wide powers. There is no suggestion, that the only possible reason for a competent Magistrate, to commit a case is, that he will not be able to pass a sufficiently severe sentence and if that were the intention of the Legislature it is extraordinary that there should be no indication of this in this section, 3 Ran. 42. This section is not intended to deprive the accused of any of his rights conferred by Chapter XVIII of the Code, 15 Cr. L.J. 366 = 23 Ind. Cas. 734. The terms of this section are general and give a Magistrate, who is empowered to commit, a discretion in committing cases for trial which is not limited by S. 254, so as to make it obligatory on him to try every case which he can adequately punish. S. 254 makes it imperative on the Magistrate only to frame a charge and not to complete the trial to a conviction or acquittal; the wide words of this section should not be curtailed by reference to S. 254 while there is a specific section, viz., S. 449, which deals with circumstances referred to in S. 254, and the decision in 1 M. 289 (F.B.) seems to be conclusive on the point, which is to the effect that it is competent to a Magistrate to say whether from the gravity of the matter or for any other sufficient reason the sessions Court is the proper tribunal for the disposal of the case, 42 M. 83 followed in 3 Ran. 42. It has been repeatedly decided that where a case is within the powers of a Magistrate to try and punish adequately, a commitment in such cases is improper and illegal, 1503 A.W.N. 23; 6 A.L.J. 939, 24 C. 429; 11 Bom. L.R. 18; 1917 P.R. (Cr.) 13; but where the offence charged is a serious one punishable with transportation for life and the High Court sessions will be in a better position than a Presidency Magistrate to pass an adequate sentence on conviction and a trial by jury cannot be considered unreasonable, the High Court held that an overriding reason had been made out to have the case committed to the High Court session for trial and directed the case which is triable by a Presidency Magistrate according to Sch. II of the Code to be committed to the Sessions, 31 Bom. L.R. 634, following 42 M. 83; 3 Ran. 42, dissenting from 41 A. 451 and distinguishing 4 Bom. L.R. 35 and 24 C. 429 referring to 42 B. 172 and 23 Bom. L.R. 293. This section empowers a Magistrate in any trial at any stage when he makes up his mind to commit, to stop further proceedings of the trial before him and commit the accused under the provisions of Chapter XVIII. This section applies only to those inquiries or trials which have been started by the Magistrate with the intention of concluding them himself and then at a later stage he is satisfied that his intention was inappropriate and the case was one which ought to be committed to the Court of Sessions, and cannot be made use of to shorten inquiries under Chapter (XVIII) 6 L.B.R. 129 (F.B.)—13 Cr. L.J. 877 (2)=17 Ind. Cas. 813 (2) compare this section with S. 441, infra. Both these sections must be read together. This section empowers the Magistrate at any stage of the trial of a warrant case to commit the accused to the Court of Sessions instead of himself completing the inquiry. The new charge which will have to be drawn up will have the effect of cancelling any previous charge framed against the accused but they can only be with respect to the subject-matter of the new charge. So far as the subject-matter is concerned the previous proceeding may be regarded as preliminary to commitment, 20 Cr. L.J. 520=85 Ind. Cas. 360. The fact that some of the defence witnesses were summoned and some were examined before he made up his mind will not prevent him from stopping further proceedings, 36 M. 321, where 36 C. 43 is not followed and 26 A. 177 and 20 A. 264 are followed; 12 Bom. L.R. 201. Where, after a Magistrate has made up his mind to commit a case to the Sessions but before the case for the prosecution has absolutely closed, one witness for the prosecution yet remaining to be examined, the defence applied for the cross-examination of the witness, it was held they were entitled to this indulgence of cross-examination, 16 C.L.J. 45=13 Cr. L.J. 633=16 Ind. Cas. 338 where 36 C. 43 is explained; see 51 C. 412, where it was held that the Magistrate has no discretion in the matter, if the application is made to him for cross examination before a charge is framed and before he had made up his mind to commit the accused.

Before signing judgment.—This section extends the period when a commitment may be made, namely, any time before the pronouncement of the judgment, 25 Cr. L.J. 133 at 150=83 Ind. Cas. 708 but a Magistrate cannot treat the offence complained of as minor offences up to the stage of judgment and then turn round and commit the accused to the Court of Session on graver charges and thus deprive the accused of the rights conferred on him by chapter XVIII, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 314=15 Cr. L. J. 366; 6 L.B.R. 129 (F.B.)=13 Cr. L. J. 877=17 Ind. Cas. 813 (2). Signing the judgment takes place after pronouncing the same in open Court and it actually completes the trial which ends in an acquittal or conviction. Therefore action under this section, if desired, should be taken before the signing of the judgment. The Magistrate has no discretion but is bound to allow the cross examination, 51 C. 442.

At any stage.—These words give very wide powers to the Magistrate. A Magistrate is well within his powers to alter the charge and when the altered charge is not cognizable by him, to commit the accused to the Court of Session. A Magistrate of the second class to whom a complaint of attempt at rape, S. 376 and S. 511, I.P.O., was made, took cognizance of the offence and after hearing the prosecution evidence framed a charge against the accused under S. 354, I.P.O., took the plea of the accused, allowed the prosecution witnesses to be cross-examined, heard the evidence for the defence under chapter XXI (warrant case chapter) and reserved judgment, but the Magistrate instead of delivering judgment framed a charge under Ss. 376 and 511, I.P.C. and committed the accused to the Court of Session, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was legal, 6 L.B.R. 129 (F.B.)=13 Cr. L. J. 877 (2)=17 Ind. Cas. 813 (2). See also 3 Cr. L. Rev. 314=15 Cr. L. J. 366=23 Ind. Cas. 734 where 6 L.B.R. 129 is followed, see also 30 L.W. 646 where the above decisions were approved. Even after summoning defence witnesses and examining them, the Magistrate can under this section commit the accused, 36 M. 321; Ratanlal, 973.

Which ought to be tried by the Court of Session.—S. 28 supra enables any offence under the I.P.C. to be tried by a Court of Session subject to the provisions of the Code. This Chapter deals with general provisions as to inquiries and trials and this section is very wide in its terms and it leaves to the discretion of the Magistrate which cases he should commit to the Sessions Court but the discretion should be exercised judicially and not capriciously. The provisions of S. 234, supra do not override the provisions of this section. The former provides the framing of the charge and it occurs in the Chapter dealing with the procedure to be followed after charge. In this section the language is wide and the discretion given cannot be limited in such cases, except when the Magistrate cannot adequately punish. There may be other good reasons which may in the exercise of a sound and wise discretion justify a committal, and in such cases, the discretion ought not to be lightly interfered with. For example in the investigation of a complaint which forms the subject of two distinct charges arising out of the same transaction one of which is a summons case, and the other a warrant case, a committal to the Court of Session is not improper especially as this section makes no distinction between a warrant case and a summons case, 21 Cr. L. J. 791=53 Ind. Cas. 519 where 11 Bom. L.R. 18=9 Cr. L. J. 163=1 Ind. Cas. 104; 13 Cr. L. J. 664=23 Ind. Cas. 992; 42 M. 83 are referred to and 1903 A.W.N., 23=3 A.L.J. 14=3 Cr. L. J. 84 is distinguished. The words "ought to be tried" occurring in this section must be read with S. 251, supra, and therefore a case which ought to be tried by a Court of Session is one which the Magistrate is not competent to try or adequately punish, 4 Bom. L.R. 83=20 Cr. L. J. 97=48 Ind. Cas. 977; 23 C. 429. This section empowers a Magistrate, after a charge has been drawn up, to stop further proceedings and commit the accused for trial, 3 C. 433, 33 M. 321 at 324, but in such a case the procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII must be followed, and such a course can be adopted only before signing the judgment. The words "stop further proceedings" have been omitted now to bring the section in conformity with S. 208, supra. This section merely extends the period when a commitment may be made to any time before pronouncing the judgment. It enables the Magistrate to commit after recording the defence evidence in whole or in part. But the concluding words of the section that the Magistrate "shall commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained" clearly point to S. 213, supra, and when applicable, to S. 214, supra, and in the absence of any other provision except S. 215, supra, for quashing the commitment, it appears clear that the commitment made under this section falls nevertheless within Ss. 213 and 214, supra, and where there is any question, of quashing, under S. 215 supra, 26 Cr. L.J. 148=83 Ind. Cas. 708. When so committing, the new charge which will have to be drawn up will have the effect of cancelling the previous charge. But this is only so in respect of the subject-matter of the charge and the previous proceeding before him must be regarded as preliminary to commitment, 26 Cr. L.J. 520=85 Ind. Cas. 360. A Magistrate acts without jurisdiction in trying a case prima facie triable by the Sessions Court and then convicting the accused and sentencing him for a minor offence, Ratanlal 382; 1 C.L.R. 141; 10 C. 85; 9 W.R. (Cr.) 5.

Commit the accused.—This section confers a special power to commit the accused, when it appears to the Magistrate that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session. See Ss. 207 and 254, supra. A case which ought to be tried by the Court of Session is one which the Magistrate is not competent to try or one which he could not adequately punish, 4 Bom. L.R. 85. The decision of the Magistrate to try the case himself is not final, as under this section it is open to him at any stage of the case before signing judgment to commit the accused to the Court of Session. The fact that there is congestion of work in the High Court is no ground to decline to commit the case to the High Court Session.

Under the provisions hereinbefore contained.—This section only authorises the Magistrate to commit the accused for trial by the Court of Session "under the provisions hereinbefore contained", which means after observing the procedure prescribed in Chapter XVIII. The section is not intended to enable the Magistrate to deprive the accused of any of the rights conferred by Chapter XVIII though when an order has been made under this section proceedings under Chapter XVIII need not necessarily be commenced de novo, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 314, where 13 Cr. L.J. 877=17 Ind. Cas. 813 is followed. This expression must relate to those provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code which define the procedure to be adopted in inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session. It cannot be disputed that in all ordinary circumstances the procedure which a Presidency Magistrate follows in the trial, of a criminal case is not identical with that laid down in Chapter XVIII for the conduct of a preliminary inquiry and this section in no way overrides and in no way dispenses with the obligation of following the procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII, where the Legislature has laid down provisions for the procedure before commitment obviously and rightly intended for the benefit of the accused and therefore an omission to read over the depositions of the witnesses is not a mere formal omission as the accused by such omission is deprived of the valuable right to contradict the witnesses during the sessions trial. In such a case the procedure adopted will be bad irrespective of any consideration of prejudice to the accused 30 L.W. 646 following, 13 Cr. L.J. 877=17 Ind. Cas. 813 and 3 Cr. L. Rev. 314=15 Cr. L.J. 366=23 Ind. Cas. 734. The words 'commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained' clearly point to S. 213 supra and when applicable to S. 214, supra, and in the absence of any other provision except S. 215, supra, for quashing commitment, it appears clear that the Commitment made under this section falls none the less within the purview of Ss. 213 and 214, supra and where there is any question of quashing the commitment under S. 215, supra, 26 Cr. L.J. 148 at 150=83 Ind. Cas. 703.

348. (1) Whoever, having been convicted of an offence punishable upwards, shall if the Magistrate before whom the case is pending is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused, be committed to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be, at 150=83 Ind. Cas. 708 but a Magistrate cannot treat the offence complained of as minor offences up to the stage of judgment and then turn round and commit the accused to the Court of Session on graver charges and thus deprive the accused of the rights conferred on him by chapter XVIII, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 314=15 Cr. L.J. 366; 6 L.B.R. 129 (F.B.)=13 Cr. L.J. 877=17 Ind. Cas. 813 (2). Signing the judgment takes place after pronouncing the same in open Court and it actually completes the trial which ends in an acquittal or conviction. Therefore action under this section, if desired, should be taken before the signing of the judgment. The Magistrate has no discretion but is bound to allow the cross examination, 51 C. 442

At any stage.—These words give very wide powers to the Magistrate. A Magistrate is well within his powers to alter the charge and when the altered charge is not cognizable by him, to commit the accused to the Court of Session. A Magistrate of the second class to whom a complaint of attempt at rape, S. 376 and S. 511, I.P.C., was made, took cognizance of the offence and after hearing the prosecution evidence framed a charge against the accused under S. 354, I.P.C., took the plea of the accused, allowed the prosecution witnesses to be cross-examined, heard the evidence for the defence under chapter XXI (warrant case chapter) and reserved judgment, but the Magistrate instead of delivering judgment framed a charge under Ss. 376 and 511, I.P.C. and committed the accused to the Court of Session, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was legal, 6 L.B.R. 129 (F.B.)=13 Cr. L.J. 877 (2)=17 Ind. Cas. 813 (2). See also 3 Cr. L. Rev. 314=15 Cr. L.J. 366=23 Ind. Cas. 734 where 6 L.B.R. 129 is followed, see also 30 L.W. 646 where the above decisions were approved. Even after summoning defence witnesses and examining them, the Magistrate can under this section commit the accused, 36 M. 321; Ratanlal, 975.

Which ought to be tried by the Court of Session.—S. 23 supra enables any offence under the I.P.C. to be tried by a Court of Session subject to the provisions of the Code. This Chapter deals with general provisions as to inquiries and trials and this section is very wide in its terms and it leaves to the discretion of the Magistrate which cases he should commit to the Sessions Court but the discretion should be exercised judicially and not capriciously. The provisions of S. 254, supra do not override the provisions of this section. The former provides the framing of the charge and it occurs in the Chapter dealing with the procedure to be followed after charge. In this section the language is wide and the discretion given cannot be limited in such cases, except when the Magistrate cannot adequately punish. There may be other good reasons which may in the exercise of a sound and wise discretion justify a committal, and in such cases, the discretion ought not to be lightly interfered with. For example in the investigation of a complaint which forms the subject of two distinct charges arising out of the same transaction one of which is a summons case, and the other a warrant case, a committal to the Court of Session is not improper especially as this section makes no distinction between a warrant case and a summons case, 21 Cr. L.J. 791=58 Ind. Cas. 519 where 11 Bom. L.R. 18=9 Cr. L.J. 163=1 Ind. Cas. 104; 15 Cr. L.J. 664=25 Ind. Cas. 992; 42 M. 83 are referred to and 1903 A.W.N. 23=3 A.L.J. 14=3 Cr. L.J. 94 is distinguished. The words "ought to be tried" occurring in this section must be read with S. 254, supra, and therefore a case which ought to be tried by a Court of Session is one which the Magistrate is not competent to try or adequately punish, 4 Bom. L.R. 85=20 Cr. L.J. 97=48 Ind. Cas. 977; 24 C. 429. This section empowers a Magistrate, after a charge has been drawn up, to stop further proceedings and commit the accused for trial, 3 C. 433; 30 M. 321 at 324, but in such a case the procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII must be followed, and such a course can be adopted only before signing the judgment. The words "stop further proceedings" have been omitted now to bring the section in conformity with S. 203, supra. This section merely extends the period when a commitment may be made to any time before pronouncing the judgment. It enables the Magistrate to commit after recording the defence evidence in whole or in part. But the concluding words of the section that the Magistrate "shall commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained" clearly point to S. 213, supra, and when applicable, to S. 214, supra, and in the absence of any other provision except S. 215, supra, for quashing the commitment, it appears clear that the commitment made under this section falls never-unless the Magistrate is competent to try the case and is of opinion that he can himself pass an adequate sentence if the accused is convicted :

Provided that, if any Magistrate in the district has been invested with powers under section 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Court of Session.

(2) When any person is committed to the Court of Session or High Court under sub-section (1), any other person accused jointly with him in the same inquiry, or trial shall be similarly committed, unless the Magistrate discharges such other person under section 209.

Amendment.—In sub-section (1) the words "if the Magistrate before whom the case is pending, etc.," have been added. For the words "District Magistrate" the words "any Magistrate in the district" have been substituted. Sub-section (2) is new.

Chapter XII, I.P.C. (Ss. 230—264A) deals with offences relating to coins and Government stamps and Chapter XVIII (Ss. 378-463) deals with offences against property.

Scope of the section—This section does not permit a Magistrate to find the accused guilty and then commit him to the Sessions. The effect of the conviction would seem to bar a trial by the Court of Session under S. 403, infra. It is not easy to deal with cases under this section. The Magistrate is bound to commit if there has been a previous conviction of one of the offences described unless he can adequately punish ; consequently he must either as a preliminary matter or at any rate before framing a charge determine whether there has been a previous conviction ; having decided that, he will have to consider whether he could pass a sufficiently severe sentence. If he thinks they do so permit, he may either commit the accused or try himself. If they do not so permit but the evidence does not warrant a discharge, he must frame a charge under S. 210, supra and commit him for trial under Chapter XVIII, 38 M. 552 at 553. The combined effect of this and S. 350 infra, is that the Magistrate can rely on the evidence already on record but he cannot proceed both to recommence the inquiry and also rely on the evidence already taken, 28 Cr. L.J. 302=100 Ind. Cas. 332.

Is again accused of any offence, etc—Under this section if the Magistrate makes up his mind to commit, he should not record a finding as to the accused's guilt. Such a course is wrong and ultra vires, 17 Cr. L.J. 201=34 Ind. Cas. 313.

Unless the Magistrate is competent to try and pass adequate sentence.—The addition of the words "competent to try the case" removes all doubt that existed before. If the Magistrate is competent to try the offence and he could adequately punish, he is not bound to commit. This is in accordance with the view expressed by the Bombay High Court. The last portion of the section and the proviso were added in the Code of 1898. The District Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under the proviso to this section should himself record evidence. He cannot act on the evidence already recorded before the case was transferred to him under this section. A District Magistrate cannot be regarded as a Court of Session to whom cases should be committed, nor can a case be sent up to him under S. 349, infra, 7 C.W.N. 457. If the District Magistrate considers that the case ought to be committed he must himself do so and should not send back the case to the Magistrate with a direction to commit, 9 M. 377 ; 10 B. 196. See 45 M. 846.

Sub-section (2).—This new sub-section provides that when any person is committed to the Court of Session or High Court under this section, another person accused jointly with him whom the Magistrate believes to be guilty, shall be similarly committed, thus according to all accused identical treatment.

349. (1) Whenever a Magistrate of the second or third class having jurisdiction, is of opinion, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution and the accused, that the accused is guilty, and that he ought to receive a punishment different in kind from, or more severe than, that which such Magistrate is empowered to inflict, or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 100, he may record the opinion and submit his proceedings, and forward the accused, to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

(1A) When more accused than one are being tried together and the Magistrate considers it necessary to proceed under sub-section (1) in regard to any of such accused, he shall forward all the accused who are in his opinion guilty to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties and recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law.

Provided that he shall not inflict a punishment more severe than he is empowered to inflict under sections 32 and 33.

Amendment.—Sub-section (1A) has been newly added.

Scope of the section.—It is a general rule that only an authority who has heard the evidence is competent to decide the guilt or innocence of an accused person. Any exception to this rule such as is contained in this section should be strictly construed, 24 Cr. L.J. 733=74 Ind. Cas. 66. Under this section Magistrates of the second or third class alone can act. A first class Magistrate cannot refer under this section as he has ample powers to dispose of the case himself, 7 A. 414 (F.B.). This section confers special powers, or, what may be called, a special jurisdiction and confers it only on District and Sub-divisional Magistrates. Every case which is referred to under this section must be disposed of by a Magistrate who has that special jurisdiction, 38 B. 719 at 723. Under this section the trying Magistrate can only refer the case to the District or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate. When Nagpur City had not been declared a sub-division of the Nagpur district with reference to S. 4 (1) (u), S. 8 and S. 14, supra, the City Magistrate of Nagpur cannot be described as a Sub-divisional Magistrate for purposes of reference, under this section, by second and third class Magistrates in that city, and any order passed on such illegal reference by the city Magistrate is void and without jurisdiction, 23 Cr. L.J. 433=101 Ind. Cas. 663. The provisions of this section are subject to the express provisions of S. 318, supra, and the case of an old offender ought not to be referred to the superior Magistrate under this section, but ought to be committed to the Court of Session under S. 318, supra, Weir II, 423. It is in the discretion of a subordinate Magistrate trying a case to send up the case to the superior Magistrate under this section. The order of a superior Magistrate to a subordinate Magistrate to send up the case under this section is ultra vires, Weir II, 427, nor can a superior Magistrate to whom a case has been referred under this section return the case to the subordinate Magistrate directing him to commit the accused, but he should himself dispose of the case, 9 M. 377; 45 M. 816; 13 Cr. L.J. 16=13 Ind. Cas. 110. Nor can the superior Magistrate send the case to another Magistrate for disposal, 36 M. 470; 4 M. 233; Weir II, 424; 6 M.H.C.R. (Appx.) 2.

Sub-section (1).—A subordinate Magistrate having taken all the evidence in the case cannot send up the case to the District Magistrate under this section unless he is of opinion that the accused is guilty and ought to receive a punishment different in kind from, or more severe than he is empowered to inflict or that security ought to be taken from him, under S 106, supra, and when a case is referred to the District Magistrate, not on the grounds referred to in this section, and the District Magistrate acting on the evidence recorded by the subordinate Magistrate passes a judgment, it was held that the conviction by the District Magistrate cannot stand as neither this section nor S. 250, infra, applied to the case, 12 A. 66. The referring Magistrate must record his opinion that the accused is guilty but he cannot convict the accused and send up the case. The recording of the conviction will not have the legal effect of prohibiting the superior Magistrate from dealing with the case under this section or as constituting a bar to further trial under S. 403, infra. In effect it is a mere surplusage which reiterates the opinion of the Magistrate that the accused is guilty of a particular offence. There is no legal objection, to the conviction by the referring Magistrate being treated as a legal surplusage and a nullity, so that the superior Magistrate can proceed with the case without reference to the High Court to have the conviction had, formally quashed, 52 B. 456 where Ratanlal 387 is referred to. A superior Magistrate is not precluded from acting on the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate or from adopting his opinion, Weir II, 428 and 429. A case cannot be referred under this section after conviction by the subordinate Magistrate for the purpose of taking security from the accused under S 106, supra, 21 C. 622. The Magistrate is bound to refer the whole case to the superior Magistrate who is to pass such judgment or order as he thinks fit, 35 C. 1093; 11 Cr. L.J. 162=4 Ind Cas 1057; 21 C. 622. A superior Magistrate cannot direct a Subordinate Magistrate to send up a case under this section. It is a matter within the discretion of the Subordinate Magistrate whether he will send up a case or not, Weir II, 427, where in a joint trial by Sub-Magistrate of three accused, one of them was a juvenile offender of 15 years, the Magistrate while convicting the two adult accused, sent up the case of the juvenile offender alone to the Sub divisional Magistrate, it was held that the procedure adopted was clearly illegal as the case of all the three accused ought to have been sent up. The conviction of the two adult accused was therefore set aside by the High Court, 29 Cr. L.J. 624=109 Ind Cas. 816. But a superior Magistrate can send back the case on the ground that there ought to have been no reference at all, or that the reference is not proper on account of defective inquiry by the subordinate Magistrate. When a case is sent up to a Sub-divisional Magistrate, he cannot transfer it to a first class Magistrate and a committal by the first class Magistrate is illegal and without jurisdiction as this section confers such power on the District Magistrate and Sub-divisional Magistrate and on no others, 33 B. 719. The procedure prescribed in this section is not suited to a case tried summarily. So a Bench of Magistrates is not authorised to refer a case under this section for enhanced punishment, 8 Cr. L.J. 475=4 L.B.R. 282, followed in 17 Cr. L.J. 201=34 Ind. Cas. 313.

Sub-section (1A).—This was newly added to accord identical treatment to all the accused concerned. The Magistrate is not entitled now to submit the case of some of the accused only; he is to do so with regard to all the accused. See 26 Cr L.J. 1363=89 Ind. Cas. 451; 1927 M.W.N 72 The amendment is in accordance with the suggestion made in Weir II, 428 Under this sub-section only the case of those accused who were in the opinion of the Magistrate guilty, could be forwarded to the superior Magistrate. If the Magistrate finds one of the accused only guilty he cannot send up the case of all the accused, 24 A.L.J. 80=26 Cr. L.J. 1630=90 Ind. Cas 926.

Sub-section (2).—It is optional with the superior Magistrate to examine the parties or their witnesses who had already been examined. Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to hold a trial de novo and the recent amendment to S. 350 (2) only makes the position clearer, 26 Cr. L.J. 1363=89 Ind Cas. 451. He may call for and take any further evidence. It is not obligatory on the superior Magistrate to hear vakils at all and the section leaves it entirely to the discretion of the Magistrate to take further evidence or not.

But the discretion both as regards argument, and taking further evidence, should be exercised in a fair and impartial manner and when this is not done, the High Court will not hesitate to interfere in the interests of justice, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 185. When once a case has been referred to the superior Magistrate by the subordinate Magistrate, the superior Magistrate is bound to dispose of the case himself, and cannot send back the case to the subordinate Magistrate for disposal, 45 M. 846. The provision in this sub-section that the Magistrate to whom the case is referred may pass such order as he thinks fit means when taken in conjunction with the words immediately preceding it, viz., "judgment and sentence", that he may pass such final order disposing of the case as he may think fit, 36 M. 470. A Magistrate to whom a case is submitted has no power to send it back. He must dispose of it himself by acquitting or convicting and sentencing the accused or committing him for trial. The order referred to in this sub-section is, as was held in 4 B. 240 ejusdem generis with the words "judgment" and "sentence" which precede it and does not include an order returning the case, 26 A. 344 at 345; 43 M. 845; 38 B. 719; 9 M. 377. Under this section the superior Magistrate should find the accused guilty or not and write a judgment as required by S. 367, infra, 11 L.W. 398 = (1920) M.W.N. 120 = 21 Cr. L.J. 52 = 34 Ind. Cas. 494. The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may commit the accused to the Court of Session, 1 M. 239 (F.B.); 4 B. 240 (F.B.) Ratanlal 143. The accused is entitled to be present before the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate when he passes his final order in the case, 7 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 31 and this is why sub-section (1) says that the accused is to be forwarded to the superior Magistrate. Reference under this section by a Magistrate not empowered to deal with the case does not give jurisdiction to a superior Magistrate to try the accused for the offence disclosed by the facts, but the superior Magistrate should treat the whole proceeding as void under S. 530, infra. See 1 Bom. L.R. 27 where it was held that a conviction of the accused by the District Magistrate, for an offence under S. 409, I.P.C., was void when the second class Magistrate found the accused guilty of an offence under S. 460, I.P.C., when submitting the case to him. But if the offence is one which the inferior Magistrate could have committed to the Court of Session, the superior Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, commit the case to the Court of Session, 13 C. 305. The Superior Magistrate cannot return the case to the inferior Magistrate with a direction to commit the accused, 10 B. 195.

350. (1) Whenever any Magistrate, after having heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence in an inquiry or a trial, ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein, and is succeeded by another Magistrate who has and who exercises such jurisdiction, the Magistrate so succeeding may act on the evidence so recorded by his predecessor, or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly, recorded by himself; or he may re-summon the witnesses and re-commence the inquiry or trial:

(a) in any trial the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard;

(b) the High Court or, in cases tried by Magistrates subordinate to the District Magistrate, the District Magistrate may, whether there be an appeal or not, set aside any conviction passed on evidence not wholly recorded by the Magistrate before whom the conviction was held, if such Court or District Magistrate is of opinion that the accused has been materially prejudiced thereby, and may order a new inquiry or trial.

(2) Nothing in this section applies to cases in which proceedings have been stayed under section 346 or in which proceedings have been submitted to a superior Magistrate under section 349.

(3) When a case is transferred under the provisions of this Code from one Magistrate to another, the former shall be deemed to cease to exercise jurisdiction therein, and to be succeeded by the latter within the meaning of sub-section (1).

Amendment.—In sub-section (2) the words "or in which proceedings have been submitted to a superior Magistrate under S. 349" have been newly added. Sub-section (3) has been newly added to remove difference of opinion as to the position when cases are transferred from one Magistrate to another, by providing that the Magistrate from whose file the case is transferred shall be deemed to cease to exercise jurisdiction and to be succeeded by the new Magistrate within the meaning of sub-section (1).

Scope of the section.—The principle of law clearly is that the Judicial Officer who hears the evidence shall pronounce judgment as to the innocence or guilt of the accused. 23 C. 194; 23 W R (Cr.) 59. Owing to certain circumstances in this country, this is often found to be impossible to carry out. Hence the necessity for this section. Once the principle is departed from, it does not matter how often you depart from it, 47 M. 243 at 243; 19 Cr. L J. 657=45 Ind. Cas. 993. This section confers a right on the accused to demand rehearing and does not cast a duty on the succeeding Magistrate to ask the accused if the witnesses examined by the first Magistrate should be resummoned and reheard 2 Cr. L. Rev 20=14 Cr. L J. 175=19 Ind. Cas. 175. This section appears to be perfectly clear as to what the duties of a Magistrate are, to whom a case which has been heard in part by another Magistrate has been transferred. Under sub-section (3) the Magistrate is given a discretion to resummon the witnesses and to re-commence the inquiry or trial. If however he does not do so suo motu he is bound to do so if the accused asks for it under proviso (a) to this section. Therefore whether the second Magistrate acts suo motu or whether the accused demands a de novo trial, it is clear that the second Magistrate has to resummon the witnesses and to re-hear them. The word "re-hear" is not equivalent to "hear further," 27 Cr. L.J. 332=92 Ind. Cas. 733. The privilege under this section is that of the accused person and not that of the complainant, 27 Cr. L.J. 659=94 Ind. Cas. 707. The object of the section seems to be to leave it to the discretion of the Magistrate, to either act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or to hear it over again himself, provided the accused does not claim a de novo trial, 38 M. 535, 2 L.W. 1214=17 Cr. L J. 1=32 Ind. Cas. 129. The general rule is that guilt or innocence of the accused must be decided by the Judge who has heard all the evidence, 23 C 194; 20 W.R. (Cr.) 59; 3 Lah. 115. But this section introduces an exception to the general rule which should not receive a more extended interpretation than its actual words clearly justify 19 Cr. L.J 657=45 Ind. Cas. 993. Both the letter and the spirit of the law require that all criminal cases should be decided by Magistrates who heard the evidence and the only exception to the rule being that contained in this section, 20 Cr. L J. 336=50 Ind Cas 672. A liberal construction should be placed on the provisions of this section, 39 C. 731; 40 A. 307; 19 Cr. L.J 703=46 Ind. Cas 299. Evidence recorded by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the case cannot be legally considered by the Magistrate to whom the case was ultimately transferred for trial and a conviction based partly on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who had no jurisdiction, and partly on the evidence legally recorded by the Magistrate having jurisdiction, is illegal and void, 83 C. 65. This section is applicable only to Magistrates. A Sessions Judge is not competent to try a case on the evidence partly recorded by his predecessor, by virtue of this section, 26 B. 50; 3 M. 112; 8 C.L.J. 59 (F.B.)=8 Cr. L.J. 121 followed in 28 Cr. L.J. 402-401 Ind. Cas. 178; 26 B. 50; 21 W.R. (Cr.) 47; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 59; 21 W.R. (Cr.) 47; 1890 P.R. (Cr.) 1; 35 A. 63. This section is applicable to a case which has been transferred from the file of one Magistrate to another and is not restricted to cases in which the Magistrates succeed each other in their offices, 20 Cr. L.J. 41-49 Ind. Cas. 681, where 39 C. 781; 40 A. 307; 32 M. 218; 35 C. 457 are referred to. The provisions of this section are applicable to security proceedings under Chapter VII of the Code, 43 M. 511; 6 Lah. 176; 4 C.L.R. 452; 23 W.R. (Cr.) 62; 24 W.R. (Cr.) 52; 25 Cr. L.J. 1380-83 Ind. Cas. 349, and also to proceedings under Chapter XII, "Disputes as regards immoveable property," 37 C. 812; 4 C.W.N. 420-13 C.W.N. 420-9 Cr. L.J. 378. This section applies to summons cases also, and therefore a person against whom proceedings are taken under S. 107, supra, is entitled to demand a de novo inquiry when the Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction and is succeeded by another, 25 Cr. L.J. 1380-83 Ind. Cas. 340. After commencing a de novo inquiry a Magistrate is not entitled to refer the proceedings for inquiry or dismiss the complaint under S. 203 supra, 9 M. 282; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 28; 1903 P.R. (Cr.) 13-1903 P.L.R. 175. This section is intended to provide for a case where an inquiry or trial has been commenced before one incumbent of a particular magisterial post, and that officer ceases to exercise jurisdiction in that post and is succeeded by another officer, 12 A. 66 at 68. Where one Magistrate heard the prosecution evidence, a second heard the defence evidence and a third went through the evidence and delivered judgment, it was held that this section was not confined to two Magistrates and the judgment, delivered by the third Magistrate was legal, as the section applied every time a succeeding Magistrate begins to exercise jurisdiction, i.e., every time another Magistrate takes cognizance of the matter which has been begun or continued by his predecessor, 47 M. 245. Where on the transfer of a Magistrate a case pending before him was taken up by another Magistrate the trial being started de novo, and subsequently the first Magistrate who originally started the trial was re-transferred it was held, that this section gave no jurisdiction to such Magistrate on re-transfer to proceed with the trial from the point where he had left it, 53 Ind. Cas. 820; 20 Cr. L.J. 638-52 Ind. Cas. 398 followed in 47 M.L.J. 926-22 L.W. 847-26 Cr. L.J. 510-85 Ind. Cas. 234. See also 24 L.W. 640-38 M.L.T. 137-28 Cr. L.J. 23-99 Ind. Cas. 55. Similarly where after a transfer of a Magistrate who had heard and recorded the evidence in the case, the succeeding Magistrate takes cognizance and commences a de novo inquiry, it is not competent to the District Magistrate to transfer the case to the file of the first Magistrate to enable him to continue the case from the point where he left it prior to his transfer, 24 L.W. 640. This section does not apply to cases tried by Benches of Magistrates as there is no provision of law authorising a change of the constitution of Benches of Magistrates and it is only the Magistrates who have heard the whole evidence who can decide the case, 18 Cr. L.J. 96-37 Ind. Cas. 160 where 23 C. 194; 20 C. 870 are referred to 2 Lah. 237; 12 C. 558; 18 M. 394; 21 M. 870, 41 A. 116; 43 B. 400; 18 C.W.N. 394; 21 M. 870. Where one Magistrate records a statement from an accused person under S. 342, supra, in an inquiry which results in a commitment by his successor, such statement is admissible at the Sessions trial, 7 Lah. 70 where 31 M. 40 is followed.

Sub-section (1).—This sub-section gives a Magistrate jurisdiction to decide a case on the evidence recorded by his predecessor but not to deliver a judgment written by his predecessor, 50 C. 664; 27 Cr. L.J. 406-93 Ind. Cas. 70; 23 C. 194; 20 C. 870; 12 C. 558; 18 M. 394; ; 21 M. 246 but in 40 M. 108, it was held that when a Magistrate, who tried a case wrote a judgment dated and signed the same and fixed a date for pronouncing judgment, was transferred meanwhile and is succeeded by another Magistrate, the latter is not bound to deliver his predecessor's written judgment. He has a discretion to proceed de novo and when no new trial is demanded he may in his discretion pronounce the predecessor's judgment. This sub-section leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate either to act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or to hear it over again for himself, 25 Cr. L.J. 1075-81 Ind. Cas. 899. The discretion is somewhat restricted by proviso (a). Proviso (b) gives the superior Courts special powers of interference. Subject to the proviso, the discretion is absolute. It is not clear why this should involve a cancellation of the charge or the transformation of the proceedings from "trial, back into an inquiry." Where proceedings are recommenced from the inquiry stage, they are recommenced as an inquiry, and if they had already developed into a trial stage before the change of Magistrates, they are recommenced as a trial, i.e., a proceeding in which a charge has been framed. The second Magistrate cannot ignore the charge already framed by his predecessor, and his position is practically the same as that of his predecessor would have been, if after framing a charge he had heard further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and on a consideration thereof become satisfied that the charge was not well-founded. It has been held that a recommencement of the inquiry under this section did not cover a reference to the police under S. 202, infra. A discharge under the circumstances is to be viewed as an acquittal and no further inquiry could be had under S. 426, infra, 38 M. 585. See also 2 L.W. 1244=17 Cr. L.J. 1=32 Ind. Cas. 123. A de novo trial means a new trial from the very beginning of the case and not merely recalling the prosecution witnesses and giving leave to the accused's Vakil to cross-examine those witnesses. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. The object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a course is not in accordance with the provisions of this section. Even if no objection is taken, the Calcutta High Court (12 C.W.N. 138) has held that the trial is still vitiated, 49 M.L.J. 423 at 424=(1925) M.W.N. 652=26 Cr. L.J. 1596=90 Ind. Cas. 668. See also 27 Cr. L.J. 659=94 Ind. Cas. 707. This sub-section provides for re-summoning and re-hearing witnesses, and re-commencement of the inquiry or trial by the Magistrate who succeeds after his predecessor had already heard the evidence. The section is silent on the question whether or not on such re-hearing any charge, that may have already been framed after the first hearing, must subsist. If it is considered that the charge already framed is wiped out, this assumption involves that the Legislature has also overlooked the point that the succeeding Magistrate ought in that case to be empowered to frame a fresh charge or to adopt the charge already framed, 38 M 585 at 598; 7 Cr. L. Rev. 331. This section enables the succeeding Magistrate to draw up an order of the committal of the accused upon the evidence recorded by his predecessor. In such cases no fresh evidence need be recorded nor is he bound to take the statement of the accused, 31 M 40. Proceedings in a warrant-case before a charge is framed are merely an inquiry and not a trial and at that stage the Magistrate is not bound to adopt the procedure laid down by this sub-section, 46 M. 719 following 32 M 220 (F.B.) 38 M. 585; 43 M. 511 (F.B.). The word "trial" governs the whole of the proceedings in a warrant case, 3 Lah. 115; 6 Lah 176.

Proviso (a).—The words are "demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and reheard." It is not necessary to have all the witnesses re-summoned and re-heard. The accused has an option to ask some of the witnesses only to be re-summoned and re-heard. The provisions herein contained apply to a case which is remanded, for taking further evidence, to a trial Court and the Magistrate who had originally tried the case had been transferred, and a new Magistrate had taken his place. The new Magistrate is bound to accede to the demand of the accused, to have a de novo trial even in a case where it is sent back not for calling further prosecution evidence but simply for calling further evidence for the defence, 27 Cr. L.J. 1125=97 Ind. Cas 643 following 25 C. 863. This proviso applies at a time when the succeeding Magistrate begins to exercise his jurisdiction, that is every time another Magistrate takes cognizance of a matter which had been begun or continued by his predecessor, 47 M 245. This proviso applies only to trials. An inquiry under Chapter XVIII of the Code, a register case or a preliminary inquiry into an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session, is not a trial within the meaning of this proviso. Even if such a case is treated as a warrant case the accused will not be prejudiced because by S. 256 infra, as soon as the charge is framed he can recall for cross-examination all the prosecution witnesses whose evidence had been taken and therefore should the proceedings, become a trial he has a right equivalent to that of demanding a de novo inquiry, 32 M. 218 at 219. The demand must be made at the commencement of the trial, which commences when the accused appears or is brought before the Court, 25 C. 863. When a Magistrate refuses to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses, he acts in contravention of this proviso and S. 537, infra cannot cure such an express violation of the provision of law. It is of the utmost importance that the first Court that has to try the case should have an opportunity of observing the manner and demeanour of the witnesses, to form a correct estimate of their evidence and the trial held by a Magistrate upon evidence not recorded by him and upon evidence given by witnesses whose manner and demeanour he had no advantage of observing, must be considered to be a trial held not according to law, 25 C. 863 at 858. The Magistrate is not bound to ask the accused whether he wishes to have the witnesses re-summoned and re-heard. It is for the accused to demand that the witnesses be re-summoned and re-heard. The fact that the accused at the time the charge was framed by the first Magistrate did not ask the witnesses to be recalled and re-heard, does not preclude him from ever exercising his right subsequently under this section, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 20=14 Cr. L.J. 175=19 Ind. Cas. 175, following 1903 P.R. (Cr.) 3; 39 C. 781. The general provisions of S. 33, of the Ind. Ev. Act are in no way affected by this section. Where in a de novo trial, at the desire of the accused, the Court re-summoned all the available witnesses but finding a witness dead allows his evidence, taken at the previous proceedings, to be proved as permitted by law, the procedure adopted is in accordance with law, 8 Lah. 570, where 3 Lah. 115 at 126 is disapproved. Under this proviso the right given to the accused is that of demanding that the prosecution witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard and it rests with the accused to say who shall be re-summoned and re-heard. The complainant however has no such right, the provision being entirely in the interests of the accused person. Fresh evidence might be concocted and blunders in the previous evidence might be explained away by allowing such a right to the complainant. When the accused is exercising his right under this proviso, the complainant cannot claim that he must have a de novo trial from the very beginning. The right which the accused exercises at one time of having certain witnesses re-summoned and re-heard can be waived by him afterwards and the complainant cannot object to this, 20 L.W. 916=26 Cr. L.J. 526=85 Ind. Cas. 356 where 20 Cr. L.J. 638=52 Ind. Cas. 393; 20 Cr. L.J. 820=53 Ind. Cas. 820; 3 Lah. 115 are referred to. See also 29 Cr. L.J. 229=107 Ind. Cas. 160 where it was held that the accused can certainly waive this right.

Proviso (b).—This proviso enables superior Courts to interfere with convictions had before the magistrate. Under the special powers conferred on a District Magistrate by this proviso, he may set aside a conviction by a first-class Magistrate even though an appeal from the conviction lies to the Sessions Court, 9 B. 100; 7 A. 853; 8 M. 18 (F.B.); 12 C. 473 (F.B.).

Sub-section (2).—This sub section expressly lays down that nothing in sub-section (1) applies to cases in which action has been taken under S. 346, supra, so that we are left without guidance in this section as to the procedure to be followed on receipt of a case under S. 346, supra. The correct inference to be drawn from the provisos to sub-section (1) is that in determining whether or not to commit, the Magistrate to whom the case is submitted is entitled to base his decision on evidence already on record and the report sent up to him. No doubt the guilt or innocence of the accused is to be decided by the Magistrate who heard the evidence but a commitment does not involve any such decision but he must be satisfied only that there are sufficient grounds for so committing, 18 Cr. L.J. 35=36 Ind. Cas. 851, where 12 C.W.N. 136 is referred to, but for basing a conviction, the evidence recorded by the Magistrate not competent to try, and who submitted the case under S. 346 supra, cannot be taken into consideration 55 C. 63.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section is new and the purpose for which it is enacted is already noted above. A Magistrate to whom a case is transferred is now entitled to proceed on the evidence already recorded, subject to the right of the accused to demand a re-summoning and re-hearing of the witnesses, which right the accused may waive, if he likes. The Magistrate need not now proceed to record evidence de novo as was held in a number of decisions. See 35 C. 457; 39 C. 781; 13 C.W.N. 420; 32 M. 213; 36 A. 315; 40 A. 337. A de novo trial does not imply the cancellation of the charge previously framed against the accused and consequently an order subsequently passed letting off the accused is an acquittal.

and not one of discharge, 2 L.W. 1244, following 38 M. 585. The combined effect of S. 348 supra, and this sub-section is that the Magistrate may be entitled to rely on the evidence already recorded but he could not proceed to recommence the inquiry and then rely on the evidence previously recorded, 28 Cr. L.J. 302=100 Ind. Cas. 382.

350A. No order or judgment of a Bench of Magistrates shall be invalid by reason only of a change having occurred in the constitution of the Bench in any case in which the Bench by which such order or judgment is passed is duly constituted under sections 15 and 16, and the Magistrates constituting the same have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings.

Changes in constitution of Benches.

This section is new. "This new section gives effect to the law as laid down by the High Courts. Briefly, it provides that the judgment of a Bench shall be valid when the Bench is duly constituted at the time of passing the judgment and the judgment is passed by Magistrates all of whom have heard the proceedings throughout" Sel. Com. Report.

Scope and object of the section.—The object of constituting a Bench is that the Magistrates concerned should individually and collectively give their attention and apply their mind in the hearing of the evidence and determination of the points at issue and arrive at an independent judgment in regard to the merits of the charge against the accused, 29 Cr. L.J. 310 at 311=107 Ind. Cas. 875, see also 52 M. 237. This section is enacted to deal with the case of the absence from a Bench of Magistrates of one member who was sitting at the previous hearing of the case. If the Bench is duly constituted and the Magistrates constituting the same have been present throughout the proceedings, the order or judgment passed cannot be vacated simply because a member or members are absent. This is in accordance with the decision in 38 M. 797; the principle is that the Magistrates who passed order or judgment must have been present throughout and have heard all the evidence recorded. See 38 M. 304; 21 M. 246; Weir II, 18; 18 M. 394; 10 L.W. 386; 20 C. 870; 23 C. 194; 15 A.L.J. 463; 16 A.L.J. 884; 4 Mys. L.J. 293. This section requires that the Bench should be duly constituted under S. 15 supra, and the Magistrates constituting the Bench have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings. Reading this section with S. 15 supra, it would appear that at least two Magistrates ought to be present on the Bench throughout the proceedings to comply with the provisions of the section, 29 Cr. L.J. 310=107 Ind. Cas. 875. Where the hearing of a case commenced with three Magistrates constituting a Bench but only one of the Magistrates was present at all the hearings, sitting sometimes with one Magistrate and sometimes with the others and sometimes with both, the trial was held bad as it contravened the provisions of this section even though the quorum of the Bench consisted of two, 7 Lah. 122, followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 310=107 Ind. Cas. 875; 25 Cr. L.J. 198=76 Ind. Cas. 568. The Legislature has ordained that Benches of Honorary Magistrates shall be constituted for the decision of criminal cases in India. Once these Benches have been constituted, it is the duty of the superior Courts to regulate their proceedings and to prevent the abuses of law. But while exercising this power the superior Courts should keep in mind the fact that in dealing with the members of an unpaid judiciary who, in many cases, have had no judicial learning and little judicial knowledge, it is not practical to set up a standard of compliance with procedure such as would be reasonably expected from stipendiary Magistrates. If too much is expected, the work of such Benches would be often at a stand still. In the trial of a large number of cases slight defect of procedure will be found and if on every occasion that a slight defect in procedure is discovered and their proceedings be set aside, their activities will be seriously hampered and the object of the Legislature in permitting the creation of such Benches will be thwarted, 15 Cr. L.J. 516 at 518=24 Ind. Cas. 604.

351. (1) Any person attending a Criminal Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance, and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned.

(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses re-heard.

The expression 'any person' is very comprehensive and will include a witness or a mere spectator attending Court.

This section is self-contained and complete in itself and is independent of the provisions of Ss. 190 and 191, supra, 10 Cr. L.J. 303=3 Ind. Cas. 568.

Section 351 & S. 190(1) (c) supra, compared.—This section appears in this chapter relating to general provisions as to inquiries and trials whereas S. 190, supra, finds a place in a sub-chapter dealing with conditions requisite for initiation of proceedings. While S. 190, supra, refers to initiation of proceedings, this section deals with a matter arising during the course of proceedings already initiated. Looking at the fundamental character of the subject-matter of the two sections appearing in two distinct parts of the code, it does not appear that the Legislature intended that one should be dependent on the other. On the contrary it would seem that this section deals with a state of things not covered by S. 190. When an inquiry or trial has already commenced in one of the methods specified in S. 190, the power of the presiding officer is no longer fettered by its provisions. He may, independent of them, take action against a person answering the description therein given 'as though he had been arrested or summoned.' These words seem to indicate that, that person proceeded against is to be regarded in the same light and subject to the same disabilities as though he had been arrested or summoned in pursuance of a proceeding under S. 190. The conditions for initiation of proceedings set forth in S. 190, supra, are to be dispensed with in his case which is regarded as having passed the stage contemplated therein. Sub-section (2) of this section indicates that proceedings are to be commenced afresh and no provision either by a special sub-section or by a reference to S. 191, supra, is made for transfer, at the option of the accused, of the case to another Magistrate, 10 Cr. L.J. 303 at 306=3 Ind. Cas. 568.

Sub-section (1).—A Magistrate proceeding under this section against any person who may appear upon the evidence taken by him to be concerned in the offence under investigation cannot be regarded as taking cognizance of the case upon information received or upon his own knowledge or suspicion within S. 190 (1) (c) supra, so as to enable the accused to object to the Magistrate proceeding further with the case, because the materials for initiating proceedings are to be found in the proceedings of the Court of justice which from their publicity stand on the same footing as a complaint. The accused has full information as to the source and particulars of the materials upon which the Magistrate acts. He can if he likes, dispute by argument or counter-evidence, their probative effect, of these materials as far as they affect him injuriously. He is not placed under a disability to combat the effect of the suspicious circumstances operating upon the mind of the Magistrate and influencing his judgment as in the case of a proceeding under 190 (1) (c), supra. This section is self-contained and complete in itself and is independent of the provisions of S. 190 and S. 191, supra, 10 Cr. L.J. 303; at 306, 3 Ind. Cas. 568 where 1 C.W.N. 105 is not followed and 3 C.W.N. 221 is followed. An accused person against whom action is taken under this section has full information as to the materials on which action is taken against him and he is under no disability to combat the suspicions lurking in the mind of the Magistrate and influencing his judgment as in a case where action is taken under S. 190 (1) (c), supra. A Magistrate may under this section join as a co-accused any person attending his court who seems to him to be implicated in the case under trial, 12 Cr. L.J. 399=11 Ind. Cas. 533. But if the person is not in attendance in Court he cannot proceed under this section, 12 Cr. L.J. 92=9 Ind. Cas. 492; see also 10 Cr. L.J. 303=3 Ind. Cas. 558; 24 Cr. L.J. 519=73 Ind. Cas. 55.

Sub-section (2).—The necessity for this sub-section has been aptly put in 14 W. R. (Cr.) 20. A Magistrate is not justified in taking a person without any previous notice or summons from among the audience or attendant witnesses in open Court and place him in the dock to be immediately tried upon a charge which had already been commenced against other prisoners and on which evidence had already been let in. Such a case is not justified and is not covered by the provisions of this section. Injustice of this kind might be done by a proceeding of this kind by practically depriving a person of the opportunities of preparing his defence to which he is rightly entitled under the provisions of the Code and subjects him to be tried on evidence which was taken before he was put in the dock. This sub-section makes it clear that the Magistrate may join as co-accused any person attending his Court who seems to him to be implicated in the case under trial. A Magistrate acting under this section if he has already taken cognizance of the offence on a complaint or a police report is, therefore, not proceeding under S. 190 (1) (c), supra. That, this is the intention of the Legislature is manifest from the fact, that there is no proviso to the section corresponding to that to S. 191, supra, and indeed the contrary interpretation would render it almost nugatory, 12 Cr. L.J. 399=11 Ind. Cas. 533.

352. The place in which any Criminal Court is held for the purpose of inquiring into or trying any offence shall be deemed an open Court, to which the public generally may have access, so far as the same can conveniently contain them:

Provided that the presiding Judge or Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, order at any stage of any inquiry into, or trial of, any particular case, that the public generally, or any particular person, shall not have access to, or be or remain in, the room or building used by the Court.

At Common Law a trial on indictment or criminal information must be in a public Court, with doors open. In dealing with certain classes of criminal trials the presiding Judges, not infrequently, order women and young persons to leave the Court and there is undoubted power to exclude or eject persons who disturb the proceedings. All proceedings under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 must be held in camera and S. 114 of the Children Act, 1908. In addition to and without prejudice to any power which the Court may possess, to hear proceedings in camera, the Court may, where a person who, in the opinion of the Court is under sixteen, is called as a witness, in relation to an offence against or any conduct contrary to decency or morality, direct the exclusion from Court of all persons other than members or officers of Court or parties in the case, their Counsel, Solicitors, or persons otherwise directly concerned in the case and other bona fide representatives of newspaper or paper agency and S. 115, provided that children under fourteen other than infants in arms are prohibited from being present in Court during the trial of other persons except so long as their presence is required as a witness or otherwise for the purpose of justice, Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr. pp 192-93 (25th Ed). Trying a case in camera is not permitted by the Code. Trying a case in camera ordinarily means that all persons except the Court officials and parties and their legal advisers are expressly excluded from the room in which the case is tried. When a case is tried in the Magistrate's private room instead of in the Court room without objection.

by the parties, the trial is not illegal, 3 Cr. L.J. 433=12 Bur. L.R. 59. Transaction of public business at the private residence of the Magistrate was condemned in 10 C.W.N. 1062.

This section gives power to the Court of ordering that any particular person shall not remain in the room used by the Court. It makes no exception to the case of a police officer. The Magistrate has not merely to think of the help, any police officer may be able to give him or the prosecution, but has also to consider the susceptibilities of the accused and the effect which the presence of the police officer is likely to produce in the minds of the accused and the witnesses. When the accused so objects, the Magistrate has to decide whether his fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs. In the case of a prosecuting officer, the Court may put it to him whether under the circumstances he will withdraw. In any case it is not advisable that a police officer interested in the case before a Magistrate should receive exceptional treatment as a seat on the dais which will surely breed suspicion in the mind of the accused as to the independence of the Magistrate, 26 Cr. L.J. 1130 (1)=88 Ind. Cas. 362 (1). A Court is entitled to ask an investigating police officer not to remain in Court, 1885 A.W.N. 221.

CHAPTER XXV.

OF THE MODE OF TAKING AND RECORDING EVIDENCE IN INQUIRIES AND TRIALS.

The general object of this Chapter is to ensure the accuracy of the record and to enable the accused to know and understand what the evidence given against him is and the reading over of the depositions of witnesses is so essential to the framing of an accurate record. The provisions of S. 360, infra must be regarded as imperative and not merely directory. The criminal Courts must therefore comply with its clear provisions, 52 C. 159, 437, 470 429, 668, and 721; 23 C.W.N. 119 and 968; 42 C.L.J. 585; 29 C.W.N. 526, 43 M.L.J. 423.

353. Except as otherwise expressly provided, all evidence taken under Chapters XVIII, XX, XXI, XXII and XXIII shall be taken in the presence of the accused, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader.

Evidence to be taken in presence of accused.

All evidence, i.e., evidence for the prosecution as well as the defence, and when defence evidence is recorded in the absence of the accused it was held that S. 537, infra, will not cure such a defect, 14 Cr. L.J. 287=19 Ind. Cas. 719.

Chapter XVIII refers to inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session or High Court. Chapter XX deals with summons cases, and Chapter XXI with warrant-cases, Chapter XXII summary trials and Chapter XXIII deals with trials before the Sessions Court and the High Court.

Shall be taken in the presence of accused.—This section requires that with certain exceptions the evidence should be taken in the presence of the accused or when his personal attendance is dispensed with in the presence of his pleader and failure to do so is not an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, as it is a disobedience of an express provision as to the mode of trial and is more than an irregularity. Where the Code enacts positively that evidence should be recorded in a certain way, it cannot be said that a contrivance of this express provision comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity and there can be no waiver by which disregard to an express provision can be got over, 23 Cr.L.J. 260=107 Ind. Cas. 530. See 6 Pat. 691. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 736=117 Ind. Cas. 241. The wording of the section laying down that all evidence shall be taken in the presence of the accused includes the evidence for the defence as well as the prosecution. Where in a Sessions trial the accused when asked whether they had any defence witnesses stated they had none but wished that the evidence adduced on their behalf in a different case may be used as their defence evidence and the Judge acceded to their request and ultimately convicted the accused, it was held that the procedure adopted was clearly illegal and in contravention to the provisions of this section and the fact that the accused consented to such an illegal procedure will not give it the legal sanction, 28 Cr. L.J. 771=104 Ind. Cas. 99 where 4 Lah. 376 is followed, see also 50 A. 457 at 462. When an accused who was tried with others under S. 323, I.P.C., absconded after the close of the prosecution evidence but before the defence witnesses were named by him and examined, it was held that the recording of the defence evidence in the absence of the accused was not an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, and the conviction was set aside, 14 Cr. L.J. 287=19 Ind. Cas. 719. All depositions of witnesses in criminal cases should be taken and attested by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused, but there is no provision of law which makes it obligatory that the attestation of the Magistrate should be in the presence of the accused, 10 A. 174; where witnesses are not examined in the presence of the accused, the conviction is bad, 2 N.W.P.H.C.R. 49. Where in a summary trial the Magistrate examined some of the prosecution witnesses before one of the accused was actually served with summons to appear and when he appeared the witnesses already examined were not recalled for cross-examination on his behalf it was held that the trial was bad in law and was set aside, 28 Cr. L.J. 756=103 Ind. Cas. 836. The evidence so recorded cannot give, the look or manner of a witness, his hesitation, his doubts, his variation of language or his precipitancy, his calmness or consideration. It is the dead body of evidence without its spirit which is supplied when given openly and orally by the ear and eye of those who receive it, 3 B.L.R. (App. Cr.) 20 at 24=12 W.R. (Cr.) 3; 1864 W.R. (Cr.) 1 and 38; 1 B.L.R. (Cr.) 37. To satisfy the requirements of this section it is not enough to read over the sworn statement of the complainant in the presence of the accused treating it as examination-in-chief. Such examination must take place in the presence of the accused, Ratanlal 24; 24 W.R. (Cr.) 14. See S. 512, infra, which permits evidence to be recorded in the absence of the accused when the accused is absconding and there is no immediate prospect of arresting him or when the offender is unknown and an offence punishable with death or transportation is made out. S. 428 (3) gives a discretion to the appellate Court when directing additional evidence to be taken to have it recorded in the absence of the accused or his pleader, and under Chapter XL of the Code evidence of witnesses may be taken on commission. In a criminal trial it is clearly illegal to read out the deposition made by witnesses on a previous occasion to put a few additional questions to them and then tender them for cross-examination. Such a procedure is illegal and it cannot be cured by S. 537, infra, 23 Cr. L.J. 377=77 Ind. Cas. 425. See 30 L.W. 701=1929 M.W.N. 799, where the practice of tendering prosecution witnesses for cross-examination only, is condemned. See also Ss. 509 and 510, infra, which make an exception as to the medical evidence. The attendance of an accused person during his trial before the High Court Criminal Sessions may be dispensed with under this section on the ground of ill-health of the accused, 14 Bom. L.R. 236=13 Cr. L.J. 464=15 Ind. Cas. 96.

When personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of pleader.—

See S. 205, supra which enables a Magistrate issuing a summons, in his discretion, to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused. S. 116, supra, also gives similar power in cases under the security Chapter. When the accused's personal attendance is not dispensed with by the Court, it is clearly laid down in this section that all evidence shall be taken, in his presence. This can only mean that the evidence for the defence as well as for the prosecution is included in this section and S. 537, infra, cannot cure the defect even though it had not led to a miscarriage of justice, 14 Cr. L.J. 287 at 288=19 Ind. Cas. 719. Under S. 145, (1) supra a Magistrate may require, the parties concerned to attend in person or by pleader. It was held in 14 Bom. L.R. 236=13 Cr. L.J. 464=15 Ind. Cas. 96, that the High Court has power under this section to dispense with the attendance of an accused during his trial before the sessions on the ground of ill-health. When S. 205, supra, empowers a Magistrate to dispense with personal attendance of an accused it could not have been the policy of the Legislature that the High Court should not have similar powers in all proper cases. Such power may properly be exercised in favour of pardanashin ladies at least, until they are convicted, 43 M. 359, 17 C.W.N. 1243; 9 Cr. L.J. 158. See S. 503, infra, which authorises taking of evidence on commission.

354. In inquiries and trials (other than summary trial) under this Code by or before a Magistrate (other than a Presidency Magistrate) or Sessions Judge, the evidence of the witnesses shall be recorded in the following manner.

Manner of recording evidence outside presidency-towns.

Ss. 260 and 261, supra, make special provisions for summary trials and S. 362, infra, prescribes the mode of recording evidence by Presidency Magistrates.

355. (1) In summons-cases tried before a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate, and in cases of the offences mentioned in sub-section (1) of section 260, clauses (b) to (m), both inclusive, when tried by a Magistrate of the first or second class, and in all proceedings under section 514 (if not in the course of a trial), the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds.

(2) Such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(3) If the Magistrate is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to do so, and shall cause such memorandum to be made in writing from his dictation in open Court, and shall sign the same, and such memorandum shall form part of the record.

Scope of the section.—This section merely prescribes a briefer record in summons cases and other cases which may be tried summarily when tried as a matter of fact in the regular way, 17 A.L.J. 1146; 21 Cr. L.J. 28=54 Ind. Cas. 172; 3 L.B.R. 3=2 Cr. L.J. 375. This section applies to offences coming within clauses (b) to (m) of S. 260, supra, but when a case falls under clause (b) of S. 261, supra, this section would not apply, 29 Bom. L.R. 710; 28 Cr. L.J. 537=102 Ind. Cas. 345. The provisions of this section do not control Ss. 263 and 264, supra, see 49 A. 261 which decided that 48 C. 280 which took a different view is not good law. See also 25 A.L.J. 346=28 Cr. L.J. 412=101 Ind. Cas. 474. This section does not apply to summary trials. See S. 354, infra. The substance of the evidence alone is to be recorded and not the form in which the witness deposes, 23 Cr. L.J. 123=65 Ind. Cas. 552. The provisions of this section are obligatory and failure to comply with them may amount to an illegality and not a mere irregularity, 23 Cr. L.J. 114=65 Ind. Cas. 546. "We are not aware of any provision of law which renders it illegal for a native second class Magistrate to record the memorandum, referred to in this section, in English any more than it is illegal for an English Magistrate to do so." 19 M. 263 at 270. Evidence in maintenance cases under Chapter XXXVI should not be recorded as in summary trials but in the manner provided by this section, 20 C. 331 at 332. An order awarding maintenance under S. 468, infra, cannot be passed simply on the wife's verified application on oath, of the truth and correctness of the allegations made in her application for maintenance without examining her or her witnesses, if any, on oath. The application for maintenance cannot take the place of her examination on oath in the presence of the husband, and consequently, there is no legal evidence as against him for passing the order for maintenance, 25 Cr. L.J. 302=76 Ind. Cas. 874. In a summons case the reading over of the recorded deposition is not prescribed by law and its omission cannot therefore per se be regarded as a defect fatal to a conviction, Weir II, 433. Where evidence is illegally recorded in the form of a memorandum when the Magistrate is not entitled to do so the conviction was set aside as illegal, Weir II, 432 ; 21 Cr. L J. 28=54 Ind. Cas. 172. When the substance of the evidence taken down by the Magistrate in a warrant-case tried summarily is not signed by the Magistrate, the procedure was held to be illegal and the trial bad, 23 Cr. L J. 114=65 Ind. Cas. 546. Though this section does not expressly refer to warrant cases it refers to all cases other than summons cases and cases mentioned in subsection (1) (b) to (m) of S. 260. The Code does not prescribe the manner for recording evidence applicable to all warrant cases. This section must be held to prescribe the manner in which evidence should be recorded in warrant cases, 52 C. 632.

Offences mentioned in S. 260 (1) (b) to (m).—These clauses (b) to (m) relate to offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code, but clause (a) refers to offences punishable under other laws also and this section has no application to that clause.

In all proceedings under S. 514.—S. 514 deals with procedure on forfeiture of bonds taken under the provisions of the Code.

Shall make a memorandum.—This section does not require a Magistrate to record the evidence of the witnesses but only to make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as it proceeds. S. 357, infra, carefully prescribes the language in which the evidence of witnesses in the trials and inquiries referred to in S. 356 shall be taken down, but the Code is silent as to the language in which a memorandum of the substance of the evidence in the less important case enumerated in this section is to be recorded.

As the examination of witnesses proceeds.—The memorandum must be made as the examination of the witnesses proceeds and not after it is concluded, and from the recorded deposition of the witnesses ; 1 B.H.C.R. 91 ; 1864 W.R. (Cr). 18. The object is to make the Magistrate to give pointed attention to what the witnesses say and thus ensure accuracy. A defective memorandum under this section may perhaps be taken to be an illegality and not merely an irregularity, as unlike S. 356, infra the defective memorandum will be the only record available for evidence, see 23 Cr. L J. 114=65 Ind. Cas. 546.

356. (1) In all other trials before Courts of Session and Magistrates (other than Presidency Magistrates) and in all inquiries under Chapters XII and XVIII, the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing in the language of the Court, by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, or in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence, and shall be signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge towns.

(2) When the evidence of such witness is given in English, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may take it down in that language with his own hand, and, unless the accused is familiar with English, or the language of the Court is English, an authenticated translation of such evidence in the language of the Court shall form part of the record.

Evidence given in English

(2A) When the evidence of such witness is given in any other language, not being English, than the language of the Court, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may take it down in that language with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in that language in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence, and an authenticated translation of such evidence in the language of the Court or in English shall form part of the record.

(3) In cases in which the evidence is not taken down in writing by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, he shall, as the examination of each witness proceeds, make a memorandum of the substance of what such witness deposes; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

Memorandum when evidence not taken down by the Magistrate or Judge himself.

(4) If the Magistrate or Sessions Judge is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to make it.

Amendment.—Sub-section (2-A) is new.

Other than Presidency Magistrates.—See S. 362, infra, which deals with the mode of recording evidence in appealable cases by Presidency Magistrates. There is no provision in law requiring Presidency Magistrates to record evidence in cases other than those dealt with in S. 362, infra. In non-appealable cases it is left to the discretion of the Magistrate to do so or not, and the High Court would not interfere with such discretion, 31 C. 983; 33 C. 1036.

In all inquiries under Chapters XII and XVII.—It is remarkable that a distinction is drawn in S. 355 and this section between summons-cases and inquiries under Chapter XII; S. 355 directs that in summons-cases the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness, whereas this section directs that in inquiries under Chapter XII the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing in the language of the Court by the Magistrate or in his presence or hearing or under his personal supervision and superintendence, and shall be signed by the Magistrate, 30 C 508 at 514. Where a Magistrate holding an inquiry under Chapter XII only makes a memorandum of evidence purporting to act under sub-section (3) of this section, the proceedings were quashed, as he had violated the imperative provisions of sub-section (1) of this section, 42 C. 381. Though this section does not expressly refer to warrant cases it refers to all cases other than summons cases and cases mentioned in sub-section (1) (b) to (m) of S. 260. The Code does not prescribe the manner of recording evidence applicable to all warrant cases. 52 C. 632.

Shall be taken in writing in the language of Court by Magistrate, etc.—Under the provisions of this section there is no exception whatever made in favour of cases in which no appeal lies. An omission to record the evidence in the mode prescribed by this section is so material an error that the High Court is bound to quash the proceedings as being founded on no evidence, 11 B.L.R. Appx. 5=20 W.R. (Cr.) 14. In every Sessions trial, no matter how often the case has been before the Court, the witnesses must be examined de novo in the same manner as if the case was entirely new and the witness had not been examined before, W.R. (Gap.) 1 and 18 and a memorandum by the Judge that the witnesses had deposed the same as former witnesses is not in accordance with the requirements of this section, W.R. (Gap.) 18; 1 B.H.C.R. 91.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section requires a record to be prepared in the language of the Court in addition to what is taken down by the Magistrate or Judge in English, and sub-section (3) requires that in addition to what is taken in the language of the Court in the presence and hearing and personal direction of the Magistrate or Judge and signed by him, the Magistrate or Judge must make a memorandum of the substance of what each witness deposes with his own hand and shall sign the same. This memorandum is something different from that made under S. 355, supra. A defective memorandum under S. 355, may amount to an illegality whereas under this sub-section any such defect will be considered only as an irregularity since there is another record in proper form. In a warrant case when no vernacular record of the evidence was prepared the trial and conviction is illegal even though no objection was taken to such a course being adopted, 17 A.L.J. 1146.

Sub-section (2A).—This sub-section is new and supplies a real defect which existed in the Code before. Where evidence is given in any other language, not being English which is dealt with in sub-section (2), than the language of the Court, the Magistrate or Judge is empowered to take the evidence in that language or cause it to be taken down in that language in his presence and under his direction and an authenticated translation in the language of the Court or in English is to form part of the record.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section is intended to secure accuracy. When the Magistrate is unable to record the evidence himself, he must carefully attend to the examination of the witness and exercise control over the clerk who takes down the evidence. Failure on the part of the Magistrate to comply with the provisions of this sub-section will entail a retrial 1891 A.W.N. 145; 19 C.W.N. 124, see also 19 M. 269.

357. (1) The Local Government may direct that in any district or part of a district, or in proceedings before any Court of Session, or before any Magistrate or class of Magistrates, the evidence of each witness shall, in the cases referred to in section 356, be taken down by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate with his own hand and in his mother-tongue, unless he is prevented by any sufficient reason from taking down the evidence of any witness, in which case he shall record the reason of his inability to do so, and shall cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court.

(2) The evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and shall form part of the record :

Provided that the Local Government may direct the Sessions Judge or Magistrate to take down the evidence in the English language, or in the language of the Court ; although such language is not his mother-tongue.

This section prescribes carefully, unlike S. 355, supra, the language in which the evidence of witnesses in trials and inquiries referred to in S. 356, supra shall be taken down, 19 M. 269 at 270. The authority conferred by this section is personal to the officer and remains in force only so long as he remains in the district in which it has been conferred, 5 M.H.C.R. Appx. 9. Where a Magistrate not empowered to record evidence in his own hand in English, did so, and committed the accused, it was held that the procedure of the Magistrate was only an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, especially when there was nothing to show that the accused was prejudiced, Weir II, 433. The language in which the plea of the accused is to be recorded is the language in which it is conveyed by the interpreter to the Court, 5 C. 826.

358. In cases of the kind mentioned in section 355, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, take down the evidence of any witness in the manner provided in S. 356, or, if within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Magistrate the Local Government has made the order referred to in section 357, in the manner provided in the same section.

If he thinks fit.—For example where a Judge is of opinion that a witness is giving false evidence and he thinks that proceedings against him may be necessary in the interests of justice.

Mode of recording evidence under section 356 or section 357.

359. (1) Evidence taken under section 356 or section 357 shall not ordinarily be taken down in the form of question and answer, but in the form of a narrative.

(2) The Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question and answer.

The ordinary, proper and convenient way of recording evidence is to take it down in the first person, exactly as spoken by the witness, 8 B L R. Appx. 21=16 W.R. (Cr.) 36. As far as possible the Judge should use the words actually used either in the question put or in the answer given and not a more or less accurate paraphrase of the evidence, 2 Cr. L.J. 123 =11 Bur. L.R. 8 See S. 165, of the Ind. Ev. Act, as to the power of a Court to question the witness and take down the question and answer.

Procedure in regard to such evidence when completed

360. (1) As the evidence of each witness taken under section 356 or section 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if in attendance, or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader, and shall if necessary, be corrected.

(2) If the witness denies the correctness of any part of the evidence when the same is read over to him, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, instead of correcting the evidence, make a memorandum thereon of the objection made to it by the witness, and shall add such remarks as he thinks necessary.

(3) If the evidence is taken down in a language different from that in which it has been given, and the witness does not understand the language in which it is taken down, the evidence so taken down shall be interpreted to him in the language in which it was given, or in a language which he understands.

Scope and object of the section.—A careful study of the section will show that the object of the reading over of the deposition is to obtain an accurate record from the witness of what he really means to say, and to give him an opportunity of correcting the words which the Magistrate or his clerk has taken down. It is not to enable the accused or his advocate to suggest corrections. It must be remembered that the primary object is to fix the witness and to enable him to protect himself against any inaccuracy in the words taken down from his lips, by the Court, 5 Ran. 53 (P C). Further the accused should know and understand what evidence is given at the trial. The reading over of the evidence to the witness is so essential to the framing of an accurate record that the direction in this section is imperative and not directory, 25 C.W.N. 963. This wholesome provision of law is enacted not only for the benefit of the witness but also of the accused. But it is almost universally ignored. The result has been to set up a wholly erroneous practice in Courts in direct contravention of the law on the subject, 29 C.W.N. 711. Non-compliance with the provisions of this section deprives the accused of the valuable right of checking the correctness of the depositions. He is virtually interested in the due compliance with the provisions of this section, 52 C. 159 and 721; 42 C.L.J. 585=27 Cr. L.J. 375=92 Ind. Cas. 887. It is fair both to the witness and to the Magistrate who takes down the deposition as well as to the accused to have the deposition read over as soon as the examination of the witness is over. It would avoid a conflict between any recollection of the accused's pleader, the recollection of the prosecuting Counsel and recollection of the Court as well as the recollection of the witness. Seeing these four different persons to be considered in this connection the provisions of these sections are not only a salutary provision, but a provision intended for the furtherance of justice. It is not fair to an honest witness not to have his deposition read over soon after he made it, for, if the Magistrate incorrectly recorded it and if it is read over to him some hours after, the question, would arise whether the witness is correct in saying that he did not make a particular statement and whether correction should be accepted or not, 49 M. 71. No doubt the evidence has to be read over in the presence of the accused or his pleader. He is entitled to be sure that it has been read over and that the witness has had an opportunity of correcting the written word. But the accused is not necessarily entitled to the opportunity of suggesting corrections. At the same time it would be a better course if the depositions other than mere formal ones are read over so that the accused or his pleader could hear them and give their undivided attention to them. Care would of course, have to be taken that no suggestion should be conveyed to a witnesses in the form of a correction which would make him alter the evidence but there might be obvious slips to which, under proper safeguard, attention might be called by the accused or his pleader, 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.). This section is mandatory. Omission to read over the deposition of a witness to him in the presence of the accused or his pleader, if he appears by pleader, is an illegality vitiating the trial and S. 537, infra has no application, 4 Pat. 231. The test for determining whether mandatory enactments are directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience depends on the subject-matter, the importance of the provision disregarded and its relation to the general object of the statute, 52 C. 159 following 51 C. 1; see 52 C. 721; 42 C.L.J. 585; 49 M. 71; 4 Pat. 231. The evidence of each witness should be read over to him after it is completed before that of another witness commences. Reading over the deposition of all witnesses examined in one day at the close of the day does not satisfy the mandatory requirements of law. 42 C.L.J. 585=27 Cr. L.J. 375=92 Ind. Cas. 887; see 53 C. 129. The proper order to make when a committal order is made without complying with the provisions of this section is to send it back to the committal Court and have the defect in procedure cured by recalling the witnesses whose evidence was not read over to them in the presence of the accused, 28 C.W.N. 968. See 30 L.W. 646. The section applies to proceedings where a person is called upon to show cause why he should not furnish security for good behaviour and the omission to comply with its provisions vitiates such proceedings, 52 C. 632 where 52 C. 470 is followed. But the provisions of this section do not apply to proceedings under S. 107, supra, and it is not necessary to read over the depositions to the witnesses in the presence of the person called on to furnish security. S. 117 (2) says that such inquiry shall be made in the manner prescribed for summons cases and S. 355 supra, applies to trial of summons cases and so this section is not applicable, 52 C. 663. This section applies to proceedings under Ch. XII of the Code, 52 C. 437 where 52 C. 159 is followed. But see 52 C. 721, which took a very restricted view, that as the parties to those proceedings were not "accused" their attendance at the reading over of the evidence to the witnesses was not necessary. Again it was held in 29 C.W.N. 475=41 C.L.J. 357=26 Cr. L.J. 915=85 Ind. Cas. 979, that this section has no application to Ch. XII as such proceedings are summary proceeding of a quasi civil nature for preventing breaches of the peace and no right or title is decided and no one's life or liberty is in question. Reading over the deposition of the witness while other witnesses are being actually examined is not a sufficient compliance with the section as its object is that the accused may have the opportunity of ascertaining that the evidence has been correctly recorded. This is all the more important in an inquiry with a view to commit, since in certain circumstances the evidence so taken may be used as evidence against him at the trial. When such an objection is taken in the Sessions Court, before the accused was called on to plead, the commitment was quashed and the case sent back again to be inquired into by the committing Magistrate, 23 Cr. L.J. 1237=53 Ind. Cas. 1043; 26 Cr. L.J. 927=86 Ind. Cas. 931; 52 C. 433. But the Rangoon High Court in 27 Cr. L.J. 669=91 Ind. Cas. 717 has differed from the view taken in 52 C. 159 and 433 and held that failure to comply with the provisions of this section unless it has resulted in any inaccuracy in the deposition of the witnesses prejudicing the accused or occasioning a failure of justice, is only a mere irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, and each case should be decided on its own merits. See also 3 Ran. 612 where 27 Cr. L.J. 669=91 Ind. Cas. 717 is followed. This difference of opinion is now set at rest by the recent decision of the Privy Council reported in 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.) where the view of the Rangoon High Court is accepted as correct and the Calcutta view was not followed. Reading over the deposition after completion, by the clerk, while the Court is examining other witnesses is not warranted by law and vitiates the trial, 26 Cr. L.J. 1016 (1)=87 Ind. Cas. 810 (1). This section is enacted for the protection of witnesses and the irregularity in procedure as to reading over the evidence to the witness will not afford any ground for the accused to have his conviction set aside, 7 C.L.R. 393; 12 W.R. (Cr) 44. It was sought to amend this section by providing that a witness reading over his deposition himself and also reading out the deposition in the presence of the accused only if the accused so desired, were sufficient compliance with law, but the amendment fell through and the marked conflict of judicial opinion with regard to the effect of failure to observe strictly the provisions of this section still remains. The mere reading of the deposition by the witness himself and his admitting the same to be correct is not a sufficient compliance with law, 52 C. 431; 26 Cr. L.J. 927=86 Ind. Cas. 931, 23 Cr. L.J. 951=87 Ind. Cas. 103. See also the remarks of the Privy Council in the decision reported in 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.).

Sub-section (1)—This section says that the deposition is to be read over to the witness. The provision is not complied within terms by giving the witness an opportunity of reading it himself. He may do so in a slovenly manner. He may not easily decipher the hand-writing. He may not feel the responsibility in the same way as he would, if it were read over to him. No doubt there are cases in which it would be more likely that accuracy would be obtained by the witness reading over the deposition himself, as for instance, if the pronouncement of the Magistrate or of the interpreter in a language not his own, was difficult to follow or if a witness was partially deaf. But it is dangerous in cases of criminal law to accept equivalents and except in cases where reading over to the witness would be absurd as, for example, with a stone deafman, the provision should be complied with, 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.) referring to 36 C. 955. In 36 C. 955 at 959 Jenkins, O.J., condemned the practice prevailing in Courts in not reading the deposition of witnesses in the presence of the accused or his pleader as a departure from the terms of the section which are mandatory and not merely directory, and a custom to the contrary cannot alter the plain words of the Act. See also, 22 Cr. L.J. 568=62 Ind. Cas. 584 and 13 Cr. L.J. 569=15 Ind. Cas. 933. This condemnation of the practice of not complying with the provisions of this section has been approved in 23 C.W.N. 968. Again in 42 C. 240 it was held that where the deposition of a witness after being recorded was handed over to a witness to be read by him and signed in the presence of the accused, it was not a sufficient compliance with law and the deposition was inadmissible in evidence. It is clear from the wording of this section that if the accused is in attendance the evidence must be read over in his presence and it is only when he appears by pleader that the reading of the evidence in the presence of his pleader is sufficient; but on this ground alone further inquiry is not to be ordered unless it is demanded in the interests of justice, 30 C.W.N. 336=27 Cr. L.J. 509=91 Ind. Cas. 973. See also 52 C. 431. The words 'appear by pleader' are not defined in the Code and in ordinary acceptance, the words mean 'represented by a pleader' having a pleader to act and plead. In S. 205, supra, the word 'appear' seems to convey a double meaning seemingly connoting not merely an authority to act and plead but also authority to personate the accused but there is nothing to show that the double meaning was intended by the Legislature. It is necessary that some one should be present at the trial to look after the interests of the accused and all that S. 205 supra, provides is that where the Magistrate sees fit, the accused may be exempted from personal attendance provided he engages a pleader to attend and see that the proceedings are properly and regularly conducted. The law considers that the accused's interests are properly safeguarded by the attendance of the person. A similar intention is gathered from the provisions of S. 361 infra, but there is nothing in the provisions of this section to indicate that the Legislature intended that the reading over of the depositions in the presence of the pleader should be complied with only in cases where personal attendance of the accused is dispensed with by the Court. The natural meaning is that if there is a pleader engaged by the accused who is present, the reading over of the deposition in his presence is full compliance with the provisions of the section if the accused does not happen to be present then, 45 C.L.J. 368 at 376-77=29 Cr. L.J. 49 at 53=106 Ind. Cas. 543. This section is enacted not only for the benefit of the witness but also of the accused. It is a mandatory provision and failure to comply with it deprives the accused of the very valuable right of checking the depositions of witnesses, 28 C.W.N. 968 where 42 C. 240; 36 C. 953 and 28 C.W.N. 119 are approved; See also 52 C. 499; 42 C.L.J. 585; 27 Cr. L.J. 1276=83 Ind. Cas. 1032; 49 M. 71. In 28 M. 308 followed in 12 C.W.N. 845 a similar view was taken and it was held that where the witness was taken aside by the clerk and evidence read over to him in a place where neither the Judge nor the Vakils were present, the deposition was taken in accordance with law and therefore inadmissible in evidence. But in 34 M. 141, it was held that a deposition irregularly recorded without complying with this section is not a nullity for all purposes even as against the person who made it and who had admitted it to be correct and in 21 M.L.J. 411, an objection taken to the admissibility of a deposition as not complying with the provisions of this section was overruled. See also 2 Cr. L. Rev. 45. In the later cases, 28 M. 308 was distinguished and a conviction for perjury of a witness was held to be sustainable even though the deposition did not comply with the provisions of this section. It is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section if the deposition of the witness is read over to him in the presence of a pleader for one of the several accused. A deposition so read over is admissible against the witness on his subsequent trial for perjury, 36 C. 803 at 815. But see 28 Cr. L.J. 631=103 Ind. Cas. 107, following 42 C. 250. Where it was held that a deposition signed by the witness himself after he had read over the same but not read over to him as required by this section cannot form the subject of a prosecution for perjury. There is no provision of law which makes the attestation of the deposition by the Court in the presence of the accused obligatory, 10 A. 174. Where evidence is not read over in accordance with the provisions of this section it cannot be held to be an irregularity to support the proposition that the Magistrate has decided the case on no evidence at all, 25 Cr. L.J. 89=76 Ind. Cas. 25. Where a retrial is ordered on account of the depositions of witnesses not being read over to the witnesses in the presence of the accused as required by this section, such depositions could be put to the witnesses under S. 145 of the Ind. Ev. Act for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses when examined at the subsequent trial, 6 Pat. 478. There is abundant authority to support the proposition that the accused is virtually interested in the due compliance with the provisions of this section and a failure in that respect amounts to a material irregularity which ordinarily must be taken as causing him prejudice, 28 C.W.N. 968 at 974, but it has been held after the Privy Council decision reported in 5 Ran. 53 that omission to comply with the terms of this section will not necessitate the setting aside of the proceedings unless a failure of justice has been occasioned, 28 Cr. L.J. 595=102 Ind. Cas. 172; 28 Cr. L.J. 636=102 Ind. Cas. 782; 28 Cr. L.J. 514=102 Ind. Cas. 210; 32 C.W.N. 691=28 Cr. L.J. 751=103 Ind. Cas. 799, following 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.). The word "accused" has been used in this sub-section in its wider significance as meaning a person over whom a criminal Court is exercising jurisdiction, 52 C. 437 at 439. In proceedings under S. 145, supra, the provisions of this section do apply to the extent at least that the evidence of each witness, when completed must be read over to him. But the parties to the proceedings are not "accused" and their attendance at the reading over the evidence of the witnesses is not necessary, 52 C. 721. The provisions of this section do not apply to proceedings under S. 107, supra, and the depositions of witnesses need not be read over to them in the presence of the persons called on to furnish security; S. 117 (2) says that such inquiry, shall be conducted as in summons cases to which S. 355, supra applies, and so this section is not applicable, 52 C. 663.

Sub-section (2).—A witness honestly desiring to correct an error in his evidence should not be deterred from doing so by the risk of a criminal charge, 10 C. 937 at 931 and if a Court instead of allowing the correction to be made proceeds to make a memorandum under this sub-section, such memorandum must be appended to the deposition itself, and care should be taken that the practice and form prescribed by law are strictly adhered to, 13 W.R. (Cr.) 17.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section is not an additional provision requiring that the deposition in English should be translated into Vernacular to a witness who has deposed in the Vernacular, after having been first read over to him in English. It would be a grave insult to the Court, to question its integrity in giving a true rendering in the Vernacular of the deposition it has recorded. There is nothing in the wording of the section to indicate that it requires that the deposition shall first be read over as recorded in English and shall then be translated into the language in which the witness has deposed. If such had been the intention of the Legislature we should have expected the word 'also' to stand between the words 'shall' and 'be interpreted' in the sub-section, 46 C.L.J. 368 at 375=29 Cr. L.J. 49 at 52=106 Ind. Cas 545. The fact that the evidence recorded and read over to a witness in a language not understood by the witness, is no ground for setting aside the conviction of the accused in a case where the accused understood the language in which such evidence is recorded and read over to the witness, 7 C.L.R. 393.

361. (1) Whenever any evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused, and he is present in person, it shall be interpreted to him in open Court in a language understood by him.

(2) If he appears by pleader, and the evidence is given in a language other than the language of the Court, and not understood by the pleader, it shall be interpreted to such pleader in that language.

(3) When documents are put in for the purpose of formal proof, it shall be in the discretion of the Court to interpret as much thereof as appears necessary.

The distinction between this section and S. 360, supra, is very marked. Under this section if evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused or his pleader, it is to be interpreted into their language, while under the latter section when it is read over it is to be interpreted to the witness in his own language but there is no provision for its being interpreted to the accused. Thus if the deposition is taken down in English and the language of the accused is Hindi and the language of the witness is Burmese, the deposition will have to be taken by getting the witness's answers in Burmese, having them interpreted to the Court so that they may be taken in English and further interpreted to the accused in Hindi so that he may understand them. When however the deposition comes to be read over, as it will be in English, it will be interpreted to the witness in Burmese, but not to the accused in Hindi and if the accused knew neither English nor Burmese, he will be none the wiser, 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.). This section relates to the oral evidence of witnesses only, 13 W.R. (Cr.) 25. See also 24 W.R. (Cr.) 50 where it was held that not interpreting the evidence in English of a Civil Surgeon to the accused when it was understood by his Counsel who put all the necessary questions to the witness was not illegal. As to documentary evidence, though a prisoner has a right to have all or any part of any documents used in his trial translated or interpreted to him, yet documents such as Gazette of India or Calcutta Gazette merely proving a proclamation by the Government, need not necessarily be interpreted and will not come within this section, 7 B.L.R. 63 at 71.

See S. 519 infra which relates to the service of interpreters in Criminal Courts.

362. (1) In every case tried by a Presidency Magistrate in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation, in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record.

(2) Evidence so taken down shall ordinarily be recorded in the form of a narrative, but the Magistrate may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question or answer.

(2A) In every case referred to in sub-section (1), the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused. Such memorandum shall be signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(3) Sentences unless they are sentences of imprisonment ordered to run concurrently passed under section 35 on the same occasion shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered as one sentence.

(4) In cases other than those specified in sub-section (1), it shall not be necessary for a Presidency Magistrate to record the evidence or frame a charge

Amendment.—Sub-sections (2A) and (4) are new as also the words in italics in sub-sections (1) and (3). The change is intended to remove the uncertainty which at present exists regarding the duties of a Presidency Magistrate in recording evidence and framing a charge in petty cases. It is also provided that when sentences in excess of the one, are passed, which are ordered to run concurrently, it is the heaviest sentence which determines the applicability of this section.—Statement of Objects and Reasons.

Scope of the section.—This section is not meant for a Presidency Magistrate to act arbitrarily and record nothing by way of evidence. The section gives him a discretion to take down the evidence or not and the discretion should be exercised judicially in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily. There may be no necessity to record any evidence in 'morning cases'. But where a respectable person is charged with an offence reflecting on his character and serious allegations are levelled against him, there ought to be some record of evidence to enable him in case of a conviction to go to the High Court, 10 Bom. L.R. 201=7 Cr. L.J. 194; 26 Bom. L.R. 1132. A warrant case should be tried by a Presidency Magistrate in the same manner provided by Chapter XXI of the Code subject to the provision of this section as to the mode of recording evidence, Ratanlal 539; this section does not apply to cases of security for good behaviour under S. 110 supra in which a reference may have to be made under S. 123 (2) supra to the High Court and therefore there should be a record of evidence for the High Court to exercise its powers effectively.

Sub section (1).—The wording of this section is evidently faulty, as it is not quite reasonable to suppose that the Magistrate should make up his mind as to the sentence he would pass before the evidence is recorded. The section, however, lays down by implication that the Magistrate may record evidence, when he intends, if he convicts the accused to impose a fine not exceeding rupees two hundred or to pass a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. Reading this and S. 411, infra, it may be inferred that a Presidency Magistrate need not record evidence in a case which under S. 411 is not appealable. But it does not necessarily follow from these sections that the framers of the Code intended that a Presidency Magistrate was not bound to record evidence or notes of evidence in any case in which an appeal does not lie, and this section and S. 411 do not in themselves warrant such a conclusion, 33 C. 1036 at 1038. Where a Magistrate fails to comply with the provisions of this sub-section, the irregularity obviously prejudices the accused and the High Court will not be in a position to know exactly the allegations made in the evidence or the exact reasons on which the Magistrate based his conviction and this occasions a failure of justice which prevents the irregularity being cured by S. 537, infra, 26 Bom. L.R. 1232=26 Cr. L.J. 454=85 Ind. Cas. 134.

In which an appeal lies, i.e., imprisonment exceeding six months or fine exceeding rupees two hundred, the imprisonment must be a substantive sentence of six months and not imprisonment in default of payment of fine imposed, 33 C. 1036 at 1039.

Sub-section (2A) :—This Sub-section is new and refers to appealable cases. It is the duty of the Magistrate to take a note of all the material facts stated by a witness whether in examination in chief or in cross-examination, 46 C. 411. The parties are entitled to have copies of the notes of depositions made by the Presidency Magistrate and the Magistrate cannot refuse to grant such copies, 15 C.W.N. 770.

Sub-section (4) :—This Sub-section is newly added to remove doubt as to recording evidence and framing charge in petty cases. There is no obligation in law requiring a Presidency Magistrate to record evidence in cases other than those dealt with in this section. In non-appealable cases it is left to his discretion to do so or not, and the High Court would not interfere with the exercise of such a discretion, 31 C. 983. At the same time it is desirable that a Presidency Magistrate should keep some record of the statements made by the witnesses or that the judgment should indicate what these statements are, so that the High Court as a Court of Revision may judge of the propriety or legality of the orders passed, 33 C. 1036 at 1039 where 16 C. 799 is referred to 13 C.W.N. 318=9 C.L.J. 439=10 Cr. L.J. 122=2 Ind. Cas. 651; 30 A. 334. See also S. 441, infra, which enables a Presidency Magistrate to supplement the grounds of his decision when records are called for by the High Court in revision under S. 435, infra. This section does not mean that Presidency Magistrates can act arbitrarily and record nothing by way of evidence in non-appealable cases. In such cases the section merely gives them a discretion to take the evidence or not, and the discretion should be exercised judicially in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily. When a respectable person is charged with an offence reflecting on his character and serious allegations are levelled against him there ought to be some record of evidence to enable him in case of conviction to move the High Court in revision, 10 Bom. L.R. 201=7 Cr. L.J. 194. Failure to record evidence in the direct narration is only an irregularity and S. 537 infra, will apply, unless a failure of justice had occasioned thereby, 19 M. 269; 18 Cr. L.J. 336=38 Ind. Cas. 448. The discretion which is allowed to a Presidency Magistrate not to record any evidence should be exercised reasonably, 26 Bom. L.R. 1232=26 Cr. L.J. 454=85 Ind. Cas. 134.

363. When a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has recorded the evidence of a witness, he shall also record such remarks (if any) as he thinks material respecting the demeanour of such witness whilst under examination.

Remarks respecting demeanour of witness.

The object of this section is to assist the appellate Court in estimating the value to be attached to the evidence of witnesses recorded by the inferior Court. The appellate Court will have no opportunity to observe the look or manner of a witness, his hesitation, his doubts, his variations of language or his precipitancy, his calmness or consideration, 3 B.L.R. (Ap. Cr.) 20 at 24; where a Sessions Judge of experience stated in the most emphatic terms that the demeanour of a witness was evasive and inspired no confidence in him, the High Court must be assured in the most positive and convincing manner that there are no grounds for this remark before it will be justified in accepting the witness's evidence, 15 Cr. L.J. 203=32 Ind. Cas. 987. It is impossible for the High Court to ignore the very strong opinion expressed by the Sessions Judge regarding the demeanour of particular witnesses. The learned Judge had the great advantage of seeing the witnesses in the box and of watching them as they gave their evidence, 1914 P.L.R. 125 see also 1898 P.R. (Cr.) 6; 1904 P.R. (Cr.) 7. The Magistrate's remarks on the record of the deposition of a witness are prima facie proof of the facts stated therein, 12 W.R. (Cr.) 51. The Magistrate no doubt is entitled to make such remarks as he thinks fit respecting the demeanour of the witness whilst under examination but his remarks "the witness falters and from his demeanour it appears he has not told the truth" would afford a good ground for transfer, as the Magistrate has already specified that he has altogether disbelieved the witness, 29 C.W.N. 316=26 Cr. L.J. 852 (1)=86 Ind. Cas. 708 (1). It is no doubt true that this section makes it incumbent on the Magistrate to record remarks, if any, as he thinks material respecting the demeanour of a witness while under examination but it is quite different thing to record a remark about the demeanour of the witness and to make or record a remark or opinion about the substance of the deposition of the witness. The parties are entitled to claim that unless expressly provided to the contrary by law, the Magistrate shall not prejudice their cases or form an opinion about the respective merits of their cases or about the deposition of their witnesses, till they have been fully and finally presented to him by Counsel, if any, in their concluding arguments and after the entire evidences has been recorded. An opinion formed and expressed by the Magistrate at an earlier stage of the case is bound to be prejudicial to the party concerned, 30 Cr. L.J. 129 at 131=113 Ind. Cas. 321. Although a Magistrate or Judge is entitled to note the demeanour of a witness when examined before him, it is generally undesirable to pronounce an opinion on the credibility of the witness until the whole evidence is recorded, Weir II, 335. A Magistrate is not entitled to take into consideration the appearance and the manner of speech of an accused person in arriving at his guilt, 23 Cr. L.J. 161=65 Ind. Cas. 625; see 39 B. 386. There is no law by which an accused person can either by words or gestures or exposing himself to certain physical treatment be made to implicate himself in the crime of which he is accused. Such an idea is highly repugnant to the proper administration of justice, 1 Pat. 242. The right of Magistrates to make disparaging remarks on persons who appear before them or are named in the course of a trial is one which should be exercised with great reserve and moderation especially when the person disparaged has had little or no opportunity of explaining or defending himself. It would involve a grave danger to the administration of justice if witnesses were restrained from stating their real opinions for fear of displeasing the Magistrate before whom they are giving their evidence and great caution should be taken to avoid producing such a result, 1904 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 21 at p. 79-80.

364. (1) Whenever the accused is examined by any Magistrate or by any Court other than a High Court established by Royal Charter or the Chief Court of Oudh or the Chief Court of Sind* the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full, in the language in which he is examined, or, if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English: and such record shall be shown or read to him, or, if he does not understand the language in which it is written, shall be interpreted to him in a language which he understands, and he shall be at liberty to explain or add to his answers.

(2) When the whole is made conformable to what he declares is the truth, the record shall be signed by the accused and the Magistrate or Judge or such Court, and such Magistrate or Judge shall certify under his own hand that the examination was taken in his presence and hearing and that the record contains a full and true account of the statement made by the accused.

(3) In cases in which the examination of the accused is not recorded by the Magistrate or Judge himself, he shall be bound, as the examination proceeds, to make a memorandum thereof in the language of the Court, or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with the latter language; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Judge with his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record. If the Magistrate or Judge is unable to make a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of such inability.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to the examination of an accused person under section 263 *or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate.

Amendment—In Sub-section (1) the words 'or the Chief Courts of Oudh or the Chief Court of Sind' are newly added in sub-section (3) the words "unless he is a Presidency Magistrate" have been omitted and in sub-section (4) the words "or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate" have been added by Act XXXVII of 1923 to remove certain anomalies and to make it clear that in cases where an appeal lies the Presidency Magistrate shall take down a memorandum of the examination of the accused as provided by sub-section (2A) and in non-appealable cases no record of the examination of the accused need be made.

Scope of the section.—The provisions of this section are mandatory and omission to comply with them vitiates the trial, 29 C.W.N. 939=26 Cr. L.J. 1032=87 Ind. Cas. 920; 52 C. 403; 24 Cr. L.J. 497=72 Ind. Cas. 951. This section does not empower a Court to examine an accused person. It merely lays down the mode of recording the examination of the accused empowered by the other provisions of the Code. The examination referred to in this section is subject to the purpose mentioned in S. 342 supra, viz., to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him, 10 M. 293; 4 Bom. L.R. 461; 14 A. 242; 15 C.L.J. 323=13 Cr. L.J. 233=14 Ind. Cas. 667. A record of the examination of the accused under the provisions of this section is obligatory and where the absence of it causes serious prejudice to the accused the trial is vitiated and must be set aside, 52 G. 446. The rules laid down in this section as to the mode of recording statements are applicable to confessions taken before inquiry or trial under S. 164, supra, and to examination of accused under S. 342, supra, 1883 A.W.N. 243. This section applies only to inquiries and trials and does not apply to investigations, 10 B.H.C.R. 166. The examination may take place either before the commencement of the inquiry resulting in the commitment of the accused or during inquiry when the accused is questioned under S. 209 and S. 342, supra, 21 B. 495 at 498, but such examination cannot be had before the stage at which the examination of the accused is authorised, 2 C.W.N. 702. This section does not apply to proceedings under S. 202, supra, as the person examined was not in the position of an accused who was being tried for any offence, 32 C. 1033.

Sub-section (1): Any Court other than a High Court.—No special provision is made for recording the examination of the accused by the High Courts. S. 353, infra only deals with the manner of taking down evidence.

Every question put and every answer given must be recorded in full.—“Statements of accused persons should, as far as practicable be recorded in the language used by the accused, both answers and, be it noted, questions, being taken down as nearly as possible in the actual words. A statement may imperceptibly change its meaning in the process of passing through the mind of another person, who expresses in different, though possibly, in better language what he considers to be the true meaning of the deponent but who has a preconception of the facts in his mind to which he is unconsciously aiming the narrative to conform".—Report Eng. Pol. Commission. To understand correctly the statement of the accused it is provided that every question put to him and every answer given by him must be recorded in full, but questions should not be put in the nature of cross-examination. Nor should they be put in such a way as to elicit incriminating answers from him, 6 C.L.R. 331; 13 A. 343, but the mere absence of questions in the accused's statement would not make it inadmissible in evidence, 12 C.L.R. 120. Unless the accused is prejudiced in his defence, 28 Cr. L.J. 341=100 Ind. Cas. 821. Confessions under S. 164, supra, are to be recorded in the manner provided by this section, and S. 533, infra, will not render a confession admissible when no attempt at all has been made to conform to the provisions of this section, 9 M. 224, but when it is not obligatory on a Magistrate holding an inquiry to record a statement in writing, such statement or confession may be proved by the oral testimony of the Magistrate, 45 M. 230.

In the language in which he is examined.—When the statement was made in one language and communicated in another language to the Magistrate through a sworn interpreter and again translated by the Magistrate into English and so recorded, the High Court in 21 C. 642 at 660 observed—"The law requires ordinarily that such a statement should be recorded in the language of the person making it, the object being so represent the very words and expressions used as to ensure accuracy, and prevent misrepresentation or misconstruction of what was said. If such a record is not practicable the law directs that the statement be recorded in the language of the Court or in English. If, however, as in this case, a second translation be made, and the statement be recorded as so understood, the accuracy which the law contemplates is made more remote." If an interpreter is employed, the examination should be recorded in the language in which it is communicated to the Court by the interpreter, 5 C. 826. If the answers to the questions put to the accused were not taken down in accordance with the provisions of this section, it is doubtful whether such a defect could be cured by S. 533, infra, 15 C. 593 (F.B.).

In the language of the Court.—The language of the Court is to be determined by the Local Government under S. 533, infra.

Shall be shown or read to him.—The examination of the accused after it is recorded in full is to be shown or read to him and not merely read over to him as contemplated by S. 360, supra. See 24 Cr. L.J. 497=72 Ind. Cas. 961.

The record shall be signed by the accused.—The recorded statement when not signed by the accused is inadmissible in evidence until the defect is remedied as provided by S. 533, infra, 1883 A.W.N. 243; 1896 A.W.N. 161; want of signature of the accused to the recorded statement will not vitiate the conviction if the record is admitted and used in evidence without objection, 11 B.H.C.R. 237. The omission to obtain the signature or mark of the accused to a confession was a defect which did not affect the defence on the merits and the defect was cured by S. 533, infra, and though the record of the confession is inadmissible, parol evidence could be given as to the terms of the confession and used against the accused, 23 B. 221; 4 Bom. L.R. 783, and objection to the admission in evidence of such unsigned statement may be waived and could not be taken as a ground in appeal, 11 Bom. L.R. 237. But when no record whatever was made of such a confession, S. 533, infra has no application, for that section only provides for cases where a confession recorded did not strictly comply with the provisions of this section, 35 A. 260. When the accused cannot sign his name, his mark is sufficient for the requirements of this section, Weir II, 437. A thumb impression affixed to a confession by an accused who is able to write his name is not a signature under clause (52) of S. 3 of the General Clauses Act. Even a mark is to be considered a signature only in the case of a person unable to write his name, 32 C. 550. Refusal of the accused to sign the statement is an offence punishable under S. 180, I.P.C., 39 A. 399. The provision as to the accused signing the record is merely directory of what the procedure should be. The section itself says that the record shall be signed by the accused but it imposes no penalty on him if he does not sign it. The procedure indicated involves the Magistrate offering the record for the accused's signature but it does not empower the Magistrate to require his signature. It is only when a person refuses to sign a statement, which a public servant is legally empowered to require him to sign that he renders himself liable to punishment, 3 Cr. L.J. 203—3 L.B.R. 199 following 4 B. 13. But see 15 A.L.J. 291 which differs from the view taken in 4 B. 13.

Magistrate or Judge shall certify with his own hand.—The certificate need not be written by the presiding officer of the Court. It is sufficient if it is signed by him, 1900 A.W.N. 203; 8 W.R. (Cr.) 55. Unlike S. 164, supra this section does not prescribe any particular form for the certificate. Omission to certify the confession in the manner provided by this section is not such a material error as will justify the High Court in setting aside the conviction, Weir II, 436. A certificate which contained the words "taken by me," but did not mention that the statement was taken in his hearing, was treated as substantial compliance with this section, 5 C. 958, and the defect in the certificate could be cured by examining the Magistrate, 22 M. 15; 23 B. 221; 3 C.W.N. 387; 8 C.W.N. 22.

Sub-section (3).—The memorandum mentioned in this sub-section must be wholly written and signed by the Magistrate himself with his own hand and shall be annexed to the record, but it is not necessary that an English memorandum referred to herein should be made in respect of confessions recorded under S. 164, supra as the manner of recording such confessions is fully set out in sub-sections (1) and (2) of this section, 14 C. 539; this attestation is unnecessary when the confession is made to the trying Magistrate as such confession amounts to an admission of the accused on which the Magistrate may convict him without any further record, 3 C. 756.

Sub-section (4).—S. 263 deals with the preparation of record in cases where there is no appeal in summary trials. In a summary trial of a warrant case, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to take down the questions put and the answers given in detail, 6 Pat. 504.

365. Every High Court established by Royal Charter and the Chief Courts of Oudh and Sind† shall, from time to time, by general rule, prescribe the manner in which evidence shall be taken down in cases coming before the Court, and the evidence shall be taken down in accordance with such rule.

Record of evidence in High Court.

Amendment.—The words 'and the Chief Courts of Oudh and Sind' have been newly added. The word "may" has been altered into "shall" and this makes it obligatory on the High Courts to prescribe the manner in which evidence should be taken down in cases coming before them, and for the words "and the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in accordance with the rule (if any) so prescribed" the words "the evidence shall be taken down in accordance with such rule" have been substituted. Under this section a Judge is not bound to record evidence in his own hand. All that the section requires is that there should be a record of the evidence. None of the High Courts have yet framed any rules under this section.

CHAPTER XXVI.

OF THE JUDGMENT.

"Courts have but one function, that is to insure just and righteous judgments between parties who are not able to settle their differences. Criminal Courts deal with the State on the one hand and the offenders against its laws on the other. Both sides have the right to demand that the judgments of the Court shall speak the truth in every case. If the accused is guilty he should be so adjudged by the Court. If he is innocent, every consideration demands that he be acquitted. It is the final judgment of the Court, not the method of pronounced is open Court although it is written and even signed, 11 A.L.J. 743=14 Cr. L.J. 562=21 Ind. Cas. 162. As to what is meant by open Court see S. 352 supra. Where a Sessions Judge at the end of a trial wrote a judgment setting forth the finding of the Assessors and adding his own finding agreeing with the Assessors that the accused were not guilty, and acquitted them on a later date prefixed to it a more detailed judgment giving full reasons, it was held that the error in procedure was a mere irregularity cured by S. 537 infra, 43 M. 913 (F.B.). See 23 C. 502. When a Presidency Magistrate at the conclusion of the case passed a sentence orally and wrote his judgment afterwards, it was held that this is only an irregularity and not an illegality. The legality or illegality of a judgment in consequence of its delivery after sentence is a question which can only be answered in the light of circumstances of each case, 13 Bom. L.R. 635=12 Cr. L. J. 457=11 Ind. Cas. 993. A Magistrate should not pronounce judgment in the absence of the accused. Where an accused person present throughout a trial when evidence was taken, absconded, and on his re-arrest the Magistrate re-pronounced his judgment which he had pronounced during his absence, it was held that S. 537 infra applied to the case, Ratanlal 323, but when pronouncing a judgment of acquittal, it is unnecessary to have the attendance of the accused. A judgment is not considered as delivered as required by this section unless and until it is written, signed, dated, and pronounced in open Court. The last three requisites must take place on the same occasion, 40 M. 108.

Loss of judgment.—The Court has inherent power in case of loss or destruction of a judgment or a judicial record to re-write from memory the substance of it and place it on record, 38 M. 498 ; 11 C.L.J. 243 at 238 ; 8 C.L.J. 521 ; 25 M.L.J. 555. The loss of record after conviction is no ground for acquitting the accused for the logical conclusion from such an argument would be that in the event of a wholesale destruction of records by fire or earthquake etc., all the accused whose records have been so lost and who sought relief in appeal or revision would be entitled to acquittal. There is no authority in law for such a proposition, 18 Cr. L.J. 737=49 Ind. Cas. 737.

367. (1) Every such judgment shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code, be written by the presiding officer of the Court or from the dictation of such presiding officer in the language of the Court, or in English ; and shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for the decision ; and shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and where it is not written by the presiding officer with his own hand, every page of such judgment shall be signed by him.

(3) When the conviction is under the Indian Penal Code and it is doubtful under which of two sections, or under which of two parts of the same section, of that Code the offence falls, the Court shall distinctly express the same and pass judgment in the alternative.

(4) If it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty.

(5) If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed :

Provided that, in trials by jury, the Court need not write a judgment, but the Court of Session shall record the heads of the charge to the jury.

(6) For the purposes of this section, an order under section 118 or section 123, sub-section (3), shall be deemed to be a judgment.

Amendment—The italicised words in sub-section (1) and sub-section (6) are new

Object of the section.—The object of the Legislature in formulating rules as to judgments was to insure that a criminal Court should consider the case before it, in its different headings and should on such a consideration arrive at definite conclusions and that the judgment should show that, in fact, that the Court had considered the evidence, in the case of first instance or in the case of an appeal and had found in a case of conviction that the facts proved to the satisfaction of the Court, brought an offence home to the accused person whom the Court convicted, 19 A. 506 (F.B.) ; 14 A. 242.

Particulars which a judgment should contain.—(1) Name of accused ; (2) offence charged ; (3) finding on all charges ; (4) punishment ; (5) list of witnesses, material objects and exhibits ; (6) opinion of Assessors in Assessor cases or verdict of Jury ; (7) signature and jurisdiction of the Presiding Officer.

Judgment shall be written by a Presiding Officer in the language of Court or in English.—The judgment is to be written by the Presiding Officer of the Court. But when the President of a Bench of Magistrates is in a minority as to conviction or acquittal, the judgment should be written by a member of the majority of the Bench to avoid a conviction without stating reasons or a judgment of acquittal, 51 M. 338. See also 29 Bom. L.R. 1870=28 Cr. L.J. 1025=108 Ind. Cas. 209. By the amendment made in sub-section (1) introducing the words "or from the dictation of such presiding officer," dictating judgments orally to a shorthand writer is permitted. But by a further amendment it is made imperative that each page of the judgment transcribed from dictation should be signed by the Presiding Officer. Even before this amendment it was held that where the judgment was not in the handwriting of the Magistrate, but was actually dictated and signed by him, it was a mere irregularity cured under S. 537, infra 4 C.L.J. 411. The judgment must be written in the language of the Court or in English and if this is not strictly complied with, it is only an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, 4 C.L.J. 232=4 Cr. L.J. 162.

Shall contain the point or points for determination.—"The decisions of judicial officers should be written in a uniform, concise and complete plan neither too prolix nor omitting all reference to facts. First there should be concise reference to the main facts and proofs on which the decision is founded ; secondly the deductions and reasons should follow and in due course will come the sentence or decisions. When the judgment makes a reference to witnesses or accused persons, Judges should not content themselves with merely mentioning their numbers in the list, but shall also mention their names. The name of the person referred to should be distinctly stated Oudh. Cr. Dig. p. 22, see also 19 A. 506 (F.B.). A judgment should fulfil the conditions in this section and shall contain the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reason for the decision, and the omission to write a proper judgment is not an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, 37 C. 194 ; 17 Bom. L.R. 1095 ; 27 Cr. L.J. 343=22 Ind. Cas. 835. Similarly an appellate Magistrate after hearing the parties passed the order "appeal dismissed under S. 423, Cr. P.C.," it was held that it did not fulfill the conditions of this section, and S. 537, infra cannot cure such a defect as it was not a case of omission or irregularity in a judgment, but the absence of a conscientious scruples to pass death sentences in proper cases, they ought to resign their office and not to throw on the High Court the unpleasant duty of issuing notice to the accused to show cause why death sentence should not be passed and then enhance the sentence to one of death, (M. H.O.) Cr. A. No. 835 of 1927. See 3 L.B.R. 163=4 Cr. L.J. 132. Judges have no right to devolve their responsibility in respect of the sentence in capital cases on a higher tribunal, 3 L.B.R. 111. To justify the passing of the lesser sentence of transportation for life in a conviction for murder, the Judge should find extenuating circumstances. Death sentence is the normal sentence in a conviction for murder and the mitigated sentence of transportation for life is the exception. It is not for the Judge to ask himself whether there are reasons for imposing the penalty of death but whether there are reasons for abstaining from doing so, 1 L.B.R. 216 (F.B.). The rule is that primarily capital sentence is the normal punishment for murder and sufficient reasons should be assigned for passing the lesser sentence, 29 Cr. L.J. 540=109 Ind. Cas. 364 following 22 Cr. L.J. 757=64 Ind. Cas. 277. The fact that the accused is a woman is no ground for not passing a death-sentence 1888 A.W.N. 134. The law gives a discretion to the trial Court as to which penalty should be imposed in a case of murder. But this sub-section enacts that where an accused person is convicted of an offence punishable with death and the Court sentences him to any other punishment the Court shall state reasons why the sentence of death was not passed. The Code does not indicate what reasons should be considered sufficient for refraining from passing a sentence of death in a conviction for murder. Judges must not shirk from doing their duty however painful it may be and must pass capital sentences in cases of deliberate murder, 3 L.B.R. 163=4 Cr. L.J. 132. The reasons justifying the infliction of the lesser penalty must be such as are in accord with the established legal principles. Intoxication furnishes no ground for mitigating the punishment. Voluntary drunkenness does not take away responsibility of any kind unless drunkenness amounts to unsoundness of mind so as to enable insanity to be pleaded by way of defence, or the degree of drunkenness is such as to establish incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime; drunkenness is neither a defence nor a palliation, 7 Lah. 141 where 1920 A.C. 479 and 13 Cr. L.J. 864=17 Ind. Cas. 800; 18 Cr. L.J. 868=41 Ind. Cas. 930 are followed. Even where the accused is a pregnant woman, capital sentence should be passed but the execution of the sentence shall be postponed till after delivery, 15 W.R. (Cr.) 66. See S 382, infra. The fact that the dead body of the murdered person has not been found should not influence the Court from refraining to pass a capital sentence, 3 A. 383. The fact that the accused murdered his victim to escape from custody is not a sufficient reason for inflicting a lesser penalty, 28 Cr. L.J. 860 (2)=104 Ind. Cas. 636. So also the fact that evidence for the prosecution is purely circumstantial, 1915 M.W.N. 34=16 M.L.T. 535=16 Cr. L.J. 14=26 Ind. Cas. 318. Youth alone in every case is not an extenuating circumstance as would justify the infliction of the lesser penalty, 29 Cr. L.J. 540=109 Ind. Cas. 364 following 22 Cr. L.J. 757=64 Ind. Cas. 277 but the age of the accused may be a sufficient ground for passing a lesser sentence, 11 C.W.N. 904; 1915 M.W.N. 34=16 M.L.T. 535 =16 Cr. L.J. 14=26 Ind. Cas. 318. Mere suspicion of a wife's fidelity is no extenuation for not passing death sentence, 30 L.W. 630=1929 M.W.N. 269. See notes at page 57.

Proviso.—The object of the heads of charge to the Jury is to inform the High Court, should occasion arise, of what direction the Judge gave in law to the Jury and the nature of his summing up of the evidence not only for the prosecution, but also for the defence, 1 Pat. L.J. 317; 34 C. 693; 36 C. 281; 39 A. 349; 26 C.W.N. 996; 43 C.L.J. 537. In trials by Jury, the Court of Session is bound to record the heads of the charge to the Jury and need not write a separate judgment. No doubt the law requires that the heads of charge to the Jury should be recorded but it is equally clear that as the law allows an appeal in cases tried by a Jury on the grounds of misdirection, the charge should be in such a form as to enable the Court of appeal to say and be satisfied that it was delivered with sufficient fullness to the Jury and that it is such as to enable the Court of appeal to say that all the points of law and fact were clearly and correctly explained to the Jury, having regard to the evidence adduced in the case, 29 Cr. L.J. 478=101 Ind. Cas. 698 following 34 C. 693; 30 C.W.N. 693. The heads of charge should include such statement as will enable an appellate Court to decide whether the evidence has been properly laid before the Jury or whether there has been any misdirection, 1903 A.W.N. 232. The Judge should give sufficient indication in his charge to the Jury that he has complied with the law, 25 C 736 and 561. It is not necessary that the heads of charge to the Jury should be reduced to writing before delivery of the charge, but they ought to be written as far as possible thereafter and when the facts are fresh in the Judge's mind, they should represent with absolute accuracy the substance of the charge and be such as to enable the High Court on appeal to see distinctly whether the case was fairly and properly placed before the Jury, 36 C. 231; 10 Bom. L.R. 565. The proviso does not require that the heads of charge to the Jury should be a verbatim reproduction of the Judge's observations. This is negatived by the language of the proviso itself. Where it is expressly stated that the judgment need not be written but merely the heads of charge and it is not feasible to have a verbatim report of the Session Judge's charge if he delivered it extemporarily as there is no staff of stenographers, as a rule available for such a purpose; Nor is it necessary that the charge must be written out, beforehand although many Sessions Judges do prepare their charges by writing out prior to the delivery. Such a practice would surprise most experienced Judges of Assize and would and must be a matter at times of considerable delay and inconvenience and not in the spirit of S. 297 of the Code which contemplates the Judge charging the Jury soon after the defence case and the prosecutor's reply, if any, are concluded or S. 296 which touches on the undesirability of the separation of the Jury prior to the charge. But whether the heads of charge are written out before delivery or not, or taken down verbatim they should be placed on record by the Judge as soon as it is possible for him to do so whilst what he said is fresh in his recollection. The record need not be meticulous or lengthy but it must give accurately the substance of what the Judge said to the Jury so that the High Court may, if occasion arises be able to ascertain from this record, whether the law and the facts relating to the case were fairly and properly put to the Jurors, which can only be decided by looking at the charge itself in the light of the circumstances of each case, 4 Pat. 626 following 1 Pat. L.J. 317=17 Cr. L.J. 353=35 Ind. Cas 657; 30 C.W.N. 693. The expression 'heads of charge' to the Jury must be construed reasonably and must be held to include such statements of the Judge as will enable an appellate Court to decide whether the evidence has been properly laid before the Jury or whether there has been misdirection, 10 Bom. L.R. 565; 1903 A.W.N. 232; 34 C 698 No doubt under this section a Judge is not required to write out in extenso, the charge which he addresses the Jury but the law requires that the Judge shall set forth in writing the headings of his charge to the Jury, and such headings afterwards form part of the record of the proceedings in the trial before him. As the term 'heads of charge' itself implies, the Judge must faithfully record the lines upon which he addressed the Jury, both on the evidence and on the law and the object of these heads is to inform the High Court should occasion arise, of what direction he gave in law to the Jury, and the nature of the summing up of the evidence not only of the prosecution but also of the defence. But the heads of charge do not purport, nor are they intended by Statute to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the Jury. It is undoubted law that it is the sole function of the Judge to direct the Jury on all matters of law and the Jury must take their direction in law from the Judge. It is equally certain that the Judge must present the main case for the prosecution and for the defence fairly for the consideration of the Jury. But this does not mean that he must in every particular and in every detail address himself to every suggestion put forward by the defence. His duty is fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and of the defence. And in doing so he is entitled to take into considerations the speeches made upon both sides, by the Crown and by the accused's Counsel in considering his presentation of the evidence to the Jury. The function of these heads is for the guidance and information of the High Court and it is for the Judges on appeal to construe the heads of charges as prepared by the Judge and see if from such heads the Judge has fairly and properly directed the Jury on points of law and whether he has fairly and properly reviewed the evidence for the prosecution and the defence. The Heads of charge should record in an intelligible form and with sufficient fairness the points of law and the directions given by the Judge to the Jury and the record should present with accuracy the substance of the charge by the Judge to the Jury. In considering the language used one must not peruse the heads of charge as they were in an indictment. The method of expression and its form may be unsatisfactory but if in substance from the frame of the Heads of charge what were the directions given to the Jury by the Judge and they were right and proper, then there can be no ground of complaint even though the phraseology and form adopted be open to question. What one has to see and consider from the words used is whether the directions given are fair and right. Mere informality in expression or in form would not be sufficient to invalidate a conviction. The High Court is to construe the charge as best it can and must bring its reasons and common sense upon the consideration of the record and if it is satisfied from a close inspection and examination of the record set forth by the Judge that he properly directed the Jury in points of law, it must decline to interfere with the verdict, 1 Pat. L.J. 317=17 Cr. L.J. 353 at 355=35 Ind. Cas. 637; following 34 C. 698; 38 C. 281; 12 A.L.J. 149=14 Cr. L.J. 638=21 Ind. Cas. 686. Where the case was tried partly by Jury and partly with aid of Assessors a reference to the heads of charge to the Jury is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section, but a judgment containing the particulars specified in this section, however brief, should be written with regard to the charge tried with aid of Assessors, Ratansal 426. It is very difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what amount of judgment a Judge should write in any particular case and particularly where he and the Jury are in fact performing two separate functions at the same time. A mere reference to the charge to the Jury on Assessor charges without complying with the provisions of this section as to a judgment is defective, 27 Cr. L.J. 1164=97 Ind. Cas. 748 following Ratansal 426; see also Cr. A. No. 647 of 1924; R. T. No. 17 of 1925 (M. H. C.). It is neither convenient nor commendable for a Judge to embody his summing up to Assessors in his judgment, but his doing so does not render the judgment illegal or invalid, 9 C.L.J. 55=10 Cr. L.J. 325=3 Ind. Cas. 625.

Sub section (6).—The sub-section is new and it makes it clear that judgments in security proceeding should conform to the provisions of the section. See 35 C. 138 in this connection.

to death, the sentence shall direct that he be hanged by the neck till he is dead.

(2) No sentence of transportation shall specify the place to which the person sentenced is to be transported.

Sentence of death.—See notes at p. 56-57. In some of the States in the United States of America execution is known as electrocution. The condemned person is put on the electric chair and death by electric shock takes place instantaneously. Sentence of death passed by Sessions Judges are subject to confirmation by the High Court to which the proceedings are referred (S. 374) Ss. 375 to 379 lay down the procedure to be followed by the High Court and Ss. 381 and 382 declare how sentences of death when confirmed by the High Court are to be executed. A Bill has been introduced in the Legislative Assembly to do away with death sentences.

Sentence of transportation.—To abolish this form of punishment a Bill has been introduced in the Legislature Assembly as far back as 1921 but the Bill has not yet become law till now. The Governor-General in Council is empowered to specify places in British India in which persons sentenced to transportation are to be confined and the Local Government is to make arrangements under the Prisoners' Act for the removal of such convicts.

law for the time being in force, or, in the case of a High Court established by a Royal Charter, by the Letters Patent of such High Court, no Court when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except to correct a clerical error.

Amendment.—The opening words of the section in italics are new. "The proposal to repeal the words 'other than the High Court' was intended to remove the possibility of reading S. 803 as if it gave the High Courts unlimited powers of altering or reviewing their judgments. But there are cases other than those referred to in Ss. 393 and 481 of the Code in which a review of judgment is possible. We would refer to S. 434 and also to clause 26 of the Letters Patent of the Presidency High Courts. The Indian Legislature has power to amend the Letters Patent of the High Courts and the amendment introduced by clause 27 might be interpreted as an intention to amend the Letters Patent in this respect. We have therefore redrafted the amendment so as to provide that no Court shall alter or review its judgment save as provided by or under any law for the time being in force or in the case of a High Court, by its Letters Patent." Rep. Sel. Committee.

Scope of the section.—The Code has been amended a number of times and the Legislature has not chosen to give power of review to any Court in a Criminal case, 46 M. 382 at 403. In criminal matters the High Court has no power to review or alter its judgment, once completed and passed; (1912) M.W.N. 932; 33 A. 134; 46 C. 60; 14 C. 42 (F.B.); 19 B. 732; 33 A. 134; 7 A. 672; 20 Cr. L.J. 447=51 Ind. Cas. 271; 46 M. 382; 47 M. 423 at 430; 10 B. 176 (F.B.); 50 M.L.J. 51=23 L.W. 56=27 Cr. L.J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000; 25 Cr. L.J. 370; 10 Cr. L.J. 514=3 Ind. Cas. 330; 14 Cr. L.J. 603=21 Ind. Cas. 477; 9 Cr. L.J. 305=1 Ind. Cas. 506, even though the original order was passed without hearing the petitioner, 23 M.L.J. 371=1912 M.W.N. 932=12 M.L.T. 350=13 Cr. L.J. 710=16 Ind. Cas. 518. Where a case is disposed of for default of appearance or where an order is passed to the prejudice of an accused person and by mistake or inadvertence no opportunity has been given to him to be heard in his defence such an order is not one to which the Full Bench ruling in 14 C. 42 is applicable, 46 C. 60 at 63; 47 M. 423 at 431; 50 M.L.J. 51=23 L.W. 56=27 Cr. L.J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000. Where a case had been decided previously by the High Court on a reference by the Sessions Judge without hearing Counsel who had entered appearance, a second application for revision impugning the Magistrate's order on the same grounds as was put forward by the Sessions Judge will not be entertained by the High Court. No review lies under the Code although it cannot be said that a Judge cannot review the judgment or order in any case. It is contrary to all propriety that a revision or a review application should be as if could be heard by a Judge different from the Judge who heard the first application, 25 A.L.J. 1010=29 Cr. L.J. 83=103 Ind. Cas. 680. But where the High Court returned a reference made to it by the Sessions Judge without finally disposing of the case, a different Bench duly constituted had jurisdiction to hear and determine finally the case, the question whether the High Court could interfere suo motu and pass final orders was left open, 53 M.L.J. 633=1927 M.W.N. 835; similarly where the High Court passed a substantive term of imprisonment altering an order under S. 502 (1A), infra, releasing the accused on probation of good conduct by the trial court, without notice to the accused had been served and consequently there was no appearance for the accused, the High Court held it had power to vacate the order and re-hear the case after due notice to the accused, 28 Cr. L.J. 831=104 Ind. Cas. 447; see also 47 M. 423. But so long as the order is not signed it can be altered, 33 C. 828; 46 M. 382. So also if the judgment is not sealed as required it is not final, and it is open to the Judge who passed the order to alter it, 33 A. 134, following 21 A. 177 and 27 A. 92; 50 M.L.J. 51=23 L.W. 56. The proper course for the High Court in the case of an erroneous decision when once it has signed its judgment is to report the case to the Local Government under S. 401, infra; see R.T. No. 40 of 1905 (M.H.C.) where the learned Judges after confirming the conviction and sentence of death passed on the accused entertained serious doubts as to the propriety of the conviction the next day and holding that the High Court had no power to review the judgment already pronounced in open Court made a recommendation to Government under S. 401, infra, for a free pardon. But it was held in 46 C. 60 that when a case is disposed of merely for default of appearance or where an order is passed by mistake or by inadvertence without hearing the accused in his defence and to his prejudice the order of the High Court in such a case may be reviewed. See 37 M. 428, 10 C.L.J. 80=10 Cr. L.J. 287=3 Ind. Cas. 393; neither this section nor S. 439, infra, empowers the High Court to review the judgment of one or more of its Judges in a criminal appeal or revision, 46 M. 382.

Judgment.—The word "Judgment" is not defined in the Code. In the absence of any definition to indicate anything to the contrary it must be taken to mean and refer to the judicial act of the Court in finally disposing of the case and must, therefore, indicate only the order of the Court when it is read out and signed by the Judge and cannot be meant to refer to the formal order on the judgment to be subsequently drawn up and issued merely as a clerical act by the ministerial officers of the Court, 50 M.L.J. 51 at 53=23 L.W. 56=(1926) M.W.N. 147=27 Cr. L.J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000; 26 Cr. L.J. 543=85 Ind. Cas. 383. An order of dismissal under S. 203 or S. 253, supra, is not a judgment. It is sufficiently clear from Ss. 366 and 367, supra, that it is intended to indicate the final order in a trial terminating in either the conviction or acquittal of the accused, 31 M. 543; 29 M. 126 (F.B.); 29 C. 726; 28 C. 652 (F.B.); 45 M. 352 at 402; 46 C. 60; 30 Cr. L.J. 749=117 Ind. Cas. 243. A judgment is a decision which decides a case finally so far as the Court trying the case is concerned, but the order of discharge is not a final order, 9 Bom. L.R. 250; 27 C.W.N. 651. An order under S. 421, infra, summarily rejecting an appeal is a judgment, 19 B. 732. The irregularity of disposing of two matters by one judgment or to record the evidence as two matters together is only an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, 56 C. 400 at 408.

Save as otherwise provided by this code.—See S. 395 and S. 484, infra. S. 395 refers to whipping which cannot be carried out, in which case the sentence can be revised. S. 484 contemplates remitting sentences and discharging the accused punished for contempt, on his tendering an apology.

By Letters Patent of such Court.—It has been now made clear that the High Court's power to review is governed by its Letters Patent. In criminal matters, clause (25), of the Letters Patent confers full power to review a case decided in the exercise of its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction on a point of law and such power of review cannot apply to a case decided in the exercise of its appellate or revisional criminal jurisdiction, 30 Cr. L.J. 749=117 Ind. Cas. 243. The exception contained in this section is with reference to cases decided by a Judge of the High Court presiding over the Sessions when points are reserved for consideration by the Full Bench or on the certificate of the Advocate General, 45 M. 382 at 401.

Shall alter or review its judgment.—The term 'Judgment' is not defined in the Code. What is contemplated by the term 'Judgment' in this section is only a decision on the merits. In 21 C. 121 it was held that a judgment means the expression of the opinion of the Judge or Magistrate arrived at after due consideration of the evidence and the arguments. In 46 C. 60 it was held that where a case is disposed of merely for default of appearance or an order is passed to the prejudice of the accused and by mistake or inadvertence no opportunity was given to him to be heard, the High Court may review the same. A dismissal for default of appearance is not a judgment within the meaning of this section and as such is open to review by the High Court which can set aside the dismissal and restore the case to file, 30 Cr. L.J. 749=117 Ind. Cas. 243, see also 47 M. 428. An order under S. 421, infra, is a judgment and being final, it cannot be reviewed, 19 B. 732. So also orders passed in miscellaneous proceedings cannot be altered or reviewed, 19 Cr. L.J. 225=43 Ind. Cas. 817; 35 C. 350; 21 C.W.N. 344=18 Cr. L.J. 555=39 Ind. Cas. 700; 16 Cr. L.J. 584=30 Ind. Cas. 136; 22 B. 949. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to review a final order passed by him under S. 145, supra, 35 C. 350. Nor can a District Magistrate review his previous order refusing further inquiry into a case of discharge under S. 436, infra, 13 Cr. L.J. 301=14 Ind. Cas. 765. Alteration or review of judgment is not allowed by a Magistrate after it is signed and delivered even where the error is patent on the face of the judgment. The only course left open to him is to make a reference to the High Court under S. 438, infra, through the Sessions Court; 6 Bom. L.R. 360; 22 B. 949; 10 C.W.N. 1062. Omission to proceed with a charge under S. 75, I.P.O., cannot be reviewed after passing sentence on the main charge having regard to the provisions of this section, 42 B. 202. Where a Judge added a note to his judgment throwing doubts on the conclusions arrived at by him in the judgment, it was held that the procedure adopted was most unwarranted, 2 A. 33 but where a Judge on appeal set aside the conviction but failed to order a retrial, it was held that he was not precluded from making an order of retrial subsequently, 3 M. 48. An accidental omission to pass an order as to restoration of property under S. 520, infra, can be corrected under this section, 24 Cr. L.J. 159=71 Ind. Cas. 511; making of an order as to costs when the original order passed did not contain any provision as to costs is not an alteration of the previous order, 57 C. 574.

370. Instead of recording a judgment in manner hereinbefore provided, a Presidency Magistrate shall record the following particulars:—

Presidency Magistrate's judgment.

- (a) the serial number of the case ;
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence ;
- (c) the name of the complainant (if any) ;
- (d) the name of the accused person, and (except in the case of an European British subject) his parentage and residence ;
- (e) the offence complained of or proved ;
- (f) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any) ;
- (g) the final order ;
- (h) the date of such order ; and
- (i) in all cases in which the Magistrate inflicts imprisonment, or fine exceeding two hundred rupees, or both, a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction.

Scope of the section.—This section deals with judgments of Presidency Magistrates. A Presidency Magistrate should record the statement of the accused under S. 312 and this section. Clause (f) of this section says that the plea of the accused and his examination, if any, are to be recorded. It is the duty of the Magistrate to record the substance of the examination and the plea of the accused, 27 Cr. L.J. 110=91 Ind. Cas. 512. This section does not however require that a Presidency Magistrate should write a judgment. All it requires is that he should record certain particulars and in the case of a conviction and sentence of imprisonment or fine exceeding rupees two hundred, a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. He need not comply with the provisions of S 367, supra, 30 C.W.N. 931=27 Cr. L.J. 1131=87 Ind. Cas. 551. This section itself does not say how the particulars are to be recorded, but there are two other sections in the Code from which light has to be gathered on this matter viz. Ss 362 and 364, supra. The last words of S 364 (1) namely 'or in the case of a trial by a Presidency Magistrate' were inserted in the Amending Act of 1923, thus making the other sub-sections of that section inapplicable to a record made by a Presidency Magistrate of an examination of an accused person in the course of a trial held by him. The same Amending Act introduced two sub-sections in S. 362, supra, namely, sub-sections (2A) and (4). Sub-section (4) of S. 362 dispensed with the recording of evidence and the framing of a charge in non-appealable cases in trials by Presidency Magistrates but said nothing about the record of examination of the accused. Sub-section (2 A) to S. 362 expressly provided for a memorandum of the substance of the examination of an accused being kept by the Presidency Magistrate signed by him in appealable cases only. The result is that non-appealable cases are now left severely alone confined to the protection that this section by its own terms would afford. It is idle to imagine that the Legislature while expressly taking away the necessity to record the evidence and to frame a charge as it has done by enacting sub-section (4) of S 362, supra, in non-appealable cases thought of a record in full or of the substance of the examination of the accused in such cases. The result is that while the column provided for the purpose in the form prescribed in this section must be filled up no hard and fast rule was contemplated as to how that should be done. The entry in column

(f) of the word "denies" was held sufficient compliance with law, 33 C.W.N. 543=49 C.L.J. 221=30 Cr. L.J. 526=115 Ind. Cas. 604. It requires that in cases where a Presidency Magistrate records a conviction he shall record a brief statement of the reasons which induced the Magistrate to believe the evidence for the prosecution. A judgment to the effect "I convict the accused, I believe evidence of the complainant and his witnesses" does not satisfy the requirements of this section, 17 Bom. L.R. 890=7 Cr. L. Rev. 2=16 Cr. L.J. 771=31 Ind. Cas. 371. It is not sufficient for him to record "that the offence is proved", 27 C. 461. The Magistrate should record his reasons for the conviction in such a manner that the High Court in revision may judge whether there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to support a conviction, and failure to do so is a grave irregularity, which in most cases would be sufficient for interference, 46 M. 253 but where all the record before the trial Court, is available before the High Court in revision, omission to record reasons will not be a substantial failure of justice, ibid., at 255. The law does not demand a full and complete statement of reasons, 31 C. 583; 27 C. 461; 13 C. 272; 6 C. 579 and in petty cases of fine, the decision may be recorded shortly, 14 C. 174. Although the section requires only a brief statement of the reasons for conviction instead of a judgment, this must be done, in such a way that the High Court in revision may be in a position to judge whether there were sufficient materials before the lower Court to support the conviction, 8 C.W.N. 587; see also 46 M. 253; 23 Cr. L.J. 602=63 Ind. Cas. 826; 21 Cr. L.J. 656=57 Ind. Cas. 674; 17 Bom. L.R. 890=16 Cr. L.J. 771=31 Ind. Cas. 371; 27 C. 461; 13 C. 272; and the omission to record some of the particulars required by this section is only an irregularity, 27 Cr. L.J. 1131=97 Ind. Cas. 651. Under S. 441, infra, a Presidency Magistrate when submitting the records of any proceedings called for by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction may submit with the records a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision, practically a new judgment setting forth any facts which he thinks material after perusing the grounds set forth in the memorandum of revision filed in the High Court, and the High Court is bound to consider such statement before setting aside the decision or order sought to be revised.

Previous conviction.—When enhanced punishment is awarded on account of previous convictions it should be set forth in the Calendar, when the previous convictions were charged and proved or confessed, Rule 172, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. This should be set out justifying the sentence imposed, 8 C.W.N. 587.

The provisions of the section do not apply to cases under Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, XIII of 1859, 27 C. 131; 4 C.W.N. 253; 20 M. 235; 4 M. 234; 11 A. 252; 16 B. 368; 6 Bom. L.R. 255.

371. (1) On the application of the accused a copy of the judgment, or, when he so desires, a translation in his own language, if practicable, or in the language of the Court, shall be given to him without delay. Such copy shall, in any case other than a summons-case, be given free of cost.

Copy of judgment, etc., to be given to accused on application.

(2) In trials by jury in a Court of Session, a copy of the heads of the charge to the jury shall, on the application of the accused, be given to him without delay and free of cost.

(3) When the accused is sentenced to death by a Sessions Judge, such Judge shall further inform him of the period within which, if he wishes to appeal, his appeal should be preferred.

Case of person sentenced to death.

This section and B. 548, infra, are distinct. This section refers to a copy of the judgment in the language of the accused the grant of which is compulsory as the accused is entitled to have a copy in his own language. See B. 548, infra, which enacts, that copies of proceedings ought to be furnished to the persons affected thereby, Court-fee payable on a copy or translation of judgment in a case other than a summons case a copy of the heads of charge to the Jury, and a copy or translation of the judgment in a summons-case, when the accused is in jail is remitted in the exercise of the powers conferred by B. 35 of the Court Fees Act by the Governor-General in Council. See Rule 276(c) and (d) of Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Similarly a copy of the charge framed under B. 210, supra, is exempted.

Sub-section (3).—Limitation for appeals to the High Court in cases of persons sentenced to death is 7 days under Sch. II, Art. 150 of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908. But in practice this is of very little importance, for in Referred trials the High Court is bound to go into the whole evidence to satisfy itself whether the conviction and sentence could be sustained and it makes no difference whether the accused has preferred an appeal or not.

372. The original judgment shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and, where the original is recorded in a different language from that of the Court and the accused so requires, a translation thereof into the language of the Court shall be added to such record.

Judgment when to be translated.

Court of Session to send copy of finding and sentence to District Magistrate.

373. In cases tried by the Court of Session, the Court shall forward a copy of its finding and sentence (if any) to the District Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the trial was held.

The concluding words of the section are important. If there is more than one District Magistrate in any Sessions division consisting of two or more districts as contemplated by B. 7, supra, a copy of the finding and sentence should be sent only to the District Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the trial was held.

CHAPTER XXVII.

OF THE SUBMISSION OF SENTENCES FOR CONFIRMATION.

374. When the Court of Session passes sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court.

Sentence of death to be submitted by Court of Session.

Scope of the section.—The provisions of this section do not require the convictions but only sentences of death to be submitted, for confirmation by the High Court, 17 Bom. L.R. 1072 at 1074; 5 N.W.P.H.C.R. 130. The heading of the Chapter is, 'of submission of sentences for confirmation'. See also Ss. 378 and 381, infra. No considered case is cited in which it was held that upon argument that the evidence in support of the facts found by the Jury is laid open by the mere submission to the unrestricted judgment of the confirming Court, 17 Bom. L.R. 1072 at 1073=16 Cr. L.J. 818=31 Ind. Cas. 994; 2 C.W.N. 49; Ratanlal 710. Even in cases where the trial is by a Jury, the High Court must go into the facts before confirming the conviction, 2 C.W.N. 43 at 50; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 57; 30 C.W.N. 166=27 Cr. L.J. 378=92 Ind. Cas. 890. Where a Jury unanimously found the accused guilty of murder and the Judge accepting the verdict convicted and sentenced the accused to the extreme penalty of law subject to the confirmation of the sentence by the High Court under this section, the High Court, on the evidence on record, held that it was utterly unsafe to accept the evidence adduced as conclusive and therefore acquitted the accused, 29 Cr. L.J. 833=111 Ind. Cas. 335. The entire case is open to the High Court under this section but that assumes that whatever has happened before the case comes for confirmation before the High Court has been done in strict accordance with the provisions of law and if the High Court finds that there has been no proper trial of the case before the Sessions Court, then the only course open to the High Court is to set aside the conviction and sentence and to direct a retrial of the case, 31 C.W.N. 881=36 C.L.J. 31=28 Cr. L.J. 732=103 Ind. Cas. 790.

Even where a sentence of death is passed on the unanimous verdict of a Jury the whole case is re-opened before the High Court both on matters of fact and on matters of law, 17 Bom. L.R. 1072; Ratanlal 710, see S. 418 (2). The High Court when dealing with the case as a Court of Reference is entitled to rely on evidence rejected by the Sessions Judge, 25 B. 168.

It is not proper for a Sessions Judge when referring a sentence of death for confirmation to recommend the prisoner for mercy. The law allows an alternative sentence and the responsibility of deciding whether there are sufficient grounds for not sentencing the prisoner to death vests upon the Sessions Judge himself, Rule 218, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

For warrant of commitment under sentence of death and warrant of execution of a sentence of death, see Form Nos. XXXIV and XXXV of Sch. V of the Code.

375. (1) If when such proceedings are submitted, the High Court thinks that a further inquiry should be made into, or additional evidence taken upon, any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person, it may make such inquiry or take such evidence itself, or direct it to be made or taken by the Court of Session.

Power to direct further inquiry to be made or additional evidence to be taken.

(2) Such inquiry shall not be made nor shall such evidence be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors, and, unless the High Court otherwise directs, the presence of the convicted person may be dispensed with when the same is made or taken.

(3) When the inquiry and the evidence (if any), are not made and taken by the High Court, the result of such inquiry and the evidence shall be certified to such Court.

Under this section the High Court may itself record further evidence and the presence of the accused is not necessary, 23 M. 523, or it may admit evidence rejected by the Sessions Court, 25 B. 168, or it may order a new trial on the ground that the evidence was incomplete and further evidence was required, 6 C.W.N. 921; 19 C.W.N. 856. In 12 Cr. L.J. 412, the Chief Court of Punjab made a local inspection of the scene of crime, and admitted also further evidence in an appeal from a conviction for murder.

Power of High Court to confirm sentence or annul conviction.

376. In any case submitted under section 374, whether tried with the aid of assessors or by jury, the High Court—

(a) may confirm the sentence, or pass any other sentence warranted by law, or

(b) may annul the conviction, and convict the accused of any offence of which the sessions Court might have convicted him, or order a new trial on the same or an amended charge, or

(c) may acquit the accused person :

Provided that no order of confirmation shall be made under this section until the period allowed for preferring an appeal has expired, or, if an appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal is disposed of.

Practice.—There has been a practice long established and well recognised that when an accused appears before the Judge on a capital charge, the Judge is accustomed to request a member of the bar who practices before him to undertake the defence of the accused. That obligation has always been recognised by the profession which always have willingly undertaken the defence of the accused so charged. Where a Judge did not appoint or request any member of the profession to conduct the defence and the case was practically tried ex parte and the difficulties which appear in the evidence have not been cleared up in the course of the cross-examination either by the accused himself or the Judge, the High Court finding it unable to confirm the conviction on the evidence as it stood under sub-section (b) of this section ordered a new trial asking the Judge to see that some gentleman of the bar represented the accused before him, 19 C.W.N. 566=18 Cr. L.J. 431=29 Ind. Cas. 321. In any case which comes before the High Court or a Court of Session, the Court may engage a pleader to defend an accused person if the charge is such that a capital sentence is possible and the accused has not engaged a pleader and is not possessed of sufficient means to do so, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 150; the Court of Session or the High Court shall use its discretion as to the appointment of a pleader for the defence and if there are several accused and their defences are such, that it appears to be undesirable to entrust the defence of all the accused to one pleader, more pleaders may be appointed as the necessity of the case may require, ibid Rule 152 and the pleader or pleaders so appointed shall be furnished with the necessary papers and allowed sufficient time to prepare for the defence, ibid, Rule 153.

The High Court may confirm or annul conviction.—Under this section the High Court is entitled to go into facts even when the conviction is by a Judge assisted by Jury although the trial was by a Jury. S. 375, supra, and this section go clearly to show that the High Court must deal with the case upon the facts as well as with reference to any questions of law arising in it and that its powers are not limited in the way they are in an appeal from a conviction had in a trial by Jury, 2 C.W.N. 49 at 50; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 57; 23 Cr. L.J. 33 (F.B.) =64 Ind. Cas. 657. Under this section the High Court is entitled to convict the accused when acquitting him on a charge of murder of the offence under S. 201, I.P.C., causing disappearance of the evidence of murder, provided there was evidence on record to sustain it even though the trial Court had not recorded a finding on that count, 14 Cr. L.J. 278=19 Ind. Cas. 710. See also the recent decision of the Privy Council in 6 Lah. 226 where it was held that the conviction for the lesser offence under S. 201 I.P.C. could be sustained even though there had been no express charge under S. 201 where there was evidence on record to establish the charge. In 17 Bom. L.R. 1072 at 1073=16 Cr. L.J. 818=31 Ind. Cas. 993, it is stated thus "It appears to be the practice of this Court that where a prisoner has been sentenced to death even though the conviction was had on the unanimous verdict of a Jury, the whole case is re-opened before the High Court both on matters of fact as well as on matters of law. I desire however to reserve my opinion as to the correctness of the practice to which I have alluded, should the question of its correctness ever arise for judicial decision." But it was held before the amendment that this will not apply to the case of a co-accused not sentenced to death, and an accused on whom a sentence of transportation for life is passed may be in a worse position than a co-accused sentenced to death, 2 C.W.N. 49; 11 B.L.R. 14, but now see the new sub-section (2) to S. 418, infra, which renders obsolete the above decisions, and enacts that in a case tried by a Jury when any person is sentenced to death, any other person convicted with him and given a lesser sentence may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law.

Or order a new trial.—The High Court when acting under this section may set aside the conviction and order a new trial when it is of opinion that the evidence was incomplete and further evidence was necessary, 6 C.W.N. 129.

Proviso.—It is significant that under this proviso it is only after the disposal of any appeal which could be on a matter of law where the trial is by Jury under S. 418, infra, that the power of confirmation or otherwise of the sentence of death can be exercised by the High Court, 17 Bom. L.R. 1072 at 1074=16 Cr. L.J. 818=31 Ind. Cas. 994

377. In every case so submitted, the confirmation of the sentence or any new sentence or order passed by the High Court, shall, when such Court consists of two or more Judges, be made, passed and signed by at least two of them.

Confirmation or new sentence to be signed by two Judges.

378. When any such case is heard before a Bench of Judges and such Judges are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before another Judge, and such Judge, after such hearing as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

Procedure in case of difference of opinion

Scope of the section.—This section lays down the procedure to be followed in cases where there arises a difference of opinion between the Judges hearing a case submitted for confirmation of sentence, when such Judges are equally divided. The case with their opinions shall be laid before a third Judge and the judgment or order shall follow the opinion of the third Judge. A deliberate opinion of one Judge in favour of acquittal upon a grave question of the weight of evidence in a case heard by a Bench of two Judges should ipso facto constitute in most cases sufficient reason for creating such serious doubt that the benefit of that doubt should be given to the prisoner, 1886 A.W.N. 275. This view of Mahmood, J. was dissented from by a Bench in the decision reported in 1887 A.W.N. 125 on the ground that Mahmood, J. omitted to give any weight to the fact that in such a case as he was putting the Judge who actually heard the witness give evidence and saw their demeanour at the trial and had found the guilt of the prisoner established. The case of Ramawami Goundan reported in 27 M. 271 is a typical case under this section. There the Sessions Judge of Coimbatore sentenced the accused to death, subject to the confirmation of the High Court. In hearing the Referred Trial, Sir Subramania Ayyar, Offg. C.J., and Boddam, J. differed in their opinion, Boddam, J. was for setting aside the conviction, while the Offg. C.J. was for confirming the conviction but for commuting the sentence of death, to one of transportation for life. The case was referred to a third Judge, Sir Dashyam Ayyangar, J., under the section, and that learned Judge while confirming the conviction sentenced the accused to death as he found no sufficient grounds for commuting the sentence to one of transportation for life. See for a converse case, 17 C.W.N. 1213=14 Cr. L.J. 642=21 Ind. Cas. 882, where the third Judge before whom the case was laid passed a sentence of transportation for life on the ground that one of the Judges had expressed strong dissatisfaction of the prosecution evidence and that the capital sentence was hanging over the head of the accused for six months for which he was not responsible. See also 33 C.W.N. 1226 See also 1887 A.W.N. 125. If in any case of murder under S. 302, I.P.O., one finds two learned Judges are in disagreement over the question of sentence one favouring death penalty and the other recommending that transportation for life would meet the ends of justice, that in itself is a sufficient ground for holding that death penalty should not be inflicted. This is not an inflexible rule or that the third Judge to whom the matter is referred on the question of sentence is not required to go into the case himself or to Judge for himself whether the case is a fit one for inflicting the death penalty, 33 C.W.N. 1226 at 1234. It was proposed to amend this state of the law, especially as to what occurred in 27 M. 271. where the third Judge differing from the two learned Judges passed a sentence of death, to have the case heard before three Judges or by another Judge sitting along with the two Judges who differed, but the amendment was not accepted, and the law now remains the same as before.

After such hearing as he thinks fit.—The third Judge is not bound to hear the parties. It is left to his discretion to hear or not, but as a matter of practice the third Judge hears the case fully since a question of life and death is involved.

Judgment or order shall follow his opinion.—Under this section the third Judge is entitled to order a retrial of the accused. See 16 L.W. 418.

Court for the confirmation of a sentence of death, the proper officer of the High Court shall, without delay, after the order of confirmation or other order has been made by the High Court, send a copy of the order under the seal of the High Court, and attested with his official signature, to the Court of Session.

This section deals with the procedure to be adopted by the High Court on the confirmation of the sentence of death in cases submitted to it. The Registrar is to send without delay a copy of the High Court's order under the seal of the High Court with his signature. Sessions Judges are directed to issue a warrant in Form No XXXV of Sch V of the Code immediately on receipt of the order of confirmation and shall appoint therein as the date of execution a day not less than 21 days, not more than 23 days from the date of such receipt and the warrant shall be accompanied by a copy of the High Court's judgment, Rule 250. *Mad. Procedure in cases submitted by Magistrate not empowered to act under S. 562.

first class or Sub-divisional Magistrate as provided by section 562, such Magistrate may thereupon pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him, and, if he thinks further inquiry or additional evidence on any point to be necessary, he may make such inquiry or take such evidence himself or direct such inquiry or evidence to be made or taken.

This section was introduced in the Code of 1898. It deals with the procedure to be followed in cases which are submitted to a Magistrate of the first class or Sub-divisional Magistrate, by a Magistrate who is not empowered to act under S. 562, infra. A District Magistrate to whom a case is sent up by a second class Magistrate has no power to send back the case for passing sentence on the ground that the provisions of S. 562, infra were inapplicable. He is bound by this section to pass such sentence or order as he may have passed or made if the case had been originally heard by him, 7 Cr. L.J. 449=4 L.B.R. 150. When a first class Magistrate convicts the accused and passes a sentence under this section, an appeal from such a conviction lies to the Sessions Court and not to the District Magistrate, as the proceedings of the first class Magistrate amounted to a trial giving a right of appeal to the Sessions Court under S. 403, infra, 17 Bom. L.R. 295=7 Cr. L. Rev. 129=16 Cr.L.J. 738=31 Ind. Cas. 333.

May pass such sentence or order, etc.—The point whether a Magistrate to whom the case is sent up could pass any other order than an order for release of the accused on probation of good conduct under S. 562, infra, has been decided in the affirmative in 16 Cr. L.J. 535=29 Ind. Cas. 663. See 7 Cr. L.J. 449; 8 Cr. L.J. 475=4 L.B.R. 277. In the case reported in 17 Bom. L.R. 895=7 Cr. L. Rev. 129=18 Cr. L.J. 733=31 Ind. Cas. 338, the first class Magistrate to whom the case was submitted for an order under S. 562, infra, instead of passing the order under S. 562, infra, sentenced the accused to imprisonment and fine and there it was held that the conviction was legal and an appeal from such conviction lay under S. 408, infra, to the Sessions Court. Can he pass an order demanding security from the accused for keeping the peace? The words "may make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been tried by him" seem to suggest that he could pass an order demanding security.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

OF EXECUTION.

381. When a sentence of death passed by a Court of Session is submitted to the High Court for confirmation, such Court of Session shall, on receiving the order of confirmation or other order of the High Court thereon, cause such order to be carried into effect by issuing a warrant or taking such other steps as may be necessary.

Execution of order passed under S. 376.

Every confirmation order of the High Court is to be communicated by the Session Judge to the Superintendent of Jail where the prisoner is confined within 24 hours of the receipt of the order by the Session Judge and the Sessions Judge issuing a warrant in Form XXXVI of Sch. V. shall appoint therein as the date execution a day not less than 21 days nor more than 28 days from the date of such receipt, the warrant shall also be accompanied by a copy of the High Court's Judgement, Rule 250. Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

In India the sentence of death is carried into effect by hanging the condemned prisoner by the neck till he is dead. See S. 368, supra, but in some of the States in the United States of America a prisoner is executed by passing through his body a current of electricity which causes instantaneous death. The process is known as 'putting the condemned person on the electric chair' and execution is known as electrocution; see notes at pp. 56-57.

For form of warrant to be issued under this section see Sch. V, No. XXXV, infra, and after a commutation, Form No. XXXVI. The warrant should be addressed to the officer in charge of the Jail and in the case of several accused a separate warrant should be addressed for each prisoner see M.H.C. Pro. dated 13th March, 1868 and 23rd November, 1868.

Section 4 of the Prisoners Act, III of 1900 enacts that officers in charge of prisons shall forth-with after execution of the warrant return such warrant together with a certificate endorsed thereon and signed by him showing how the warrant was executed.

382. If a woman sentenced to death is found to be pregnant, the High Court shall order the execution of the sentence to be postponed, and may, if it thinks fit, commute the sentence to transportation for life.

Postponement of capital sentence on pregnant woman.

Woman sentenced to death is found to be pregnant.—When the prisoner is quick with child such a state is always held to be a bar to eventual capital punishment, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 15.

The High Court shall order, etc.—The High Court is the only judicial tribunal empowered to postpone the execution of a sentence of death passed and confirmed on a woman who is found to be pregnant, Weir II, 431; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 66. The High Court if it thinks fit is also empowered to commute the sentence to one of transportation for life under S. 269, supra. This is an instance where the High Court after signing and pronouncing judgment may alter the judgment. In England where a woman is sentenced to death, the clerk of the Court after sentence is to ask whether the woman has anything to say in stay of execution of the sentence. If she then alleges or the Court then or later on, has reason to suppose that she is pregnant, a Jury of twelve matrons should be empannelled and sworn to try whether or not she is quick with child. The Jury may be empannelled forthwith, the Judge first ordering that all the doors be shut and no one must be allowed to leave the Court. If the matrons desire, the assistance of a medical man, a medical man is requested by the Court to retire and examine the prisoner. When his examination is concluded the Jury of matrons is recalled into Court and his evidence is given in their presence and that of the prisoner. If the Jury finds that the prisoner is quick with child the Court stays execution of the capital sentence until she has been delivered of a child or it is no longer possible in the course of nature that she should be so delivered. Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. & Pr., p. 221, (25th Ed.). It is for the prisoner to plead pregnancy and unless she has so pleaded a Jury of twelve matrons need not necessarily be appointed, 2 Cox. 261.

For form of warrant as to commutation of sentence see Sch. V, Form No. XXXVI infra.

383. Where the accused is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment in cases other than those provided for by section 381, the Court passing the sentence shall forthwith forward a warrant to the jail in which he is, or is to be confined, and unless the accused is already confined in such jail, shall forward him to such jail, with the warrant.

Execution of sentences of transportation or imprisonment in other cases.

Section 32 of the Prisoners Act, III of 1900 empowers the Local Government to appoint places for the confinement of prisoners under sentence of transportation and removal thereto. An order sentencing an accused person to undergo imprisonment in a police lockup which is not a jail under this section is illegal, 15 Cr. L.J. 10=22 Ind. Cas. 154. Ordinarily a sentence of imprisonment ought to commence from the time the sentence is passed unless there is some lawful reason for ordering it to commence at some future time, 3 B.L.R. (Ap. Cr.) 50=12 W.R. Cr. 47; 7 C.L.R. 393; 5 Cr. L.J. 217. The exceptions are to be found in Ss. 35, 396, 397, 398 and 426, infra. A Magistrate is not entitled to suspend the commencement of the sentence even of a short sentence, so as to enable an accused person to prefer an appeal.

Shall forward him to such jail with the warrant—The High Court when hearing a reference under S. 307, supra, does not exercise its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction but only the powers of a Court of reference in a criminal matter and when it convicts and sentences the accused, it has power to send the accused outside the presidency-town with its warrant to the jail in which he is to be confined, 29 G. 286. (F.B.) Every warrant shall endorse in the language in which it is written the age, caste, place of residence, plea of the prisoner as also the opinion of the Assessors, if any. If previous conviction is proved, the back of the warrant shall also contain the offence, the sentence, and the designation of the authority who tried and convicted the accused, Bom. H.C. Cr. C., p. 38.

384. Every warrant for the execution of a sentence of imprisonment shall be directed to the officer in charge of the jail, or other place in which the prisoner is, or is to be, confined.

Direction of warrant for execution.

illegal and so also the recovery of the amount under such a warrant, 30 Cr. L.J. 635=116 Ind. Cas. 524. This section does not contemplate any sort of inquiry or order. It is as a matter of fact merely an action by the Court itself consequent on some previous orders, e.g., a person convicted and fined or ordered to be imprisoned in default of payment of the fine when payment of fine is refused the Court will then send the recalcitrant person to prison and then take action under this section. An order passed by a Magistrate directing a warrant to issue is merely a consequential and ancillary order and is not an order which an accused will have to attack in appeal or revision. There is no provision made in the Code for attacking such ancillary orders although there are weapons in the armoury of the Courts to prevent or punish an attempt say by the Port Trust, to illegally assess damages on an application made under the Port Trust Act which is not a judicial order but only an executive one which cannot be revised by the High Court, 25 Cr. L.J. 1263=88 Ind. Cas. 1007.

Sub-section (1)—This section prescribes that a fine, if not paid, may be recovered by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender. Whether by the words "moveable property belonging to the offender" it was meant property belonging exclusively to the offender or whether it will include joint family property also, in which the offender has an interest, and therefore can be proceeded against under this section was left undecided in 49 B. 906. But the section is silent with regard to the power to award imprisonment in default of payment of fine in the case of an offence which is provided for in S. 64, I.P.C., 21 Cr. 979 at 980. Surplus sale proceeds in the hands of a mortgagee for payment to the mortgagor is not a debt, but any money held in trust for the mortgagor and is liable to attachment under this section and the Crown is entitled to priority over any private individual to realise the fine imposed on the mortgagor, 40 M. 767. See also 25 M. 457. The decision in 1917 M.W.N. 103=4 L.W. 613=18 Cr. L.J. 1=36 Ind. Cas. 833, which held that moveable property did not include a debt is of doubtful authority after the new amendment of the section by substituting "attachment" for "distress." Growing crops are not moveable property under this section, Weir II, 444. But now under cl. (b) the Court may issue a warrant to the Collector of the District authorising him to realise the amount by execution according to civil process by attachment and sale of the growing crops of the defaulter. No revision lies to the High Court against an order for attachment under this section, 6 Cr. L. Rev. 116.

Proviso.—Before the amendment, liability to fine did not cease even after the full term of imprisonment in default has been undergone by the offender. Because it was held that the imprisonment in default of payment of fine was intended as a punishment for non-payment and not as a satisfaction and discharge of the amount due. Now if the offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no Court shall issue a warrant unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing, it considers it necessary to do so. See S. 70, I.P.C., which provides that a fine may be levied within six years after the passing of the sentence.

Sub section (2).—There was no provision in the Code before the amendment for the determination of claims. The remedy of the aggrieved party was only by a civil suit. Power is expressly given now for the summary determination of claims preferred by third parties in respect of property attached, in execution of a warrant and thus it provides a machinery by which inquiries can be made into claims and objections in a manner similar to claims and objections under S. 88, supra, 49 B. 906. The following decisions are therefore of no authority;—20 M. 88; 22 C. 935; Weir II, 445; Ratanlal 976; 1898 A.W.N. 173.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section was newly enacted to meet the decisions in 22 C. 935; 20 M. 88; Weir II, 443, 4 Bom. L.R. 169, 1898 A.W.N. 173 holding that there was no provision in the Code for investigating and adjudicating claims preferred by third parties and the only remedy suggested was to go to a Civil Court and obtain a decision and pending, which, the Court stayed the sale of the property. To obviate these difficulties express provision is herein enacted making the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as to execution of decrees applicable to proceedings under this section. See also S. 88 supra. This sub-section makes the Collector of the District a decree-holder as understood in the Civil Procedure Code, the fine to be recovered being a Crown debt, and he could execute the decree in Warrant with whom to be lodged. 385. When the prisoner is to be confined in a jail, the warrant shall be lodged with the jailor.

Warrant for levy of fine. 386. (1) Whenever an offender has been sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may take action for the recovery of the fine in either or both of the following ways, that is to say, it may—

(a) issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender;

(b) issue a warrant to the Collector of the District authorizing him to realise the amount by execution according to civil process against the moveable or immoveable property, or both, of the defaulter:

Provided that, if the sentence directs that in default of payment of the fine the offender shall be imprisoned, and if such offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default no Court shall issue such warrant unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considers it necessary to do so.

(2) The Local Government may make rules regulating the manner in which warrants under sub-section (1), clause (a), are to be executed, and for the summary determination of any claims made by any person other than the offender in respect of any property attached in execution of such warrant.

(3) Where the Courts issue a warrant to the Collector under sub-section (1), clause (b) such warrant shall be deemed to be a decree, and the Collector to be the decree-holder, within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and the nearest Civil Court by which any decree for a like amount could be executed shall, for the purposes of the said Code, be deemed to be the Court which passed the decree, and all the provisions of that Code as to execution of decrees shall apply accordingly:

Provided that, no such warrant shall be executed by the arrest or detention in prison of the offender.

Amendment—This section has been redrafted. The changes introduced are, a fine can now be recovered by attachment and sale of immoveable property through the Civil Court and if on failure to pay the fine the accused had undergone the whole of the imprisonment in default, no further warrant for the realisation of the fine is to be issued except for very special reasons. Provision is also made for determination of claims preferred by third parties.

Scope of the section.—This section gives a Court a right to issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender, but before a distress warrant can be issued it is necessary that the Court issuing the warrant should have sentenced the offender to pay a fine. That is a condition precedent to the issue of the warrant and any warrant issued without sentencing the offender to a fine is wholly illegal and so also the recovery of the amount under such a warrant, 30 Cr. L.J. 635=115 Ind. Cas. 524. This section does not contemplate any sort of inquiry or order. It is as a matter of fact merely an action by the Court itself consequent on some previous orders, e.g., a person convicted and fined or ordered to be imprisoned in default of payment of the fine when payment of fine is refused the Court will then send the recalcitrant person to prison and then take action under this section. An order passed by a Magistrate directing a warrant to issue is merely a consequential and ancillary order and is not an order which an accused will have to attack in appeal or revision. There is no provision made in the Code for attacking such ancillary orders although there are weapons in the armoury of the Courts to prevent or punish an attempt say by the Port Trust, to illegally assess damages on an application made under the Port Trust Act which is not a judicial order but only, an executive one which cannot be revised by the High Court, 26 Cr. L.J. 1263=83 Ind. Cas. 1007.

Sub-section (1).—This section prescribes that a fine, if not paid, may be recovered by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender. Whether by the words "moveable property belonging to the offender" it was meant property belonging exclusively to the offender or whether it will include joint family property also, in which the offender has an interest, and therefore can be proceeded against under this section was left undecided in 49 B. 906. Cas. 833, which held that moveable property did not include a debt is of doubtful authority after the new amendment of the section by substituting "attachment" for "distress." Power is expressly given now for the summary determination of claims preferred by third parties in respect of property attached, in execution of a warrant and thus it provides a machinery by which inquiries can be made into claims and objections in a manner similar to claims and objections under S. 88, supra, 49 B. 906. A fine cannot be recovered out of the property belonging to the offender situated in a Native State as the provisions of the Code are not applicable to places outside British India. Weir II, 444. The amendment made in this section makes immovable property as well as movable property liable for sale as it is not thought reasonable that immovable property should be allowed to escape; and at the same time power is given to the Local Government to make rules regarding the execution of warrants and the determination of claims. The cases reported in 20 C. 478; 20 M. 88 and 22 C. 935 are no longer law as immovable property too could now be attached and provision is made for determining claims to such property.

387. A warrant issued under section 386, sub-section (1), clause (a) by any Court may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court, and it shall authorise the attachment and sale of any such property without such limits when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found.

Amendment.—For the word “distress” the word “attachment” has been newly substituted. For the words “such warrant” “a warrant issued under S. 386, sub-section (1) clause (a) by any Court” have been substituted.

For form of attachment warrant under this section, see Sch. V, Form No. XXXVII. The warrant cannot be executed outside British India and no property of an accused can be attached under a warrant in any foreign state as the provisions of the Code are not applicable to places outside British India, see Weir II, 444.

388. (1) When an offender has been sentenced to fine only and to imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, and the fine is not paid forthwith, the Court may—

(a) order that the fine shall be payable either in full on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order, or in two or three instalments, of which the first shall be payable on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order and the other or others at an interval or at intervals, as the case may be, of not more than thirty days, and

(b) suspend the execution of the sentence of imprisonment and release the offender, on the execution by the offender of a bond, with or without sureties, as the Court thinks fit, conditioned for his appearance before the Court on the date or dates on or before which payment of the fine or the instalments thereof, as the case may be, is to be made; and, if the amount of the fine or of any instalment, as the case may be, is not realised on or before the latest date on which it is payable under the order, the Court may direct the sentence of imprisonment to be carried into execution at once.

(2) The provisions of sub-section (1) shall be applicable also in any case in which an order for the payment of money has been made on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded and the money is not paid forthwith; and if the person against whom the order has been made, on being required to enter into a bond such as is referred to in that sub-section, fails to do so, the Court may at once pass sentence of imprisonment.

Amendment.—This section has been re-drafted and re-modelled by Act XXXVII of 1923 s. 3 to give effect to the recommendations of the Indian Jails Committee

Scope of the section.—This section authorises the Court to suspend the execution of a sentence of imprisonment, and release the accused on his executing a bond with or without sureties to appear on a date fixed when the accused is sentenced to a fine only and imprisonment in default of payment of fine. The words "the Court issues a warrant under S 386" have been omitted now, and this omission allows time to be given for payment of fine without the issue of a warrant, and the Court has now power to order the fine to be paid by two or three instalments commencing from a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order and in case of default to carry out the sentence into execution.

Sub-section (2):—This sub-section applies to all orders for payment of money by way of fine or compensation and enables the Court to pass a sentence of imprisonment if the person ordered to pay fails to do so, see 26 M. 127. At the same time this sub-section now authorises a suspension of the sentence by the Court, which sentenced the accused, thus rendering obsolete the decision in 7 Cr. L. J. 452 = 3 L.B.R. 151.

389. Every warrant for the execution of any sentence may be

In 9 W.R. (Cr.) 50 it was held that the successor in office of the Judge or Magistrate may levy a fine imposed by his predecessor, but the Court which levies the fine must be the same as the Court which imposed it.

390. When the accused is sentenced to whipping only, the sentence shall, subject to the provisions of section 391, be executed at such place and time, as the Court may direct.

Execution of sentence of whipping only.

Amendment.—The words "subject to the provisions of S. 391" have been newly added by Act XII of 1923.

The Code before the amendment made no provision whereby a Magistrate imposing a sentence of whipping only can suspend its execution, nor did it provide for the detention of a person so sentenced, to allow of his appealing, nor for his re-arrest to undergo whipping if the sentence is confirmed on appeal; See 26 M. 463; 4 Bom. L.R. 929; Ratanlal 906; 1881 A.W.N. 138; 6 M.H. Cr. Appx. 39; 7 M.H. Cr. Appx. 29; 22 W.R. (Cr.) 72. Under S. 413, infra, as it stood before the amendment, there was no appeal from a sentence of whipping only, the words 'or of whipping only' have now been removed from the amended S. 413, infra, thus making a sentence of whipping appealable.

Shall be executed at such place and time as the Court may direct.—A sentence of whipping need not be executed on the very day the sentence is passed. The words 'at

(c) males whom the Court considers to be more than forty-five years of age.

The provision contained in this section that the persons mentioned therein shall not be punishable with whipping refers to the executing and not to the passing of the sentence of whipping, see 1 M. 56. A sentence of whipping made in addition to seven years' rigorous imprisonment is illegal, 21 Cr. L.J. 306-55 Ind. Cas. 466. Since no sentence of whipping can be administered by instalments, the High Court cannot enhance the sentence in revision by the addition of more stripes after the infliction has been carried out. Ratanlal 537. See B. 4 of Act IV of 1909 (Whipping).

Sub-section (a) and (b).—These sub-sections embody the provisions contained in the old Whipping Act, VI of 1864, S. 7, "no female shall be punished with whipping, nor shall any person sentenced to death or to transportation or to penal servitude, or to imprisonment for more than five years shall be punished with whipping.

394. (1) The punishment of whipping shall not be inflicted unless a medical officer, if present, certifies, or, if there officer certifies, or it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence, the whipping shall be finally stopped.

There is no provision of law authorising a medical officer to give a certificate before the infliction of whipping that the accused is fit to undergo only a smaller number of stripes than that actually ordered, and such certificate cannot be held as one granted under this section. The Magistrate is not authorised in such cases by the terms of S. 395, infra, to sentence the offender to imprisonment or fine in lieu of so much of the sentence as was not executed. Under sub-section (1) the sentence of whipping is wholly prevented from being executed when a medical officer certifies that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the punishment and in such a case the section enacts that the whipping shall not be inflicted. Under sub-section (2) the sentence of whipping is partially prevented from being executed if, during the execution of the sentence of whipping, the medical officer certifies that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence. Then the procedure laid down in S. 395, infra, is to be followed, 31 M. 84.

395. (1) In any case in which, under section 394, a sentence of Procedure, if punishment cannot be inflicted under section. 394

whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being executed, the offender shall be kept in custody till the Court which passed the sentence can revise it ; and the said Court may, at its discretion, either remit such sentence or sentence the offender, in lieu of whipping, or in lieu of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not executed, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months, or to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees, which may be in addition to any other punishment to which he may have been sentenced for the same offence.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any Court to inflict imprisonment for a term or a fine of an amount exceeding that to which the accused is liable by law, or that which the said Court is competent to inflict.

Amendment.—This section now enables a sentence of fine to be awarded in lieu of a sentence of whipping which cannot be carried out. The decisions in Weir II, 439 and 11 A. 303 are no longer law. The amount of fine is not to exceed five hundred rupees.

Object of the section.—This section is designed to enable the Criminal Court which passes a sentence of whipping to revise such sentence on finding that the sentence of whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being executed by reason of the state of the offender's health; and there is nothing to show that it was the intention of the Legislature to imply that 30 stripes of whipping and one year's rigorous imprisonment are of equal degree of severity, 30 Cr. L. J. 328 at 329=114 Ind. Cas. 523.

Sub-section (1).—The only Court which can act when a sentence of whipping cannot be carried out is the Court which passed the sentence, 1889 P. R. (Cr. J.) 10 and this power is not taken away by the mere fact that there was an appeal, unless the sentence itself has been set aside by the appellate Court. By the words 'the Court which passed the sentence' it was not intended to mean the same officer who passed the sentence of whipping originally. Had it been so, the impersonal word 'Court' would not have been employed but some other words denoting the person who imposed the sentence such as Magistrate or officer. Any construction restricting the sense of the expression to the officer who originally tried and sentenced the accused would make the section un-workable. For if the officer is dead or has left the station or service, the sentence cannot be revised and as it cannot be carried out, the result is that the accused escapes the punishment altogether. It cannot be the intention of the Legislature that the revision of sentences of whipping should be left to the accident of the punishing Magistrate being still attached to the district in the same capacity at the time of revision and that a criminal so sentenced should undergo a commuted sentence or wholly escape such punishment according as the Magistrate was or was not so employed, when the time for revision comes. Such a construction would be absurd. In the absence of the Magistrate who passed the sentences, the District Magistrate is the Court which passed the sentence within this section, 1901 P. R. (Cr.) 33=3 P. L. R. Cr. J. 20. The Power under this section is to be exercised only when execution of the sentence of whipping is prevented wholly or partially from being executed under S 394, supra, 31 M. 84. S 369, supra lays down that the power of revision under this section is an exception and this power of revision is conferred only on the Court which passed the sentence. An appellate Court cannot be the Court which passed the sentence and which has jurisdiction to revise it even after an appeal from the sentence has been made and the sentence confirmed. The Court in its discretion may remit such a sentence of whipping or sentence the offender in lieu of whipping to imprisonment or fine in addition to the punishment already awarded. The imprisonment if awarded must commence immediately.

Sub-section (2).—The word 'any' used here is significant. If only the Court which originally passed the sentence is meant the word used should preferably be 'such' instead of 'any'. The last portion of this sub-section seems to postulate the possibility of the powers of the original Court, and the recovering Court being different. The new sentence is evidently limited by the powers of revising Court to the original sentence of whipping, 1901 P. R. (Cr.) 33=3 P. L. R. (Cr. J.) 20. The imprisonment awardable by a Court in lieu of whipping is limited by the powers of the Magistrate passing the sentence, that is to say, the term of imprisonment cannot exceed that which the Magistrate is competent to pass. If a Magistrate has passed the maximum sentence he could award, he cannot pass a further sentence in lieu of whipping which could not be carried out, 21 A. 25; Weir II, 349. A term of imprisonment here means a substantive term of imprisonment and not imprisonment in default of payment of fine, 11 A. 308.

396. (1) When sentence is passed under this Code on an escaped convict, such sentence, if of death, fine or whipping, shall, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, take effect immediately, and, if of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, shall take effect according to the following rules, that is to say—

(2) If the new sentence is severer in its kind than the sentence which such convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect immediately.

(3) When the new sentence is not severer in its kind than the sentence the convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect after he has suffered imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation as the case may be, for a further period equal to that which, at the time of his escape, remained unexpired of his former sentence.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section—

(a) a sentence of transportation or penal servitude shall be deemed severer than a sentence of imprisonment;

(b) a sentence of imprisonment with solitary confinement shall be deemed severer than a sentence of the same description of imprisonment without solitary confinement; and

(c) a sentence of rigorous imprisonment shall be deemed severer than a sentence of simple imprisonment with or without solitary confinement.

Concurrent or consecutive sentences can only be passed in cases of separate convictions at one trial. In all other cases the provisions of this and S. 397 infra should be followed; 13 Cr. L.J. 3—13 Ind. Cas. 109; see also notes under S. 35 at p. 63. A sentence of imprisonment passed on a life-convict for attempting to escape from lawful custody cannot be directed to commence immediately. The direction for the immediate execution of the sentence is unauthorised, Ratanlal 963. The punishment for escape from lawful custody is to be in addition to the original sentence and the Court in passing such sentence must comply with the provisions of this section, Weir I, 203 and 204.

397. When a person already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, is sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, such imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation shall commence at the expiration of the imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation to which he has been previously sentenced, unless the Court directs that the subsequent sentence shall run concurrently with such previous sentence :

Provided that, if he is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, and the sentence on such subsequent conviction is one of transportation, the Court may, in its discretion, direct that the latter sentence shall commence immediately, or at the expiration of the imprisonment to which, he has been previously sentenced :

Provided, further, that where a person who has been sentenced to imprisonment by an order under section 123 in default of furnishing security is, whilst undergoing such sentence, sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the making of such order, the latter sentence shall commence immediately.

Amendment.—The second proviso is new. The words "unless the Court directs that the subsequent sentence shall run concurrently with such previous sentence" have been newly added. So also the second proviso.

Rule as to Concurrent Sentences.—S. 85, supra, provides for concurrent sentences being passed if the conviction is at the same trial for two offences (1) if the trials are separate, this section applies and the sentences must take effect consecutively, (2) under this section the first sentence will take effect first but if the second sentence is one of transportation and the first is only one of imprisonment, the Court is given a discretion to direct that the second sentence of transportation shall take effect first, (3) the Court has no power to direct a sentence of transportation should take effect concurrently with a sentence of rigorous imprisonment which the accused is undergoing.

Scope of the section.—This section as recently amended deals with the case of a suspect who has been sentenced to imprisonment in respect of an offence committed by him before the order passed under S. 123, supra, for his detention, and the sentence of imprisonment in such a case shall take effect immediately. It is therefore open to a suspect to take advantage of the provisions of this section and to have the sentence of imprisonment run concurrently with his detention under S. 123, supra, even though he has been convicted of an offence committed by him during the time allowed to him by the Magistrate to furnish security, 27 Cr. L.J. 863=96 Ind. Cas. 113.

Already undergoing Sentence of Imprisonment.—An accused under custody begins to undergo a sentence of imprisonment passed on him from the moment the sentence is pronounced and if a second sentence of imprisonment is passed on him on the same day subsequently in a separate trial, he is already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section, 23 Cr. L.J. 1310=82 Ind. Cas. 478. A person detained in the Civil Jail is not undergoing a 'sentence of imprisonment'. Where therefore he is convicted of an offence and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, such term cannot under this section be made to commence on the expiry of the period of detention in Civil Jail but must commence immediately. The object of commitment to Civil Jail was to keep him for a specified period or until he has paid up his debt whichever event occurred sooner and his detention in Criminal Jail may consequently be taken to serve the purpose of his detention in the Civil Jail, 17 Cr. L.J. 480=36 Ind. Cas. 160. When a person is ordered to suffer imprisonment in default of payment of compensation under S. 250, supra, a Magistrate cannot order that the sentence of imprisonment shall take effect at the expiry of the term of detention in the Civil Jail which is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section, 3 Ran. 93.

A Court is now empowered to pass a sentence to run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment which the person convicted is already undergoing. By the second proviso it is now made clear that a person detained in jail under B. 123, supra, is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section. As a general rule sentences begin to run the moment they are passed but the section enacts that if the accused is already undergoing sentence, the subsequent sentence shall commence after the expiration of the previous sentence. Before the amendment concurrent sentences cannot be passed unless the sentences are passed at one trial. A sentence passed with a direction that it was to run concurrently with another, passed on the previous day was held illegal by various High Courts, but the amendment clears the difficulty and empowers a Court to order a subsequent sentence to run concurrently with a previous sentence which the accused is undergoing. A doubt was also expressed whether, when legalising such illegal sentence of a Magistrate in revision, by making an order directing the sentences to run consecutively, the High Court was not enhancing the sentence passed on the accused. A person undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in a foreign territory, viz., in the jail at Mysore, when convicted and sentenced by a Magistrate in British territories, it is competent to such Magistrate to order that the imprisonment is to take effect at the only time when it could take effect, viz., after the expiration of the sentence in foreign territory, 20 M. 444. The new proviso was put in to meet the conflict of rulings in Allahabad, Bombay and Madras. The decisions 27 M. 525 and 31 M. 515; 1914 M.W.N. 500 = 27 Ind. Cas. 201 = 6 Cr. L. Rev. 448; 16 Cr. L.J. 137 = 1912 M.W.N. 396 = 11 M.L.T. 213 = 13 Cr. L.J. 486 = 15 Ind. Cas. 306; 37 B. 178; 13 Cr. L.J. 189 = 13 Ind. Cas. 1005 are no longer law. The views expressed in 30 A. 334 (F.B.) are now adopted by the Legislature. See also 13 C.W.N. 318; 28 Cr. L.J. 652 = 103 Ind. Cas. 108.

Saving as to sections

398. (1) Nothing in section 396 or section 397 shall be held to excuse any person from any part of the punishment to which he is liable upon his former or subsequent conviction.

(2) When an award of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine is annexed to a substantive sentence of imprisonment, or to a sentence of transportation or penal servitude for an offence punishable with imprisonment, and the person undergoing the sentence is after its execution to undergo a further substantive sentence, or further substantive sentences, of imprisonment, transportation or penal servitude, effect shall not be given to the award of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, until the person has undergone the further sentence or sentences.

399. (1) When any person under the age of fifteen years is sentenced by any Criminal Court to imprisonment for any offence, the Court may direct that such person, instead of being imprisoned in a criminal jail shall be confined in any reformatory established by the Local Government as a fit place for confinement, in which there are means of suitable discipline and of training in some branch of useful industry or which is kept by a person willing to obey such rules as the Local Government prescribes with regard to the discipline and training of persons confined therein.

(2) All persons confined under this section shall be subject to the rules so prescribed.

(3) This section shall not apply to any place in which the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, is for the time being in force.

Scope of the section.—A youthful offender is not yet a Criminal but only 'a Criminal in the making.' An order under this section can only be passed after a youthful offender is sentenced to imprisonment, 1910 P.R. (Cr). 33. Before sending a youthful offender to a Reformatory, the Court must record a clear finding as to his age and that he is a fit person to be an inmate of a Reformatory, 3 Ran. 218. It is not everybody that is convicted of an offence that can be sent to a Reformatory, but only such boys who, there is reasonable cause for supposing, are likely again to lapse into crime, Weir I, 878. It is clearly the duty of the Magistrate to define precisely the nature of the sentence intended. The order must be self-contained and the period of detention must be fixed, so that the functionary who has to execute it should have nothing to do but to obey the direction given without making an inquiry on his own account, 24 M. 13. The shortest period of detention in Reformatory school under the Act, is 3 years; see 25 C. 333. An order for detention can only be made by the High Court, Court of Session, District Magistrate and any Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government. If a Magistrate not so specially empowered is of opinion that a convicted person should be sent to a Reformatory school he is to submit the proceedings to the District Magistrate who will pass such order as if such offender had been originally tried by him (S. 9 of the Ref. Schools Act. All Presidency Magistrates and Magistrates of the first class are empowered to act under this section, Rule 132. Mad. Cr. Rules, of Pr. G.O. No. 934, Jud., dated 2-7-1897.

Is sentenced by a Court to imprisonment for an Offence.—Where no sentence of imprisonment for an offence is actually passed an order under this section cannot be passed.

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section was newly added in the Code of 1893 and is in accordance with the view expressed in 25 C. 333 and Ratanlal 915 and 929. See S. 3 of the Reformatory Schools Act, VIII of 1897. This section does not apply to places where the Reformatory Schools Act is in force. This section is in force only in Coorg and the moment the Reformatory Schools Act is extended to that Province by a notification under S. 1 (8) of the said Act, this section will cease to be in force there also.

Reformatory schools in Madras.—The two schools in Madras are the Reformatory school in Chingleput and the Borstal Institute in Tanjore. The Borstal system derives its name from the prison in the United Kingdom where special effort was first made to reclaim juvenile adult prisoners from the life of crime without prejudice or impairment of the necessary rigour of sentence of imprisonment. The object of the system is to cultivate energies both physical and mental, moral perceptions and powers of self-discipline of the prisoner. The means adopted are:—Juvenile prisoners are drilled and receive both industrial and scholastic training, the latter of an elementary character and lectures of a kind to impress them morally in the right direction. Concentration of individual attention upon a prisoner, is one important feature of the scheme. Habits of obedience, industry and good conduct are cultivated with the object of securing that the prisoner on leaving jail is given a fair chance of leading an honest and law abiding life and is able to feel that there are persons who take interest in his so doing. See Mad. Act, V, of 1926 Borstal Schools Act providing for the establishment and regulation of Borstal schools for the detention and training of adolescent offenders not less than 16 years and not more than 21 years of age. Borstal school is here defined as a corrective institution wherein adolescent offenders whilst detained under the Act are given such industrial training and other instructions and are subjected to such disciplinary and moral influence as will conduce to their reformation and the prevention of crime. The term for which an offender may be detained is not less than 2 years and not more than five years. The offender may be one convicted of any offence punishable with imprisonment or one ordered to be detained in prison failing to furnish security under S. 118 of the Cr P. C. For purposes of appeal and revision under the Code a sentence of detention under the Act shall be deemed to be a sentence of imprisonment for the same period. Power is given by S. 15 of the Act to release the offender after expiration of 6 months from the date of committal to the school on license, if there is a reasonable probability of his not lapsing into crime and will lead a useful and industrious life on condition of his being placed under the supervision of any Government officer or a secular institution or religious society professing the same religion as the offender, and such license may also be revoked and the offender shall then return to the school. An offender detained for failing to furnish security may be released immediately on his furnishing the required security.

CHAPTER XXIX.

OF SUSPENSIONS, REMISSIONS AND COMMUTATIONS OF SENTENCES.

401. (1) When any person has been sentenced to punishment for an offence, the Governor General in Council or the Local Government may at any time without conditions or upon any conditions which the person sentenced accepts, suspend the execution of his sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced.

Power to suspend or remit sentences.

(2) Whenever an application is made to the Governor General in Council or the Local Government for the suspension or remission of a sentence, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, may require the presiding Judge of the Court before or by which the conviction was had or confirmed to state his opinion as to whether the application should be granted or refused, together with his reasons for such opinion, and also to forward with the statement of such opinion a certified copy of the record of the trial or of such record thereof as exists.

(3) If any condition on which a sentence has been suspended or remitted is, in the opinion of the Governor General in Council or of the Local Government, as the case may be, not fulfilled, the Governor General in Council or the Local Government may cancel the suspension or remission, and thereupon the person in whose favour the sentence has been suspended or remitted may, if at large, be arrested by any police-officer without warrant and remanded to undergo the unexpired portion of the sentence.

(4) The condition on which a sentence is suspended or remitted under this section, may be one to be fulfilled by the person in whose favour the sentence is suspended or remitted, or one independent of his will.

(4A) The provisions of the above sub-sections shall also apply to any order passed by a Criminal Court under any section of this Code or of any other law, which restricts the liberty of any person or imposes any liability upon him or his property.

(5) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to interfere with the right of His Majesty or of the Governor General when such right is delegated to him to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remissions of punishment.

(5A) Where a conditional pardon is granted by His Majesty or, in virtue of any powers delegated to him, by the Governor General, any condition thereby imposed, of whatever nature, shall be deemed to have been imposed by a sentence of a competent Court under this Code and shall be enforceable accordingly.

(6) The Governor General in Council and the Local Government may, by general rules or special orders, give directions as to the suspension of sentences and the conditions on which petitions should be presented and dealt with.

"The prerogative of mercy resides in the Crown and every capital conviction, and indeed every other in which the Judge entertains any reasonable doubt as to its propriety, is submitted to the careful and humane consideration of the Secretary of State for Home Affairs if the evidence upon which the Jury have found their verdict appears to be insufficient to sustain it or fresh facts come to light which tend to establish the prisoner's innocence, a Royal pardon is granted which not only annuls the conviction but reinstates the party absolutely in all his former civil rights In this way safeguards are practically thrown round the life and liberty of the subject which are not contained in the strict letter of the law for undoubtedly there is no legal obligation either upon the Judge to act thus, or upon the Crown to rectify mistakes by a pardon," Forsyth His Tr. by Jury, pp. 233-234.

Amendment.—The words in italics in sub-section (2), sub sections (4A), (5) and (5A) are new.

Scope of the section.—This section authorises the Governor General in Council or a Local Government to suspend the execution or remit the whole or part of any sentence passed upon any person sentenced to punishment. The power to grant pardon rests primarily in the Sovereign and this section does not in any way touch the prerogative of the Crown. The special authority given to Government relates to persons convicted and sentenced and does not apply to such cases relating to tender of pardon under S. 337, supra, to a person charged along with others with crime and to whom a conditional pardon is tendered, 11 A. 79; 46 A. 236 at 241. The High Court may when dismissing an appeal forward the records to the Local Government to be dealt with under this section, 23 C. 604; 1868 W.R. (Cr.) 27; 7 A. 672; 10 B. 512. Whenever a Sessions Judge or Magistrate is of opinion that there are grounds for recommending to Government the case of an accused for exercising its prerogative under this section for remitting or commuting any sentence passed, the recommendation shall be submitted to Government through the High Court G.O. No. 1488, dated 25 10-09, Rule 57, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. In all cases where women are convicted for the murder of their infant children a reference should be made, through the High Court to the Government with an expression by the Sessions Judge of his opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of reducing the sentence. Rule 252, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. The report of the Sessions Judge when his opinion is called for by Government should be forwarded through the High Court, Rule 253, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr.

Sub-section (2).—The addition newly made to this sub-section empowers a Local Government to call for the record of the trial along with the presiding Judge's opinion when considering an application for the suspension or remission of a sentence. When the plea of insanity set up by an accused to a charge of murder was found by the Court not established, the Court having regard to the diseased condition of the accused's mind and the absolutely motiveless nature of the offence, sent up the record to the Local Government with a recommendation that the case be dealt with under this section as under the strict provisions of law, the High Court had no alternative but to uphold the conviction and sentence, 6 M.L.T. 101, at 106; 23 C. 604. See also 8 Lah. 684, following 46 A. 243 and 23 C. 604.

Sub-section (3)—Compare S. 227, I.P.C., which deals with violation of the condition of remission of punishment and punishment for such violations.

Sub-section (4A).—This sub-section is new. The word 'law' has been substituted for the word 'Act' to make it clear that this section applies to the case of persons convicted by Courts constituted by regulations and ordinances. It empowers the Government to apply the provisions of this section to any order passed by a criminal Court under any section of the Code or under any other law restricting the liberty of any person or imposing any liability upon him or his property. The language employed here is very wide, and applies to all orders passed, say under Chapters VIII, XI, XLII, etc. A person undergoing imprisonment for failure to furnish security can now be dealt with under this section as the language of this sub-section clearly applies to such a case. Orders under S. 565, infra, requiring a convicted person when released to notify residence may also come under this sub-section as such orders are undoubtedly of a penal nature.

Reprieve.—A reprieve is the withdrawal of the sentence for an interval of time whereby the execution of it is suspended. It may be granted by the King or by the Court empowered to award the execution. A reprieve is granted by the Crown at its mere discretion whenever substantial justice requires it, such as when the prisoner is a pregnant woman under capital sentence or when the prisoner becomes insane after judgment is pronounced against him Arch. Cr. Pl. Ev. and Pr., p. 220 (25th Ed.). A 'reprieve' is the suspension of the execution of a criminal sentence, 4 Stephen's Com.

Respite.—The term 'respite' means delay or forbearance. It is usually applied to postponement of a judgment or sentence of the Court until a future date. This may be done when an appeal is pending or a case is stated for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved or where the Court having regard to the nature of the offence or antecedents or mental or physical condition of the convict desires to defer sentence. It is usual to put the offender under recognizance to come up for judgment when called upon, Arch., Ibid., p. 240.

Sub-section (5A).—This section is new, and enacts that any condition imposed when granting a conditional pardon shall be deemed to have been imposed by a sentence of a competent Court under this Code, and shall be enforceable accordingly.

Sub-section (6).—This sub-section was introduced in the Code of 1899. This sub-section enables the Governor General in Council and the various Local Governments to make rules for suspension of sentences in emergent cases. After the famous Silapuri case (Oudh Talukdars' case) special rules are framed now for applications to the Governor General in Council and for suspension of sentence when a Local Government refuses to interfere. The sentence, especially one of death, is not to be carried out till final orders of the Governor General in Council are passed, even though a Local Government has thought fit not to interfere. The new rules provide, that, where a capital sentence has been passed on a Local Government's appeal under S. 417, infra, after acquittal by the Sessions Court or after an enhancement of sentence, the petition for mercy must in all cases be submitted to the Governor-General and the execution of the sentence of death must be suspended until the Governor-General's order on the petition is received.

402. (1) The Governor General in Council, or the Local Government, may, without the consent of the person sentenced, commute any one of the following sentences for any other mentioned after it :—

death, transportation, penal servitude, rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding that to which he might have been sentenced, simple imprisonment for a like term, fine.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of section 54 or section 55 of the Indian Penal Code.

Amendment—Sub-section (2) is new and it removes the doubt expressed as to the consistency of this section with S. 55, Indian Penal Code.

Sub-section (2).—S. 54, I.P.C., says that a sentence of death may be commuted for any other punishment provided by that Code and S. 55, I.P.C. says that a sentence of transportation may be commuted for imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding fourteen years. There was some uncertainty as to whether the provisions of this section or S. 55, I.P.C., was to prevail in the case of transportation for life as to the scale of imprisonment and this uncertainty is now removed by the amendment.

CHAPTER XXX.

OF PREVIOUS ACQUITTALS OR CONVICTIONS.

403. (1) A person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under section 236, or for which he might have been convicted under section 237.

Person once convicted or acquitted not to be tried for same offence.

(2) A person acquitted or convicted of any offence may be afterwards tried for any distinct offence for which a separate charge might have been made against him on the former trial under section 235, sub-section (1).

(3) A person convicted of any offence constituted by any act causing consequences which, together with such act, constituted a different offence from that of which he was convicted, may be afterwards tried for such last mentioned offence, if the consequences had not paying regard to what had happened in the earlier proceedings, 53 C. 606 where 37 C. 680; 41 C. 754 and 36 A. 168 are followed. This section embodies the general rule which affirms the validity of pleas of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict, subject only to the exceptions specified in it. When a person has been tried and convicted or acquitted for an offence arising out of a particular set of facts, he cannot, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, be again tried in respect of any offence based on the same facts, unless the case can be brought under one or other of the specific exceptions to the rule provided by this section, see 30 C.W.N. 384. A withdrawal after a charge is framed which results in an acquittal under S. 494, infra, can be pleaded as a bar under this section, 14 Cr. L.J. 135=18 Ind. Cas. 897. This section deals with the maxim that no man ought to be tried twice upon the same facts, which means that a person cannot be tried a second time for an offence which is involved in the offence with which he was previously charged, 23 C. 171; 45 C. 727; 29 Bom L.R. 1478=28 Cr. L.J. 1032=106 Ind. Cas. 216; 21 Cr. L.J. 164=54 Ind. Cas. 772. The true test is not so much whether the facts are the same in both the trials as whether the acquittal on the first charge necessarily involves an acquittal on the second charge, 43 C. 78 at 83. This section has nothing to do with pleading, being in terms a limitation to the jurisdiction of the Court, and is not to be construed with reference to the English law of criminal pleading. Ss. 271 and 272, supra, contain all that is necessary as to pleading without reference to English rules, 41 C. 1072 at 1084. It protects, an accused against a subsequent trial for the same offence on the same facts, and any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him "might have been made" but was not made, and not when such a different charge was made at the previous trial and the Jury disagreed with it, 41 C. 1072. This section does not direct that a person shall be acquitted, but says that he shall not be tried again. When a man is put on trial and he produces an order of acquittal passed by a Court which on the face of it is a Court of competent jurisdiction, in respect of the offence charged, the Court before which such order is produced is not entitled to impeach the competency of the Court which passed the order, on the ground that the Presiding Officer may perhaps have laboured under the disqualification prescribed by S. 556, infra, see 37 B. 658. Until such an order is set aside by some competent Court, the man acquitted is entitled to plead it under this section in connection with any other proceeding that may be taken against him, 8 A.L.J. 1129=12 Cr. L.J. 575=12 Ind. Cas. 839. It would be interesting to consider whether the doctrine that an order of acquittal was obtained by fraud would be applicable to render null and void an acquittal within the meaning of this section without any further proceedings being taken to set aside the acquittal, 22 A.L.J. 820 at 822. See in this connection 38 M. 1028. The mode in which these pleas are pleaded in England is regulated by 14-15 Vict. Ch. 100 S. 23. They may be pleaded orally. The onus of proving these pleas lies on the defendant and it is enough for him to produce a copy of the record, Ros. Cr. Ev. & Pr. p. 169. The onus of proving the plea of autrefois acquit is on the accused who pleads it, 1 L.W. 847; 1839 A.W.N. 8. To plead successfully 'autrefois acquit' it is necessary to prove that the prisoner could have been convicted on the first indictment of the offence charged in the second, Ros. Cr. Ev. & Pr. p. 171. An accused person is entitled at any stage of the trial to plead autrefois acquit and substantiate his plea if he can, 29 Cr. L.J. 760=110 Ind. Cas. 792. But when the trial is by a Court without jurisdiction, the trial is void under S. 530, infra, and the acquittal cannot be pleaded in bar to a subsequent trial, and it is unnecessary that such an acquittal should be set aside by a superior Court before the accused could be retried, 8 B. 307. Similarly a Court may be incompetent to try a case for want of sanction, and a dismissal or discharge by the Court under such circumstance is no bar to a subsequent proceeding with the necessary sanction, 24 M. 337; 22 B. 711. The composition of an offence is effected with a person not entitled to compound under S. 315, supra, and the accused is acquitted, such acquittal cannot be pleaded as a bar to a trial on the same facts as there was no acquittal in the eye of law, 51 B. 512. When a village magistrate who is not a recognized tribunal under the Code dismisses a complaint for default of appearance, it is doubtful whether such dismissal amounts to an acquittal which will attract the provisions of this section as to autrefois acquit. The point was left undecided in 53 M.L.J. 102=23 Cr. L.J. 807=101 Ind. Cas. 831. When a conviction had by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try, is set aside by the appellate Court, this section does not bar a fresh trial by a competent Court, 29 C. 412; 31 A. 317; 9 A. 134 (F. B.). The history of Legislation shows a distinction between what is called the common law plea of autrefois acquit reproduced in this section and statutory acquittals enacted in Ss. 247 and 345, supra. To plead a statutory acquittal the accused need not have been tried and acquitted, 40 M. 976, see 30 Cr. L. J. 906=118 Ind. Cas. 223. The principle underlying this section has been extended to cases not strictly falling within the letter of the section, 49 C. L. J. 378 at 382 relying on 49 C. 924; 7 C. W. N. 493; 5 C. W. N. 72. See 33 C. W. N. 948 where on a trial and conviction under the Railways Act with a heavy sentence passed on account of the assault committed, a subsequent trial for hurt was held not warranted.

Convicted or acquitted of such offence.—When an accused is convicted there is not much difficulty in the application of this section and there cannot be much room for doubt whether an order amounts to a conviction or not. Sub-section (3) deals with convictions alone, whereas sub-sections (1), (2) and (4) deal with convictions as well as acquittals. Whether the omission is deliberate or due to an oversight it is not easy to say. But it is not by any means easy to say whether an order amounts to an acquittal or not, within the meaning of this section. The explanation to the section enumerates what are not acquittals for the purposes of this section. A conviction may be had in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 243, 245, (2), 258, (2), 271 (2), 305 (1) 306, 307, 309 (2), 423, 480 and 485, infra, discharge under S. 253 or S. 203, supra, is not an acquittal, 31 M. 543; 29 M. 126 (F. B.); 29 C. 726; 16 C. W. N. 983; 17 A. L. J. 867; 10 B. 131; nor is an order under S. 209, supra, an acquittal, 4 Bom. L. R. 779 at 785. An order purporting to be an acquittal, when the act done does not amount to an offence under any law, is not an acquittal, 24 M. 660. When there is no proper complaint before a Magistrate as required by law (say under S. 199, supra) and the Magistrate acquits the accused, it was held that there was no acquittal within the meaning of this section, the Magistrate having no complaint which he could take cognizance of, 31 A. 317. A verdict of acquittal is no doubt immune from challenge but it is only when the accused is 'tried' and acquitted the immunity arises, 53 C. L. J. 110 at 113=30 C. W. N. 382=27 Cr. L. J. 751=95 Ind. Cas. 79. An order under S. 247, supra, is an acquittal, 34 M. 253; 40 M. 976, dissenting from 40 M. 977 (foot-note); 26 M. L. J. 160; 4 C. W. N. 346. So also an order passed by a Magistrate who re-commenced an inquiry or trial after his predecessor had framed a charge under S. 350 in a warrant-case, 38 M. 585. See also Ss. 240, 245 (1), 248, 258 (1) 289, 305 (1) 306 to 309 (2), 333, 423, 494 (6), 495 (2) as to acquittals under the Code.

Sub-section (1) once been tried.—The word 'tried' used herein does not necessarily import a decision of the case on the merits, but only refers to the nature of the proceedings that were had; or in other words, mean that the proceedings in which the acquittal was passed were in the nature of a trial. As pointed out in 34 M. 253, that the non-mention of S. 247 in the explanation to this section is suggestive of this interpretation and a contrary view would make S. 257 supra illusory. 33 C. W. N. 260=49 C. L. J. 119 at 121 following 40 M. 976 and 7 C. W. N. 711. The word 'tried' does not necessarily mean tried on the merits. Composition of an offence under S. 345, supra, or withdrawal of the complaint by a public prosecutor under S. 494, infra, would result in an acquittal of the accused 53 B. 695 at 695-97. The word "tried" therefore does not necessarily import a decision of the case on the merits so far at least as proceedings under S. 247, supra, are concerned and any other construction would render the provisions of the latter section nugatory. Where an accused a motor driver is tried and convicted for rash and reckless driving under S. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act, he cannot subsequently be tried for the offence of rash and negligent driving on a public road as to endanger human life under S. 279, I.P.C. although the offences are punishable under different Acts but his conviction for rash driving cannot protect him for the consequences of his rash driving vis. for causing grievous hurt under S. 338, I.P.C., for there was not only an act of rash driving, but also a subsequent act, knocking a man down during such rash driving causing grievous hurt to him. 29 Cr. L. J. 271=107 Ind. Cas. 687. Where an accused was tried and convicted under the Cal. Police Act, S. 63 of having assaulted the Captain of a ship while drunk and disorderly on board the ship, he cannot subsequently be tried under

S. 103 (iv) of the Indian Merchant Shipping Act on the same facts, even though the conviction under the Police Act is illegal and cannot stand, 31 C.W.N. 195=28 Cr. L.J. 233=99 Ind. Cas. 1033. See 40 M. 976; 30 C.W.N. 382=43 C.L.J. 110; 34 M. 253; 4 C.W.N. 346; 26 M.L.J. 160. This sub-section is a special statement of the Common law rule that no one may be punished twice for the same offence, i.e., for the same acts or omissions irrespective of the exact terms of the charge; the test for similarity is whether or not the evidence to obtain a legal conviction on the first charge is in substance the same as that necessary to sustain the second charge. The words "nor on the same facts, for any other offence" have special reference to Ss. 236 and 237, supra, and contemplate a case where the facts only justified a conviction for one offence although other offences may have been charged; the words "might have been charged" indicate that this sub-section is no extension of the Common Law Rule and mean "ought lawfully have been charged under those sections," 30 Cr. L.J. 806=117 Ind. Cas. 625. The non-mention of S. 247 supra, in the explanation to this section would also show that S. 247 supra was not intended in any way to limit the effect of an order of acquittal under S. 217 supra. There is no difference in the case of an acquittal under S. 247, supra, whether the acquittal was before process was issued to the accused, or whether it was after the issue of process to the accused (say a summons case) and he appears or fails to appear. In either case the accused is entitled to the full benefit of an acquittal, 34 M. 253; Weir II, 337. When an accused person was duly served and appeared before the Court the 'trial' had begun and the great weight of authority is in favour of the view that the word 'tried' does not necessarily import any decision of the case on the merits. The trial had really commenced if not from the moment the summons was issued and served, certainly when the accused appeared in Court when the case was called on for hearing. Had it been intended to omit an acquittal under S. 247, supra, from the scope of this section certainly one would have expected to find mention of the fact in the explanation to this section, 28 Cr. L.J. 183=99 Ind. Cas. 855 where 34 M. 253; 45 A. 58; 4 C.W.N. 346 and 40 M. 976 are referred to. When the accused has pleaded to a formal charge, the Magistrate is bound to acquit or convict, and his order merely dismissing the case will amount to an acquittal, 5 C.L.R. 359. But there cannot be a bar to a second trial when the previous proceedings did not amount to a trial. The principle of autrefois acquit can have no application as there is no trial terminating in an acquittal when an accused is discharged under S. 203, or S. 253, supra. The Legislature has indicated in the Code the extent to which it intended that the doctrine of autrefois acquit should be applied in this country, and it is not open to Courts by interpretation to extend its application, 31 M. 543 at 545; 29 M. 126 (F.B.); 29 C. 726; 10 B. 131. An order of acquittal passed when the offence was compounded by the parties without the Court inquiring into the authority of the complainant, is a valid acquittal by a Court of competent jurisdiction and until that order is set aside, the accused could not be further prosecuted for that offence, 22 A.L.J. 820. A plea of autrefois acquit or convict could be satisfied only by the production of a regular record, that is, the judgment following a verdict, 29 M. 126 at 139 (F.B.).

By a Court of competent Jurisdiction.—The language of this section is very wide. 'Jurisdiction' means legal authority to judge. It may mean local jurisdiction of a Court or the legal authority of a Court to do certain things. It may mean the power of administering justice according to the means, which the law has provided and subject to the limitation imposed by that law upon judicial authority. There may be a lack of jurisdiction according to the nature of the offence as prescribed by column 8, Sch. II, infra. A Court which has jurisdiction to deal generally with the offence and with the offender may not be competent to deal with a particular case for want of local jurisdiction according to Ss. 177 to 181 and 189, supra, or on account of nonfulfilment of some essential condition such as the absence of the necessary complaint of Court under Ss. 195 and 476. Competency of jurisdiction would include competency to try for reasons other than jurisdiction over the offender and the offence, 53 B. 69 at 72 where 28 C. 324 at 329; 7 A. 315 at 350; 35 M. 309; 22 B. 711; 40 B. 97; 37 A. 107; 5 Pat. 452 at 459 are referred to. The expression "Court of competent jurisdiction" does not merely refer to the character and status of the tribunal to try the offence but also refers to want of jurisdiction on other grounds, e.g., for want of a complaint of Court under S. 195, supra, 5 Pat. 452, where 38 M. 308; 39 A. 293; 19 Cr. L. J. 796=46 Ind. Cas. 716, are referred to. Generally before further proceedings are taken, the fact of the incompetency of the Court which purported to convict or acquit the accused should be declared first by some superior Court. In exceptional cases, say cases which require previous sanction for institution of proceedings the incompetency of the Court is apparent. When a person put on his trial, produces an order of acquittal passed by a Court which on the face of it is a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged, the Court is not entitled to impeach the competency of the Court which passed the previous order holding that the presiding Judge may have been disqualified to try under S. 556, infra. Until such order is set aside by a competent Court, the person acquitted is entitled to plead it under this section as a bar to his trial, 8 A.L.J. 1129=12 Cr. L.J. 575=12 Ind. Cas. 839. If the order of acquittal was by a Court [departmental punishment being of no avail, Ratanlal 318] which on the face of it was a Court of competent jurisdiction in that it had both territorial jurisdiction and the jurisdiction under the second schedule of the Code in respect of the offence charged, the competency of that Court cannot be questioned on any technical ground of personal disqualification to try under S. 556, infra. The phrase "has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction" in this sub section is not one which limits the application of the provision to reasons affecting the nature or the ordinary powers of the tribunal. It is wide enough to cover the case where a first trial was ab initio void for want of a complaint, 19 Cr. L.J. 796=46 Ind. Cas. 716; 39 A. 393. Where an accused tried and acquitted of an offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (a) supra, on the ground that the Court which tried him was not a Court of competent jurisdiction in the absence of a complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or his superior, the accused when tried subsequently on the strength of a complaint in writing by the public servant concerned cannot raise the plea of autrefois acquit under this section, 27 Cr. L.J. 1105=97 Ind. Cas. 317. The acquittal or conviction of an accused must be by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Otherwise such order is of no avail under this section, 29 C. 412; 30 Cr. L.J. 763=117 Ind. Cas. 267, following 7 M. 557. Where an offence is tried by a Court without jurisdiction the proceedings are void under S. 530, infra and the accused if acquitted, is liable to be tried again, under this section, 8 B. 307, followed in 43 C.L.J. 110. It is not necessary that such an acquittal should be reversed before a re-trial can be had, 18 C.W.N. 1214=15 Cr. L.J. 726=26 Ind. Cas. 174. There can be no acquittal unless the Court which tried the accused had jurisdiction, 3 M. 48. If the offence is tried in the first instance without the Court having jurisdiction the proceedings are void under S. 530, infra, and the offender can be charged again under this section. But if the Court had jurisdiction there can be no re-trial unless the acquittal is set aside by the High Court on the application of the Local Government, 10 B. 181; 5 Pat. 452 where 39 A. 293 and 19 Cr. L.J. 796=46 Ind. Cas. 716 followed, and 36 M. 308 not followed. If the trial be by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and the accused has been convicted of such offence, so long as the conviction remains in force, he is not liable to be tried again for the same offence. A Village Headman under the Burma Village Act convicted the accused under S. 294, I.P.O. but the Magistrate, holding that the Village Headman is not a Court, mentioned in S. 6, supra, overlooking the express words "Courts constituted under any law other than the Code" overruled the objection under this section, and again tried and convicted the accused, it was held by the High Court that the trial held by the Magistrate was barred and the conviction and sentence were set aside, 1 Ran 449.

While such conviction or acquittal remains in force.—The word 'conviction' is sometimes used in the Code to denote the verdict of a Jury and at other times in its more strict legal sense to denote the sentence of the Court, 49 C.L.J. 332 at 438; 29 M. 126 (F.B.) at 139; the word acquittal means in common parlance the verdict of the Jury finding the accused not guilty but it is only the formal judgment of the Court that in legal intendment satisfies the word "acquittal." According to Webster the latter term means 'setting free' or deliverance from the charge of an offence by verdict of a Jury or a sentence of Court, 29 M. 126 at 139 (F.B.). So long as the conviction or acquittal is by a Court of competent jurisdiction it does not matter whether the judgment of conviction or acquittal is correct or proper as a matter of fact. It must only remain in force. The Court before which a judgment of acquittal or conviction is produced is not entitled to impeach its validity or competency of the Court which passed the judgment, 8 A.L.J. 1129 at 1133=12 Cr. L.J. 575=12 Ind. Cas. 839. So long as the judgment or order convicting or acquitting the accused has not been set aside, the accused cannot be tried again and the plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, could be urged to bar the trial, 7 W.R. (Cr.) 2. So long as the order remains in force it operates as a bar to further proceedings under this section. The fact that the appellate Court did not expressly order a fresh trial is not material and could not bar a fresh trial, 29 C. 412, and when a retrial is so ordered unless its scope is restricted by the appellate Court, it must be taken to be one on all the charges originally framed, 22 C. 377; 40 C. 693.

Not liable to be tried again for the same offence, etc.—This section does not direct that a person shall be acquitted but only says that he shall not be tried again. So an order of acquittal cannot be passed under this section on the ground that the accused had been previously acquitted, 9 Cr. L.J. 578=2 Ind. Cas. 357, and therefore no consequential relief also can be granted on such an acquittal of the accused, 7 Cr. L.J. 490. To bar a second trial, the previous conviction or acquittal must have been for the same offence. It would be no answer in a trial for one offence to say that the accused had been acquitted of another, in a trial in which evidence was given respecting two offences and which, if believed, would have sustained the conviction of the prisoner for both, 7 W.R. (Cr.) 15. An illegal conviction had under S. 21 of the Forest Act will not bar a second trial under the Penal Code for such other offence as the accused may have been proved to have committed, Weir I, 759. A Court before which a second trial is commenced has nothing to do with the evidence recorded in the previous trial except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the offence is the same, 7 W.R. (Cr.) 15. Theft and mischief committed by cutting the branches of a tree are not distinct offences. When the complaint was for theft and mischief, and the accused was tried for mischief, and acquitted, this sub-section barred a subsequent trial for the theft and sub-section (2) had no application to the case, 8 M. 296. An acquittal on a charge under S. 352, I.P.C., operates as a bar to a subsequent trial for an offence under S. 323, I.P.C., 7 B.L.R. (Appx.) 25. An acquittal of the accused on a charge under S. 211, I.P.C., is a bar to the trial on the same facts under S. 182, I.P.C., 35 M. 308, but an acquittal on a charge of S. 182, I.P.C., is no bar to a subsequent trial for an offence under S. 211, I.P.C., as a person could not be charged in the alternative under S. 236, supra, of offences under S. 182 and S. 211, I.P.C., and the offences are entirely distinct, 11 Cr. L.J. 420=6 Ind. Cas. 944. By distinct offence is meant that the offence must be one entirely unconnected with the one previously charged, 6 Ran. 386. This section imposes a bar on the jurisdiction of the Court, and the defence can be set up at any time before verdict, 41 C. 1072. See also 49 C. 924. An acquittal on a charge of mischief committed by cutting the spathes of some palmyra trees under S. 427, I.P.C., is a bar to a subsequent trial for rioting under S. 147, I.P.C., on the same facts, that there was an unlawful assembly animated with the common object of committing mischief. The two transactions were so closely overlapping that it was open to the prosecution to have framed an alternative charge of mischief and rioting under S. 236, supra, and the case fell under sub-section (1) of this section, 19 L.W. 31. An acquittal of the offence of forgery and abetment thereof bars a subsequent trial for offences under the Registration Act on the same facts, 1 Ran. 299, but it was held in, 28 Cr. L.J. 903=105 Ind. Cas. 236, distinguishing 1 Ran. 299, that the acquittal of a person of cheating by false personation will not bar a subsequent trial for false personation in registering the deed an offence under S. 82 (c) of the Registration Act as the offence of cheating was complete the moment the document was executed and the offence under the Registration Act is an entirely distinct offence and Ss. 236 and 237 supra, could not apply to the case. An acquittal of the accused for an offence under the Forest Act is no bar to his subsequent trial for theft and dishonest retention of stolen goods under the I.P.C., 6 Ran. 386, but an acquittal on a charge of criminal trespass bars a second trial on the same facts for an offence under S. 291, I.P.C., 29 Cr. L.J. 282=107 Ind. Cas. 768. Similarly an acquittal on a charge of cheating bars a subsequent charge for the same offence on different evidence, 28 Cr. L.J. 235=99 Ind. Cas. 1033 where 28 A. 313 is referred to. An acquittal on a charge under S. 297, I.P.C., wounding the religious feeling of a community by cutting down trees from a grave yard bars a subsequent charge of theft of trees from the grave yard on the same facts even though the act done may have had two distinct results, 8 Lah. 52. An acquittal on a charge under S. 160, I.P.C., bars a subsequent trial on the same facts of an offence under S. 61, (c) of the Bom. Dist. Police Act, 1820. The test is whether the evidence in both cases is the same and subsequent trial is on the same basis of facts falling under Ss. 236 and 237, supra, 29 Bom. L.R. 1478 following 45 G. 727 and 1 Bom. L.R. 15 and distinguishing, 48 A. 496 and 37 C. 604. See 31 Bom. L.R. 922 where 29 Bom. L.R. 1478 is distinguished, See also 30 Cr. L.J. 951 at 956=118 Ind. Cas. 650 where 8 Lah. 52; 45 G. 727; 29 Cr. L.J. 3=106 Ind. Cas. 339; 29 Bom. L.R. 1478; 29 Cr. L.J. 282=107 Ind. Cas. 766 and 12 Cr. L.J. 224=10 Ind. Cas. 163 are referred to. An acquittal on a charge under S. 193, I.P.C., bars a second trial under Ss. 455, 471 and 120 B I.P.C., as the facts were inseparable from that on which the previous acquittal proceeded 31 C.W.N. 384. When a person who was tried and convicted for misappropriating certain sums of money during a certain period was again put on his trial in respect of certain other sums alleged to have been misappropriated during the same period, it was held that the charge in the previous trial should be taken to include all the items misappropriated by the accused in the same transaction during that period and that the subsequent trial was barred by this section. The Legislature apparently intended, where there is a trial for misappropriation of a gross sum there should be only one trial for such an offence committed within the period covered by the defalcation, 17 Cr. L.J. 30=32 Ind. Cas. 159. If a person commits criminal breach of trust or misappropriation of different sums of money, he commits so many offences but it is undesirable that he should be tried as many times when he could have been tried for all of them in one trial, 49 C.L.J. 373 at 383. Where facts are not the same in the two trials recourse could not be had to sub-section (1) of this section, 40 B. 97 at 104. Possession of counterfeit coin under S. 243, I.P.C., is a distinct offence from uttering counterfeit coin under S. 240, I.P.C. A previous conviction under S. 243, I.P.C., in regard to one set of coins is no bar to a subsequent trial under S. 240, I.P.C., in regard to a second set of coins even though the second set had originally been part of the same stock as the first set of coins, 31 C. 1007. Where on a charge of theft against A, B and C, A and B were tried and acquitted by a competent Magistrate and subsequently C was put on his trial for an offence under S. 411, I.P.C., on discovery of property in his house, it was held that the acquittal of A and B was no bar to the trial of C as there were additional facts before the Court subsequent to the acquittal of A and B supporting the charge under S. 411, I.P.C., 40 C.W.N. 1031. But a conviction under S. 411, I.P.C., will bar a subsequent trial under S. 414, I.P.C., 28 A. 313. Acquittal of criminal breach of trust with regard to one item will not bar a second trial with regard to another item during the same period. In a charge of cheating, all the evidence of deception must be disclosed at the first trial. The complainant cannot be permitted to institute a series of trials each based on a different evidence. Where the accused was tried for cheating and thereby inducing delivery of property and he was acquitted, he cannot again be tried on the ground that at the first trial he fraudulently withheld a deposit. The mere fact that the complainant is prepared to adduce fresh evidence will not make it a different offence not operating as a bar to a second trial, 25 L.W. 220=23 Cr. L.J. 235=99 Ind. Cas. 1035, 12 Bom. L.R. 226=11 Cr. L.J. 337=5 Ind. Cas. 970. The acquittal of an accused on a charge under S. 400, I.P.C., cannot operate under this section as a bar to his being prosecuted again on a charge under S. 395, I.P.C., for committing only one of the dacoities in respect of which evidence was given at the previous trial. This section bars a separate trial on the same basis of facts, only in cases falling under S. 236 and S. 237, supra, 1 Bom. L.R. 15. Acquittal under Ss. 825 and 147, I.P.C., is no bar to a subsequent trial under S. 204, I.P.C., 27 Cr. L.J. 615=94 Ind. Cas. 359, following 42 A. 128; 24 M. 136. Where A was charged under S. 411, I.P.C., with regard to some articles of stolen property and acquitted, he cannot be subsequently tried for other articles in his possession unless those articles were recovered at different times, 50 C. 594 where 15 A. 317 and 15 C. 511 are followed. See 27 Cr. L.J. 1256=98 Ind. Cas. 104. The acquittal of some out of several persons charged will not bar the subsequent trial of other persons implicated in the same transaction when arrested and put on.

their trial, 37 C. 680. Where a former conviction or acquittal is set up as a bar to subsequent trial, the Court before which the second trial is held has nothing to do with the evidence given on the former trial except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the offence which forms the subject of the first trial is the same as that which forms the subject of the second charge. If the offence is the same the conviction or acquittal is a bar to a second trial whether the second Court considers the former conviction or acquittal was warranted by the evidence given at the first trial or not. If the offence is not the same, the former conviction or acquittal is no bar to the trial upon the second charge notwithstanding the evidence given is the same in the two cases, 7 W.R. Cr. 15. Acquittal under S. 498, I.P.O., of an accused who was alleged to have enticed away a married woman with two of her minor children is a bar to the trial of the accused for the offence of kidnapping the two minor children, kidnapping not being a continuing offence and there could be no abetment of kidnapping after the minors were once taken away from lawful guardianship, 12 Cr. L.J. 94 = 9 Ind. Cas. 511. Where an accused was charged with kidnapping from lawful guardianship in general terms without stating from whose guardianship the kidnapping took place, an acquittal had on such a charge of the offence of kidnapping from the guardianship of a particular person may be pleaded as a bar to a trial on a charge of kidnapping from lawful guardianship of another person, 24 M. 284. The trial of an accused person for offences under Ss. 341 and 352, I.P.C., does not bar the trial for an offence under S. 504, I.P.C., in connection with the same transaction, 7 Cr. L. Rev. 238. When two distinct and separate offences such as affray and hurt are committed the case does not fall within this clause and the conviction for affray is no bar to a subsequent trial for causing hurt. Such a case does not fall under sub-section (2) of S. 235, supra, and the matter is clear from the illustrations to that section, 47 A. 284, followed in 31 Bom. L.R. 922 holding that a conviction for affray under S. 160 I.P.C., on a police charge would be no bar to a prosecution on the complaint of the injured person for rioting and hurt under Ss. 147 and 323 I. P.C. Where a charge has been framed for murder, culpable homicide and abetment thereof and the Jury returned a verdict of "not guilty" on the first charge and they had to be discharged being not unanimous on the remaining charges, the acquittal for murder could not be pleaded as a bar to the trial of the other offences, as there was an express charge and this section could not therefore protect the accused, 41 C. 1072.

Sub-section (2).—The acquittal of an accused of the offence of abetment of forgery S. 467 and S. 109, I.P.C. will not bar a subsequent trial under S. 82 (a) of the Indian Registration Act with respect to the same document, 37 A. 107, but see 1 Ran. 229, which took a different view. When an accused who was tried for abetment of forgery and acquitted was again put on his trial for using as genuine a forged document, it was held that sub-section (1) of this section did not apply to the case inasmuch as the case was not one contemplated by S. 235, supra, and that the case fell directly under this sub-section as the series of acts beginning with forgery and ending with the user in the Civil Court to support the claim must be regarded as so connected together as to form the same transaction, or carrying through of a single predetermined plan, so that under S. 235 (1) it would have been competent to try the accused for both the offences in the same trial, 40 B. 87; 30 C.W.N. 432. Under this section, the provisions of S. 235 (1), supra, are not made applicable to those different offences committed in one series of acts, 29 Cr. L.J. 271 = 107 Ind. Cas. 687. Where an accused was acquitted on a charge under S. 182, I.P.C., on the ground that the person informed was not a public servant, it was held that a subsequent trial under S. 500, I.P.C., at the instance of the Sub-Inspector against whom false information was given, was permitted by this sub-section, 37 C. 604; see also 48 C. 382 and 48 C. 389, 23 C. 174 and 1 Bom. L.R. 15. For what are distinct offences, see notes under Ss. 35 and 233 at pages 65, 491 and 492. A person previously convicted of theft of a quantity of opium can again be tried for illicit possession of the same opium under S. 9 of the Opium Act, because this sub-section permits a separate trial for a distinct offence of which a charge might have been made under S. 235 (1), supra, as having been committed in the course of the same transaction, 48 A. 496. The acquittal of an accused of an offence under S. 324, I.P.C., will not operate as a bar to his prosecution for an offence under S. 10 (e) of the Indian Arms Act viz., 'going armed' under this sub-section as the latter offence is a distinct offence from that under S. 324, I. P. O., coming within S. 235 (1), supra, 53 B. 604 following 40 B. 97 and 23 C. 174.

Sub-section (3).—In this sub-section, unlike the others, conviction alone is referred to and no mention is made of an acquittal. It is difficult to say whether the omission is deliberate or due to oversight. A conviction for causing simple hurt is no bar to the subsequent trial of the accused for culpable homicide if in consequence of the injury caused by the accused, the injured person dies. But if the accused is acquitted of causing hurt on the ground that he merely caused some slight injury in the exercise of the right of private defence and it was subsequently found on a closer examination of the injured person that the so-called slight injury was of a serious nature which affected a vital part, and in consequence of which the injured person died, quære whether the accused could plead the acquittal as a bar to his subsequent trial for culpable homicide in view of the omission of the word "acquittal" in this sub-section. It is submitted that such a result is not contemplated by the Legislature. If a person is tried and acquitted of a charge of simple hurt under S. 323, I.P.O., by reason of the parties having compounded the case, there is no legal bar for a subsequent trial of the same person under S. 304, I.P.O. on its being found that death had resulted from the hurt, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 366; 43 M.L.J. 490=(1925) M.W.N. 553=22 L.W. 203. But see 16 Cr. L.J. 267=23 Ind. Cas. 135, where it was held that the mere fact that subsequent to a conviction further facts came to light which showed the commission of a major offence, will not render an accused liable to be tried again for the graver offence. Where A is convicted of causing hurt to B and as a matter of fact B dies before the trial which fact was not known to the Court when convicting A of hurt, A cannot again be tried of culpable homicide under this sub-section although he may be tried under sub-section (4) of this section, 14 Cr. L.J. 133=18 Ind. Cas. 887; 1901 P.R. (Cr.J) 4.

Sub-section (4).—This sub-section is a further explanation and limitation of the general Common Law rule that no one may be punished twice over for the same offence. 30 Cr. L.J. 806 at 808=117 Ind. Cas. 623. It restricts the right given by sub-section (1). This sub-section lays down that a person acquitted of any offence constituted by any acts may, notwithstanding such acquittal, be subsequently charged with, and tried for, any other offence constituted by the same acts which he may have committed if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged. This sub-section involves in itself that part of the Common Law rule according to which an accused cannot rely upon the pleas unless the previous acquittal or conviction was by a competent tribunal. But a series of acts may constitute more than one offence and the sub-section says that the person acquitted or convicted of an offence may nevertheless be subsequently tried for any other offence constituted by the same acts if the Court which tried the first offence was not competent to try the subsequent offence. So the Common Law rule has no application if the first Court was not competent to try. The words 'not competent to try the offence' mean that in order to obtain the advantage of the Common Law rule the accused on the second occasion must show that the former Court was in a position had it so chosen to try and acquit or convict the accused of the offence subsequently charged. The words 'competent to try' are equivalent to 'in a legal position to have tried and acquitted or convicted'. The words refer narrowly to the legal position of the Court at the time of the former trial in relation to the particular offence committed and not broadly to the jurisdiction of the Court, 30 Cr. L.J. 806 at 808-809=117 Ind. Cas. 623; following 37 A. 107; 17 Bom. L.R. 678 & dissenting from 36 M. 308; this decision expressly held that the Madras decisions were wrongly decided. The Madras view is that "words not competent to try" in this sub-section mean, had no jurisdiction to try. 24 M. 541; 35 M. 308; 43 M.L.J. 490=22 L.W. 203=(1925) M.W.N. 553=26 Cr. L.J. 1037=83 Ind. Cas. 31. This sub-section refers to the character and status of the tribunal when it refers to the competency to try the offence and this is made clear by illustrations (f) and (g) to this section, 36 M. 323 but see 52 B. 257 which dissented from 36 M. 308. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 806=117 Ind. Cas. 623 which also dissented from 36 M. 308. Where a Magistrate split up the charge of dacoity into its component parts of rioting, using force and misappropriation of property, etc., and convicted the accused and on appeal the Sessions Judge reversed the conviction being of opinion that the offence, if any, was one of dacoity but refused to order the commitment of the accused for dacoity as the evidence was so incredible it was held that the Judgment of the Sessions Judge was no bar to the entertainment of a fresh complaint relying on this sub-section and illustration (g) to this section 7 M. 557. When on a trial of the accused under Ss. 366, 368 and 376 I.P.O. the accused was acquitted on the ground that the case was one of adultery and subsequently the husband preferred a complaint under S. 498, I.P.O., it was held that the sub-section is no bar as the Court which tried and acquitted was not competent to try the accused under S. 498, for want of a complaint by the husband under S. 199, supra, 17 Bom. L.R. 678=16 Cr. L.J. 657=30 Ind. Cas. 641. Where an accused was acquitted under S. 248, supra, twice of an offence under S. 178, I.P.O., on the withdrawal of the complaint on the ground that the offence disclosed was one under S. 174, I.P.O., and there was no proper complaint of that offence, it was held that on a third complaint on the same facts by a proper person this subsection cannot be pleaded as a bar to the trial, 52 B. 257 following 22 B. 711; 40 B. 97 and not following 36 M. 308. Similarly absence of sanction or complaint of Court under the present Code which necessitated the acquittal of the accused is no bar to a subsequent trial with the necessary sanction or complaint of Court, as the acquittal was not by a Court competent to try the offence without sanction or complaint of Court, 30 C.W.N. 332, where 22 B. 711; 3 M. 43; 37 A. 107; 40 B. 97; 37 A. 283; 52 B. 257 are followed and 36 M. 308 not followed. See also 53 B. 69 at 72. Similarly an acquittal by a second class Magistrate for an offence under S. 406, I.P.C., is no bar to a subsequent trial by a first class Magistrate under S. 409, 18 Cr. L.J. 643=40 Ind. Cas. 291, followed in 48. M.L.J. 490=26 Cr. L.J. 1037=88 Ind. Cas. 31. An acquittal of under S. 409, I.P.C., of breach of trust of a sum of money, committed between two dates, does not bar, under this section, a subsequent trial of criminal breach of trust on an intermediate date, of a separate sum which was not included in the amount forming the subject of the first trial by reason of the facts relating to the misappropriation of the latter sum not being known to the prosecutor at the time of the previous charge, 50 C. 632 following 12 Bom. L.R. 226=11 Cr. L.J. 337=8 Ind. Cas. 970, and dissenting from 17 Cr. L.J. 39=32 Ind. Cas. 158. There is a divergence of judicial opinion as to whether a trial in respect of a gross sum of money in respect of which breach of trust is alleged to have been committed between two specified dates, a second trial in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed on an intermediate date but not included in the gross sum specified in the first trial is permissible or not. In 17 Cr. L.J. 30=32 Ind. Cas. 158, the Madras High Court held that under the circumstances the charge in the first trial should be taken to have included all the items covered by the period and in 50 C. 632, a single Judge took also the same view but in 12 Bom. L.R. 526 and also the majority opinion 50 C. 632 took a different view. It was pointed out in 50 C. 632 that it would make a considerable difference if it were shown that the defalcations which formed the subject in the second trial was within the knowledge of the prosecution and so could and might have been included in the charge in the first trial, 49 C.L.J. 373 at 381. Acquittal of an accused under S. 426, I.P.O., on the ground of absence of the complainant is a bar under this section to his being put on his trial on the same facts for theft or an application to the District Magistrate to set aside the order under S. 247, supra, 37 C.L.J. 253=23 Cr. L.J. 149=76 Ind. Cas. 293. When a person was charged and acquitted of an offence of abetting and aiding, cheating under the Penal Code in connection with registration of a document, the acquittal is no bar to the trial for an offence under S. 82 of the Registration Act, 37 A. 107. See also 28 Cr. L.J. 908=105 Ind. Cas. 236 where 1 Ran. 299 which took a different view is distinguished. Where several accused were tried by a first class Magistrate who acquitted some and convicted the rest and on appeal by the convicted persons, the Sessions Court directed the acquitted accused to be committed on the same facts for murder, it was held that the commitment was legal and this section did not bar such a commitment, 13 Cr. L.J. 742=17 Ind. Cas. 54. Where a person was first tried for offences under S. 465 read with S. 109, I.P.C., with regard to an attestation of a voting paper at a Municipal election and acquitted of the offence charged, he can be tried again for an offence charged under S. 171 F, I.P.C., of intentionally abetting false personation at the election which the Court when it tried the accused under Ss. 465 and 109, I.P.C., could not try for want of the necessary sanction of the Local Government at the date of the first trial and such sanction non-competency of the Court to try the offence coming under sub-section (4). 36 M. 308 but in 32 B. 237 it was held dissenting from the view that illustrations cannot justifiably be held to control the wide words of the section 'not competent to try' and the mere fact that illustrations are confined to instances where the first tribunal has not the necessary powers to try a particular offence they do not show that the words 'competent to try' are confined to cases of that kind. If the words mean 'had no Jurisdiction to try', then they are sufficient to cover a case where the Court cannot take cognizance of a case because the provision of S. 195, supra, and that goes to the root of jurisdiction. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 806=117 Ind. Cas. 625.

PART VII.

CHAPTER XXXI.

OF APPEALS.

Appeal.—The term "Appeal" is not defined in the Code. It means a complaint to a superior Court of an injustice done by an inferior Court. The party complaining is called the appellant and the other party the respondent. Wharton's Law Lexicon explains the term thus: "The removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior Court for the purpose of testing the soundness of the decision of an inferior Court." See 22 M. 68 at 80; 12 Cr. L.J. 43=9 Ind. Cas. 261. An appeal is not a second trial but a continuation of the trial already held, 37 M. 119. All jurisdiction starts from the first Court and remains constant throughout the subsequent stages of the proceeding, 12 Cr. L.J. 443=11 Ind. Cas. 788. A Criminal appeal differs from a Civil one in that, in the former where questions of fact are in issue, the sound rule is to consider whether the conviction is right, whereas in the latter case the Court must be convinced before reversing a finding of fact by the lower Court that the finding is wrong, 11 C.L.R. 25 at 29-30; 23 C. 347; 20 C. 353. The general tendency of the Amending Act of 1923 has been to enlarge rather than to curtail the right of appeal in favour of accused persons. By that Act several orders which were not formerly appealable have been made so. The right of appeal to a higher Court has been conferred by S. 406 infra. An order refusing to accept or rejecting a surety has been made appealable by S. 406 A infra; the immunities enjoyed by certain sentences passed under Ss. 413 and 414 have now been taken away, special right of appeal has been created in certain cases under Ss. 415A and 418 (2) infra and it is also interesting to note that in the matter of refusal to accept or of rejecting sureties offered in compliance with an order under S. 562 (1) infra, the provisions as to right of appeal, have been made appealable by S. 562 (4) infra. An appeal also lies on behalf of a convicted person against whom an order under S. 562 (1) infra, has been passed under Ss. 407 and 408, infra, even though it is not expressly mentioned there, 52 C. 483. An appeal is only a creature of Statute and where it is given it becomes a matter of right as distinguished from a revision which is purely discretionary. When an appeal lies and no appeal is filed, no proceedings by way of revision can be entertained, S. 439 (5), infra. Rules of limitation govern appeals. See Arts. 150, 154, 155, 157 of the 2nd Schedule and S. 5 of the Limitation Act IX of 1908. This Chapter is not exhaustive. There are other orders under the Code, viz., those under Ss. 260, 466, 514, 515 infra, which are made specially appealable.

404. No appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force.

Unless otherwise provided, no appeal to lie.

The power of superintendence of superior Courts is entirely distinct from the jurisdiction to hear appeals. If the inferior Court after hearing the parties comes to an erroneous decision either on law or fact on a matter within its jurisdiction, the Court having power of Superintendence never interferes. The only mode of questioning the propriety of such a practice no doubt but the practice is uniform and only in special circumstances can it be departed from. The mere fact that a division Bench of the High Court issued an ex parte order admitting an appeal or revision after the expiry of 60 days will not preclude the Bench hearing the case from going into the question of limitation at the final hearing, 54 C. 394 where 50 C. 423 is distinguished. An appeal presented long after the period of limitation was treated as a revision and decided on the merits in 2 A. 336. Presentation of an appeal by a prisoner in jail to the officer in charge of the jail is for the purposes of the Limitation Act equivalent to presentation to the Court, 9 M. 258. So also time taken in forwarding an application for a copy of judgment by the prisoner and in transmitting the same to him must be excluded, 9 M. 258. Where one of several accused was acquitted on appeal, an appeal presented by the other accused after such acquittal was entertained and dealt on the merits, 1871 P. R. (Cr.) 7; as to mode of computation of the period of limitation, see S. 12 of the Limitation Act, IX of 1903.

Appeals to the Privy Council.—His Majesty the King is supreme over all persons and Courts within His Dominions and a right of appeal in all cases to the King in Council exists from the High Courts of each separate Colony, Province, State or Possession whether it be a Court of error or not, except so far as the prerogative in this behalf has been expressly surrendered. Criminal proceedings are in practice reviewed only if it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done. The Judicial Committee do not as a rule advise His Majesty to grant appeals in criminal cases except where questions of general and great importance likely to occur often are raised, and where the due and orderly administration of the law is shown to be interrupted or diverted into a new course, which might create a precedent for the future and where there are no other means of preventing these consequences. Such appeals lie either by the right of grant in pursuance of leave obtained by the appellant from, or by reason of special leave granted by the Judicial Committee, 39 C.L.J. 1. It is well settled that the unwritten principles of the constitution of the Empire restrain the Judicial Committee from being used in general as a Court of review in criminal cases. But while the Sovereign in Council does not interfere merely on the question whether the Court below has come to a proper conclusion as to the guilt or innocence, such interference ought to take place where there has been a disregard of the proper forms of legal process grievous and not merely or a technical character or a violation of principle in such a fashion as amounts to a denial of justice. 39 C.L.J. 1 at p. 11 quoting from 44 Ind. Apps. 137. As a rule the administration of criminal law including the forms of procedure, trial and punishment for crime is left to the local jurisdiction and appeals to His Majesty in Council from Colonies are extremely rare. The inherent jurisdiction of the King in Council to receive appeals in criminal matters as well as in civil cases exists for the purpose of ensuring the proper administration of justice and to preserve the due course of procedure but this prerogative is very cautiously exercised. It is the usual rule of the Privy Council to quote the dicta of Lord Halebury in Reel v. Queen, 10 A. C. at p. 677 when leave to appeal in criminal cases is applied for, namely, "no leave will be granted in criminal cases except where some clear departure from the requirements of justice is alleged to have taken place." In ex parte Macrea, 1893 A.C. 346 the Privy Council again pointed out that although leave to appeal may be granted in exceptional cases yet a mere mis-direction to the Jury by the Judge where no miscarriage of justice had actually resulted therefrom will not afford ground for special leave to appeal. See also (1892) A.C. 422; (1897) A.C. 719; 12 A.C. 459 (Dillet's case) affirmed in all later decisions such as 36 M. 591 (P.C.); 41 C. 568 and 1023 (P.C.) and 5 Ran. 53 (P.C.) In criminal cases the Privy Council does not lightly interfere. In Dillet's case Lord Watson laid down the law thus "such appeals are of rare occurrence because the rule has been repeatedly laid down and has been invariably followed that Her Majesty will not review or interfere with the course of Criminal proceedings unless it be shown that a disregard of the forms of legal process or some violation of the principles of the natural justice, otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done," reaffirmed in 15 Cr. L.J. 303 (P.C.) = 23 Ind. Cas. 657 and 41 C. 1023 (P.C.) The Privy Council will not grant leave to appeal in a criminal matter unless in the particular case there is something which deprived the accused the substance of a fair trial and the protection of the law or which in general tends to divert the due and orderly administration of the law into an evil precedent in future, 18 C.W.N. 705 (P.C.)=15 Cr. L.J. 326=23 Ind. Cas. 678=1 L.W. 999. It is now well established that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council only recommends to His Majesty to exercise his jurisdiction in appeals in criminal cases upon very restricted grounds, 5 Ran. 83 (P.C.) See 32 C.W.N. 11, for a critical note as to interference by Privy Council in Criminal cases.

"The responsibility for the administration of criminal justice in India, this Board will neither accept nor share unless there has been some violation of the principles of justice or some disregard of legal principles. This Board will not consider appeals brought from criminal Jurisdiction in the provinces of India. They cannot but regret that those who are connected with the legal profession in India should have so completely disregarded those injunctions that their Lordships have so often laid down. It is a grievous thing to think of the distress and anxiety which must be caused to the relations and friends of the condemned man, by holding out to them vain hopes that the penalty which had been inflicted can be mitigated or reversed by this Board except in the special circumstances to which I have referred"—per Lord Buckmaster in 22 L.W. 57 at 58 (P.C.). The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is not a Court of criminal appeal. When there has been evidence before the Court below upon which it has come to a conclusion their Lordships will not disturb that conclusion. They will only interfere in such cases as are referred to in the well known case of In re Dillet, where there has been a gross miscarriage of Justice or a gross abuse of the forms of legal process, 30 C.W.N. 557 (P.C.)=42 C.L.J. 67=49 M.L.J. 331=(1925) M.W.N. 418=27 Cr. L.J. 223=92 Ind. Cas. 212. The Privy Council is not a court of criminal appeal, and it would be contrary to its constitutional duty to assume that position. A Court of appeal can go into facts and deal with the case on the merits. The functions of the Privy Council are limited by the law laid down in Dillet's case to something much more narrow, namely, if what has been done has been grossly contrary to the forms of justice or violates fundamental principles, then and then only it has power to interfere, 41 C. 563 (P.C.). The jurisdiction which the Privy Council exercises in criminal matters involves a general consideration of the evidence and circumstances of each particular case in order to place the irregularity complained of, if substantiated in proper relation to the whole matter, 18 C.W.N. 75 (P.C.)=15 Cr. L.J. 326=23 Ind. Cas. 678=1 L.W. 999. So pending leave to appeal against a capital sentence, the Privy Council has no power to stay the sentence, 42 C. 739. The adequacy or otherwise of a charge to the Jury by a Judge, though it may furnish proper ground of appeal to a Court of criminal appeal does not amount to "a disregard of the forms of process or violation of the principles of natural Justice" to warrant the Privy Council in entertaining an application for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council by a convicted person, 30 C.W.N. 557=43 M.L.J. 831 (P.C.)=43 C.L.J. 47. The Letters Patent, of the various High Courts provide for an appeal from certain Judgments in cases tried by the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction, and in cases where any point of law has been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court, but it is necessary that the High Court should certify that the case is a fit one for an appeal to the Privy Council. See in this connection the observation of the Judicial committee in the case in 52 C. 197 at 221. Special leave to appeal may be granted by the Privy Council when there is a question of jurisdiction of general importance, 7 M.I.A. 72; where there is a grave error of procedure touching jurisdiction, 25 M. 61, where by some disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, some substantial and grave injustice has been done, 36 M. 501 L.R. 12 A.C. 459; 26 C.L.J. 13; 33 C.L.J. 125 (P.C.) and 222; (1914) A.C. 599; 18 C.W.N. 705 (P.C.)=15 Cr. L.J. 326=23 Ind. Cas. 678. When a sentence passed was found not to be authorised by law, i.e., a sentence of transportation for 14 years when only a transportation for 10 years is permissible under the law, it was held that there was substantial injustice, requiring the interference of the judicial committee of the Privy Council, 44 M. 297 (P.C.).

Power to entertain appeals by the Privy Council arises not from the relation of the Privy Council to the Court below, as a Court of criminal appeal but as the Privy Council advising.

the Sovereign with regard to the exercise of the prerogative which is that remnant power of the Crown which remains to the Crown to interfere with tribunals of justice which does not exist in England at all. It has passed away in the historic development of the constitution. It used to exist and it does exist to some extent in the case of Crown Colonies because they are managed directly by the Crown through Ministers, but when one comes to self-governing dominions it is doubtful whether even the principle of Dillet's case could be applied to the constitution of Canada and Australia. India is not yet in that stage but it has been publicly said that India is recognised by the Imperial Government as being on the way to be a self-governing dominion and so even with regard to India it is with the utmost care, that we should pronounce any proposition that that disappearing fragment of the prerogative remains. Unless it can be proved that there was no proper trial at all, that the forms of all judicial procedure were disregarded, not merely according to local ordinances but according to the varying character which is common to all, the Privy Council cannot interfere. If there was anything very gross it might come under the same category, but even then the Crown has to be extraordinarily cautious in asserting the survivor even of that very restricted prerogative which existed 50 years ago but which may not exist now. The Privy Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal and cannot take cognizance of a mere mistake. It is not a case in which justice has been set at naught and therefore the Privy Council, has no jurisdiction. It is not right for either Counsel or Privy Council agents to encourage the bringing of such petitions like this. It is waste of time of the Judicial Committee and after the repeated intimations given by their Lordships it is hardly respectable to the tribunal, 49 B. 435 (P C) at 457-58.

Appeals from Aden.—Appeals from Aden lie to the High Court of Bombay and are regulated by Act II of 1864 as now amended by Act XXI H of 1927—Appeals from the Resident and from Additional Sessions Judge where an appeal is provided by the Code, lie to the High Court of Bombay but no appeal will lie against a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding six months only or a fine not exceeding Rs. 500 only. An appeal from acquittal may be made as provided by the Code, and it shall be in the discretion of the Resident to reserve, for the opinion of the High Court any point of law arising in any criminal proceedings pending before him.

Court of criminal appeal in England.—Court of appeal was constituted under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, 7 Edw 7 C 23. The Lord Chief Justice of England is the President and all the Judges of the King's Bench Division are Judges of the Court. A person convicted may appeal on a question of law or with the leave of the Court on a question of fact or on any other ground which appears to the Court to be sufficient or against his sentence only. A habitual criminal convicted of an offence may appeal without leave of Court but a person convicted at petty Sessions or at Assizes as an incorrigible rogue may appeal with leave, against his sentence. The Act does not apply to convictions of a Peer or Peers for an offence not triable at the Assizes and nothing in the Act affects the prerogative of mercy, but the Secretary of State may refer to the Court any point raised in a petition to him concerning convictions or sentences other than a sentence of death. Where the questions raised relate to the whole case of a convict, the case is considered as if it were an appeal but if only a particular point raised in a case is before the Court, it may be determined by the Court in private—a procedure adopted on very few occasions. A convicted person must apply to the Court within 10 days of his conviction or sentence but the Court has power to extend the time in all cases except in convictions involving a death sentence. An appellant is entitled to be present at the hearing if he wishes, unless the question involved is one of law only. A single Judge of the Court is empowered to grant or refuse leave but if an application is refused, the appellant has the right to have his application heard by the full Court. The Court of Criminal Appeal duly constituted to hear appeals must consist of not lower than three Judges and may consist of a larger number of the Chief Justice so directs but always of uneven number. The Chief Justice always sits if possible, and presides over the Court which sits in London. During the pendency of an appeal, the sentence is suspended so that in appeals that have no merit the appellant will have to serve five or six weeks longer in jail than if he had not appealed. This serves as a check to the lodging of frivolous appeals by a convicted person. The Court has power to enhance the sentence in an appeal against the sentence in exceptional cases and the Court has always expressly warned the appellant of the risk of enhancement thus giving the appellant an opportunity to abandon the appeal. The Court has no power to enhance sentence in an appeal from a conviction although it is clearly of opinion that the sentence passed at the trial was inadequate but such a power is given in frivolous appeals in Scotland by a new amendment in 1926. The powers of the Court of Criminal Appeal has been summarised thus by Darling J. "They had no power to re-hear a case. They could interfere if it was proved that a wrong judgment had been given on a point of law; or, if the verdict of the Jury appeared in all the circumstances unreasonable in point of fact. They could interfere if on a general view of the case in law, and fact, it appeared to them that there had been a miscarriage of justice."

405. Any person whose application under section 89 for the delivery of property or the proceeds of the sale thereof has been rejected by any Court may appeal to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the sentences of the former Court.

Appeal from order rejecting application for restoration of attached property

Appeals ordinarily lie.—Compare sub-section (3) of S. 195, supra and see notes at page 357. Ordinarily lie, i.e., in the majority of cases, 23 M.L.J. 436; 27 M. 124; 11 B. 438; 26 M. 636 (F.B.); 39 C. 774; 22 C. 437.

406. Any person who has been ordered under section 118 to give security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour may appeal against such order.—

Appeal from order requiring security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour.

- (a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court;
- (b) if made by any other Magistrate, to the Court of Session:

Provided that the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that in any district specified in the notification appeals from such orders made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session:

Provided, further, that nothing in this section shall apply to persons the proceedings against whom are laid before a Sessions Judge in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) or sub-section (3A) of section 123.

Amendment.—This section has been re-drafted. Appeal is provided in cases of security for keeping the peace also; appeal lies to the High Court from a Presidency Magistrate's order and to the Sessions Court from other Magistrates' order. Power is also given to Local Government by notification to direct that such appeals shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Court.

Scope of the section.—Before the new amendment, there was a right of appeal only from an order directing security for good behaviour but now a right of appeal is also given in proceedings to keep the peace under S. 107, supra. The appeal lies to the Sessions Court if made by Magistrates other than Presidency Magistrates, in which the appeal lies to the High Court, but under the proviso the Local Government may notify that appeals from Magistrates may lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session. Although the person bound over under S. 107 supra, is not convicted of any offence the appellate Court when hearing an appeal under this section from such an order, is competent to order a retrial as the order for retrial in such a case is an incidental order within S. 423, infra, 43 A. 501. The High Court has power to revise the order of the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge on appeal and under Ss. 124, and 125, supra, the District Magistrate himself may release the person imprisoned for failure to give security or cancel the bond already taken. The order of a Sessions Judge under this section discharging a person from whom security was taken under S. 118, supra, is not an original or appellate order of acquittal under S. 417 infra, and the local Government has no right of appeal against such an order, but may move the High Court in revision, 27 Cr. L.J. 626=94 Ind. Cas. 402, following 21 A. 107; 24 A. 143; 36 A. 147.

Appeal.—Before the amendment no appeal lay under this section when a District Magistrate or Presidency Magistrate ordered security for keeping the peace or to be of good behaviour. But now an appeal lies to the High Court in the case of a Presidency Magistrate, and to the Sessions Court in the case of a District Magistrate. If security order is confirmed in appeal by the Sessions Court, the further remedy is to move the High Court in revision to have the order set aside under S. 439, infra. If the person from whom security is demanded fails to furnish the security and is imprisoned, S. 124, supra, makes provision for releasing such a person if it could be done without hazard to the community. This power is vested in the Chief Presidency Magistrate and not in a Presidency Magistrate. Similarly under S. 125, supra, a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate may cancel any bond taken by the order of any Court in his district not superior to his own. The High Court will not ordinarily interfere on the merits with orders under security sections and where no appeal has been preferred against such orders, the High Court will refuse to exercise its revisional jurisdiction, 13 Cr. L.J. 9=13 Ind. Cas. 102; 16 Cr. L.J. 252=28 Ind. Cas. 108; 6 A.L.J. 437=9 Cr. L.J. 528=2 Ind. Cas. 223.

Provisos —The two provisos are new. The first proviso is important. The Local Government may by notification direct that appeals from Magistrates other than the District Magistrate shall be to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Court. Even in such a case the party aggrieved may move the High Court to revise the order after the appeal was decided by the District Magistrate. So the decisions in 25 C.W.N. 383 and 27 A. 623 are no longer law. The second proviso makes it clear that this section does not apply to cases laid before the Sessions Judge under S. 123 supra. When a Sessions Judge deals with a case under S. 123, supra, the order passed by him, whatever it may be, becomes the order in the case and there is no longer an order by a Magistrate made under S. 118, supra, which can be subject of an appeal to the District Magistrate under this section, 35 B. 271 at 274. The only course open is to move the High Court to revise the order of the Sessions Judge.

406A. Any person aggrieved by an order refusing to accept or rejecting a surety under section 122 may appeal against such order.—

- (a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court;
- (b) if made by the District Magistrate, to the Court of Session; or
- (c) if made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, to the District Magistrate.

Amendment.—The Select Committee remarked on this new section thus "we note that there has been considerable criticism on this clause which provides for the appeal against an order refusing to accept a surety. But we think that if no appeal is provided most cases are bound to be taken up in revisions. We do not agree that all appeals under Ss. 406 and 406A should lie to the Sessions Judge." This section is new and provides for appeals from orders refusing to accept or rejecting a surety under S. 122, supra. See S. 432 (5) infra, which enacts that where an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed. See 16 Cr. L.J. 232=23 Ind. Cas. 108.

407. (1) Any person convicted on a trial held by any Magistrate of the second or third class, or any person sentenced under section 349 or in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under section 380 by a Sub-divisional Magistrate of the second class, may appeal to the District Magistrate.

Appeal from sentence of Magistrate of the second or third class.

(2) The District Magistrate may direct that any appeal under this section, or any class of such appeals, shall be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him and empowered by the Local Government to hear such appeals, and thereupon such appeal or class of appeals may be presented to such Subordinate Magistrate, or, if already presented to the District Magistrate, may be transferred to such Subordinate Magistrate. The District Magistrate may withdraw from such Magistrate any appeal or class of appeals so presented or transferred.

Transfer of appeals to first class Magistrate.

Amendment.—An appeal is provided for under this section against any sentence or order passed under S. 380, supra, by the addition of the words "in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under S. 380," in sub-section (1).

Scope of the Section.—This section deals with appeals by persons convicted on trials held by Magistrates of the second and third classes and from a sub-divisional Magistrate of the 2nd class and also against an order (which is not a sentence) passed by a sub-divisional Magistrate of the second class passed under S. 380, supra. An order under S. 562 (1) infra, may be passed by a Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under the provisions of S. 380, infra, according to the proviso to S. 562, infra. Such an order would be clearly appealable under this section, 52 C. 463 at 467.

Convicted on a trial—The word "offence" in S. 4 (1) (a), supra, includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under S. 20 of the Cattle trespass Act and a person against whom an order under S. 22 of the said Act is made is a person convicted on a trial, "See 46 B. 58; 27 C. 992; 34 C. 926; 44 B. 42 in this connection. When such trial is by a second or third class Magistrate an appeal under this section lay against that conviction, 29 M. 517 at 518. This section applies only to the case of a conviction and the power of the Appellate Court is confined to the hearing of an appeal presented against such conviction, 34 A. 244.

By any Magistrate of the second or third class—An appeal lies under this section from a conviction by a Bench invested with second or third class powers, 9 M. 36, but not from a conviction by a Bench invested with first class powers, 9 C. 96. The question whether an appeal lies to the District Magistrate or not depends upon the power of the Magistrate at the commencement of the trial. If a second class Magistrate before the conclusion of the trial is appointed a Magistrate of the first class, the appeal still lay to the District Magistrate, 8 Cr. L.J. 48. But a Bench of the Patna High Court in 26 Cr. L.J. 915 = 88 Ind. Cas. 978 (2) has held distinguishing 8 Cr. L.J. 48 that the appeal lay to the Convicted on a trial.—See notes under the previous section. An appeal lies under this section from an order awarding compensation under S. 22 of the Cattle-trespass Act. The compensation so awarded is not a fine and consequently the restrictive provisions of S. 413, infra, do not apply, 46 B. 58. See also in this connection 44 B. 42; 34 C. 926; 27 C. 992.

Any Magistrate of the first class.—Where a second class Magistrate takes cognizance of a case but during the course of the trial is invested with powers of a Magistrate of the first class and a substantial part of the trial was held by him as a Magistrate of the first class, it would be straining the language of the section to hold that the case does not fall within this section, 29 Bom. L.R. 432=28 Cr. L.J. 474=101 Ind. Cas. 602 and the appeal in such a case lies to the Sessions Court and not to the District Magistrate, 8 Lah. 203. The moment a second class Magistrate is invested with first class powers, he becomes a first class Magistrate and any conviction by him in cases taken up by him as a second class Magistrate would be a conviction by a first class Magistrate and an appeal from such conviction lay to the Sessions Court, [1925] Pat. 472=25 Cr. L.J. 914=86 Ind. Cas. 978 followed recently in 51 M. 257 and 8 Lah. 203. When a Magistrate of the first class sentenced an accused to one day's imprisonment and a fine of rupees fifty and on appeal the Sessions Judge declined to entertain the appeal on the ground that in fact the accused was neither sent to jail nor actually imprisoned, it was held by the High Court that an appeal did lie to the Sessions Court as there was a combination of sentences under S. 413, infra, and it was immaterial whether the accused actually suffered imprisonment in jail or not, 33 A. 510. Where a second class Magistrate sends up a case under S. 349, supra, to a first class Magistrate, such Magistrate should be deemed to be not a Magistrate exercising powers under S. 30, supra, and when he sentences to a period of five years, an appeal lies to the Sessions Court and not to the High Court, 6 Cr. L.J. 289. When a second class Magistrate sends up a case to a first class Magistrate, being of opinion that the provisions of S. 562, infra, is applicable to the case of the accused but the first class Magistrate convicts and sentences the accused to a term of imprisonment an appeal lies to the Sessions Court against the conviction, 17 Bom. L.R. 895=16 Cr. L.J. 738=31 Ind. Cas. 338=7 Cr. L. Rev. 128. See also 29 C.W.N. 151.

Proviso (b)—The words "of all or any of the accused sentenced at such trial" have been newly added in order to make it clear that in a trial in which more persons than one are convicted and in which by reason of the sentence passed, an appeal lay in the case of some of the accused to the Sessions Court and of others to the High Court, the appeal of all the accused shall lie to the High Court. This is in accordance with the decision in, 23 Cr. L.J. 595=68 Ind. Cas. 819; 11 Bom. L.R. 544=10 Cr. L.J. 250=3 Ind. Cas. 171; 35 A. 154; 17 M. L.J. 248; 13 A.L.J. 272=16 Cr. L.J. 333=28 Ind. Cas. 737; 38 A. 395; 11 A.L.J. 111=14 Cr. L.J. 119=18 Ind. Cas. 679; 1901 P.R. (Cr. J.) 15. The decision in 40 M. 591 is no longer law. Where the total term of imprisonment awarded by an Assistant Sessions Judge or a Magistrate empowered under S. 30, supra, does not exceed four year's imprisonment in the aggregate, the appeal from such conviction lies to the Sessions Court, 28 Cr. L.J. 672=103 Ind. Cas. 208. A Sessions Judge to whom a jail appeal was sent by mistake from the conviction and sentence of five years by a Magistrate specially empowered under S. 30, supra, dismissed the appeal summarily. Such dismissal is a nullity, under S. 530 (r), infra, and the accused still had a right of appeal to the High Court under this section, 2 Ran. 386. Under this proviso when an accused has been sentenced to more than four years, all the other accused convicted at the same trial have to appeal to the High Court even though they have received smaller sentences and this is so even if the accused who has been sentenced to more than four years does not choose to appeal, 24 A.L.J. 151=27 Cr. L.J. 173=91 Ind. Cas. 959 where 37 A. 471 is followed.

Proviso (c).—This was added in the Code of 1898. Appeals from convictions under S. 121A, I.P.C., by Magistrates, lie direct to the High Court. A person was convicted under S. 121A and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment and also convicted under S. 163, I.P.C. and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Under S. 35 (3), supra, if a person is convicted of several offences at one trial, the aggregate sentences are to be deemed as one Proviso (b).—The words "of all or any of the accused sentenced at such trial" have been newly added in order to make it clear that in a trial in which more persons than one are convicted and in which by reason of the sentence passed, an appeal lay in the case of some of the accused to the Sessions Court and of others to the High Court, the appeal of all the accused shall lie to the High Court. Cas. 737; 38 A. 395; 11 A.L.J. 111=14 Cr. L.J. 119=18 Ind. Cas. 679; 1901 P.R. (Cr. J.) 15. The decision in 40 M. 591 is no longer law. Where the total term of imprisonment awarded by an Assistant Sessions Judge or a Magistrate empowered under S. 30, supra, does not exceed four years imprisonment in the aggregate, the appeal from such conviction lies to the Sessions Court, 28 Cr. L.J. 672=103 Ind. Cas. 208. A Sessions Judge to whom a jail appeal was sent by mistake from the conviction and sentence of five years by a Magistrate specially empowered under S. 30, supra, dismissed the appeal summarily. Such dismissal is a nullity, under S. 530 (r), infra, and the accused still had a right of appeal to the High Court under this section, 2 Ran. 386. Under this proviso when an accused has been sentenced to more than four years, all the other accused convicted at the same trial have to appeal to the High Court even though they have received smaller sentences and this is so even if the accused who has been sentenced to more than four years does not choose to appeal, 21 A.L.J. 151=27 Cr. L.J. 175=51 Ind. Cas. 939 where 37 A. 471 is followed.

Proviso (c).—This was added in the Code of 1898. Appeals from convictions under S. 124A, I.P.C., by Magistrates, lie direct to the High Court. A person was convicted under S. 124A and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment and also convicted under S. 153, I.P.C. and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Under S. 25 (3), supra, if a person is convicted of several offences at one trial, the aggregate sentences are to be deemed as one sentence for purposes of appeal and this proviso enacts that a person convicted under S. 121A, I.P.C., has an appeal direct to the High Court. It is a reasonable inference that appeal against the single sentence of three years under both the sections lies to the High Court. But as the appeal originally filed against the conviction under S. 123A, I.P.C., to the Sessions Court was called up to the High Court under S. 526, infra, and unified, the point was not decided, 35 C. 214 at 219.

May appeal to the Court of Session—Where there are two Sessions divisions in the same district and the Magistrate who convicts the accused had his headquarters in one of the Sessions divisions but had jurisdiction throughout the whole district, it was held that all appeals from convictions should be preferred to the Sessions Court within whose division the headquarters of the Magistrate was situate irrespective of the division in which the offence was committed, 30 M. 126, but the decision was distinguished in 23 M.L.J. 670=12 M.L.T. 831=13 Cr. L.J. 850=17 Ind. Cas. 788. This section makes the sentences of Magistrate appealable under S. 402 read with R. 9, supra.

409. An appeal to the Court of Session or Sessions Judge shall Appeals to Court of Session how heard. be heard by the Sessions Judge or by an Additional Sessions Judge :

Provided that an Additional Sessions Judge shall hear only such appeals as the Local Government may, by general or special order, direct or as the Sessions Judge of the division may make over to him.

Amendment—The proviso is newly added and restricts the power of the Additional Sessions Judge to hear appeals. Assistant Sessions Judges have no power at all to hear appeals. A Sessions Judge has no power to transfer an appeal filed in his Court to an Assistant Sessions Judge as S. 193 (3) speaks of a 'case' which will not include an appeal, 37A 288 where 9 B. 164 and 23 A. 43 are referred to. There is a distinction made in the Code between case and appeal. For example in S. 526, infra, the expression 'case or appeal' occurs four times and this expression is again repeated in S. 527, infra. See notes at p. 344 supra. It was held in 14 Cr. L.J. 195=19 Ind. Cas. 193, that an appeal from an order filing a complaint of Court under Ss. 195 and 476, infra, can be heard by an Additional Sessions Judge.

410. Any person convicted on a trial held

Appeal from sentence of Court of Session. by a Sessions Judge, or an Additional Sessions Judge, may appeal to the High Court.

Convicted on a trial may appeal—The conviction contemplated by this section may be either under the Indian Penal Code or under a special or local law 41 C. 694. The words "convicted on a trial" are important. If a Sessions Judge when hearing an appeal requires the trial Court to take additional evidence and disposes of the appeal after the additional evidence is taken and submitted to it, there will not be a further appeal to the High Court in such a case, 27 C. 372; 6 B.L.R. 483=15 W.R. (Cr.) 33. See notes under S. 407, supra. An order of a Sessions Judge under S. 123 (3) supra cannot be appealed against. An appeal lies to the High Court against an order of a Sessions Judge imposing a fine upon a witness under S. 228, I.P.C., for insult, 4 M.H.C.R. 146. This section gives a convicted person a right of appeal. This right is in contra-distinction with the indulgence to be heard or not when a Court exercises its powers of revision, 1891 A.W.N. 43.

411. Any person convicted on a trial held by a Presidency

Appeal from sentence of Presidency Magistrate.

Magistrate may appeal to the High Court, if the Magistrate has sentenced him to imprisonment for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding two hundred rupees.

This section relates to appeals from convictions by Presidency Magistrates.

Imprisonment exceeding six months or fine exceeding two hundred rupees.—It is to be noted that this section is not referred to in S. 415, infra, so that the principle of combination of sentences may apply to sentences passed by Presidency Magistrates also. The result is that no appeal lies from a sentence of six months' imprisonment and a fine of rupees two hundred or a further period of three months' simple imprisonment passed by a Presidency Magistrate, 2 M. 30, 16 C. 799; 20 B. 143; 33 C. 1036; 10 Cr. L.J. 255=3 Ind. Cas. 285. Where the accused is convicted of two offences and sentenced to six months' imprisonment for each offence, the sentences to run concurrently, there is no appeal under this section as there is only a single sentence of six months. The intention to be gathered from this section is that a person who is to suffer by being imprisoned for more than a certain period shall have the privilege of an appeal, 17 C. L.J. 392=13 Cr. L.J. 787=17 Ind. Cas. 531. See also S. 35 (3) supra.

412. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, where an accused person has pleaded guilty and has been convicted by a Court of Session or any Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class on such plea, there shall be no appeal except as to the extent or legality of the sentence.

Scope of the section.—This section provides that there is no right of appeal in certain cases where the accused pleads guilty as the plea of guilty is a waiver of the right of appeal, 5 B. 85; 1917 P.R. (Cr. J.) 20. There should be a real plea of guilty properly made by the accused, 22 B. 759. But when the plea of guilty is based on a mistake of law, it shall not be accepted and it is incumbent on the Magistrate to try the accused on the merits, 31 C. L.J. 122; 11 W.R. (Cr.) 83.

Or Magistrate of the first class.—These words were added in the Code of 1899 to meet the decision in 22 B. 759.

No appeal except as to the extent or legality of sentence.—No appeal will lie on the ground that the conviction was illegal. But the provisions of this section will not preclude an accused person who pleads guilty to the charge from contending in revision that his conviction is illegal and such a plea as to the illegality of the conviction was allowed to be raised by the Bombay High Court in 27 Cr. L.J. 1148=97 Ind. Cas. 668. Exception is made only as regards the extent and legality of the sentence, 22 B. 759 at 760. The intention of the Legislature would appear to be to treat the plea of guilty as a waiver of the right of appeal except as to the extent and legality of the sentence itself, 5 B. 85; 31 C. L.J. 122. See explanation to S. 418, infra, which says that severity of sentence shall be deemed to be a matter of law. Limited admission of appeals is not permitted except as provided by this and S. 418, infra. In all other cases, if the appeal is admitted, the appellant is of right entitled to have the whole case dealt with by the Court of appeal, Ratnaiah 826. The appellant cannot be restricted to any selected ground out of those specified in his appeal petition. A restrictive order for admission is not clearly contemplated by S. 422, infra and must be deemed ultra vires, 41 C. 406 at 410 following 15 C.W.N. 921 at 922; 4 Pat. 254; 13 Bom. L.R. 550=12 Cr. L.J. 431=11 Ind. Cas. 615.

413. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Court of Session passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only, or in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of first class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding fifty rupees only.

vis., the accused being deprived of the privilege of an appeal no longer exists as pointed out in 30 C.L.J. 859—118 Ind. Cas. 312.

Tried summarily.—This section precludes appeals in certain cases tried summarily by a Magistrate empowered to act under S. 260, but S. 260, supra. Itself refers only to Magistrates of the first-class or a Bench having the powers of a Magistrate of the first class. When an accused is convicted by a Bench invested with second or third class powers an appeal lies under S. 407, supra, 9 M. 36. An order passed under S. 562, infra, in a summary trial is not a sentence within this section and is therefore appealable. See notes under S. 562 infra under heading 'appeal and revision'. The section does not say in what cases there shall be an appeal, 36 A 828.

Magistrate empowered to act under S. 260.—The Magistrates empowered under S. 260 supra are the District Magistrate, any Magistrate of the first class specially empowered and a Bench of Magistrates invested with first-class powers and specially empowered, and they may try summarily certain offences specified in the section.

Fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only.—Before the amendment when a first-class Magistrate tried a case summarily, and sentenced an accused to three months' imprisonment with evidence recorded in full, there was no right of appeal. There is an appeal now provided for, when the accused is sentenced to imprisonment, but in cases where a fine only is imposed then the fine must exceed rupees two hundred to make it appealable.

415. An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in section 413 or section 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace.

Proviso to Sections
413 and 414.

Explanation.—A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence by which two or more punishments are combined within the meaning of this section.

This section is a proviso to Ss. 413, and, 414, supra but it makes no mention of S. 411, supra. So the conviction and sentences permitted by this section do not apply to sentence passed by Presidency Magistrates. A sentence of six months, and a fine of rupees two hundred, in default of payment to three months further imprisonment, passed by a Presidency Magistrate does not make the sentence appealable though such combination is expressly permitted in cases of sentences passed by Provincial Magistrates. A sentence of fine and one day's imprisonment by a Provincial Magistrate is a combination of sentences for the purpose of this section even though the accused is not actually sent to jail, 33 A. 510. It has been held that confiscation of property with other punishments is not a combination to make the sentence appealable, 3 C. 336. An order under S. 106, supra, to find security to keep the peace does not make the sentence appealable if it is not otherwise appealable. So also a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, cannot be combined with a substantive term of imprisonment, to make the sentence appealable. Where in a trial held, non-appealable sentences are passed on conviction on all the accused except one against whom an order under S. 562 (1) has been made, the order under S. 562 (1) being appealable, by operation of this section, the right of appeal is conferred on all the accused jointly tried, even though they were awarded non-appealable sentences, 52 C. 463.

415A. Notwithstanding anything contained in this Chapter, when more persons than one are convicted in one trial, and an appealable judgment or order has been passed in respect of any of such persons, all or any of the persons convicted at such trial shall have a right of appeal.

allowed to remain on record, 23 Cr. L.J. 1245=82 Ind. Cas. 173. In an appeal from an acquittal of a specific offence the accused cannot be convicted on appeal of an offence entirely different from that charged against him, 12 Cr. L.J. 73=9 Ind. Cas. 436, following 19 B. 51 at 68. In an appeal under this section the High Court is a Court of appeal on facts as well as the law, 9 C.L.J. 378=10 Cr. L.J. 499=4 Ind. Cas. 124. No appeal lies at the instance of the Local Government under this section against an order of a Sessions Judge setting aside an order demanding security for good behaviour. There cannot be the least doubt that the terms 'acquittal' and 'conviction' are no where applied to an order under S. 118 supra and they are wholly inapplicable, 26 A.L.J. 99=106 Ind. Cas. 684 where 1891 A.W.N. 127; 13 C.W.N. 420; 9 C. 978 are referred to. See also 26 A.L.J. 519; 1 Luck. 231. Similarly when a public prosecutor withdraws the prosecution, no appeal lies under this section 18 M.L.J. (Sh. N.) 57, (Cr. A. No. 439 of 1908).

Local Government may direct the public prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court.—The right of preferring an appeal against acquittal is peculiar to India alone, of all His Majesty's Dominions. The power of appealing is given only to the Local Government, and should be exercised very sparingly, 21 Bom. L.R. 1054=21 Cr. L.J. 17=54 Ind. Cas. 161; 26 Bom. L.R. 613. A private party cannot appeal or invoke the aid of the High Court under this section, 7 M. 213 and the reasons for this are to safeguard the liberty of the subject from the vindictiveness of a private prosecution by insisting that the authority who should decide whether an appeal should be filed be the highest authority in each Province, viz., the Local Government, 17 Cr. L.J. 91 (2)=32 Ind. Cas. 683 (2). The High Court has no authority to entertain an appeal against acquittal except upon an appeal by the Local Government concerned, 19 W.R. (Cr.) 53; 6 C.L.R. 245; 1 A. 139 (F.B.); 14 M. 363. The right conferred on the Local Government is in the widest terms and without any limitation, 38 M. 1028 at 1034; 2 C. 273. The discretion to exercise the power appertains to Government and is not subject to the control of the High Court, 21 Bom. L.R. 1054 and the High Court will not interfere on the mere reference of the District Magistrate when the Government has a distinct right of appeal under this section, 38 M. 1021. See 56 C. 924 following 44 C. 703; 24 A. 336; 25 A. 128. Though the statutory right of appeal from convictions and acquittals is on the same footing, the Legislature, was not wholly oblivious of the considerations which on the whole differentiate the respective positions of the appellants in the two classes of cases in the matter of their adjudication. Had this not been so, there is no reason for appeals from acquittals being made cognizable by the High Court only, while appeals from convictions lie to the lower grades of Courts. This provision must be due to the special nature of the remedy by appeals from acquittals and the importance of their being decided by the highest Court of the Province, 1 Cr. L.J. 781=1904 P.R. (Cr. J.) 7=1904 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 97. This section lays down that the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court. The direction may be given to a Public Prosecutor defined in S. 4 (1) (i) supra, in a letter whereby he is appointed as such, but it does not follow that the mere fact that a person has been appointed to present an appeal to the High Court from an order of acquittal involves his appointment as Public Prosecutor for the purpose of the case. In a case of this description where the liberty of the subject is involved, the statute must be strictly construed and full compliance with the provisions is required. The Legal Remembrancer of Bengal is a Public Prosecutor within the meaning of this section, 46 C. 544; 18 C.W.N. 279=19 C.L.J. 519 at 521. But an appeal preferred by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer of Bengal on behalf of the Government of Behar and Orissa under this section was held incompetent and was dismissed on that ground, 18 C.W.N. 279=18 C.L.J. 519. By specially giving a right of appeal, against an acquittal to the Local Government, the Legislature has indicated that private complainants have not the right and the High Court will not interfere in cases of acquittals, in revision, as such a course would practically mean giving the private party a right of appeal, 7 C. 347; see 14 M. 213. The High Court declined to hear Counsel who appeared to support a revision at the instance of a private party. See 42 C. 612, where all the decisions Government under this section to appeal to the High Court on the ground that a Sessions Judge illegally refused to add a new charge, 15 B. 414 see also 25 M. 1. When a case is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor in the Sessions Court acting under S. 494, infra, no doubt there is an acquittal, if a charge has been framed, but the Government has no right of appeal from such an acquittal, 18 M.L.J. (sh. n.) 57. See the new S. 449 (2) which provides for an appeal from order of acquittal passed by the High Court in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction under Chapter XXXIII, infra, by the Local Government as in this section. The order of a Sessions Judge under S. 406, supra, discharging a person under security under S. 118 is not an original or appellate order of acquittal within this section and the Local Government has no right of appeal against such an order but may move the High Court in revision, and it is open to the High Court to set aside the order and direct the person proceeded against to furnish security, 1 Luck. 231, following 21 A. 107; 24 A. 143; 36 A. 147. Where the magistrate made a discharge under S. 119 supra, it is now clear on the language of S. 436 infra that no further inquiry can be ordered. See notes under S. 110 at p. 155-156 and at p. 170-171.

Limitation for appeals.—Under this section, the time allowed for appeal is six months from the date of the judgment appealed against under Art. 157, Sch. II of the Limitation Act IX of 1908. But the appeal should be preferred as expeditiously as possible, 5 A. 253 at 255; 2 C. 436 (F.B.). S. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to appeals under this section and for sufficient cause the delay may be excused. But where there is unexplained delay in taking steps to have an appeal filed, the discretion allowed under S. 5 of the Limitation Act will not be exercised by the High Court, Weir II, 462; Weir I, 791.

As to arrest of accused in appeal from acquittal, see S. 427 infra. In capital cases it is undesirable that the prisoner's fate should be discussed while he remains at large, 9 A. 528 (F.B.). As to powers of the High Court in appeals against the acquittal, see S. 423 (1) (a) infra and notes thereunder pages at 762-763.

418. (1) An appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law except where the trial was by jury, in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only.

Appeal on what matters admissible.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or in section 423, sub-section (2), when, in the case of a trial by jury, any person is sentenced to death, any other person convicted in the same trial with the person so sentenced may appeal on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law.

Explanation.—The alleged severity of a sentence shall, for the purposes of this section be deemed to be a matter of law.

Amendment.—Sub-section (2) is new; it provides that when in the case of a trial by Jury, one person is sentenced to death and another to a lesser punishment, the accused sentenced to a lesser punishment may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. This is intended to remove the anomaly which existed, that the High Court acting under S. 374 supra could consider the facts of the case as regards the former accused but on an appeal from the other accused could only interfere on a point of law.

Object of the section.—This section applies to appeals against acquittals as well as convictions, see 10 C. 1029. The object of the section in Jury trials is to prevent the High Court from going into the evidence and deciding the question whether the conviction is right. In such a case the High Court will be substituting its own decision for the verdict of the Jury, who have an opportunity of watching the demeanour of the witnesses and weighing their evidence, 21 C. 935. But this section does not control the powers of the High Court to go into facts in a case referred to it under S. 307, supra, 9 A. 420. An appellate Court should require the Court to decide in order to do justice in the case, 26 M. 1 at 13. See also 25 C. 711. The petition of appeal should state distinctly in what respect the law has been contravened, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 21. Admissibility of evidence is a point of law, 2 B. 61. Admission of inadmissible evidence, and placing it before the Jury is a point of law, 27 B. 625 at 632; 11 Cr. L.J. 13. Misdirection to the Jury is a question of law, 25 C. 230; 21 C. 953; 15 C.W.N. 433; 27 B. 626. Non-direction on a point of prime importance telling in favour of the accused is a point of law, 27 B. 643 at 651. Conviction based on no evidence is a point of law, 15 W.R. (Cr.) 46; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 19 and the explanation to the section makes the alleged severity of sentence, a point of law. For instances of other points of law see notes under S. 297 at p. 603.

Sub-section (2) is new and the decisions in 2 C.W.N. 49; 11 B.L.R. 14=19 W.R. (Cr.) 57 are no longer law. The anomaly which existed in the law that under S. 374 and S. 376 supra, the Court can go into the question of fact in a case where that sentence is awarded, while in the case of an accused who was jointly tried and sentenced only to a lesser sentence, the Court is not empowered to go into the facts if the case had been tried by a Jury, has been removed by this new sub-section by allowing a right of appeal on facts also to a person jointly tried and convicted but sentenced to a lesser punishment.

419. Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under section 367.

Scope and object of the section.—This section prescribes the form of the petition of appeal which is to be presented to the appellate Court so as to give to the appellate Court jurisdiction to deal with the matter in the same way as a complaint gives jurisdiction to the Court of first instance. This section is applicable to all appeals presented under S. 420, infra, which deals with the mode of presentation of such appeals, 1891 A.W.N. 48. An appeal petition need not be verified, 12 M. 431. Every appeal petition should state distinctly in what respect the law has been contravened and it is not for the Court to hunt through the records and find out any illegality that may have arisen. It is for the appellant to point out wherein there has been a departure from the law, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 21. A petition containing scandalous allegations against the convicting Magistrate need not be entertained, but must be returned for expunging the offending portions of it, 15 B. 438. For a proper presentation of an appeal no calafat need be filed, but a memo of appearance is sufficient, 43 M.L.J. 683; [1926] Pat. 123=27 Cr. L.J. 666=94 Ind. Cas. 714. The object of requiring a copy of the judgment to be produced with the memorandum of appeal is presumably to place the Court in a position to judge the correctness of the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal and a discretion is given to the Court to dispense with the production of a copy at the time of filing the appeal and also at any subsequent stage, 30 Cr. L.J. 235=114 Ind. Cas. 61.

Appeal may be presented by appellant or his pleader.—As regards presentation of appeal no special method is prescribed by the Code and therefore the question is one of administrative convenience alone, so long as there is an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk or one of the Judges, there is a valid presentation, 32 M. 527 (F.B.) at 529. The word "presented" evidently means that such petition should be delivered to the proper officer of the Court either by the appellant or his pleader. Weir II, 470 or a pleader's clerk, 20 M. 87, Weir II, 469 and 470; 6 B. 14; 21 M. 114, or by the Public Prosecutor, 32 M. 527, but it cannot be presented through post, 15 M. 137; Weir II, 467; Katanlal 469. It is not a due presentation of an appeal when the petition is deposited in a box kept for the convenience of the parties within the precincts of the Court, 19 M. 334. A petition signed by a pleader duly authorised may be actually presented to the Court by the

the case, 26 M. 1 at 14. See also 25 C. 711. Admissibility in what respect the law has been contravened, evidence is a point of law, 2 B. 61. Admission of facts before the Jury is a point of law, 27 B. 626 at 632; Jury is a question of law, 25 C. 230; 21 C. 955; 15 C.W.N. Section on a point of prime importance telling in favour of the law, 27 B. 644 at 651. Conviction based on no evidence is a point of law, 16 W.R. (Cr.) 19 and the explanation to the section makes the alleged facts a point of law. For instances of other points of law see notes under 38.

Section (2) is new and the decisions in 2 C.W.N. 49; 11 B.L.R. 14=19 W.R. (Cr.) per law. The anomaly which existed in the law that under S 374 and S. 376 the Court can go into the question of fact in a case where that sentence is awarded, in case of an accused who was jointly tried and sentenced only to a lesser sentence, is not empowered to go into the facts if the case had been tried by a Jury. has been removed by this new sub-section by allowing a right of appeal on facts also to a person found guilty and convicted but sentenced to a lesser punishment.

419. Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under section 367.

Scope and object of the section.—This section prescribes the form of the petition of appeal which is to be presented to the appellate Court so as to give to the appellate Court jurisdiction to deal with the matter in the same way as a complaint gives jurisdiction to the Court of first instance. This section is applicable to all appeals presented under S 420, infra, which deals with the mode of presentation of such appeals, 1881 A.W.N. 48. An appeal petition need not be verified, 12 M. 331. Every appeal petition should state distinctly in what respect the law has been contravened and it is not for the Court to hunt through the records and find out any illegality that may have arisen. It is for the appellant to point out wherein there has been a departure from the law. 1 W.R. (Cr.) 21. A petition containing frivolous allegations against the convicting Magistrate need not be entertained, but must be returned for expunging the offending portions of it, 15 B. 483. For a proper presentation of an appeal no vakalat need be filed, but a memo of appearance is sufficient, 45 M.L.J. 683; [1926] Pat. 125=27 Cr. L.J. 668=93 Ind. Cas. 714. The object of requiring a copy of the judgment to be produced with the memorandum of appeal is presumably to place the Court in a position to judge the correctness of the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal and a discretion is given to the Court to dispense with the production of a copy at the time of filing the appeal and also at any subsequent stage, 30 Cr. L.J. 235=114 Ind. Cas. 61.

Appeal may be presented by appellant or his pleader.—As regards presentation of appeal no special method is prescribed by the Code and therefore the question is one of administrative convenience alone, so long as there is an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk or one of the Judges, there is a valid presentation, 39 M. 527 (F.B.) at 529. The word "presented" evidently means that such petition should be delivered to the proper officer of the Court either by the appellant or his pleader. Weir II, 470 or a pleader's clerk, 20 M. 67; Weir II, 469 and 470, 6 B. 14; 21 M. 114, or by the Public Prosecutor, 39 M. 527, but it cannot be presented through post, 19 M. 137; Weir II, 467; Ratanlal 459. It is not a due presentation of an appeal when the petition is deposited in a box kept for the convenience of the parties within the precincts of the Court, 19 M. 334. A petition signed by a pleader duly authorised may be actually presented to the Court by the appellant, the order of the appellate Court amounts to an illegality. There might be for instance a case where the appeal petition itself showed that there was no possible ground for any extension of the period prescribed by law and therefore there would be no use in giving an opportunity for the pleader to be heard. Ordinarily if an appellant is represented by a pleader, he should be given an opportunity of being heard before the appeal is dismissed. Thus it has been held that, in giving judicial powers to affect prejudicially the rights of person or property, a statute is understood as silently implying, when it does not expressly provide the condition or qualification, that the power is to be exercised in accordance with the fundamental rules of judicial procedure such as that which requires, that before its exercise, the person sought to be prejudicially affected shall have an opportunity of defending himself. In every case where the Court dismisses an appeal as time-barred, without hearing the pleader, then there would be an illegality but where there are reasonable grounds for excusing the delay in the presentation of the appeal the appellate Court should, under the proviso to the section, give an opportunity to the pleader to be heard before dismissing the appeal as time-barred, 29 Bom L.R. 701=23 Cr. L.J. 833=103 Ind. Cas. 109. There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time when he presents the appeal, if he desires that course but if he does not desire to be heard at once then the Court must appoint a future date of hearing of which notice is to be given to the appellant or his pleader so that he may be heard on that date. It is not an absolute rule under this section that the appellant or his pleader must be heard after the records are sent for by the Court. There might be a case where the pleader is fully heard before the records are sent for and the records are merely called for in order that this Court might be satisfied on some points raised and in such a case there would be no illegality in dismissing the appeal without hearing the pleader again after the records are received, 29 Bom L.R. 439=23 Cr. L.J. 467=101 Ind. Cas. 593. A criminal appeal presented cannot be dismissed for default of appearance; the appellate Court is bound to go through the record and decide the appeal on the merits, 46 M. 382; 50 B. 673; 6 Pat. 16; 15 A.L.J. 327=17 Cr. L.J. 333=35 Ind. Cas. 637; 13 A. 171; 27 C.W.N. 947; 50 C. 972; 12 C.W.N. 1235; 24 Cr. L.J. 475=72 Ind. Cas. 891; 9 Cr. L.J. 553=2 Ind. Cas. 247.

No sufficient grounds for interfering.—The appellant is bound to show that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the conviction. He is not in the same position before the appellate Court as he was before the trial Court, 5 A. 386. See also 17 C. 435; 23 C. 347. If the Court finds no sufficient grounds for interference, it may dismiss the appeal summarily.

May dismiss the appeal summarily.—This power of Court to dismiss the appeal summarily under this sub-section is quite different from a dismissal of a criminal appeal under B. 423, infra, in which case the appeal is disposed of after a trial on the merits. A criminal appeal cannot be dismissed for default without being considered on the merits, 27 C.W.N. 947; 46 M. 382, and other decision cited above. An appeal ought not to be summarily dismissed merely because the appellate Court thinks the matter is a mere trifle, Ratanlal, 978, although it may be summarily dismissed if there is no sufficient ground for interference, 12 Cr. L.J. 481=12 Ind. Cas. 89; 12 C.W.N. 233; Ratanlal 593 and 739. It is settled law that a Court of appeal dismissing summarily an appeal is not bound to write a judgment as defined in B. 367, supra, but it is advisable that it should give reasons for rejecting the appeal in view of the possibility of its order being challenged by an application for revision by the High Court, 36 A. 496; 39 A. 393; 17 A. 241; 32 C. 178; 25 Cr. L.J. 1237=82 Ind. Cas. 165; 26 Cr. L.J. 4=83 Ind. Cas. 484; 11 Cr. L.J. 631=8 Ind. Cas. 379; 18 Cr. L.J. 993=42 Ind. Cas. 721; 30 Cr. L.J. 791=117 Ind. Cas. 279 but see 50 C. L.J. 283, which holds that no reasons need be recorded. The word "summarily" ordinarily means in an informal manner and without delay of formal proceedings, and an appellate Court is entitled to reject an appeal without recording a formal judgment or giving reasons for such rejection, 20 B. 540; 21 C. 92; 22 C. 241; Weir. II, 473; 27 Cr. L.J. 23=91 Ind. Cas. 55. A Court disposing of an appeal under this section should either expressly state that it has dealt with the appeal under this section or the judgment should notice, though but concisely what objections were urged and how they were disposed of, 32 C. 178. An order summarily dismissing an appeal is final and require the Court to decide in order to do justice in the case, 26 M. 1 at 14. See also 25 C. 711. The petition of appeal should state distinctly in what respect the law has been contravened, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 21. Admissibility of evidence is a point of law, 2 B. 61. Admission of inadmissible evidence, and placing it before the Jury is a point of law, 27 B. 626 at 632; 11 Cr. L.J. 13. Misdirection to the Jury is a question of law, 25 C. 230; 21 C. 953; 15 C.W.N. 434; 27 B. 626. Non-direction on a point of prime importance telling in favour of the accused is a point of law, 27 B. 644 at 651. Conviction based on no evidence is a point of law, 15 W.R. (Cr.) 46; 16 W.R. (Cr.) 19 and the explanation to the section makes the alleged severity of sentence, a point of law. For instances of other points of law see notes under S. 297 at p. 563.

Sub-section (2) is new and the decisions in 2 C.W.N. 49; 11 B.L.R. 14=19 W.R. (Cr.) 57 are no longer law. The anomaly which existed in the law that under S 374 and S. 376 supra, the Court can go into the question of fact in a case where that sentence is awarded, while in the case of an accused who was jointly tried and sentenced only to a lesser sentence, the Court is not empowered to go into the facts if the case had been tried by a Jury, has been removed by this new sub-section by allowing a right of appeal on facts also to a person jointly tried and convicted but sentenced to a lesser punishment.

419. Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under section 367.

Scope and object of the section.—This section prescribes the form of the petition of appeal which is to be presented to the appellate Court so as to give to the appellate Court jurisdiction to deal with the matter in the same way as a complaint gives jurisdiction to the Court of first instance. This section is applicable to jail appeals presented under S 420, infra, which deals with the mode of presentation of such appeals, 1891 A.W.N. 43. An appeal petition need not be verified, 12 M. 431. Every appeal petition should state distinctly in what respect the law has been contravened and it is not for the Court to hunt through the records and find out any illegality that may have arisen. It is for the appellant to point out wherein there has been a departure from the law, 1 W.R. (Cr.) 21. A petition containing scandalous allegations against the convicting Magistrate need not be entertained, but must be returned for expunging the offending portions of it, 15 B. 488. For a proper presentation of an appeal no valalat need be filed, but a memo of appearance is sufficient, 43 M.L.J. 683; [1926] Pat. 125=27 Cr. L.J. 666=94 Ind. Cas. 714. The object of requiring a copy of the judgment to be produced with the memorandum of appeal is presumably to place the Court in a position to judge the correctness of the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal and a discretion is given to the Court to dispense with the production of a copy at the time of filing the appeal and also at any subsequent stage, 30 Cr. L.J. 235=114 Ind. Cas. 61.

Appeal may be presented by appellant or his pleader.—As regards presentation of appeal no special method is prescribed by the Code and therefore the question is one of administrative convenience alone, so long as there is an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk or one of the Judges, there is a valid presentation, 39 M. 527 (F.B.) at 529. The word "presented" evidently means that such petition should be delivered to the proper officer of the Court either by the appellant or his pleader, Weir II, 470 or a pleader's clerk, 20 M. 87, Weir II, 469 and 470; 6 B. 14; 21 M. 114, or by the Public Prosecutor, 39 M. 527, but it cannot be presented through post, 15 M. 137; Weir II, 467; Ratanlal 459. It is not a due presentation of an appeal when the petition is deposited in a box kept for the convenience of the parties within the precincts of the Court, 19 M. 334. A petition signed by a pleader duly authorised may be actually presented to the Court by the appellant, the order of the appellate Court amounts to an illegality. There might be for instance a case where the appeal petition itself showed that there was no possible ground for any extension of the period prescribed by law and therefore there would be no use in giving an opportunity for the pleader to be heard. Ordinarily if an appellant is represented by a pleader, he should be given an opportunity of being heard before the appeal is dismissed. Thus it has been held that, in giving judicial powers to affect prejudicially the rights of person or property, a statute is understood as silently implying, when it does not expressly provide the condition or qualification, that the power is to be exercised in accordance with the fundamental rules of judicial procedure such as that which requires, that before its exercise, the person sought to be prejudicially affected shall have an opportunity of defending himself. In every case where the Court dismisses an appeal as time-barred, without hearing the pleader, then there would be an illegality but where there are reasonable grounds for excusing the delay in the presentation of the appeal the appellate Court should, under the proviso to the section, give an opportunity to the pleader to be heard before dismissing the appeal as time-barred, 29 Bom. L.R. 701=23 Cr. L.J. 853=103 Ind. Cas. 102. There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time when he presents the appeal, if he desires that course but if he does not desire to be heard at once then the Court must appoint a future date of hearing of which notice is to be given to the appellant or his pleader so that he may be heard on that date. It is not an absolute rule under this section that the appellant or his pleader must be heard after the records are sent for by the Court. There might be a case where the pleader is fully heard before the records are sent for and the records are merely called for in order that this Court might be satisfied on some points raised and in such a case there would be no illegality in dismissing the appeal without hearing the pleader again after the records are received, 29 Bom. L.R. 438=23 Cr. L.J. 467=101 Ind. Cas. 595. A criminal appeal presented cannot be dismissed for default of appearance; the appellate Court is bound to go through the record and decide the appeal on the merits, 46 M. 382; 50 B. 673; 6 Pat. 16; 14 A.L.J. 327=17 Cr. L.J. 353=35 Ind. Cas. 637; 13 A. 171; 27 C.W.N. 947; 50 C. 972; 12 C.W.N. 1213; 24 Cr. L.J. 475=72 Ind. Cas. 891; 9 Cr. L.J. 553=2 Ind. Cas. 247.

No sufficient grounds for interfering.—The appellant is bound to show that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the conviction. He is not in the same position before the appellate Court as he was before the trial Court, 5 A. 386. See also 17 C. 483; 23 C. 347. If the Court finds no sufficient grounds for interference, it may dismiss the appeal summarily.

May dismiss the appeal summarily—This power of Court to dismiss the appeal summarily under this sub-section is quite different from a dismissal of a criminal appeal under S. 423, infra, in which case the appeal is disposed of after a trial on the merits. A criminal appeal cannot be dismissed for default without being considered on the merits, 27 C.W.N. 947; 46 M. 392, and other decision cited above. An appeal ought not to be summarily dismissed merely because the appellate Court thinks the matter is a mere trifle, Ratanlal, 978, although it may be summarily dismissed if there is no sufficient ground for interference, 12 Cr. L.J. 481=12 Ind. Cas. 89; 12 C.W.N. 248; Ratanlal 593 and 739. It is settled law that a Court of appeal dismissing summarily an appeal is not bound to write a judgment as defined in S. 367, supra, but it is advisable that it should give reasons for rejecting the appeal in view of the possibility of its order being challenged by an application for revision by the High Court, 36 A. 496; 38 A. 393; 17 A. 241; 32 C. 178; 25 Cr. L.J. 1237=82 Ind. Cas. 165; 26 Cr. L.J. 4=83 Ind. Cas. 484; 11 Cr. L.J. 631=8 Ind. Cas. 379; 18 Cr. L.J. 993=42 Ind. Cas. 721; 30 Cr. L.J. 791=117 Ind. Cas. 279 but see 50 C. L.J. 285, which holds that no reasons need be recorded. The word "summarily" ordinarily means in an informal manner and without delay of formal proceedings, and an appellate Court is entitled to reject an appeal without recording a formal judgment or giving reasons for such rejection, 20 B. 540; 21 C. 92; 22 C. 241; Weir. II, 473, 27 Cr. L.J. 23=91 Ind. Cas. 55. A Court disposing of an appeal under this section should either expressly state that it has dealt with the appeal under this section or the judgment should notice, though but concisely what objections were urged and how they were disposed of, 32 C. 178. An order summarily dismissing an appeal is final and his appeal in person or through his pleader, cannot apply, and the law does not require notice to be given to an appellant actually in prison, under this section which would be useless. If an appellant has a pleader or is able to appear in person, he may be able to give further arguments. But if he is in jail and cannot afford a pleader, then issuing a notice to him is not necessary because he cannot give any further information to the Court and therefore the practice of the Court in summarily dismissing such appeals when occasion arises is a correct procedure. Facilities should be given to prisoners in jail by the officer-in-charge of the jail to enable them to prepare their appeal petitions. 13 W.R. (Cr.) 69; 1 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 16. S. 11 of the Criminal Appeal Act (7 Edw. 7 C. 23), enacts that an appellant notwithstanding that he is in custody shall be entitled to be present, if he desires it, on the hearing of his appeal except where the appeal is on some ground involving a question of law alone, but, in that case and on application for leave to appeal, and on any other proceedings incidental to an appeal, shall not be entitled to be present except where rules provide that he shall appear, or where the Court gives leave to be present. When a prisoner under sentence of death appeals from jail he is not entitled to appear in person to argue his appeal in the High Court. Ordinarily jail appeals are heard ex parte where the Crown retains Counsel to argue a referred trial on behalf of the accused under sentence of death, but the accused refuses to instruct him stating he does not wish to be represented by Counsel in the High Court, still it is the duty of Counsel to appear and conduct the case on behalf of the accused 28 Cr. L.J. 679=103 Ind. Cas. 407.

May present petition of appeal.—This section deals with the mode of presentation of an appeal when the accused is in jail. The petition must comply with the provisions of the previous section. For the purposes of limitation a presentation of an appeal, to the officer in charge of the jail is equivalent to a presentation to the Court, 9 M. 258.

Forward petition to appellate Court.—The Appellate Court is bound to give notice to the appellant in jail and to give him an opportunity to show cause. The accused in jail may be sent for from the jail to explain any difficulty in his case under appeal. The Appellate Court cannot dismiss an appeal without perusing the records of the case, 13 A. 171 (F.B.) But see 27 Cr. L.J. 833=86 Ind. Cas. 389. No appeal forwarded from jail under this section shall be summarily rejected until 7 days have elapsed after its receipt by the appellate Court. In forwarding a jail appeal, the officer in charge of the jail shall invariably certify that the appellant has been informed that if he intends to appoint a pleader, an appearance shall be entered within 7 days from the date on which his petition may reach the appellate Court but the appellate Court need not wait for 7 days if the appellant had appeared and had been heard in person or by pleader within that period, G.O. No. 1448 Jud. dated 26-10-1909. Mad Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 59.

- 421. (1) On receiving the petition and copy under section 419 or section 420, the Appellate Court shall peruse the same, and, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, it may dismiss the appeal summarily :

Summary dismissal of appeal.

Provided that no appeal presented under this section 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

(2) Before dismissing an appeal under this section, the Court may call for the record of the case, but shall not be bound to do so.

Scope of the section—This section contemplates an appeal that can properly be put upon the file of the appellate Court and it cannot therefore be said that in every appeal where the appellate Court dismisses it as time barred without hearing the pleader for the appellant, the order of the appellate Court amounts to an illegality. There might be for instance a case where the appeal petition itself showed that there was no possible ground for any extension of the period prescribed by law and therefore there would be no use in giving an opportunity for the pleader to be heard. Ordinarily if an appellant is represented by a pleader, he should be given an opportunity of being heard before the appeal is dismissed. Thus it has been held that, in giving judicial powers to affect prejudicially the rights of person or property, a statute is understood as silently implying, when it does not expressly provide the condition or qualification, that the power is to be exercised in accordance with the fundamental rules of judicial procedure such as that which requires, that before its exercise, the person sought to be prejudicially affected shall have an opportunity of defending himself. In every case where the Court dismisses an appeal as time-barred, without hearing the pleader, then there would be an illegality but where there are reasonable grounds for excusing the delay in the presentation of the appeal the appellate Court should, under the proviso to the section, give an opportunity to the pleader to be heard before dismissing the appeal as time-barred, 29 Bom L.R. 701—23 Cr L.J. 633—103 Ind. Cas. 109. There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time when he presents the appeal, if he desires that course but if he does not desire to be heard at once then the Court must appoint a future date of hearing of which notice is to be given to the appellant or his pleader so that he may be heard on that date. It is not an absolute rule under this section that the appellant or his pleader must be heard after the records are sent for by the Court. There might be a case where the pleader is fully heard before the records are sent for and the records are merely called for in order that this Court might be satisfied on some points raised and in such a case there would be no illegality in dismissing the appeal without hearing the pleader again after the records are received, 29 Bom L.R. 459—23 Cr L.J. 467—101 Ind. Cas. 595. A criminal appeal presented cannot be dismissed for default of appearance; the appellate Court is bound to go through the record and decide the appeal on the merits, 46 M. 382; 50 B. 673; 6 Pat. 16, 14 A.L.J. 327—17 Cr L.J. 353—33 Ind. Cas. 637; 13 A. 171; 27 C.W.N. 947; 50 C. 972; 12 C.W.N. 1243; 24 Cr L.J. 475—72 Ind. Cas. 891; 9 Cr. L.J. 553—2 Ind. Cas. 247.

No sufficient grounds for interfering.—The appellant is bound to show that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the conviction. He is not in the same position before the appellate Court as he was before the trial Court, 5 A. 386. See also 17 C. 483; 23 C. 347. If the Court finds no sufficient grounds for interference, it may dismiss the appeal summarily.

May dismiss the appeal summarily.—This power of Court to dismiss the appeal summarily under this sub-section is quite different from a dismissal of a criminal appeal under S. 423, infra, in which case the appeal is disposed of after a trial on the merits. A criminal appeal cannot be dismissed for default without being considered on the merits, 27 C.W.N. 947; 46 M. 382, and other decision cited above. An appeal ought not to be summarily dismissed merely because the appellate Court thinks the matter is a mere trifle, Ratanlal, 978, although it may be summarily dismissed if there is no sufficient ground for interference, 12 Cr. L.J. 481—12 Ind. Cas. 89; 12 C.W.N. 248; Ratanlal 593 and 739. It is settled law that a Court of appeal dismissing summarily an appeal is not bound to write a judgment as defined in S. 367, supra, but it is advisable that it should give reasons for rejecting the appeal in view of the possibility of its order being challenged by an application for revision by the High Court, 36 A. 496; 38 A. 393; 17 A. 241; 32 C. 178; 25 Cr. L.J. 1237—82 Ind. Cas. 165; 26 Cr. L.J. 4—83 Ind. Cas. 484; 11 Cr. L.J. 631—8 Ind. Cas. 379; 18 Cr. L.J. 993—42 Ind. Cas. 721; 30 Cr. L.J. 791—117 Ind. Cas. 279 but see 50 C. L.J. 285, which holds that no reasons need be recorded. The word "summarily" ordinarily means in an informal manner and without delay of formal proceedings, and an appellate Court is entitled to reject an appeal without recording a formal judgment or giving reasons for such rejection, 20 B. 540; 21 C. 92; 22 C. 241; Weir. II, 473; 27 Cr. L.J. 23—91 Ind. Cas. 53. A Court disposing of an appeal under this section should either expressly state that it has dealt with the appeal under this section or the judgment should notice, though but concisely what objections were urged and how they were disposed of, 32 C. 178. An order summarily dismissing an appeal is final and cannot be reviewed, 4 B. 101; 19 B. 732. Where a petition of appeal submitted through the Superintendent of the jail in which the appellant was confined was considered and rejected by a Judge of the High Court under this section, it is not open to the appellant thereafter to present through Counsel a fresh appeal petition, 44 A. 759 where 19 B. 732 and 17 Cr. L.J. 453=36 Ind. Cas. 133 is followed. When the appellate Court does not proceed under this section by summarily rejecting the appeal it is bound to act in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 422 and 423, infra, 15 Cr. L.J. 667=23 Ind. Cas. 993. A pleader presenting a criminal appeal cannot be said to be guilty of professional misconduct merely because he is not prepared to argue the appeal at the time of presentation of the appeal, 48 M. 385. An order summarily dismissing an appeal under this section virtually amounts to an order affirming the findings of both fact and law recorded by the lower Court and there is no reason to discriminate between an order of summary dismissal under this section and one made under S. 424, infra after hearing on the merits so far as its liability to attack in revision for purposes of S. 439 (6) is concerned, 29 Cr. L.J. 936=111 Ind. Cas. 856.

No appeal shall be dismissed unless reasonable opportunity of being heard is had—This proviso does not mention anything about jail appeals coming under S. 420, supra, and therefore no notice and opportunity of being heard is to be given in such appeals. There is no such omission in S. 422, infra or in S. 443, (1) infra. But as a matter of practice, jail appeals are posted for dismissal before the Court, and the name of the appellant is called out, when he is actually in jail in most cases, before dismissing the appeal summarily. See 27 Cr. L.J. 933=96 Ind. Cas. 389. This section lays down that the appellant or his pleader shall have a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal which must be taken to include the possible right of reply to the point raised by the Crown, 38 C. 307. If the Court desires to hear the appellant under this section before admitting the appeal, he should be given a reasonable notice, 38 C. 385. Where a Magistrate called upon a pleader who presented an appeal to argue it at once and on the pleader expressing his inability to do so, prayed for a short adjournment to enable him to acquaint himself with the evidence in the case, and the Magistrate rejected the appeal under this section, it was held that no reasonable opportunity of being heard was offered under this section, 7 Bom. L.R. 89; 36 C. 385, 6 M.L.T. 309; 20 Cr. L.J. 271=90 Ind. Cas. 31; 38 C. 307 at 303; 16 Cr. L.J. 538=29 Ind. Cas. 666, 30 Cr. L.J. 791=117 Ind. Cas. 279. A criminal appeal should not be heard at the time of the presentation of the papers, even for the purpose of dismissal under this section. The posting for the purpose of hearing under this section must be special posting, after a reasonable time, not less than a week. This is the practice of the High Court and ought to be the practice of the mufassal Courts, 48 M. 385, but there is nothing in this section to prevent a Court from hearing the pleader at the time of the presentation of the appeal, if he desires that course but if he does not desire to be heard at once, then a future date of hearing is to be fixed of which notice is to be given to the appellant or his pleader, 29 Bom. L.R. 488=28 Cr. L.J. 467=101 Ind. Cas. 593. Where an appeal memorandum signed by a pleader is presented to a Magistrate by the party in person and the Magistrate rejected the appeal summarily under this section, it was held that no reasonable opportunity was given to the pleader to appear and argue the appeal and the order was set aside, 29 M. 236. The language of this section requires a reasonable opportunity to be given to the appellant of being heard in support of his appeal. If no such opportunity is given, the Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal, and when an appeal is so dismissed, the Court has inherent power to order its being re-heard after giving a reasonable opportunity to the appellant, 26 Cr. L.J. 1169=88 Ind. Cas. 593 where 23 M.L.J. 371=(1912) M.W.N. 982=12 M.L.T. 330 is referred to. Where a District Magistrate sends for the records and disposes of the appeal after the receipt of the same, it cannot be said that the appellant had been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard if, as a matter of fact, he is not heard after receipt of the records. Such a procedure does not come within the requirements of law 18 Cr. L.J. 639=39 Ind. Cas. 1007. If questions of fact are to be argued questions of fact the depositions have to be carefully studied, 43 M. 333. But where an appeal and a bill petition were presented by a pleader and the Magistrate heard the pleader in support of both and when dismissing the bill application called for the records from the lower Court and dismissed the appeal summarily after receipt of the records without hearing the pleader, it was held that the Magistrate though not bound to hear the pleader on receipt of the records yet he might have in the exercise of his discretion, allowed another opportunity to him to argue the appeal with reference to the records, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 127. It is not absolute rule that the appellant or his pleader should be heard after the records sent for are received. If the appellants' pleader had been heard fully and the records were sent for to verify certain points raised by the pleader, then there would be no illegality in dismissing the appeal without hearing the pleader again after the records were received, 29 Bom. L. R. 433 = 23 Cr. L. J. 467 = 101 Ind. Cas. 593. A general notice that appeals will be heard for admission, only the next Court day after presentation is not a sufficient compliance with law, 5 M. 11; 35 C. 333; 43 M. 333. Where a Court decides to proceed under this section in disposing an appeal received under S. 420, supra, from an appellant who is in jail, it is not legally bound to give notice to the appellant, nor is it generally necessary to do so. It is sufficient as a rule, if the Court allows 7 days to elapse before proceeding to dispose of the appeal under this section, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Rule 264. Where a jail appeal was filed, but before it was disposed of, another appeal petition is presented by a pleader, the Court was not competent to dismiss the jail appeal summarily but should hear the appellant's pleader before rejecting the appeal, 1936 A.W.N. 333; 17 A. 241 (F.B.). When in ignorance of the fact that a convicted accused has preferred an appeal through a practitioner, the Sessions Judge rejected an appeal subsequently preferred by the accused from jail, it was held that the dismissal through mistake is no dismissal and the appeal presented by the practitioner cannot be disposed of without hearing him under this section, 43 A. 203. But where jail appeals from convicted persons were pending in the Sessions Court, an appeal petition on behalf of the same persons was filed through a mulattar and the jail appeals were summarily rejected by the Judge in ignorance of the fact that the latter appeal in which Counsel was to be heard, was pending, it was held that the Sessions Judge had no power to set aside his own order dismissing the jail appeals, but the High Court alone has power to do so in its revisional jurisdiction and the High Court directed the Judge to re-hear the appeals after giving Counsel an opportunity of being heard, 23 A.L.J. 1031. A jail appeal once dismissed under this section, the matter cannot be re-opened by an appeal presented through Counsel, 27 C.W.N. 821 = 23 Cr. L. J. 1313 = 82 Ind. Cas. 515; See also 50 M.L.J. 81 = 23 L.W. 56 = 1926 M.W.N. 187 = 27 Cr. L. J. 151 = 91 Ind. Cas. 1030. Where the appellate Court dismissed the appeal in respect of one charge and admitted the appeal so far as another charge in the same trial, the practice cannot be said to be illegal although it is undesirable to do so, 5 Ran. 274.

Sub-section (2) — There is a discretion given to the Court to call for the records. The appellant has no right to ask the Court to send for the records. Rejection of the appeal summarily without sending for the records is a course which, though legal is ordinarily very inconvenient. The words "shall not be bound to do so," show that the Legislature contemplates dismissal of appeals as a rule without perusing all or any part of the proceedings of the lower Court, 1853 A.W.N. 143. Where the grounds of appeal disclose the reasons for discrediting the prosecution witnesses, the Appellate Court ought to call for the records and satisfy itself that the conviction is right, before dismissing the appeal summarily, 29 M. 236, followed in 43 M. 333. When the question involved in the appeal is one of fact, and the judgment of the Court below is plain and clear, calling for records would be mere waste of time. But when a point of law is raised in the appeal memorandum which on the face of it is not without substance, it is not proper to reject the appeal summarily without calling for records, 3 Pat. L.J. 339 = 19 Cr. L.J. 209 = 43 Ind. Cas. 733. After the records were sent for and received, the appellate Court should hear the pleader, and should not dismiss the appeal summarily without hearing him, 47 C.L.J. 531 and 534; but if the pleader had been fully heard before the records were sent for and the records were sent for by the Court for the purpose of satisfying itself as to certain points raised before it, the pleader need not be heard over again after receipt of records, 29 Bom. L.R. 433 = 23 Cr. L. J. 467 = 101 Ind. Cas. 593.

422. If the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause notice to be given to the appellant or his pleader, and to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, and shall, on the application of such officer, furnish him with a copy of the grounds of appeal; and, in cases of appeals under section 417, the Appellate Court shall cause a like notice to be given to the accused.

Once an appeal is accepted the appellate Court it is bound to proceed under this section. The appeal which has to be heard in accordance with this section is the whole appeal; consequently all the grounds taken in the appeal petition are open for consideration at the final hearing, and the appellant cannot be restricted to any select ground out of those specified in his petition. A restrictive order for admission, viz., on some grounds taken, is clearly not contemplated by this section. An appeal cannot be admitted only for a limited purpose. A restrictive order of admission is not contemplated by this section and such restricted admission is deemed ultra vires, 41 C 406 at 410; Ratanlal 826. The appeal that has to be heard is whole appeal and not merely a portion of it, e.g. the question of sentence only; however, convenient and practical that course may be, it is not warranted, 4 Pat. 254; 41 C. 406 at 410; 13 C.W.N. 921. See also 13 Bom. L.R. 550=12 Cr. L.J. 431=11 Ind. Cas. 615.

Shall cause notice to be given to appellant or his pleader,—Notice is obligatory, Weir II, 475. Hearing an appeal without notice either to the appellant or his pleader is illegal, 9 Cr. L.J. 553=2 Ind. Cas. 247. The fact that the pleader for the appellant was present at the time when the appeal is admitted does not relieve the Court from the necessity of giving notice to the appellant or his pleader as to the day fixed for the hearing and the place of hearing, unless the attention of the pleader is specially directed to it by the Court. The object of giving notice is to give precise information to the appellant as to the time and place of hearing. Notice is the warning to a party to his to enable him to resist a possible result, viz., not merely information that, that which is threatened will or may possibly happen in a matter in which he is concerned, but also that he can avoid such results if he takes proper measures to do so, 13 A. 171 at 180, 181. In the case of an appeal against acquittal under S 417, supra, notice is to be given to the acquitted accused. Every endeavour should be made to effect personal service, 1832 A.W.N. 170; 37 A. 419. In 50 A. 543 (F.B.). It was held that where a stage had been reached of an appellant in Jail being given notice under this section, he is entitled, if he is not unrepresented by a pleader, to appear in person at the hearing of the appeal, if he so desires. The Full Bench decision in, 13 A. 171, it was held by the later Full Bench, went too far in holding that an appellant in Jail had no right to appear at the hearing of the appeal if he is unrepresented and wishes to appear in person. As to practice in England, see S. 11 of the Criminal Appeal Act (7 Edw. 7 C. 23), which enacts that an appellant in custody shall be entitled to be present if he desires it, on the hearing of the appeal except where the appeal is on some ground involving a question of law alone, but in that case and on application for leave to appeal and on any other proceedings incidental to an appeal, shall not be entitled to be present except where the rules provide that he shall appear or where the Court gives leave to be present.

To such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf.—Rule 60, Mod. Cr. Rules of Pr says that the following officers shall be given notice under this section (1). The District Magistrate, in appeals other than appeals to the Court of Session (2). The Public Prosecutor in appeals in Session Court (3). The Prosecuting Inspector of Police in mufassal Districts, other than the Nilgiris, against convictions in cognizable cases in the appellate Courts in those Districts other than Courts of Session (4). The Agent and Manager of the particular Railway in cases of appeal against convictions under the Railway Act (5). The District Forest officer in appeals against convictions for Forest Offences (6) Circle officers of Salt and Abkari Department against convictions for Salt and Abkari offences (7). The Crown Prosecutor for the Town of Madras in appeals from convictions by Presidency Magistrates to the High Court and to the Public Prosecutor in other appeals to the High Court. This section provides for a notice of appeal to the officer appointed by the Local Government, but it does not say that others are not to have notice. The section imposes a necessary condition but does not override the principle of natural justice "Audi alteram partem," 33 M. 1091 at 1095. A mere omission to serve notice of appeal on a District Magistrate as provided by this section is nothing more than an irregularity and does not make the proceedings in appeal, ab initio void, 8 Cr. L. Rev. 21, but see contra, (1915) M.W.N. 554=16 Cr. L. J. 736=31 Ind. Cas. 176 and 53 C. 969, where it was held that failure to issue notice is an illegality and the order passed on appeal was held bad. The omission to send a notice of appeal though undoubtedly irregular will not afford a ground to interfere in revision by the High Court at the instance of the complainant against an order of acquittal when as a matter of fact no objection is raised by the District Magistrate to the proceedings in the appellate Court, 25 Bom. L.R. 251=26 Cr. L.J. 731=86 Ind. Cas. 237 where 24 Bom. L.R. 1150=24 Cr. L.J. 700=73 Ind. Cas. 812 is referred to. Where no notice of appeal was given to the Prosecuting Inspector under the section and the accused was acquitted, the complainant is not entitled to have the acquittal set aside by the High Court in revision, when such revision is opposed by the Government, 4 Cr. L. Rev. 320. A complainant cannot claim as of right to be heard in an appeal from a conviction. The matter is in the discretion of the appellate Court, 7 M.H.C.R. Appx. 42=Weir II, 476. See also 53 C. 969 as to when notice to complainant will be necessary. In appeals against orders awarding compensation under S. 250 supra there are a number of cases on the question whether the accused to whom the compensation is awarded is entitled to have notice. In 29 M. 187 it was held that on the principle that no order to the prejudice of a party is to be made without notice to him, the order of compensation was wrong and was set aside for want of notice to the accused, but this decision was distinguished in 33 M. 89, where it was held that notice to the accused was desirable, but the law does not render it absolutely essential, and want of notice to the accused is no ground for interference in revision especially when notice was given to the officer appointed by Government and he failed to appear. But it was held in 27 M.L.J. 629, that the person to whom notice of appeal should go in compensation appeal is the District Magistrate and want of notice to the District Magistrate is not a ground for setting aside the order passed on appeal at the instance of the accused when the District Magistrate who had notice took no steps in the matter for that purpose. See 33 M. 1091 where it was held after a consideration of all the above rulings that in appeals from compensation orders under S. 250, supra, notice should ordinarily be given to the accused as this section does not override the principle of natural justice, and the accused in whose favour the compensation order is passed is entitled to be heard in support of the order but failure to give notice will not necessarily render the proceedings of the Court illegal. In Madras, the officer appointed by the Local Government is the Public Prosecutor, in case of appeals to the Sessions Court and to the High Court—Fort St. George Gazette, 1887, Pt. I, p. 30. In Bengal the Legal Remembrancer is the Public Prosecutor for the High Court, and in other cases rule is issued to the District Magistrate, 7 C.W.N. 80. In Bombay, the District Magistrate should be served with notice. The fact that notice of appeal was not served either on the complainant or on the officer appointed under this section is no ground for interfering in revision with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private party where no injustice had been occasioned and where the lower Court in a very full judgment had dealt with the question involved, from various stand-points, 20 L.W. 327=26 Cr. L. J. 249=84 Ind. Cas. 249.

Time and place at which appeal will be heard.—The particular date should be specified in the notice. A District Magistrate directed that a particular appeal will be heard in the month of January, without specifying any particular date and it was heard and dismissed on the 6th of January. The appellant had no information as to any particular date of hearing and when he appeared in Court he learnt that the appeal had been dismissed and could not be re-heard. It was held by the High Court that the appellant should have been informed as to the particular date of hearing and the Magistrate was directed to re-hear the appeal, 1881 A.W.N. 46. Disposal of an appeal before the date fixed for hearing is a material error in procedure, Weir II, 475. When the notice specifies a particular place, the appeal should not be heard in a different place without fresh notice as to change of place, 2 Cr. L. J. 66.

423. (1) The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court. After perusing such record, and hearing the appellant or his pleader, if he appears and the Public Prosecutor if he appears, and, in case of an appeal under section 417, the accused if he appears the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal, or may—

(a) in an appeal from an order of acquittal, reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made, or that the accused be re-tried or committed for trial, as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law ;

(b) in an appeal from a conviction, (1) reverse the finding and sentence, and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be re-tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or, with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence, or (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of section 106, sub-section (3), not so as to enhance the same ;

(c) in an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order ;

(d) make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorise the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him.

Scope of the section.—This section does not confer any right of appeal. It only lays down the powers of an appellate Court when a right of appeal is allowed by other provisions of the Code. S. 404, supra, enacts the general rule—no appeal shall lie except as provided for, and Ss. 405 to 416, supra, provide inter alia for appeals in certain cases but not in any case of acquittal, and S. 417 supra provides for appeals against orders of acquittal and enacts that the appeal shall lie at the direction of Government and should be presented to the High Court, 7 M. 213 at 214. A Court of appeal under this Code is not a mere Court of error, but the Court as a Court of appeal is enjoined by S. 537 infra, and S. 167, of the Indian Evidence Act, not to reverse any finding or sentence passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction on account of any error, omission, irregularity, or improper admission or rejection of evidence unless in its judgment such error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, or unless independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, it ought to have varied the decision, 24 M. 523 at 541. It is a rule underlying the whole fabric of appellate jurisdiction that the power of an appellate Court is measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment or order the appeal is preferred. This is equally so in the Civil and Criminal branches of the law of procedure. It is a fundamental principle that every Court of appeal exists for the purpose, where necessary, of doing, or causing it to be done, that which each Court subordinate to its appellate jurisdiction should have, but has not, done or caused to be done and nothing further. Therefore the jurisdiction in appeal is necessarily limited in each case to the same extent as the jurisdiction from which that particular case comes. It is a proposition which cannot be disputed that all powers conferred upon an appellate Court, as such, must be interpreted as subject to the general rule stated above. In Weir II, 457 it was held that an appellate Court cannot on appeal pass a sentence which the trial Court was not competent to pass. All jurisdiction starts with the trial Court and remains a constant factor throughout. All subsequent stages of the proceeding are governed by it. The appellate Court while altering a sentence into one of fine cannot inflict a fine beyond the maximum which could have been imposed by the trial Court. The substitution of fine for imprisonment is a merciful commutation and does not constitute an enhancement, 12 Cr. L.J. 444=11 Ind. Cas. 783. See 1929 M.W.N. 896. The powers conferred by this section on a Court of appeal are not to be used in such a way as to spring up a new case upon the accused without giving him any notice of the charge he has to meet, 16 Cr. L.J. 599=30 Ind. Cas. 151; nor is it entitled while setting aside the conviction for one offence to convict the accused for another offence not charged in the trial Court, 21 L.W. 520=26 Cr. L.J. 1036=87 Ind. Cas. 824. Where an accused person was charged and convicted of an offence under S. 452, I.P.C., it is not open to the appellate Court on appeal to convert such a conviction into one under a Special Act, such as the Arms Act, and convict him under that Act, say, under S. 19 (c) of the said Act. Such a conviction is illegal as the accused was not charged with that offence and had no opportunity of meeting it, 4 Ran. 335. To decide the appeal requires more than a refusal to interfere with a discretion; it requires a decision on the evidence as to the facts proved, 30 Bom. L.R. 854 at 956. A criminal appeal under this section cannot be dismissed by the Court for default of appearance of the appellant which does not relieve the Court of the imperative duties of perusing the records and rendering judgment in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 367 and 421, infra, 46 M. 382; 50 B. 673, following Ratanlal 593 and 13 A. 171; 14 A.L.J. 327=17 Cr. L.J. 333=35 Ind. Cas. 667; 6 Pat. 18; 50 C. 972; 12 Cr. L.J. 481=12 Ind. Cas. 89; 12 C.W.N. 243; 9 Cr. L.J. 553=2 Ind. Cas. 237; 24 Cr. L.J. 475=72 Ind. Cas. 891. When an appeal is once dismissed, another appeal on behalf of the same appellant cannot be entertained for whatever reason, 50 M. L.J. 51=23 L.W. 56=1926 M.W.N. 147=27 Cr. L.J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000. The fact that an appeal has been admitted will not preclude the Court from dealing with the question whether an appeal lay or not, 40 C. 631. Where after the presentation of an appeal, the records are sent for, and a date is fixed for hearing, the Court has no power to dismiss the appeal for non-appearance of pleader, as under the provisions of this section it was incumbent on the Magistrate to go through the records and dispose of the appeal on the merits, 27 C.W.N. 947. Even though no one may appear in a criminal appeal, it is the duty of the criminal Court to examine the matter and to come to some sort of decision on the merits, 25 Cr. L.J. 79=71 Ind. Cas. 217. The sound rule to apply in trying a criminal appeal where questions of disputed facts are in issue is to consider whether the conviction is right, and in this respect a criminal appeal differs from a civil one, in which the Court must be convinced before reversing a finding of fact by the lower Court, that the finding is wrong, 11 C.L.R. 23. When the law allows an appeal the appellant is entitled to have from the Court of appeal an explicit opinion on the question of fact involved in the case and the Court of appeal should take its own view of the evidence after perusal of the records, 39 C.L.J. 117=25 Cr. L.J. 1044=81 Ind. Cas. 820. It is not necessary in criminal cases that the appellant should clearly establish that the order of the lower Court was wrong, 23 C. 347. In every case which comes before an appellate Court the trial Court has the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses and the appellate Court has not that advantage; but it is not right to say that an appellate Court can never hope to make a diagnosis as to the truth of the case as good as that made by the trial Court. No doubt the trial Court has an advantage could not be re-heard. It was held by the High Court that the appellant should have been informed as to the particular date of hearing and the Magistrate was directed to re-hear the appeal, 1881 A.W.N. 46. Disposal of an appeal before the date fixed for hearing is a material error in procedure, Weir II, 475. When the notice specifies a particular place, the appeal should not be heard in a different place without fresh notice as to change of place, 2 Cr. L. J. 66.

423. (1) The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court. After perusing such record, and hearing the appellant or his pleader, if he appears and the Public Prosecutor if he appears, and, in case of an appeal under section 417, the accused if he appears the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal, or may—

Powers of Appellate Court in disposing of appeal.

(a) in an appeal from an order of acquittal, reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made, or that the accused be re-tried or committed for trial, as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law ;

(b) in an appeal from a conviction, (1) reverse the finding and sentence, and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be re-tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or, with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence, or (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of section 106, sub-section (3), not so as to enhance the same ;

(c) in an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order ;

(d) make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorise the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him.

Scope of the section.—This section does not confer any right of appeal. It only lays down the powers of an appellate Court when a right of appeal is allowed by other provisions of the Code. S. 401, supra, enacts the general rule—no appeal shall lie except as provided for, and Ss. 403 to 416, supra, provide inter alia for appeals in certain cases but not in any case of acquittal and S. 417 supra provides for appeals against orders of acquittal and enacts that the appeal shall lie at the direction of Government and should be presented to the High Court, 7 M. 213 at 214. When an appeal is once dismissed, another appeal on behalf of the same appellant cannot be entertained for whatever reason, 50 M. L.J. 51=23 L.W. 56=1926 M.W.N. 147=27 Cr. L.J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000. Even though no one may appear in a criminal appeal, it is the duty of the criminal Court to examine the matter and to come to some sort of decision on the merits, 24 Cr. L.J. 89=71 Ind. Cas. 217. The sound rule to apply in trying a criminal appeal where questions of disputed facts are in issue is to consider whether the conviction is right, and in this respect a criminal appeal differs from a civil one, in which the Court must be convinced before reversing a finding of fact by the lower Court, that the finding is wrong, 11 C.L.R. 25. L.J. 1044=81 Ind. Cas. 820. It is not necessary in criminal cases that the appellant should clearly establish that the order of the lower Court was wrong, 23 C. 347. In every case which comes before an appellate Court the trial Court has the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses and the appellate Court has not that advantage; but it is not right to say that an appellate Court can never hope to make a diagnosis as to the truth of the case as good as that made by the trial Court. No doubt the trial Court has an advantage vindicated. The only persons who can be heard in an appeal are those mentioned in this section and not the complainant when the question is whether the conviction is right or not, 50 C. 153 at 153.

In case of appeal under S. 417 the accused, if he appears.—S. 427, infra says that when an appeal is presented under S. 417, supra, the High Court may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for his being brought before it or any subordinate Court and the Court before which the accused is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal or admit him to bail. If the accused is committed to prison he cannot possibly appear before the High Court and even if he is on bail, many an accused find it difficult to be present in the High Court at the time of hearing. He can always be represented by a pleader who is entitled to be heard in support of the order of acquittal before the High Court. As a matter of practice the High Court under a Government of India circular engages a pleader, if an accused does not retain one, to defend the accused in all cases of acquittal as in the case of Referred Trials.

Dismiss the appeal, if no sufficient ground for interfering.—An appellant is not in the same favourable position before an appellate Court as he was before the trial Court and before he could succeed in his appeal he must satisfy the appellate Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the conviction, and if no sufficient ground is shown, it is the duty of the appellate Court not to interfere but to dismiss the appeal, 3 A. 336. The real test for the interference by the appellate Court is, can the appellate Court say that the decision of the lower Court is wrong 19 B. 749 at 763, but if the appellate Court had any doubt that the conviction was right and any doubt as to the commission of the offence charged, it is bound to acquit the accused in spite of what the original Court had said or done 23 C. 347; 11 C. L. R. 23. In appeals against acquittal the High Court ought not to interfere unless the lower Court has so blundered and gone wrong as to produce a result mischievous at once to the administration of justice and the interests of the public, 3 A. 448; 9 A. 52; 16 A. 212; or unless the Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment either perverse or based on errors of procedure, 16 Cr. L. J. 529=29 Ind. Cas. 637. There is no real distinction between a right of appeal from an order of acquittal and one against conviction. In both cases the appellant has to satisfy the High Court that there does exist some good and strong ground apparent upon the record for interfering, 20 A. 439; 19 B. 51; 17 C. 483. The High Court ought not to interfere with an acquittal unless the lower Court which had the witnesses before it and arrived at conclusions of fact with this great advantage in its favour had clearly gone wrong and its judgment was either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure, 16 Cr. L. J. 529=29 Ind. Cas. 637 at 638. When once an appeal is dismissed, the High Court has no power to review its own order confirming the conviction and sentence, nor can the High Court entertain another appeal when once an appeal had been dismissed for default on the ground that Counsel was not heard owing to some mistake on the first occasion, 57 M. L. J. 51=23 L. W. 55=1926 M. W. N. 147=27 Cr. L. J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000. The only remedy is to refer the matter to Local Government under Chapter XXIX of the Code. See notes under S. 369, supra at pages 659-670.

Sub-section (1) (a).—This section deals with the powers of the High Court in appeals against acquittal. When after an illegal trial contravening the provisions of S. 233, supra, the accused is acquitted and an appeal against such acquittal is preferred, the High Court cannot itself convict the accused but can only direct a re-trial. The Court however may refuse to direct a re-trial having regard to the length of time that had elapsed from the date of the alleged offence, 39 M. 527 (F. B.). There is no distinction in the Code between the right of appeal against conviction and an acquittal, both being governed by the same rules and being subject to the same limitation, 17 C. 485; 20 A. 439; 26 M. L. J. 160; 33 M. 1028 and 1032-1034; 36 A. 165; 26 C. W. N. 128; 17 Cr. L. J. 9=32 Ind. Cas. 137. No Court other than a High Court is empowered to entertain an appeal from an acquittal. See S. 417, supra. This sub-section applies only to the High Court and to no other Court, 7 M. 213; 20 C. 633; 24 C. 528; 23 M. 225. The powers conferred by this sub-section are of a very exceptional nature and the Court ought to be satisfied that exceptional grounds exist

varied the decision, 24 M. 523 at 541. It is a rule under-lying the whole fabric of appellate jurisdiction that the power of an appellate Court is measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment or order the appeal is preferred. This is equally so in the Civil and Criminal branches of the law of procedure. It is a fundamental principle that every Court of appeal exists for the purpose, where necessary, of doing, or causing it to be done, that which each Court subordinate to its appellate jurisdiction should have, but has not, done or caused to be done and nothing further. Therefore the jurisdiction in appeal is necessarily limited in each case to the same extent as the jurisdiction from which that particular case comes. It is a proposition which cannot be disputed that all powers conferred upon an appellate Court, as such, must be interpreted as subject to the general rule stated above. In Weir II, 457 It was held that an appellate Court cannot on appeal pass a sentence which the trial Court was not competent to pass. All jurisdiction starts with the trial Court and remains a constant factor throughout. All subsequent stages of the proceeding are governed by it. The appellate Court while altering a sentence into one of fine cannot inflict a fine beyond the maximum which could have been imposed by the trial Court. The substitution of fine for imprisonment is a merciful commutation and does not constitute an enhancement, 12 Cr. L.J. 445=11 Ind. Cas. 783. See 1929 M.W.N. 896. The powers conferred by this section on a Court of appeal are not to be used in such a way as to spring up a new case upon the accused without giving him any notice of the charge he has to meet, 16 Cr. L.J. 579=30 Ind. Cas. 131; nor is it entitled while setting aside the conviction for one offence to convict the accused for another offence not charged in the trial Court, 21 L.W. 520=26 Cr. L.J. 1036=87 Ind. Cas. 924. Where an accused person was charged and convicted of an offence under S. 452, I.P.C., it is not open to the appellate Court on appeal to convert such a conviction into one under a Special Act, such as the Arms Act, and convict him under that Act, say, under S. 19 (e) of the said Act. Such a conviction is illegal as the accused was not charged with that offence and had no opportunity of meeting it, 4 Ran. 335. To decide the appeal requires more than a refusal to interfere with a discretion, it requires a decision on the evidence as to the facts proved, 30 Bom. L.R. 954 at 956. A criminal appeal under this section cannot be dismissed by the Court for default of appearance of the appellant which does not relieve the Court of the imperative duties of perusing the records and rendering judgment in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 367 and 424, infra, 46 M. 382; 50 B. 673, following Ratanlal 593 and 13 A. 171; 14 A. L.J. 327=17 Cr. L.J. 333=35 Ind. Cas. 657; 6 Pat. 16; 30 C. 972; 12 Cr. L.J. 481=12 Ind. Cas. 89; 12 C.W.N. 249; 9 Cr. L.J. 553=2 Ind. Cas. 247; 24 Cr. L.J. 475=72 Ind. Cas. 891. When an appeal is once dismissed, another appeal on behalf of the same appellant cannot be entertained for whatever reason, 50 M. L.J. 51=23 L.W. 56=1925 M.W.N. 147=27 Cr. L.J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000. The fact that an appeal has been admitted will not preclude the Court from dealing with the question whether an appeal lay or not, 40 C. 631. Where after the presentation of an appeal, the records are sent for, and a date is fixed for hearing, the Court has no power to dismiss the appeal for non-appearance of pleader, as under the provisions of this section it was incumbent on the Magistrate to go through the records and dispose of the appeal on the merits, 27 C.W.N. 947. Even though no one may appear in a criminal appeal, it is the duty of the criminal Court to examine the matter and to come to some sort of decision on the merits, 23 Cr. L.J. 79=71 Ind. Cas. 217. The sound rule to apply in trying a criminal appeal where questions of disputed facts are in issue is to consider whether the conviction is right, and in this respect a criminal appeal differs from a civil one, in which the Court must be convinced before reversing a finding of fact by the lower Court, that the finding is wrong, 11 C.L.R. 25. When the law allows an appeal the appellant is entitled to have from the Court of appeal an explicit opinion on the question of fact involved in and the Court of appeal should take its own view of the evidence after perusal of 39 C.L.J. 117=25 Cr. L.J. 1044=81 Ind. Cas. 820. It is not necessary the appellant should clearly establish that the order of the lower Court. In every case which comes before an appellate Court the trial Court seeing and hearing the witnesses and the appellate Court has not not right to say that an appellate Court can never hope to make a the case as good as that made by the trial Court. No to see and hear the witnesses but it is an advantage which may be counteracted and more than counteracted by the greater experience and knowledge of the appellate Court. Where there is a doubt the accused must receive the benefit of that doubt, 28 Cr. L.J. 683=103 Ind. Cas. 416. When an appeal is so dismissed the Magistrate was directed to restore it to file, and dispose of it according to law, 9 Cr. L.J. 553=2 Ind. Cas. 347; 1 Bom. L.R. 275. The judgment of an appellate Court ought not to be read in connection with or as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance; it should be quite independent and stand by itself, 35 C. 138. An appellate Court is not bound to hear the complainant in a criminal appeal. This is left to the discretion of the appellate Court, 7 M.H.C.R. Appx. 42, but it will do well to hear the pleader appointed by the complainant when the Public Prosecutor does not appear to support the order appealed against, Weir II, 476. The powers of an Appellate Court are laid down exhaustively by this section. It is not illegal for an appellate Court when setting aside the proceedings of the lower Court to leave it to the subordinate Court's discretion to re-try the accused, 46 C. 212; 53 C. 192. S. 345 (6) supra, permits a composition of a case after conviction and during the pendency of an appeal in the appellate Court. A criminal appeal is a continuation of the criminal case and except so far as there is a provision to the contrary the appellant has the privilege of the accused and cannot be punished for making false statements in his appeal petition which under the Code does not require to be verified, 12 M. 431 at 453, 7 Lah. 148. An appellate Court hearing an appeal is entitled to act upon the admission of the appellant's pleader as to the admissibility of further evidence in appeal. It is not a case of something done at the trial and convicting the accused upon the admission of his pleader. There is no rule or authority or principle which lays down that an appellate Court could not act on the admission of the appellant's pleader. He has authority to admit certain facts and thereby dispense with proof and there is no question of surprise in such a case, 30 Bom. L.R. 646. An appellate Court cannot decline to interfere on appeal simply because in its opinion the matter is a mere trifle. It is bound to hear the appeal and to find whether the conviction is legal or not, Ratanlal, 978. With regard to the function of a Court of appeal in relation to the trial Court on questions of fact the weighty observations of Lindley, M.R., in [1903] A.C. 73 ought to be borne in mind. "Even where the appeal turns on a question of fact the court of appeal has to bear in mind that its duty is to rehear the case, and the Court must re-consider the materials before the judge with such other materials as it may have decided to admit. The Court must then make up its own mind, not disregarding the judgment appealed from but carefully weighing and considering it, and not shrinking from over-ruling it if on full consideration the Court comes to the conclusion that the judgment is wrong. When, as often happens, much turns on the relative credibility of witnesses, who have been examined and cross-examined before the Judge, the Court is sensible of the great advantage it has had in seeing and hearing them. It is often very difficult to estimate correctly the relative credibility of witnesses from written depositions; and when the question arises which witness is to be believed rather than another and that question turns on manner and demeanour, the Court of appeal always is and must be guided by the impression made on the Judge who saw the witness. But there may obviously be other circumstances quite apart from the manner and demeanour which may show whether a statement is credible or not and these circumstances may warrant the Court in differing from the Judge even on a question of fact, turning on the credibility of witnesses whom the Court has not seen." See (1923) A.C. 231; 39 B. 338 (P.C.). See also the observation of Lord Dunedin in 17 L.W. 1 (P.C.)=31 M.L.T. 307=27 C.W.N. 414. "There are two ways in which one may approach the question of credibility. When the question is whether a witness is speaking the truth or not, light is thrown upon it by the demeanour of that witness in the box, by the manner in which he answers questions, and by how he seems to be affected by the questions that are put to him and so on. No doubt, there the trial Judge has an advantage which cannot possibly be shared by any appellate Court. But when the views upon credibility are founded upon argumentative inferences from facts which are not disputed, then the Court of appeal is really in just as good a situation as a judge of the first instance." An appellate Court must attach due weight to the opinion of the trial Judge as regards the credibility of the witnesses examined by him, 27 Cr. L.J. 377=94 Ind. Cas. 173. In appeals arising out of counter cases which had ended in conviction in the trial Court, it is the duty of the appellate Court to keep each appeal separate and deal with each appeal on the merits confining itself to the evidence recorded in each case and that case alone. The appellate Court cannot treat two appeals arising out of counter cases as one case, make up its mind that there were two contradictory stories, find one of them to be true and the other untrustworthy, allow one appeal and dismiss the other, 47 C.L.J. 211 at 213=23 Cr. L.J. 512=103 Ind. Cas. 243. See also 8 Lah. 193. An appellate Court hearing an appeal, is bound to weigh the evidence on the record before it and not to accept the opinion of another Judge in a previous case on evidence that was not before it, 8 Lah. 264 following 23 A. 81 and 26 Cr. L.J. 1121=65 Ind. Cas. 353.

Shall then send for the record of the case.—The use of the word "then" clearly indicates that any power conferred by this section can be used only after the proceedings have reached the stage at which this section becomes applicable, viz., after the appeal has been admitted and after notice under S. 422 has been given, 24 Cr. L.J. 89=71 Ind. Cas. 217.

If such record is not already in Court.—Sub-section (2) of S. 421, supra, says that before dismissing an appeal summarily the Court may call for the records of the case, but it shall not be bound to do so. But after admission of the appeal the Court is bound to send for the record if such record is not already called for by the Court at an earlier stage under S. 421 (2) supra; after calling for the records and fixing a date for hearing, the appeal cannot be dismissed for default of appearance of pleader, 27 C.W.N. 947. See 43 M. 332; 50 B. 673; 50 C. 972; 6 Pat. 16; 12 C.W.N. 243; 14 A.L.J. 327; 13 A. 71; 23 Cr. L.J. 475=72 Ind. Cas. 891; 12 Cr. L.J. 49; 9 Cr. L.J. 533.

After hearing appellant or his pleader, if he appears.—There must be sufficient notice of the date and place of hearing and an order dismissing an appeal for want of appearance or acquitting the appellants when there was no sufficient notice or no notice at all is illegal and cannot stand, 22 Bom. L.R. 183=21 Cr. L.J. 373=55 Ind. Cas. 853; 53 C. 969. The Court is bound to hear the appellant or his pleader if he is present before the Court. So long as a pleader is not guilty of unnecessary repetition or irrelevant argument he is entitled to present his clients' case as he thinks best and it is no ground for a Court to decline to hear a pleader or to cut short his arguments merely because it is expected by the superior Court to turn out a certain amount of work within a fixed time, 29 Cr. L.J. 279=107 Ind. Cas. 763. If after due notice nobody appears there is nothing in the Code to prevent the appellate Court from disposing of the appeal on the merits after perusing the records, 13 A. 171 (F.B.); 50 C. 972; but the appeal cannot be dismissed for default of appearance, 50 B. 673, 27 C.W.N. 947; 45 M. 332; 6 Pat. 16; 14 A.L.J. 327 13 A. 171. The Code does not permit the dismissal of an appeal upon the ground that the appellant does not appear to support it, 9 Cr. L.J. 533=2 Ind. Cas. 247; 12 Cr. L.J. 481=12 Ind. Cas. 89; 14 Cr. L.J. 182=19 Ind. Cas. 182; 24 Cr. L.J. 475=72 Ind. Cas. 891; 50 B. 673. For definition of the word "pleader," see S. 4 (1) (c), supra. It was held in 38 C. 307 that an appellant has a right of reply if the Crown had been heard even in cases falling under S. 421 supra, and therefore as to the right of reply in a case under this section there is no doubt whatever. When the appellant is represented by a pleader who has no proper vakalat the proper course is to adjourn the hearing of the appeal and thus afford the appellant an opportunity of being represented, 21 Cr. L.J. 413=56 Ind. Cas. 61 but no vakalat is required to appear for an accused, [1926] Pat. 125=27 Cr. L.J. 686=94 Ind. Cas. 714; 43 M.L.J. 683.

The public prosecutor, if he appears.—It is not in every criminal appeal the Public Prosecutor will be instructed by the District Magistrate to appear. A complainant cannot claim as of right to be heard in an appeal from a conviction. The matter is in the discretion of the appellate Court, 7 M.H.C.R. Appx. 42, but if after notice the Public Prosecutor does not appear it is open to an appellate Court to hear a pleader privately instructed to support a prosecution and to do so would generally be discreet on the part of the Court, Weir II, 478. See 53 C. 969, as to when it is necessary to give notice to complainant. The chief reason for not permitting the pleader instructed by the complainant to be heard is that he may desire to press unduly a line of argument which would not commend itself as the proper one to a District Magistrate who is only to see that justice is vindicated. The only persons who can be heard in an appeal are those mentioned in this section and not the complainant when the question is whether the conviction is right or not, 50 G. 159 at 163.

In case of appeal under S. 417 the accused, if he appears.—S. 427, infra says that when an appeal is presented under S. 417, supra, the High Court may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for his being brought before it or any subordinate Court and the Court before which the accused is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal or admit him to bail. If the accused is committed to prison he cannot possibly appear before the High Court and even if he is on bail, many an accused find it difficult to be present in the High Court at the time of hearing. He can always be represented by a pleader who is entitled to be heard in support of the order of acquittal before the High Court. As a matter of practice the High Court under a Government of India circular engages a pleader, if an accused does not retain one, to defend the accused in all cases of acquittal as in the case of Referred Trials.

Dismiss the appeal, if no sufficient ground for interfering.—An appellant is not in the same favourable position before an appellate Court as he was before the trial Court and before he could succeed in his appeal he must satisfy the appellate Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the conviction, and if no sufficient ground is shown, it is the duty of the appellate Court not to interfere but to dismiss the appeal, 5 A. 386. The real test for the interference by the appellate Court is, can the appellate Court say that the decision of the lower Court is wrong 19 B. 749 at 763, but if the appellate Court had any doubt that the conviction was right and any doubt as to the commission of the offence charged, it is bound to acquit the accused in spite of what the original Court had said or done 23 C. 347; 11 C. L. R. 25. In appeals against acquittal the High Court ought not to interfere unless the lower Court has so blundered and gone wrong as to produce a result mischievous at once to the administration of justice and the interests of the public, 4 A. 193; 9 A. 52; 16 A. 212; or unless the Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment either perverse or based on errors of procedure, 16 Cr. L. J. 529=29 Ind. Cas. 657. There is no real distinction between a right of appeal from an order of acquittal and one against conviction. In both cases the appellant has to satisfy the High Court that there does exist some good and strong ground apparent upon the record for interfering, 20 A. 439; 19 B. 51; 17 C. 485. The High Court ought not to interfere with an acquittal unless the lower Court which had the witnesses before it and arrived at conclusions of fact with this great advantage in its favour had clearly gone wrong and its judgment was either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure, 16 Cr. L. J. 529=29 Ind. Cas. 657 at 658. When once an appeal is dismissed, the High Court has no power to review its own order confirming the conviction and sentence, nor can the High Court entertain another appeal when once an appeal had been dismissed for default on the ground that Counsel was not heard owing to some mistake on the first occasion, 50 M. L. J. 51=23 L. W. 56=1926 M. W. N. 147=27 Cr. L. J. 184=91 Ind. Cas. 1000. The only remedy is to refer the matter to Local Government under Chapter XXIX of the Code. See notes under S. 369, supra at pages 659-670.

Sub-section (1) (a).—This section deals with the powers of the High Court in appeals against acquittal. When after an illegal trial contravening the provisions of S. 293, supra, the accused is acquitted and an appeal against such acquittal is preferred, the High Court cannot itself convict the accused but can only direct a re-trial. The Court however may refuse to direct a re-trial having regard to the length of time that had elapsed from the date of the alleged offence, 39 M. 527 (F B). There is no distinction in the Code between the right of appeal against conviction and an acquittal, both being governed by the same rules and being subject to the same limitation, 17 C. 485; 20 A. 439; 26 M. L. J. 160; 38 M. 1028 and 1032-1034; 36 A. 188, 26 C. W. N. 129; 17 Cr. L. J. 9=32 Ind. Cas. 137. No Court other than a High Court is empowered to entertain an appeal from an acquittal. See S. 417, supra. This sub-section applies only to the High Court and to no other Court, 7 M. 213; 20 C. 633; 24 C. 529; 23 M. 229. The powers conferred by this sub-section are of a very exceptional nature and the High Court ought to be satisfied that exceptional grounds exist for setting aside an order of acquittal.

Reverse such order and direct further inquiry.—The High Court alone can when reversing the order of acquittal, direct further inquiry into the case. A Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order of acquittal by a Magistrate, 23 M. 225; 20 C. 633; 2 C.W.N. colvi. The power to alter a finding is not expressly mentioned in sub-section (a) as in sub-section (b), which deals with appeals from conviction. The word "reverse" evidently means "to set aside," "to make null" and when reversing the order the Court may order further inquiry or re-trial instead of altering the finding, 26 M. 1 at 15.

Order the accused be re-tried or committed for trial.—It is not illegal for an appellate Court when quashing the proceedings of the lower Court to leave it to the latter's discretion to re-try the accused and such an order cannot be construed as an acquittal disentitling the lower Court from re-trying the accused, 53 C. 192. When an appellate Court in appeal sets aside a conviction and the High Court is of opinion that the acquittal of the lower Court is unsustainable, the proper procedure in revision is to set aside the acquittal and direct a re-hearing of the appeal and not to order a re-trial of the whole case, 27 Cr. L.J. 834=93 Ind. Cas. 934. There is a strong principle that a man ought not to be tried a second time for the same offence unless there are very grave reasons for doing so. The power to order re-trial should be exercised sparingly bearing in mind this principle, 13 A.L.J. 477=16 Cr. L.J. 433=29 Ind. Cas. 65. It is doubtful whether an appellate Court under the section could make the position of the appellants worse by ordering a re-trial for a more serious offence, e.g., of ordering a re-trial for an offence under S. 330, I.P.C. when setting aside a conviction had under S. 323, I.P.C. in appeal, 28 Cr. L.J. 575=102 Ind. Cas. 511. When no evidence sufficient to sustain a conviction exists on record, the appellate Court is not justified in sending back the case for re-trial under this section, 28 M.L.J. 379. The Court also will refuse to direct a re-trial having regard to the length of time that had elapsed from the date of the alleged offence, 39 M. 527 (F.B.) It is open to the High Court under this clause in an appeal from an acquittal to reverse such order and to order the accused to be re-tried, but where there was no legal trial before the original Court there was no legal acquittal and therefore there is therefore neither an appeal against acquittal nor an acquittal for the High Court to reverse, and the question whether the accused should be legally tried is a question not for judicial decision but for the consideration of the authorities with whom it rests to proceed with the prosecution, 29 B. 449 at 487. In an appeal under S. 406, supra, against an order taking security to keep the peace under S. 107, supra, the appellate Court is competent when setting aside the order to order a re-trial under this section, 43 A. 501. No appellate Court other than the High Court is empowered to direct the accused to be committed for trial as no appellate Court other than the High Court could set aside an order of acquittal, 26 M. 478, but any appellate Court in hearing an appeal from a conviction could order commitment under clause (b) of this sub-section and no preliminary inquiry is necessary before such a commitment, Weir II, 479; Weir II, 484.

Or find accused guilty and pass sentence.—The High Court in an appeal against acquittal under S. 417 supra, is empowered to find the accused guilty of the offence charged and acquitted by the trial Court and pass sentence on the accused according to law. But it is not clear whether the High Court, could find the accused guilty of an offence with which the accused was not charged; in 7 N.W.P.H.C.R. 196 the accused was acquitted on appeal from a conviction by the Sessions Court for an offence under S. 409, I.P.C., but the facts proved constituted the offence of criminal breach of trust under S. 406, I.P.C., the High Court on appeal by Government ordered a re-trial with the remark that the charge was not framed with sufficient precision. When there is only one charge and the accused was acquitted there is no difficulty whatever, but when there are more charges than one and the accused was acquitted of some of the charges and convicted of the others, the question arises whether in an appeal from the conviction he could be convicted of those offences for which he was acquitted without preferring an appeal from such acquittal. The latest authorities are against permitting a conviction for offences for which the accused was acquitted. See notes under clause 1 (b) under heading 'after the finding maintaining the sentence' at p. 765-768.

Sub-section (1) (b).—This clause deals with the powers of an Appellate Court in an appeal from a conviction. First it may reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court, or direct the accused to be committed for trial. In an appeal preferred against a conviction by one of the accused the appellate Court cannot disturb the order of acquittal passed against his co-accused. The powers of the appellate Court under this section are distinct and different as regards the appeal from a conviction and one from an acquittal and so long as the acquittal passed by a competent Court stands, the Court before which the order of acquittal is produced, is not entitled to impeach it on the ground that the presiding officer was disqualified under, S. 556, infra, 8 A.L.J. 1129=12 Cr. L.J. 575=12 Ind. Cas. 839. Under this sub-section the appellate Court is not entitled to call for findings but, it may, if it thinks fit, call for further evidence, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 347; 4 Cr. L. Rev. 272.

Order him to be re-tried.—An appellate Court has full discretion in the matter of ordering a re-trial. A re-trial may be ordered (1) when the original trial is void for want of jurisdiction or misjoinder, (2) when the inquiry has obviously been superficial and material witnesses have not been examined. It should not be ordered for enabling the prosecution to fill up gaps in the evidence when it had ample opportunities to do so, 11 Cr. L.J. 681=8 Ind. Cas. 594; 36 M. 457; 7 W.R. (Cr.) 3. Ordinarily, the power to order re-trial should not be invoked when setting aside a conviction for illegality or want of jurisdiction; for in such a case proceedings may be taken again independently of such order, 12 C.W.N. 246. Before directing a re-trial the appellate Court is bound to consider the evidence already recorded and see what possible object could be served by a fresh trial, Weir II, 430; 23 C. 103. An appellate Court should not order a re-trial on the sole ground that some additional witnesses ought to have been examined for the prosecution, if as a matter of fact, the pleader who conducted the prosecution had exercised a proper discretion in not calling these witnesses, 31 C. 710. Where a trial is invalid on legal grounds and an irregularity committed by the lower Court has occasioned a failure of justice, a re-trial may be ordered, 28 C. 63; 8 C. L.J. 59. The prosecution is not entitled to ask and the appellate Court has no power to order a re-trial, when the prosecution comes to Court with an incomplete case which so far as it goes confirms the defence. Ordinarily a re-trial by the appellate Court in such a case is giving an opportunity to the prosecution to fill up gaps in the evidence by a re-trial and ought not to be allowed 23 Cr. L.J. 253=107 Ind. Cas. 529. Where the evidence recorded by the trial Court is as full as the law requires and when there is no irregularity of procedure or defect in the inquiry, it is not proper for an appellate Court in appeal to order a re-trial but its clear duty is to consider, on the evidence, whether the conviction can be sustained or not, Ratanlal 530. The re-trial may be held by any Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such appellate Court. Power is given by the section to direct a re-trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to the appellate Court. Where a Sessions Judge on an appeal from an Assistant Sessions Judge sets aside the conviction and directed a re-trial, before himself, holding that the Legislature must have overlooked the possibility of an appeal from the Assistant Sessions Judge to the Sessions Judge and therefore he has taken it on himself, to do what he thinks the Legislature ought to have done, it was held that the order of the Judge was clearly illegal being based on a speculation of his own as to the intention of the Legislature. The High Court further remarked that the Judge may possibly have arrived at the result he desired by directing re-trial before the Assistant Sessions Judge and then transferring the case to his own file under S. 523, infra 24 A.L.J. 506=27 Cr. L.J. 733=85 Ind. Cas. 383. The provisions of this clause do not preclude an appellate Court when reversing the finding and sentence under appeal, instead of directing a re-trial, itself trying the accused if the offence is one ordinarily triable by it 30 M. 223; Weir II, 431. But see 21 C. 935 and Ratanlal 832. When a trial is ordered the whole case is re-opened and the accused must be tried again on all the charges originally framed having regard to the provisions of this section, and the provisions of S. 403 supra, cannot apply, 40 C. 163 at 167. When an appellate Court orders a re-trial of a case under this section, it cannot restrict the evidence to be taken to that mentioned in its order. The only legal order the appellate Court could make, is to direct the case to be re-tried in the light of the observations contained in its order and in such a case it is quite open to an accused person to produce such additional evidence as he may wish to adduce, 3 C. L. J. 303=3 Cr. L. J. 304. When a case is directed to be re-tried by the appellate Court on the basis of certain findings of fact, the trying Court cannot go behind those findings of fact when re-trying the accused, 15 Cr. L. J. 619=25 Ind. Cas. 627. When a Sessions Judge on appeal sets aside the conviction, and orders a re-trial, the District Magistrate has no authority to disregard the order of the Sessions Judge on the ground that the sentence of imprisonment already undergone by the accused is sufficient punishment and so no fresh trial was necessary; neither the District Magistrate nor any other Magistrate had authority to release the accused from jail without holding a fresh inquiry as directed by the Sessions Judge on appeal, 5 L. B. R. 42=10 Cr. L. J. 77=2 Ind. Cas. 541. It is not illegal for an appellate Court when quashing the proceedings of the lower Court to leave it to the latter's discretion to re-try the accused and such an order cannot be construed as an acquittal disentitling the lower Court from re-trying the accused, 53 C. 192. When a Judge hearing an appeal finds that the accused had been gravely prejudiced by a gross mistake in the drawing up of the charge by the trial court and also by the omission by it to consider documents produced by the accused, the proper Course is to remand the case for re-trial from the stage at which the trial had become irregular, i.e., the framing of the charge and thus prevent the prosecution from improving its case, 23 Cr. L. J. 833=101 Ind. Cas. 903. There is no rule that when a re-trial is ordered by the appellate Court it should always be sent to a different Magistrate, each case must be decided on its own merits, 23 Cr. L. J. 617=103 Ind. Cas. 103. Where the order for re-trial does not state whether it is to be held by the same Magistrate or some other Magistrate, then it should not be presumed that it was the intention of the appellate Court to direct the re-trial to be held by the same Magistrate. The matter is left entirely to the discretion of the Magistrate who has to appoint the Court by which the case is to be re-tried, 30 C. W. N. 1002=27 Cr. L. J. 1188=97 Ind. Cas. 913.

Or committed for trial—If a Sessions Court as an appellate Court thinks that the case ought to be re-tried by the Court of Session it ought to set aside the conviction and order a commitment under this clause, 13 A. L. J. 477; 15 A. 205. This sub-section does not authorise a Sessions Court to commit a case to itself, but only empowers it to direct a competent Court to commit, 1907 A. W. N. 178; 22 C. 50. The power to direct a commitment is not confined to cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session, 23 C. 350; 27 C. 172; 16 B. 580. The power of ordering a new trial merely for the purpose of enhancing the punishment ought to be exercised very sparingly, 13 A. L. J. 477 at 478; 24 M. 675. No preliminary inquiry is needed before the appellate Court orders committal, Weir II, 479 and 484. When the High Court hearing an appeal from a conviction finds that the illegality committed by the lower Court (a special Magistrate under the Malabar Ordinance) vitiates the conviction and sets aside the same, it can commit the accused for re-trial on the same charges by a Sessions Court, when the Court of the Special Magistrate has ceased to exist, 18 L. W. 899.

After the finding maintaining the sentence—The word "alter" means substitute one for another and "alter the finding maintaining the sentence" means reverse the finding on which the conviction is based and do not empower the appellate tribunal (or at any rate an appellate tribunal other than the High Court) to reverse or set aside an acquittal, 26 M. 478 at 480. It was the law, before the Privy Council decision in 50 A. 722, that the High Court when hearing an appeal against a conviction may under this clause alter the finding and then as a Court of revision may, under S. 439, infra, enhance the sentence so as to make it appropriate to the altered finding. The prohibition in sub-section (4) of S. 439, infra, was held in 37 M. 119 and other decisions to refer to a case where a trial has ended in a complete acquittal and not to a case where the trial has ended in a conviction (say for culpable homicide or grievous hurt when charged for murder) but also where the Court has wrongly applied the law or has wrongly found some of the facts not proved and has, in consequence, held that the conviction should be under some section of the Code other than the section properly applicable, as any other construction would be inconsistent with the power to alter the "finding" given to the Court as a Court of revision by virtue of its power to exercise the power conferred on a Court of appeal by this clause and the terms of a.

statute should not be so construed as to involve an inconsistency between its different parts. There was also a conflict of opinion between the various High Courts as to the power of the High Court to alter a conviction under S. 304, I.P.C., or S. 325, I.P.C., into one under S. 302 I.P.C., and then sentence the accused to one under S. 302, I.P.C., with which he was originally charged and tried. The question was whether the High Court can itself convict the accused who was charged with the major offence of murder under S. 302, I.P.C., but was acquitted whether expressly or impliedly and convicted of the lesser offence under S. 304 or S. 325 I.P.C., and then after notice to the accused enhance the sentence in revision. The decisions in 37 M. 119; 1 Ran. 436; 8 Lah. 136 and 6 Pat. 217 took one view while 4 Ran. 140; 44 A. 332; 43 B. 510; 50 M. 259 took a different view but the conflict of opinion is now set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in 50 A. 722 (P.C.), where it is held that the High Court in revision has no power to alter a conviction under S. 304, I.P.C., into one under S. 302, I.P.C., and then sentence the accused to death under S. 302, I.P.C., as the trial Court must be taken to have acquitted the accused of the charge under S. 302, I.P.C., and the Local Government having a right of appeal under S. 417 supra, had not chosen to appeal. Their Lordships in the course of the judgment also remarked that if the learned Judges in 37 M. 119 intended to hold that the prohibition in S. 439 (4), infra refers only to a case of the trial ending in a complete acquittal of the accused on all the charges or offences and not to a case where the accused was charged with murder under S. 302, I.P.C., but acquitted of murder but convicted of a lesser offence under S. 304, I.P.C., their Lordships were unable to agree with that part of the decision as the words of S. 439 (4) are clear and there can be no doubt as to their meaning and there was no justification for the qualification which the learned Judges in 37 M. 119 attached to S. 439 (4) supra. See also 31 Bom. L.R. 529. The finding which an appellate Court may alter under this clause may relate either to an offence with which the accused is apparently charged in the lower Court or to one of which he might be convicted under Ss. 237 and 238 supra without a distinct charge. Abetment of an offence is not a minor offence and it can come under S. 237 supra, only if there is no element in the abetment which is not included in the charge and therefore an appellate Court has no power to convict an appellant of abetment of the offence when acquitting him on the main charge and such a conviction is illegal, 49 A. 120; 30 Cr. L.J. 944=118 Ind. Cas. 473; 35 A. 329. In 6 Lah. 268 (P.C.) the accused was charged and convicted of murder and their Lordships of the Privy Council altered the conviction into one under S. 201 I.P.C., causing disappearance of evidence of murder on a construction of S. 237 supra although there was no specific charge for that offence. The law as it stands at present is that if on the facts proved of which the accused may be taken to have notice another offence appears to have been committed and if on those facts, it seems doubtful as to which offence the accused has committed, he may be convicted under Ss. 226 and 227 supra, of the other offence but in each particular case it is to be considered whether the procedure followed though not strictly correct is one which should be adopted, 51 C. 476 at 478. A conviction for murder cannot be altered to one affecting property, 7 Lah. 361. In cases not falling under Ss. 237, and 238, supra, the accused cannot be convicted of an offence with which he was not charged in the lower Court, where however he has been charged and the lower Court has recorded a finding of acquittal on such charge, the appellate Court can alter the finding and there is obviously no injustice in doing so, 33 M. 243 at 245 34 M. 545; 16 A. L.J. 918=20 Cr. L.J. 22=49 Ind. Cas. 503; 27 Cr. L.J. 931=96 Ind. Cas. 213; 33 M. 264. See also 23 C. 973; 27 C. 172, 34 C. 325; but there is only one restriction on the powers of the appellate Court (except the High Court) it cannot enhance the sentence under appeal, 23 C. 973, 15 A. 203; Weir II, 435; alteration will be permissible only so far as it affects the portion of the order adverse to the accused and cannot include the direction of inquiry into new and distinct matter which had hitherto been neglected, 2 Cr. L. Rev. 86 at 83, 21 Cr. L.J. 435=35 Ind. Cas. 532. An appellate Court is not competent to alter a charge under S. 376 I.P.C., into one under S. 356, I.P.C., as the charge under the latter section involves different elements and different questions of fact. In such a case the appellate Court is not entitled to call upon the accused to plead to the charge, examine him, allow him to adduce evidence and then convict him. The proper procedure is to order a re-trial 3 Ran. 63. See also 23 A. L.J. 924=25 Cr. L.J. 1131=93 Ind. Cas. 153, but where the accused is convicted under Ss. 147 and 353, I.P.O., by the trial Court, the appellate Court can alter the conviction to one under S. 323/149 and S. 353/149, I.P.O., as such alteration is legal, S. 149 not creating a definite offence and the omission to mention S. 149 in the charge did not vitiate the conviction or prejudice the accused, 7 Pat 484 following 9 A. 633; 47 M. 746 (F.B.). But see 1929 M.W.N. 639 where it was held that S. 149, I.P.O., constitutes an offence of its own and 47 M. 476 (F.B.) cannot be considered good law after the Privy Council decision in 52 C. 197. A conviction under S. 380, I.P.O., can be altered into one under S. 403 I.P.O., as the offences are of the same nature and there is no surprise to the accused, 30 Cr. L.J. 413=115 Ind. Cas. 25. The offence must be one for which the accused was charged or might have been charged in the trial, and when setting aside a conviction for murder on appeal, the High Court cannot alter the conviction to one of dishonestly receiving stolen property as the accused was never charged with that offence and it was not a cognate offence, 20 A. 107. If the prosecution establishes certain facts constituting an offence and the Court misapplies the law by charging and convicting the accused for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged and notwithstanding such error, the accused by his defence endeavours to meet the accusation of the commission of those acts, then the appellate Court might alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts might constitute, provided the accused has not been prejudiced by the alteration. Such an error is one of form rather than substance. Where the accused is convicted of theft of certain trees and the appellate Court while finding that the accused acted under a bona fide claim of right and their acts did not amount to theft cannot convict them of being members of an unlawful assembly under S. 143, I.P.O., in having gone to the place armed. The defence in the two cases will be different and such an alteration of conviction will certainly prejudice the appellants, 54 C. 476 at 479 following 26 C. 863; 30 C. 283; 40 C. 168; 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.). The appellate Court is not empowered to alter the conviction so as to find the accused guilty of a more serious charge than that with which he was charged and tried as such a course would be improper and unfair, 6 C.L.R. 427; 26 C. 863. But the appellate Court can alter a finding from a graver to a less grave offence for one of two reasons either because it rejects certain evidence accepted by the lower Court or because it applies the law differently to the same facts. An example of the former class of cases is reduction of robbery into theft by rejecting evidence as to the use of violence and an example of the latter would be a conversion of a finding of theft in a building into one of simple theft on a construction of the word building when the appellate Court while concurring with the finding of the trial Court that hurt was caused on the evidence but differs in the application of the law whether the hurt was simple or grievous falling under S. 323 or S. 324, I.P.O., and finds only the lesser offence of hurt has been made out, neither the letter nor the spirit of this section is broken by maintaining the sentence. The test of enhancement must be found not among the technicalities of penal definition but by answering the broad question 'For this man's offence has the appellate Court inflicted punishment more severe than that originally awarded?' 53 M.L.J. 694=39 M.L.T. 20=28 Cr. L.J. 824=105 Ind. Cas. 440. If the accused has been prejudiced by the omission to prove the altered charge and if the defence might have been different had the altered charge been framed in the first Court the appellate Court should not exercise its power to alter the finding, 30 C. 238; (1916) 2 M.W.N. 267=20 Cr. L.J. 780=53 Ind. Cas. 620. The appellate Court cannot alter the finding of the lower Court to hold the appellant guilty of an offence of which he has been acquitted by that Court maintaining the sentence, 23 C. 975; 27 C. 172; Weir II, 436; 3 Pat. L.J. 563; 41 C. 350. But see 26 M. 478. Where the trial and conviction is by a Court not competent to try the offence, s. g. an offence under S. 332 I.P.O. not triable by a second class Magistrate but triable only by first class Magistrate the whole trial is illegal and in such a case the appellate Court cannot alter the conviction to an offence triable by the Magistrate say an offence under S. 332, I.P.O., (1928) M.W.N. 465=29 Cr. L.J. 799=111 Ind. Cas. 126, nor can the appellate Court convict the accused of an offence which the first Court was not competent to try, 7 A. 441 (F.B.), similarly where the two offences are entirely of a different character and in making his defence on the first charge the accused could not be regarded as pleading to the altered charge, the appellate Court should not convict the accused under this clause, 3 C.W.N. 367. Where the two charges (alteration from

S. 376 to S. 386, I.P.C.) involve different elements and different questions of facts, the power of altering the finding should not be exercised, 3 Bom L.R. 120. Where the appellate Court finds a different common object for an unlawful assembly from that charged, it amounts to different finding of fact from that to which the accused were called upon to plead and to defend themselves at the trial, 27 C. 990; 33 C. 295, but an accused when charged as being a member of an unlawful assembly with the specific common object of assaulting the inmates of a house can be convicted in appeal of being a member of the unlawful assembly with the common object of causing hurt to the inmates of the house without an alteration of the charge, as assault means use of violence to persons whether it be assault or hurt or grievous hurt, 28 Cr. L.J. 769=101 Ind. Cas. 97. A conviction cannot be altered from S. 147 to S. 323, I.P.C., where there was no charge under the latter section and the common object charged did not specify that it was to cause hurt, 38 C. 293. In 49 A. 120 it was held that an appellate Court cannot alter the conviction in appeal to a totally different offence from that for which the accused had been actually convicted by the trial Court but the appellate Court is entitled and can substitute a conviction for a lesser offence in appeal from that which had been held to have been committed by the trial Court. Thus when actual assault was not found to have been committed by the appellate Court but only a threat of assault, the appellate Court can substitute a conviction under S. 189, I.P.C., instead of one under S. 359, I.P.C. for which the accused had been convicted by the trial Court, 2 Luck. 503. A conviction under Ss. 147 and 323, I.P.C., cannot be altered on appeal into one under S. 160, I.P.C., without a proper charge being framed, and the accused tried again on the latter charge. It is not a case where an accused who is charged with a major offence is convicted of a minor offence when the major offence is not proved. The offence under S. 160, I.P.C., is different from those under Ss. 147 and 323, I.P.C., for under the former section, to establish an offence of affray it must be shown that the fight took place in a public place and that there was a disturbance of the public peace, 47 M. 61 where 19 A.L.J. 497 is not followed, See 30 C.W.N. 523=26 Cr. L.J. 1018=87 Ind. Cas. 942 where 30 C. 288 and 18 C.W.N. 1274, are followed. An appellate Court cannot so alter a charge as to make it necessary for an accused person to meet an absolutely different case from that charged in the lower Court, 23 A.L.J. 924. An appellate Court cannot alter a finding into one of abetment of the offence for which the appellant has been convicted, 33 M. 264, 11 B.H.C.R. 240; 30 Cr. L.J. 934=118 Ind. Cas. 473; 15 L.W. 583=(1922 M.W.N. 182; 1921 Pat. 96, 13 Cr. L.J. 203 and 223; 49 A. 120; 26 Bom L.R. 323=25 Cr. L.J. 1135=81 Ind. Cas. 959; 25 Cr. L.J. 1292=82 Ind. Cas. 364, nor can an appellate Court alter a conviction under S. 359, I.P.C., to one under S. 189, I.P.C., (1912) M.W.N. 1110. A Sessions Judge when upholding the conviction and sentence of the first Court has no power to set aside the acquittal for some other offence which is not a case of altering the conviction within this section, 37 C.L.J. 409. It is not a proper way of dealing with a case on appeal under this clause by convicting the accused for an offence which did not form the subject-matter of the complaint more particularly when the appellate Court has found that all the other matters complained of were either false or unproved, 3 C.W.N. 296. An appellate Court while setting aside the conviction under S. 452, I.P.C., cannot alter the conviction to one under a special Act [S. 19 (e) Arms Act] for the reason that the accused was not charged with that offence and had no opportunity to meet it, 27 Cr. L.J. 1380=93 Ind. Cas. 480. The appellate Court under this clause has power to alter the finding in order to legitimise the sentence passed by the Court of first instance, 3 Cr. L.J. 43. When an appellate Court illegally altered a conviction under S. 205 read with 109 I.P.C. into one under S. 419, I.P.C., the High Court in revision can re-alter the conviction to one under S. 205, read with 109, I.P.C., 6 Pat. 217.

Reduce the sentence—When the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction to try the case the appellate Court when hearing an appeal from the conviction could not proceed with the appeal on the merits, with a view that in the event of its deciding that the offence has been made out to the reduction of the sentence passed on the accused by the Magistrate to one which the Magistrate was competent to pass under the Code. The only course left open to the appellate Court in such a case is to set aside the conviction and sentence and to send back the case for fresh disposal according to law, 4 A. 141. When the Court of first instance convicts a person for two offences but passes only a single sentence for both the offences, the appellate Court when acquitting the accused of one of the offences is bound to reduce the sentence and cannot maintain the sentence in its entirety which amounts to an enhancement of sentence. It is now well settled law (See 30 M. 43; Weir II, 437A; 22 B. 760; 49 A. 434; 24 C 316; 30 Bom. L.R. 967), that it is not open to an appellate Court, when setting aside the conviction for one of two or more offences to confirm the whole sentence passed by the trial Court. The reason is that when, (take a simple case), a single sentence is awarded for two offences, part of it must be deemed to have been incurred for one offence and part for the other so that to maintain the whole sentence for only one of them, amounts to such an enhancement as is prohibited by (1) (b) of the section, 33 M L J. 694=39 M L T. 20=23 Cr. L J. 824=104 Ind. Cas. 440. If the appellate Court thinks in such a case the sentence ought not to be reduced it should refer the matter to the High Court for enhancement, 30 M. 43; 22 B. 760; 24 C. 316; Weir II, 437, A.; 8 M L T. 117=11 Cr. L J. 493=7 Ind. Cas. 415; see 49 A. 434; 53 M L J. 694=39 M L T. 20=28 Cr. L J. 824=104 Ind. Cas. 440; See also 30 Bom. L.R. 967=29 Cr. L J. 1032=112 Ind. Cas. 538, where the High Court following the above decisions held that the appellate Court's action amounted to an enhancement of sentence which it had no power to do, itself issued notice to the accused to show cause why sentence should not be enhanced, and enhanced the sentence in revision as the offence was one of extortion by a Police officer. But where the appellate Court, in a case where there was no distinct charge in respect of a separate count, sets aside the conviction in respect of two out of the three counts and does not interfere with the conviction and sentence on the third count, that did not amount to an enhancement of sentence on the part of the appellate Court, 29 Cr L.J. 847=111 Ind. Cas. 399

After the nature of the sentence but not so as to enhance the same.—As a general rule, an appellate Court has no power to enhance the sentence in appeal. The High Court alone in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction is empowered to enhance the sentence. Altering a sentence of fine into one of imprisonment is not permitted by this section, as such a course is an enhancement of sentence, 18 A. 301; 18 B. 751. It is impossible to lay down any general rule to determine what is or what is not an enhancement of sentence when only a portion of the sentence is altered to a punishment of lesser degree of severity, 27 C. 175. In a criminal appeal it is desirable that the High Court should first deal with the appeal on its merits and then it might consider or not whether a notice to enhance the sentence should be issued under S. 433, infra, 49 B. 450. The question whether the sentence has been enhanced by the appellate Court is a question of fact in each particular case, 23 A. 497. In each case the Court has to consider what is the effect of the alteration. Where the appellate Court altered a conviction of one month's imprisonment and a fine of rupees five into one of three days, imprisonment and a fine of rupees, one hundred and in default of payment of fine to a further term of one month's imprisonment, it was held that in the absence of any evidence that the accused was unable to pay the fine or regarded the sentence passed on appeal as more severe, it could not be said that the sentence had been enhanced, 36 A. 435, but the Madras High Court held in 30 M. 103 (F.B.) that when the aggregate amount of imprisonment which the accused might have to undergo even in default of payment of fine does not exceed the total amount of imprisonment which the accused might have to undergo under the order of the trying Magistrate, there was no enhancement of sentence. See also 23 B. 439, but these decisions, it was pointed out in 36 A. 435, overlooked the fact that a sentence of a fine is not wiped out by serving the alternative sentence of imprisonment but is still liable to be enforced under the process of Court. But the new proviso added to sub-section (1) of S. 396, supra, says that if the offender had undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no Court shall issue a warrant for the levy of the fine unless for special reasons, and therefore the chief reason given in 36 A. 435 does not hold good. See also 1929 M.W.N. 896. A sentence of fine is always considered lighter than a sentence of imprisonment, 23 B. 439, followed in 1929 M.W.N. 896. The power of an appellate Court to alter the sentence must be measured by that of the trial Court. When on appeal from a conviction by a second-class Magistrate of three months' imprisonment, the appellate Court altered the sentence to one of fine of rupees four hundred, such alteration was held illegal, 45, A. 594; 12 Cr. L.J. 444=11 Ind. Cas. 788; 3 Pat. 638. The imposition of solitary confinement is an enhancement even though the sentence is reduced, 1887 A.W.N. 170. The test of enhancement must be found not among the technicalities of the penal definition but by answering the broad question "for this man's offence has the appellate Court inflicted a punishment more severe than that originally awarded?" 53 M.L.J. 694 at 696=39 M.L.T. 20 at 21=28 Cr. L.J. 824=104 Ind. Cas. 440. Alteration of a sentence of two months' imprisonment plus a fine of rupees fifty or in default one month's further imprisonment to six weeks' imprisonment and fine of rupees two hundred or in default to further imprisonment for six weeks is an enhancement. The alteration means that while the original sentence was practically three months and rupees fifty fine, the altered sentence is equal to three months and rupees two hundred fine, 27 Cr. L.J. 812=95 Ind. Cas. 476. Whipping is generally looked upon as a more degrading punishment than imprisonment, but it does not necessarily follow that the substitution of rigorous imprisonment for whipping would not under any circumstances amount to an enhancement. A poor wretch who has a large family to support might prefer to be left off with a few stripes instead of being incarcerated in jail for any lengthened period of time but the Court is bound to show satisfactorily that it is not really enhancing before it undertakes to substitute the one punishment for the other without his consent. The Legislature has not supplied us with any data from which the comparative severity of the two sentences can be determined and it is therefore impossible to say how many stripes would be equivalent to a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a given period of time. There is no legal or rational standard of comparison of any kind whatever, and, in the absence of such standard, the Court has no power to take it for granted that a sentence of twenty stripes is equivalent to one of rigorous imprisonment for three months, 6 B.L.R. Appx. 95 at 96-97=15 W.R. (Cr.) 7. Where the appellate Court reduced the sentence of imprisonment but also awarded whipping, it was held that the sentence of whipping amounted to an enhancement of sentence, Weir II, 487. The practice has been to regard the alteration of a sentence of imprisonment to one of whippings as an enhancement of sentence but it has not been authorised by this sub-section, 30 Cr. L.J. 328=114 Ind. Cas. 523. An appellate Court has no power to alter the sentence of an accused who has not appealed and whose sentence is not open to appeal or to revise it, 8 M.H.C.R. (Appx) vii. An appellate Court when hearing an appeal by some of the accused cannot pass any order with regard to an accused who has not appealed. The only course open to it if it is of opinion that the lower Court's judgment or order should be varied, altered or set aside in favour of one who has not appealed is to refer the case to the High Court under S. 423, infra.

An order by the appellate Court as to payment of costs under S. 31 of the Court-Fees Act is not an enhancement as it forms no part of the penalty or sentence passed in the case, 29 M. 188, and it was held in 31 M. 547 that the appellate Court is not competent in an appeal from a conviction to set aside an order as to payment of costs made under S. 31 of the Court-Fees Act.

Subject to the provisions of S. 106 (3).—This provision empowering the appellate Court to direct the accused to furnish security for keeping the peace when confirming the conviction was introduced in the Code of 1899 and such an order does not amount to an enhancement of sentence. The appellate Court must find the accused guilty of an offence, specified in S. 106, supra, 29 C. 333. See S. 415, supra, which provides the addition of an order directing a convicted person to find security to keep the peace does not make the sentence passed appealable, if the sentence is not otherwise appealable as such an order is evidently thought to be no part of the sentence passed.

Sub section (1) (d). Consequential or Incidental Orders.—This clause was introduced for the first time in the Code of 1893. It empowers an appellate Court when deciding an appeal against acquittal or conviction to make any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper; but it does not empower the appellate Court to make any order which may be held to have some sort of connection with the appeal before it, which it may think just or proper. For example, power to excuse delay in the presentation of an appeal is not a consequential or incidental order. The application of this section must be taken as legitimate only after the preliminary stages indicated in Ss. 421 and 422, supra, have been passed, i.e., after the appeal has been admitted and after the notice referred to in S. 422, supra, has been given, 24 Cr. L.J. 89=71 Ind. Cas. 217. The expression "makes any incidental or consequential order" cannot be considered so liberally as to embrace any and every ancillary order which is capable of being described as incidental or consequential. Otherwise an appellate Court, affirming, for instance, a conviction for kidnapping a woman, might add and enforce a direction that the offender should pay her by way of maintenance a monthly allowance. This can hardly be. Orders within the purview of this provision must fall under one or other of two heads: (i) orders which follow as a matter of course, being necessary complements to the main order passed, without which the latter would be incomplete or ineffective, e.g., directions as to refund of fines to acquitted appellants, (ii) orders which though ancillary in character require more than the support of the criminal Court's inherent jurisdiction and could not be passed without express authority, e.g., an order for compensation for having preferred a false and vexatious complaint under S. 250, supra, 39 C. 157 (F.B.) at 161-162; 3 A.L.J. 332=3 Cr. L.J. 441; 45 A. 80; 7 Lah. 152. The award of costs cannot be regarded as incidental or consequential to the disposal of a revision petition against an order under S. 145, supra, within the meaning of this sub-section, because it does not necessarily follow from an order passed in revision, 48 M. 252 (F.B.), following 39 C. 157. Appointing a receiver pending a criminal revision case against an order under S. 145, supra cannot be said to be an incidental or consequential order under this sub-section. 49 M.L.J. 533=22 L.W. 723=(1925) M.W.N. 772=27 Cr. L.J. 126=91 Ind. Cas. 702. An appellate Court has power under this clause to set aside an order requiring security to keep the peace made by the Court of first instance as an incidental order even when upholding the conviction, 30 C. 101. When the conviction is set aside the bond taken becomes void, S. 106 (2) supra. It is a little curious that S. 106 (3) supra speaks of the power of the appellate Court to pass an order under this section when hearing an appeal, but makes no mention of the power to set aside such an order passed by the Court of first instance. An appellate Court is not competent to pass an order under S. 250, supra, when setting aside a conviction. The words "the Magistrate by whom the case is heard" occurring in that section cannot refer to an appellate Court but has reference only to an original Court, 39 C. 157; 23 A. 825. Orders for restoration of property under Ss. 517 to 522, infra, are consequential or incidental orders within the clause, 38 C. 41; 27 A. 415; 18 C.W.N. 859 at 962. Such disposal of property produced at the trial is a consequential order on its findings on the merits. It is not denied that such an order, if passed by the trial Court on its decision discharging convicting or acquitting the accused would be valid. If this be so in the case of a trial Court, it is not clear why the appellate Court when disposing of the appeal against conviction or acquittal on the merits should not act under this sub-section, 29 Cr. L.J. 810=111 Ind. Cas. 314 where 3 A.L.J. 770=1906 A.W.N. 236=4 Cr. L.J. 370; 46 M. 162 at 164; 35 A. 374 are followed. And this power is now expressly given by clause (3) of S. 522, infra and the decisions in, 39 C. 1030 and 137, which took a different view are no longer law. The appellate Court when hearing an appeal from a conviction is competent under this clause to suspend the sentence passed by the lower Court and in lieu thereof make an order under S. 562, infra provided it is satisfied that the case is a fit one to be dealt with under that section, 24 A. 306; 29 M. 567; 2 Bom. L.R. 817. An order for confiscation under the Indian Forest Act, is not within this clause and an appellate Court cannot pass an order for confiscation, 27 C. 450; 4 A. 417. Under this clause the High Court has no power to direct a subordinate Court to examine or otherwise deal with certain passages appearing in a judgment of the lower Court. Wheeler v. Wheeler. The making of an order under S. 31 of the Court Fees Act by the appellate Court under this clause and does not ordinarily amount to an enhancement of sentence and such an order does not form part of the sentence, though the amount is determinable as to a fine, (1924) M.W.N. 439. An erroneous order under S. 31 of the Court Fees Act directing the accused to pay costs as to Court-fee stamps, the offence being not a conviction, is rectified by the appellate Court if no appeal lies, by the High Court, 363-81 Ind. Cas. 56.

Sub-section (2).—The considerations governing an appeal from a trial with the aid of Assessors which ends in a conviction differ greatly from those governing an appeal from a conviction in a trial held with a Jury. In the latter case the appeal is restricted by the provisions of this sub-section and S. 537, infra, whereas in the former the whole case is before the appellate Court, 29 Cr. L.J. 325 at 328=108 Ind. Cas. 81. This sub-section deals with appeals from the verdict of Jury. A verdict of Jury cannot lightly be interfered with or set aside unless the High Court is satisfied that there has been a misdirection which has occasioned a failure of justice, 28 Cr. L.J. 689=103 Ind. Cas. 545. The terms of this sub-section are imperative and in the absence of a mis-direction it is not competent to the High Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a Jury, 28 Cr. L.J. 692=103 Ind. Cas. 548. The High Court is not entitled to alter or reverse the verdict of a Jury unless it is of opinion that the verdict is erroneous for reasons set forth in this sub-section, 32 M. 179, but the exercise of the powers by the High Court should be used only sparingly, 10 Bom L.R. 563.

Unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous.—The term "verdict" means the entire verdict on all the charges framed in the course of the trial for various offences as provided by S. 296, supra, and is not limited to a verdict on a particular charge on which the accused is convicted, and he has appealed against such conviction, 22 C. 377; 1 Cr. L.J. 542. The word "erroneous" is not to be read as meaning wrong on the facts. It must rather be read in connection with words that follow, as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law by the Jury. The appellate Court cannot reverse the verdict of a Jury unless there is any misdirection by the Judge or any misunderstanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by him. Then only can the verdict be said to be tainted with error in the process by which it has been arrived at. It throws upon the appellate Court the duty of ascertaining whether the process or method which the Judge directed the Jury to follow as to the acceptance or disregarding the evidence or as to the view taken of the law was erroneous on any material point, but not the duty of determining for itself whether the verdict, as a conclusion of fact was right or wrong, 21 C. 935 at 972; 14 B. 115; 33 C.W.N. 84. To justify the reversal of a unanimous verdict of a Jury on the ground of misdirection it must be shown that the verdict has occasioned a failure of justice, due to misdirection, and that apart from this the Jury would not have come to the same conclusion, 26 C.W.N. 538=24 Cr. L.J. 143=71 Ind. Cas. 367. In the absence of any provision in the Indian Statute Law, the English rule of repugnancy or contradiction on the face of the record in the verdict of Jury, is not by itself sufficient to ensure the quashing of a conviction and the technicalities which are borrowed from English Law and founded on ideas as to the sacred character of the verdict of a Jury whose finding of fact are unknown cannot be imported so as to give such a character which by the express provisions of law does not attach to the Jury verdicts in India, 41 C. 350, followed in 52 C. 112; 41 C. 734 at 761. The appellate Court is not bound to go through the facts and find for itself whether the verdict is actually erroneous on fact, 25 C. 230. Even in a case where the verdict of the Jury counts for nothing on account of one of the Jury men not entitled to sit on the Jury and the Court therefore was not properly constituted, the High Court on a perusal of the record finds that the verdict is in accordance with the facts of case is not justified in setting aside the verdict and ordering a retrial, 46 C.L.J. 231 at 245=28 Cr. L.J. 873=104 Ind. Cas. 723. For the proper exercise of the function by the High Court the Judge should record his heads of charge to the Jury and should not merely write a judgment as it would be impossible to say from it how the case has been left for the decision of the Jury, Weir II 499.

Owing to a misdirection by the Judge.—S. 297, supra enacts that the Judge shall sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and lay down the law for the guidance of the Jury. The word "misdirection" thus includes not only an error in laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided but also an error in summing up the evidence; for a defective summing up of the evidence is as much an infringement of S. 297 as an error in laying down the law and law mistake of law, 11 Cr. L.J. 13=4 Ind. Cas. 597; 3 B.H.C.R. 23 at 94. Technically 'misdirection' means an error of law made by a Judge in charging the Jury on an error of a Judge in charging the Jury on a question of law. A non-direction may amount to misdirection if it is on a point of prime importance telling in favour of the accused, 27 B. 644 at 651; 4 Bom. L.R. 693. The following omissions were held to amount to misdirection:—(1) omission to direct Jury to give benefit of doubt to the accused, 1 M.L.T. 330; (2) omission to call specific attention to the defence evidence, 35 C. 531; 18 M.L.J. 541; 4 C.W.N. 196; 11 C. 10; (3) omission to state the defence of each accused, 30 C. 822; 4 C.W.N. 196; 7 C. 42; 29 C. 782; 30 M. 41; 18 M.L.J. 250; (4) omission to state that it was unsafe to convict on retracted confession unless corroborated by independent evidence, Weir II, 501 and 510; 21 M. 83; 26 M. 33; 18 M.L.J. 250; (5) omission to point out essential elements of the offence charged, 1 C.W.N. 301; 25 C. 711; 36 C. 281; Weir II, 493 and 519. Wrongly placing the onus of proof on the accused by taking an erroneous view of the law is a misdirection, 4 C.W.N. 576. An expression of opinion by the Judge on various questions of fact without telling the Jury that they are the sole Judges of fact is a misdirection, 33 C. 531; similarly asking the Jury to consider the effect of a document not proved is a misdirection, 26 C. 49; 27 B. 626. So also telling the Jury that they may use as evidence against the accused a statement made behind his back and not tested by cross-examination, 18 M.L.J. 66 and 250. It is a misdirection to tell the Jury at the re-trial of an accused person after the discharge of the Jury originally empanelled that they must consider carefully whether there was any reason for coming to a different conclusion on any particular point from that arrived at by the Court on the former occasion. He is justified in warning the Jury that they are not bound by the result of the previous trial, if he mentions to them that there was a previous trial, 9 C.L.J. 380—10 Cr. L.J. 493—4 Ind. Cas. 120. See Notes pp. 559 to 561 as to summing up to the Jury and misdirections.

If proper directions are not given to the Jury with respect to a material point then it is not open to the High Court in appeal to guess and gamble as to whether or not the Jury's verdict would have been different if such direction had been given. The trial must be dealt with by the High Court on the footing that no sufficient directions were given to the Jury, 27 Cr. L.J. 1492 (2)=93 Ind. Cas. 714 (2). The right of the High Court to interfere with a verdict of a Jury is limited to cases where there has been a mis-direction on a point of law or where the High Court is satisfied that the Jury have mis-understood the Judge's charge on a point of law, 47 C.L.J. 433; 29 Cr. L.J. 819=111 Ind. Cas. 323; 33 C.W.N. 84. Where a misdirection has been made out, the real test for applying S. 537, infra, is whether the accused has been really prejudiced by such misdirection and when there is prejudice, a re-trial will be ordered, 5 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 85; 6 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 47; 10 B.H.C.R. 497; 18 M.L.J. 66 and 250; 5 Bom. L.R. 207; 4 C.W.N. 576; 14 C.W.N. 493; 27 Cr. L.J. 785=95 Ind. Cas. 383; 7 Pat. 15. A verdict of a Jury cannot be set aside on the mere ground of miscarriage of justice. It must further be established that failure of justice has been occasioned by a mis-direction by the Judge in his charge to the Jury, 29 Cr. L.J. 325 at 332=108 Ind. Cas. 81. See also 17 Cr. L.J. 333 at 355=30 Ind. Cas. 657. Where there was a misjoinder of charges and the charge to the Jury did not set out the facts of the case and the nature of the evidence for the prosecution and defence, a re-trial was ordered as the High Court was of opinion that the case ought to be investigated by a Jury, 33 C. 822; but if the Court is of opinion that the evidence would not warrant a conviction, it would be useless to send back the case for a new trial in order that a new Jury may have the opportunity of convicting on the evidence upon a proper summing up, 29 C. 782; 5 W.R. (Cr.) 80 (F.B.) When a verdict is set aside on the ground of misdirection, as a matter of practice the proper course is not to acquit the accused but to direct a re-trial. It is only in special circumstances, as where the accused has been harassed by repeated trials or where the evidence is so clearly insufficient or incredible that no Jury could reasonably convict, that an appellate Court would be justified in acquitting the accused on the ground of misdirection, 27 Cr. L.J. 785=93 Ind. Cas. 383.

Or to a misunderstanding on the part of Jury of the law as laid down by the Judge.—It is submitted that it is not clear how such misunderstanding on the part of the Jury as to the law laid down by the Judge is to be ascertained. When on account of the Jury misunderstanding the law, a wrong verdict is delivered, it can be corrected only by the Judge disagreeing with the Jury and referring the case to the High Court under S. 307, supra, which alone can deal with the matter effectively, 28 B. 412.

The provision contained in this sub-section is one in favour of the accused that is to say, an appellate Court may alter or reverse the verdict in the sense of preventing a conviction taking effect as the result of a misdirection. But it clearly cannot substitute its own verdict for that of the Jury. It seems to be the view followed for many years in Calcutta as illustrated in 21 C. 955 and in other Provinces as well, 39 A. 348 at 352. This sub-section does not in any way affect the power of the Court to deal with the sentence. It only affects the power to "reverse or alter" where the Court is of opinion that the verdict is erroneous owing to misdirection or misunderstanding of the law by the Jury. Where the verdict of the Jury is set aside by the High Court as illegal, a fresh trial will be ordered, 46 C. 212. This sub-section only applies if it becomes necessary to consider whether the verdict of the Jury was erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge. It does not narrow down S. 418, supra, which allows an appeal in a Jury trial on a question of law. If there has been no trial in that because such trial was illegal it must be set aside for that reason only and no question arises as regards any misdirection affecting the Jury's verdict. This is the law in England and this has been consistently followed in India. S. 537 (c) is clear on this point and S. 537 cannot apply to provisions of the law as to empannelling of a Jury when they are violated, 27 Cr. L.J. 793=55 Ind. Cas. 393 where 26 A. 211 is followed.

424. The rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court.

Judgment of subordinate Appellate Court.

Provided that, unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused shall not be brought up, or required to attend, to hear judgment delivered.

Scope of the section.—The provisions of this section read with S. 367, supra, are imperative and should be complied with in such a manner as to indicate clearly that the evidence has been gone into and tested, extrinsically as well as intrinsically and the appellate Court has arrived at an independent opinion for itself. Appellate Courts continually overlook that this section prescribes that the rules contained in Chapter XXVI supra, as to judgments shall apply to judgments of appellate Courts, 37 C. 194; 14 O.W.N. 23 (N). Its judgment should not appear to be in the nature of a supplement to the judgment of the trial Court but should be adequate in itself to enable the High Court to dispose of the petition in revision without the necessity of going through the trial record, 1 Ran. 301; 35 C. 138; 25 Cr. L.J. 113=76 Ind. Cas. 177; 25 Cr. L.J. 246=76 Ind. Cas. 710; 27 Cr. L.J. 1104=98 Ind. Cas. 716, referring to 2 Lah. 303; 19 A. 506; 33 A. 393. This section lays down what an appellate judgment ought to contain. The rules laid down in Chapter XXVI as to judgments of Courts of original jurisdiction are made applicable so far as may be practicable to judgments of appellate Courts other than the High Court.

Rules contained in Chapter XXVI.—See Ss. 206 to 375, supra, which deal with judgments of the trial Court.

So far as may be practicable.—It is rather difficult to lay down rules with precision as to the particulars which an appellate judgment should contain so as to comply with the requirements of law, see 19 A. 506.

Judgment of Appellate Court.—This section read with S. 367 lays down, what the contents of a judgment of a subordinate appellate Court should be. Where the law allows an appeal, the appellant is entitled to have from the Court of appeal, that has to deal with it, its explicit opinion on the questions of fact involved in the case and the Court of appeal should take its own view of the evidence after perusing the record. The judgment of the Court of appeal should be such that the High Court as a Court of revision, might on looking into the judgment, be in a position to judge for itself what the case was and how the Court of appeal considered the evidence as bearing on the guilt or innocence of the individual accused before the latter affirmed the judgment of the trial Court, 39 C.L.J. 117=23 Cr. L.J. 1044=81 Ind. Cas. 820; 23 Cr. L.J. 901=81 Ind. Cas. 437. A judgment of an appellate Court which does not set out or discuss the evidence on which the conclusions are based is not a proper judgment and is liable to be set aside, 29 Cr. L.J. 1031=112 Ind. Cas. 359. No judgment which purports to dispose of an appeal under the preceding section is a legal judgment unless it contains at least (i) the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal; (ii) the decision thereon; and (iii) reasons for the decision, 13 Cr.L.J. 559=15 Ind. Cas. 975; 14 Cr. L.J. 570=21 Ind. Cas. 170; 37 C. 125; 24 A.L.J. 318; 17 Bom. L.R. 1035; 27 Cr. L.J. 343=92 Ind. Cas. 855. The judgment should show on the face of it that the Appellate Court has applied its mind to the consideration of the evidence on the record, and the pleas raised by the appellant, both in the Court below and in his memorandum of appeal, 33 A. 393 at 394. It is not necessary for an appellate Court to write a long and elaborate judgment, but as laid down in 2 Lah. 303, it is clearly its duty not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and that the points urged by the appellant have been duly considered and decided. It fails in the discharge of its duty imposed on it by law, if it writes a judgment which cannot be followed without reference to the judgment of the trial Court, 23 Cr. L.J. 703 (1)=110 Ind. Cas. 419. An appellate judgment cannot be read in connection with and as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance. It must be quite independent and stand by itself. The judgment should show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been considered and reasons should be given to indicate that the Court directed judicial attention to the case of each accused, 35 C. 133. There must be sufficient materials in the appellate judgment itself to show that the appeal has been properly tried. The judgment or order must bear marks of such intelligent appreciation on the part of the appellate Court of the necessary facts and materials as would warrant the superior Court to infer that the conclusions were properly arrived at by the lower appellate Court, 27 Cr. L.J. 1404=98 Ind. Cas. 716. A judgment which gives a summary of the facts but does not discuss the points urged in the appeal memorandum and does not give any reasons for holding the conviction to be correct is not a legal judgment, 23 Cr. L.J. 720=107 Ind. Cas. 665. In the case of a joint trial, the judgment of an appellate Court, dealing with the case of several accused should show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration and should state reasons as far as may be necessary, to show, that the appellate Court had devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused, 39 C.L.J. 117; 33 C. 133; 22 C. 241; 16 Cr. L.J. 496=29 Ind. Cas. 336. An appellate judgment must be a self-contained document and cannot be read in connection with and as supplementary to the judgment of the trial Court. It must indicate that the Court had applied its mind to the case of each of the accused and to the defence set up by him, 23 Cr. L.J. 113=76 Ind. Cas. 177; 13 Cr. L.J. 559=15 Ind. Cas. 975; 2 Lah. 303; 2 Cr.L. Rev. 91; 35 C. 133; 20 C.W.N. 1296; (1918) M.W.N. 129. Where there are several accused and judgment of the Magistrate though it deals fairly with the case of the prosecution as a whole does not give satisfactory reasons for accepting it against individual accused separately, the judgment ought to be set aside and the Magistrate directed to restore the appeal to file and dispose of it according to law, after hearing fresh arguments as to the complicity of each individual accused, 2 L.W. 958=6 Cr. L. Rev. 433=16 Cr.L.J. 735=31 Ind. Cas. 175. See also 6 Cr.L. Rev. 434=29 Ind. Cas. 336; 22 C. 241; 2 Ran. 641. The provisions of this section read with S. 367 (6) supra, are applicable to orders under S. 123 (3) in security cases, 37 C. 9; 35 C. 138. It is the duty of the appellate Court in every case to examine for itself the evidence and to give the accused person the benefit of a reasonable doubt which it may entertain after such examination and it is also its duty to arrive at an independent opinion as to the weight of evidence, Weir II, 535 and 538; 22 C. 241. It is the duty of the appellate Court to notice briefly but clearly the objections urged on appeal and how they are disposed of besides stating the points for determination, the decisions thereon and the reasons for such decision, 32 C. 178; 7 M.L.T. 182. It is difficult to lay down any rule with precision in order to determine what judgment of an appellate Court complies with and what judgment does not comply with the requirements of this Code. The object, no doubt, of the Legislature in formulating rules as to judgments was partly to ensure that a Criminal Court should consider the case before it, in its different bearings and should on such consideration arrive at definite conclusions and also another object may have been, that the judgment should show that in fact the Criminal Court had considered the evidence in a case of first instance or in a case of appeal and had found, in case of a conviction, that the facts proved to the satisfaction of the Court brought an offence home to the person whom the Court convicted, 19 A. 503 (F.B.) followed in 24 A.L.J. 318; 10 A.L.J. 435. When an appellate Magistrate after hearing the parties passed the order "appeal dismissed under S. 423, Cr. P. O." it was held that the judgment did not fulfil the conditions of this section and S. 637, infra could not cure such a defect as it was not a case of omission or irregularity in the judgment but the absence of a judgment, 17 Bom. L.R. 881. A recital of facts preceding an offence without a discussion of the evidence and without considering the essential points as to the ownership of the thing stolen and the possibility of the accused having acted in good faith does not satisfy the requirements of this section, (1912) M.W.N. 831=12 M.L.T. 335=13 Cr. L.J. 712=16 Ind. Cas. 520. When an appellate judgment merely stated "after reading the evidence and hearing the learned Counsel for the appellant and the learned Government Pleader, I am convinced the Deputy Magistrate has decided the case rightly," it was held that it was not a proper judgment, 23 C. 420. For similar cases see 11 C. 449; 13 C. 110; 1 C.W.N. 169; Weir II. 536; 1 Bom. L.R. 225; 15 B. 11. A humorous judgment is not necessarily bad, 12 Cr. L.J. 464=11 Ind. Cas. 1000. When there is no proper judgment as required by this section the High Court will direct a re-hearing of the appeal by the appellate Court, 15 B. 11; 35 C. 133; 7 C.W.N. 30; 11 C. 449; 13 C. 110; 22 C. 241. Where in a criminal appeal there are a number of appellants, it is the duty of the Court to consider the case of each accused separately having regard to the charges against him, the special evidence directed against him, and his particular defence if any, and omission so to consider the case against each individual accused separately would vitiate the judgment, 48 M.L.J. 304=26 Cr. L.J. 1089=88 Ind. Cas. 177 where 2 L.W. 938 and 1918 M.W.N. 129 are followed, 35 C. 133. When an appellate Court has signed the judgment it has no power to re-hear the appeal even in cases where a pleader appearing for the appellant was not heard and he requested the Court for an opportunity of being heard, [1923] Pat. 237.

Other than the High Court.—The Chartered High Courts are not governed by the rules contained in Chapter XXVI and by the provisions of this section as to the recording of judgments

The Proviso.—This proviso enacts that the accused shall not be brought up or required to attend to hear Judgment delivered unless the Court otherwise directs

425. (1) Whenever a case is decided on appeal by the High Court under this Chapter, it shall certify its judgment or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order appealed against was recorded or passed.

Order by High Court on appeal to be certified to lower Court.

If the finding, sentence or order was recorded or passed by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, the certificate shall be sent through the District Magistrate.

(2) The Court to which the High Court certifies its judgment or order shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the judgment or order of the High Court, and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

This section provides that in cases decided by the High Court under this Chapter, the High Court shall certify its judgment or order to the lower Court concerned and the lower Court shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the judgment of the High Court, and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance with the judgment or order of the High Court.

426. (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person, the Appellate Court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended and, also, if he is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

Suspension of sentence pending appeal
Release of appellant on bail.

(2) The power conferred by this section on an Appellate Court may be exercised also by the High Court in the case of any appeal by a convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto.

(3) When the appellant is ultimately sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, the time during which he is so released shall be excluded in computing the term for which he is so sentenced.

Scope of the section—This section empowers the High Court and the appellate Court to order the suspension of sentence pending an appeal and to release the appellant on bail if he is in confinement. When bail is granted by the High Court pending an appeal and the Magistrate receives reliable information thereof such as by a telegram sent by counsel's Counsel, the Magistrate is bound to act on it immediately though he had not received the High Court's order. In the particular case their Lordships of the High Court further remarked that they must lay down more stringently that all bail orders must be issued on the very day on which they are pronounced by the Judge presiding at the trial or order on record. 23 C 213 where 2 C.W.R. 453 is followed. When an appellate Court or a Court hearing a revision admits the appellant or applicant to bail or orders that a fine which is part of the sentence should not be paid up pending the disposal of the case, it thereby orders the suspension of the sentence on the appellant, 22 A.L.J. 1103; 25 Cr. L.J. 357=84 Ind. Cas. 712. A Sessions Judge has no authority to suspend the sentence in the absence of an appeal to him. 5 M.H.C.B. (Appx.) 1. It is his authority to suspend his own sentence to enable the convict to appeal, 4 M.H.C.B. (Appx.) 1, 12 W.R. (Cr.) 47. When a Sessions Judge so suspended the operation of a sentence passed by a second class Magistrate, it was held that his action was illegal and that the time during which the sentence was so illegally suspended could not be excluded under this section in computing the term of the sentence even though the result of such illegality had been that the accused had escaped a considerable portion of the sentence of rigorous imprisonment passed on them. The High Court in setting aside the illegal order of the Sessions Judge had no power to enhance the punishment unless it was shown that the original sentence was inadequate. Weir II, 526. Under this section a Sessions Judge as a Court of appeal has power to pass an order that the prisoner who had been convicted and sentenced by a Court of law by a subordinate Court should be treated as an under-trial prisoner for the disposal of the appeal but when an order for detention in the Reformatory for a sentence of imprisonment had been passed on an accused person within the meaning of this section, and the order of the Sessions Judge suspending the sentence under this section would not prevent the carrying out of the sentence of detention in the Reformatory as such detention order is not included in the meaning of L.P.C., and a distinction is made in Ss. 8(1), 9 and 30 of the Reformatory Act, 1911, order for detention and sentence, 16 Cr. L.J. 134=27 Ind. Cas. 19.

under S. 498, infra, to release a convicted person on bail whether an appeal has been preferred to him or not. When refusing bail the Sessions Judge may suspend the sentence of the appellant pending his appeal, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 57. Where an appellant is released on bail by the High Court pending an appeal thereto, the bond should be for the appearance of the appellant before the Magistrate and not for his appearance in the High Court to answer the charge. 1885 A.W. N. 44. The effect of an order by an appellate Court suspending the execution of a sentence pending disposal of an appeal is that the appellant is detained in jail and treated in all respects as an under trial prisoner, G.O. No. 1412 Jud. dated 19-10-1918, Rule 267, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. Whenever the appellate Court suspends a sentence of imprisonment under this section, it shall send a copy of its order to the superintendent or keeper of the jail in which the appellant is confined, Rule 61, Mad. Cr. Rules of Pr. The period of suspension will not be counted towards the term of imprisonment imposed on the appellant by the trial Court so that if the appeal dismissed, the appellant will have to undergo the full period of imprisonment irrespective of the period of the suspension of the sentence.

Sub-section (2)—The High Court also is empowered to suspend the sentence even though the appeal has been preferred by the convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto. Of course S. 498, infra, empowers the High Court in any case whether there be an appeal from conviction or not to direct that any person be released on bail. The power of the High Court to grant bail under this sub-section is undoubted, but it will only interfere with the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge in refusing bail, if that discretion was manifestly wrong or if, in fact, no real discretion has been exercised. As pointed out in 37 C. 412, although the High Court has unfettered powers to grant bail, yet in exercising these powers, the High Court ought to have regard to the limitations imposed on lower Courts in this connection in the case of persons actually convicted; the principle which will necessarily guide the Court in granting bail is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the applicants committed the offence in question, 27 Cr. L.J. 319—82 Ind. Cas. 703.

Staying execution of sentence of death pending appeal to Privy Council.—With regard to staying execution of the sentence of death, their Lordships of the Privy Council are unable to interfere. The Privy Council is not a Court of Criminal appeal. The tendering of advice to His Majesty as to the exercise of His Prerogative of Pardon is a matter for the Executive Government and is outside their Lordships' province. It is, of course, open to the convicted person's advisers to notify to the Government of India that an appeal to the Privy Council is pending. The Government of India will no doubt give due weight to the fact and consider the circumstances. But their Lordships do not think it necessary to express any opinion as to whether the sentence ought to be suspended, 42 C. 739 at 741.

427. When an appeal is presented under section 417, the High Court may issue a warrant directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal, or admit him to bail.

Arrest of accused in appeal from acquittal.

This section provides that the High Court may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused when an appeal against acquittal has been presented to it under S. 417, supra. It is generally undesirable that the prisoner's fate should be discussed while he remained at large more especially in capital cases where the Government should apply for an arrest of the accused under this section, 9 A. 523 at 529; 2 A. 336; 1 C. 281. The admission of an appeal under S. 417, supra, has the effect of revising the proceedings against the accused who has been acquitted and the arrest of such person pending the appeal could be ordered under this section, 2 A. 312 (F.B.). The accused when arrested and brought before the High Court or any Court subordinate to it may be committed to prison pending the disposal of the appeal or he may be released on bail. When the person so arrested is convicted by the High Court the sentence will run not from the date of arrest but only from the actual date of commitment to jail after conviction, 6 C. L. R. 312 at 337.

428. (1) In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter, the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reasons, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate.

(2) When the additional evidence is taken by the Court of Session or the Magistrate, it or he shall certify such evidence to the Appellate Court, and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal.

(3) Unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused or his pleader shall be present when the additional evidence is taken; but such evidence shall not be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors.

(4) The taking of evidence under this section shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XXV as if it were an inquiry.

Scope and Object of the section.—The object of the section is to prevent a guilty man's escape through some carelessness or ignorance of the Magistrate or the vindication of a wrongfully accused person's innocence where through carelessness or ignorance he has omitted to record something to elucidate the truth, 18 W.R. (Cr.) 31; 26 Cr. L.J. 1171=83 Ind. Cas. 593. This section gives the appellate Court a wide discretion. All that is necessary is that an appellate Court when directing the taking of further evidence should record its reasons. The intention of the Legislature is to empower the appellate Court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted and the appellate Court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct finding it would be justified in taking action under this section, 7 Lah. 148. Where a Sessions Judge failed to exercise his discretion by bringing on record certain statements of witnesses before the committing Magistrate as evidence and the appellate Court on appeal is of opinion that those statements are material for the disposal of the appeal, the appellate Court under this section may direct the Sessions Judge to bring upon the record those statements of witnesses after giving notice to the accused as required by sub-section (3) of this section, 27 Cr. L.J. 813=93 Ind. Cas. 477. The provisions of the section can properly be availed of in order to have legal evidence when the evidence on record has been found to be inadmissible. In such a case there is no question of surprise. The evidence found to be inadmissible has been let in without any objection by the accused and it cannot be said to be a case of the prosecution having ample opportunities to produce certain evidence at the original trial had failed to do so and sought to rectify the omission on appeal. Where the evidence was tendered but such evidence should not have been admitted by the Court, it is on very much the same footing as a confession inadmissible in evidence for want of the certificate, etc., the law specially allowing the rectification by enacting B. 533 (2) infra, 30 Bom. L.R. 648=29 Cr. L.J. 990=112 Ind. Cas. 110. The powers conferred by this section on the appellate Court are not intended to be exercised in cases in which the prosecution having had ample opportunities to produce evidence have done so and that entire evidence falls short of sustaining the charge, 36 M. 437—per Sundara Ayyar, J., see also 25 C.L.J. 473. The discretion to be exercised by the appellate Court is not an arbitrary discretion, as is shown by the provision "it shall record its reasons," but it should not be exercised especially against the accused when the prosecution falls on the evidence on record, 42 M. 885—per Sadasiva Ayyar, J. It would not be creditable to the administration of justice that a conviction of a charge, if otherwise sustainable, should be upset owing to a misconception on the part of the prosecution to the proper mode of proving a statutory requisite not affecting the merits, a misconception shared by the trial Court. The Appellate Court when it has the statutory power to prevent such miscarriage by directing fresh evidence to be taken it should act under this section—per Wallis, C.J., in 42 M. 885.

under S. 498, infra, to release a convicted person on bail whether an appeal has been preferred to him or not. When refusing bail the Sessions Judge may suspend the sentence of the appellant pending his appeal, 3 W.R. (Cr.) 57. Where an appellant is released on bail by the High Court pending an appeal thereto, the bond should be for the appearance of the appellant before the Magistrate and not for his appearance in the High Court to answer the charge. 1885 A.W.N. 44. 428. (1) In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter, the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reasons, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate.

Scope and Object of the section.—The object of the section is to prevent a guilty man's escape through some carelessness or ignorance of the Magistrate or the vindication of a wrongfully accused person's innocence where through carelessness or ignorance he has omitted to record something to elucidate the truth, 18 W.R. (Cr.) 31; 26 Cr. L.J. 1171=83 Ind. Cas. 595. This section gives the appellate Court a wide discretion. All that is necessary is that an appellate Court when directing the taking of further evidence should record its reasons. The intention of the Legislature is to empower the appellate Court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted and the appellate Court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct finding it would be justified in taking action under this section, 7 Lah. 148. Where a Sessions Judge failed to exercise his discretion by bringing on record certain statements of witnesses before the committing Magistrate as evidence and the appellate Court on appeal is of opinion that those statements are material for the disposal of the appeal, the appellate Court under this section may direct the Sessions Judge to bring upon the record those statements of witnesses after giving notice to the accused as required by sub-section (3) of this section, 27 Cr. L.J. 813=93 Ind. Cas. 477. The provisions of the section can properly be availed of in order to have legal evidence when the evidence on record has been found to be inadmissible. In such a case there is no question of surprise. The evidence found to be inadmissible has been let in without any objection by the accused and it cannot be said to be a case of the prosecution having ample opportunities to produce certain evidence at the original trial had failed to do so and sought to rectify the omission on appeal. Where the evidence was tendered but such evidence should not have been admitted by the Court, it is on very much the same footing as a confession inadmissible in evidence for want of the certificate, etc., the law specially allowing the rectification by enacting S. 533 (2) infra, 30 Bom. L.R. 648=29 Cr. L.J. 990=112 Ind. Cas. 110. The powers conferred by this section on the appellate Court are not intended to be exercised in cases in which the prosecution having had ample opportunities to produce evidence have done so and that entire evidence falls short of sustaining the charge, 36 M. 437—per Sundara Ayyar, J., see also 25 C L J. 473. The discretion to be exercised by the appellate Court is not an arbitrary discretion, as is shown by the provision "it shall record its reasons," but it should not be exercised especially against the accused when the prosecution fails on the evidence on record, 42 M. 885—per Sadasiva Ayyar, J. It would not be creditable to the administration of justice that a conviction of a charge, if otherwise sustainable, should be upset owing to a misconception on the part of the prosecution to the proper mode of proving a statutory requisite not affecting the merits, a misconception shared by the trial Court. The Appellate Court when it has the statutory power to prevent such miscarriage by directing fresh evidence to be taken it should act under this section—per Wallis, C.J., in 42 M. 885.

The necessity of recording additional evidence must be apparent from something on record already and cannot be derived from external information, 3 L.B.R. 115. This section does not empower the appellate Court to call for a fresh finding from the Subordinate Magistrate, 4 Cr. L. Rev. 272; 2 Cr. L. Rev. 347. The Appellate Court will not, except in very exceptional circumstances, direct that further inquiry should be made or that additional evidence should be taken, 25 C.L.J. 473; 5 A. 217 at 221. Where an appellate Court finds that the trial Court had committed an illegality in procedure by failing to comply with the imperative provisions of S. 256, supra, such a case will not fall within the provisions of this section. The case cannot be remanded for taking additional evidence when an illegality has been committed by the trial Court but it can only be done when the appellate Court thinks it desirable that further evidence in the case should be recorded. A direction therefore by the appellate Court under this section to allow the appellant to cross-examine the two prosecution witnesses and the Magistrate to record and certify the evidence to the appellate Court is bad in law, 53 B. 578. This section does not empower the appellate Court so to act in case where there is no evidence legally capable of sustaining the charge but contemplates a further inquiry by taking additional evidence to be directed by the appellate Court when the conviction by the lower Court has been based upon some evidence which might legally support it, but which, in the opinion of the appellate Court, is not quite satisfactory, 9 B.L.R. Appx 31 at 32; 22 M.L.J. 73 at 82=10 M.L.T. 506. This section does not empower an appellate Court to call for a fresh finding from the subordinate Court after taking further evidence and the appellate Court cannot act on such fresh finding, (1913) M.W.N. 778=16 Cr. L.J. 79=26 Ind. Cas. 671; 9 M.L.T. 436=12 Cr. L.J. 243=10 Ind. Cas. 230; 1 Pat. L.J. 99; 3 C.L.J. 323=3 Cr. L.J. 304. This section does not warrant an appellate Court sending a case to the police for investigation when the case has been originally taken cognizance of on a complaint to the Court, 1900 A.W.N. 130. This section has no application to proceedings under S. 476 B, infra, and additional evidence cannot be taken by the Court, 51 M. 603, following 33 M. 93.

In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter.—The power to take or call for further evidence given by this section is expressly limited to appeals under Chapter XXXI of the Code. This section allows additional evidence to be admitted in appeals against acquittals as well as in appeals against convictions although cases in which this power is exercised will naturally be rare, 26 M.L.J. 160. There is nothing in this section to preclude an appellate Court from endeavouring by this means to ascertain the value of statements made by a defence witness or to limit the application of this section to the reception of merely formal evidence, 53 M.L.J. 676=1928 M.W.N. 777.

The appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary.—This section requires that the appellate Court should consider additional evidence to be necessary. The word 'necessary' does not import that it should be possible to pronounce judgment without additional evidence. There is no restriction in the language of the section either as to the nature of the evidence or that it is to be taken for the prosecution only to be invoked when formal proof is necessary in the prosecution evidence and the power of the appellate Court is not necessarily restricted to order re-trial in such a case; 23 Cr. L.J. 401=77 Ind. Cas. 431. The language seems to indicate cases where there being already evidence on record, the Court considers it to be unsatisfactory or where the evidence on record leaves the Court in such a state of doubt that it considers it necessary to enable it to decide the case to have further evidence. The necessity must be determined on the facts of each case, 22 M.L.J. 73=10 M.L.T. 536; 18 Bom. L.R. 739. It is better to take action under this section when the appellate Court finds that certain witnesses, who ought to have been examined by the lower Court, have not been examined, 31 C. 710. Where an adjournment to procure attendance of witnesses is refused on the ground that the witnesses were men of straw, the High Court directed the evidence to be taken and certified, 19 M. 375; 6 C.L.J. 251. To prevent a miscarriage of justice, the appellate Court should take action under this section to supply a defect in formal proof, 42 M. 835. This section does not apply to orders passed under S. 125 supra, as they are neither appellate nor revisional, 20 Cr. L.J. 221=47 Ind. Cas. 731; 32 C. 919. Discovery of fresh evidence after filing an appeal will not be sufficient ground for adducing fresh evidence before the appellate Court, 9 M.L.T. 323, following 31 M. 114.

Shall record its reasons.—The power cannot be exercised arbitrarily; the appellate Court is bound to record its reasons and when it failed to do so the conviction had was set aside, 8 M.L.T. 418; 8 M.L.T. 428=(1910) M.W.N. 829=11 Cr. L.J. 734=8 Ind. Cas. 943. In 9 M.L.T. 406=10 Ind. Cas. 290 it was held that this was only an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, but the conviction was set aside on another illegality which the Magistrate had committed.

May either take such evidence itself or direct it to be taken.—The appellate Court when dealing with an appeal may direct the additional evidence to be taken by the lower Court or may itself record such evidence, 6 C.L.J. 231 at 252. But if an appellate Court finds an imperative provision, of law, e.g., the examination of the accused under S. 342, supra, has not been complied with, the proper procedure is to set aside the conviction and sentence and remand the case to the trial Court to comply with the provisions of law and deal with the case on the merits, 40 C.L.J. 319=26 Cr. L.J. 313=84 Ind. Cas. 437; 51 C. 933. An appellate Court should not refer to evidence which did not form part of the record of the proceedings before the trial Court, 8 M.L.T. 81=11 Cr. L.J. 221=6 Ind. Cas. 12. When on appeal from a conviction by a Deputy Magistrate, the Sessions Court got additional evidence taken and on a consideration of such evidence confirmed the conviction and dismissed the appeal, it was held that there was no further right of appeal, 27 C. 372. See also 6 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 64; 8 W.R. (Cr.) 59; 15 W.R. (Cr.) 33.

Sub-section (2)—The Court or Magistrate taking additional evidence is to merely certify such evidence to the appellate Court. The Court or Magistrate has no power to express any opinion on it or to record any finding or judgment which is the function of the appellate Court, 3 B.L.R. (Ap. Cr.) 62, but the Court or Magistrate is competent to act under S. 479, infra, if an offence against public justice as is described under S. 195, supra, is committed by a witness whose evidence is on record 6 B.L.R. 693 (F.B.)=15 W.R. (Cr.) 64.

Sub-section (3)—Unless the appellate Court otherwise directs, the presence of the accused or his pleader is necessary when additional evidence is recorded. In 24 M. 523 the High Court took additional evidence in the absence of the accused when hearing appeal from a conviction had by the Sessions Court. Additional evidence under this section shall not be taken in the presence of the Jurors or Assessors. This is the only case where a Court of Sessions is authorised to record evidence in the absence of the Jury or Assessors, 5 A. 136.

429. When the Judges composing the Court of Appeal are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before another Judge of the same Court, and such Judge, after such hearing (if any) as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

Procedure where Judges of Court of Appeal are equally divided.

Scope of the section.—Two points are worthy of note in connection with this section. first, that what is laid before another Judge is the case, and, secondly, that the judgment or order follows such opinion delivered by such Judge. When in a trial of two or more prisoners, with regard to one of whom, the Judges composing the Court of appeal are agreed in their opinions while as regards the other, the judges may be equally divided in opinion in such a contingency it is quite possible to maintain the view that, upon a reasonable interpretation of the term "case" what has to be laid before another Judge is the case of the prisoner as to whom the judges are equally divided in opinion. In a case where the Judges are equally divided in opinion upon the question of guilt of one accused person, though upon certain aspects of the case they may be agreed on their view, in such a contingency, what is laid before another Judge is not the point or points upon which the Judges are equally divided in opinion but the "case." This obviously means that, so far as particular accused is concerned, the whole case is laid before the third Judge, and it is his duty to consider all the points involved, before he delivers his opinion upon the case. The judgment or order follows such opinion which need not necessarily be the opinion of the majority of the three Judges; for instance at the original hearing of the appeal one Judge may consider the prisoner not guilty, another Judge may consider him guilty under one section of the Indian Penal Code and liable to be punished in a certain way; the third Judge may find him guilty under a different section and pass such sentence as he thinks fit. It is this last opinion which prevails subject to the provisions of S. 377, supra in the case of confirmation of sentence of death, 38 C. 202 at 208-9; see also 27 M. 271. If in any case of murder under S. 302, I.P.C., one finds two Judges are in disagreement over the question of sentence, one favouring the death penalty the other transportation for life, that in itself is a sufficient ground for holding that death penalty should not be inflicted. This is not an inflexible rule or that the third Judge to whom the matter is referred on a difference of opinion on the question of sentence, is not required to go into the case himself, whether the case before him is or is not a fit one for the infliction of the death penalty, 33 C.W.N. 1226 at 1234. See S. 378 supra, and the notes thereunder at p. 696-697.

Equally divided in opinion.—The Judges may be equally divided in their opinions on a point of law or on the merits of the case. S. 36 of the Letters Patent which lays down that the opinion of the senior Judge will prevail has no application to a case falling under this section. Difference of opinion between Judges hearing a reference under section 307 supra, will be governed by this section, 15 B. 432 at 475; 27 C. 501 at 503 and 592 at 910 S. 36 of the Letters Patent applies to a case under S. 107, Government of India Act, 21 Cr. L.J. 25=53 Ind. Cas. 169; see also 47 C. 438; 39 M. 750 (F.B.).

The case shall be laid before another Judge.—An amendment was proposed to have the case heard before the two Judges who differed, with another Judge, constituting a Bench of three Judges, but it was not accepted. The whole case is to be considered by a third Judge on all the points involved and it will be according to the opinion of such Judge the judgment will follow, 38 C. 202; 15 C.W.N. 16; 21 Cr. L.J. 547-56 Ind. Cas. 831. See also 30 Cr. L.J. 933=118 Ind. Cas. 577. But the third Judge should not differ on point of agreement between the two differing Judges, the third Judge before whom the case is to be laid is not bound to hear the pleaders; the wording of the section is "such hearing if any, as he thinks fit"; but as a matter of practice full arguments are heard especially in Referred Trials. Under this section the third Judge before whom the case is laid is required to deliver his opinion and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion. That does not enable the Judge to refer the point involved in the case to a Full Bench. References to the Full Bench are made under the appellate side rules by a Division Bench and the third Judge sitting alone cannot be said to be a Division Bench, 29 C.W.N. 475=41 C.L.J. 237=26 Cr. L.J. 915=85 Ind. Cas. 979. The third Judge may, if he thinks fit, place the matter before the Chief Justice with a request to refer the case to a Full Bench. The third Judge to whom a case is referred should not differ on a point in which both the referring Judges are agreed unless there are very strong grounds for doing so, 22 C.W.N. 743=28 C.L.J. 32=19 Cr. L.J. 753=46 Ind. Cas. 593.

430. Judgments and orders passed by an

Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in section 417 and Chapter XXXII.

A judgment can be said to be final when it cannot be set aside or interfered with by any Court or authority on appeal or otherwise, 12 C. 538; S. 417 deals with appeals against acquittal by Government and Chapter XXXII deals with reference and revision. Where a Sessions Judge wrongly dismissed an appeal as barred by limitation, but on discovering his error admitted the appeal and acquitted the accused it was held the acquittal was without jurisdiction, the first order dismissing the appeal being final and not open to review, 19 B.

732; 1887 P.R. (Cr.) 24. The Judgment of a Division Bench of the High Court confirming the sentence is final, 14 C. 42 (F.B.). A case which has been dismissed for default of appearance is final and cannot be re-opened, 10 C.L.J. 80; 44 A. 759; 4 B. 101, but a Court is not entitled to dismiss an appeal for default of appearance, 46 M. 482; 50 C. 972; 50 B. 673; 13 A. 171; 27 C.W.N. 947. The power of the High Court to report any particular case to the Local Government when the High Court cannot interfere in appeal or revision, remains, other remedies being barred by statute, 17 Cr. L.J. 231=31 Ind. Cas. 617.

431. Every appeal under section 417 shall finally abate on the death of the accused, and every other appeal under this Chapter (except an appeal from a sentence of fine) shall finally abate on the death of the appellant.

Abatement of appeals.

Scope and Object of the section.—The object of the section is obviously to prevent the estate of the accused being damaged, although his death had terminated, the personal interest of the convict, 9 Cr. L.J. 103=1903 P.R. (Cr.) 24. This section applies only to appeals and appeals by Government against acquittal under S. 417, supra, and they finally abate on the death of the accused. An appeal by a convicted person abates on his death and his legal representatives cannot continue the appeal, 2 B. 564. The exception, is an appeal from a sentence of fine where the estate of the deceased is affected and there is no abatement in such a case.

Shall finally abate on death of accused—In a case where two persons are convicted by a Court of Session for breach of trust and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and a fine of rupees one thousand and both appealed to the High Court, but during the pendency of the appeal one of the appellants died, the High Court reversed the conviction of the other appellants, and no order was passed in the case of the dead appellant. On an application by a nephew of the deceased appellant, for a reversal of his conviction, it was held, that the appeal had abated on the death of the appellant and the remedy of his representative was to apply to the Government, 19 B. 714; Ratanlal 707.

Except in appeals from a sentence of fine.—These words were introduced in the Code of 1898 to meet the decision in, 19 B. 714 which held that an appeal from a sentence of fine abates on the death of the appellant. In the case of a sentence of fine the appeal does not abate by reason of the death of the appellant because it is a matter which affects his estate. The object of this provision is obviously to prevent the estate of the deceased being damaged, see S. 70, I.P.O. The principle of this section applies to revisions also, but such application for revision will not abate on the death of the petitioner in cases of sentence of fine, 1919 P.R. (Cr.) 8; 1893 P.R. (Cr.) 6; the principle was also applied to proceedings under S. 250, supra, and legal representative of the deceased prisoner was allowed to proceed, 1908 P.R. (Cr.) 24=9 Cr. L.J. 103.

CHAPTER XXXII.

OF REFERENCE AND REVISION.

Scope and Object of the Chapter.—The object of this chapter appears to confer upon superior Courts in all case where no appeal is provided a kind of supervisory jurisdiction without the intervention necessarily of any interested party for the purpose of correcting any miscarriage of justice arising from irregularities in procedure, misconstruction of law propriety of sentences or orders passed by lower Courts. The Court acting under this chapter of "Reference and Revision" is not bound to interfere. It has got a wide discretion. The expressions used are "if he thinks fit", in its discretion", "may; " all of which denote that the Court is given a wide discretion in the matter which must be exercised with great circumspection in each individual case.

432. A Presidency Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, refer for the opinion of the High Court any question of law which arises in the hearing of any case pending before him, or may give judgment in any such case subject to the decision of the High Court on such reference and, pending such decision, may either commit the accused to jail, or release him on bail to appear for judgment when called upon.

Reference by Presidency Magistrate to High Court

Scope of the section.—The power of reference conferred upon the Presidency Magistrate by this section is confined to questions of law which the Magistrate requires to decide in order to perform his duty in disposing of the case before him, and that the Magistrate ought not to refer to the High Court questions of law unless they are matters upon which he has a duty to make up his mind, and S. 193, infra, provides that when a question has been so referred the High Court shall pass such order thereon as it thinks fit and shall cause a copy of such orders to be sent to the Magistrate who shall dispose of the case in conformity with such order. 50 C.L.J. 408 (F.B.) at pp 458 and 459.

Any Presidency Magistrate—This section deals with reference by Presidency Magistrates to the High Court, 28 Cr. L.J. 978=105 Ind. Cas. 802. Other Magistrates are not competent to refer questions of law which may arise before them, for decision, to the High Court

May refer any question of Law.—A Reference can be made for the opinion of the High Court only on any question of law which arises in the hearing of the case pending before the Magistrate. It is confined to questions of law which the Magistrate requires to decide in order to perform his duty in disposing of the case before him and no reference ought to be made unless they are matters upon which the Magistrate has a duty to make up his mind, 50 C.L.J. 408 (F.B.) at p 458. He cannot make a reference under this section 'before the hearing of the case'. 1 Bom. L.R. 521, and except in a case where there is a valid reference under this section, the High Court cannot and will not express an opinion upon any question unless it is brought before it by way of revision, 9 Cr. L.J. 243. A Reference must be on a question of law only and the High Court will only deal with particular point or points of law stated for its opinion but not with the facts of the case nor with any objection as to the validity of the proceedings referred, 33 C. 193; Ratanlal 539 and 858 and the point of law must arise at the hearing of the particular case and not before such hearing, 1 Bom. L.R. 521. On a reference by a Presidency Magistrate under this section it is for the prosecution to begin, 19 C. 330. The order of the High Court on a Reference under this section is conclusive both as to the merits of the case and to the amount of punishment, 1890 A.W.N. 225.

433. (1) When a question has been so referred, the High Court shall pass such order thereon as it thinks fit, and shall cause a copy of such order to be sent to the Magistrate by whom the reference was made, who shall dispose of the case conformably to the said order.

Disposal of case according to decision of High Court

Direction as to costs.

(2) The High Court may direct by whom the costs of such reference shall be paid.

The High Court shall pass such order thereon as it thinks fit.—It is to be observed that while under S. 432, supra, the power of the Magistrate is to refer a question of law arising in the hearing of a case pending before him, the power of the High Court under this section is to pass such orders thereon as it thinks fit, 80 C.L.J. 408 (F.B.) at 455.

This section provides for an order directing costs to be paid by a party, not usually made in criminal cases. In criminal cases the right to award costs rests in every case on statute, and here is an instance where the statute specially provides for costs. For other instances, see the provisions contained in Ss. 148 (3), 344, 488 (7), & 526 infra. The word used is "may" and the Court has a discretion in the matter of awarding costs.

The High Court has no power to review an order passed by itself on a Reference under this section, Ratanlal 638 and where the Magistrate does not dispose of the case conformably to the order of the High Court, the accused may bring up the matter on appeal against the decision of the Magistrate under S. 411, supra, Ratanlal 225.

434. (1) When any person has, in a trial before a Judge of a Power to reserve questions arising in original jurisdiction of High Court.

High Court consisting of more Judges than one and acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, been convicted of an offence, the Judge, if he thinks fit, may reserve and refer for the decision of a Court consisting of two or more Judges of such Court any question of law which has arisen in the course of the trial of such person, and the determination of which would affect the event of the trial.

(2) If the Judge reserves any such question, the person convicted shall, pending the decision thereon, be remanded to jail, or, if the Judge thinks fit, be admitted to bail; and the High Court shall have power to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such question, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of original jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment or order as the High Court thinks fit.

Procedure when question reserved.

Scope of the section.—It is discretionary with a Judge to refer for decision any question of law. He is not bound to refer; the words 'if he thinks fit, may reserve and refer,' make this clear. The Judge cannot postpone conviction and sentence. The High Court under sub-section (2) is empowered to review the case and alter the sentence passed and to pass such judgment or order as it thinks fit such as convicting or acquitting the accused or ordering a re-trial.

May reserve any question.—This section refers only to a trial before a Judge of the High Court acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction. It is in the discretion of the Judge whether or not he will reserve a point of law for the opinion of the High Court consisting of two or more Judges, 10 B H C.R. 75; 4 Ran. 488, but he is at liberty to refuse any application to him to reserve any point, 22 B. 112. The powers of the Judge cannot in any way be controlled by a Bench or a Full Bench of the Court and no appeal or revision lies against the order of the Judge, and except on a reference under this section the proceedings of the Judge cannot be revised, see 14 C. 42 (F.B.). A point of law cannot be referred under this section to a Full Bench before the accused is called upon to plead even if the Presiding Judge wished it, 28 C 211 at 214; 5 C.W.N. 169. When on an application by accused's Pleader, a question of law is reserved for the decision of the Court the Counsel for the prosecution is to begin, 8 B. 200.

High Court shall have power to review.—The High Court under this section is empowered to review the whole case and dispose of the case finally. It can determine whether the admission of rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial, 1 C. 207; 2 B. 61. The High Court in 17 C. 642 went into the merits of the case and quashed the conviction, see also 4 C.W.N. 433; 32 B. 111. Mere appreciation of evidence is not one of law coming under this section, 5 Bom. L.R. 686. The power which the High Court exercises under this section is that of review as expressly stated in this section and the Court is a Court of Reference and Revision and is treated as such, as appears from the heading of Chapter XXXII, of the Code, 8 B. 200 at 211. The Legislature has not conferred on the High Court in express words the power of reviewing its judgment in all criminal cases as it has done in civil cases, 46 M. 382. The provisions of S. 369, supra, so far as they affect a High Court apply merely to questions of law arising in its original criminal jurisdiction and which are reserved and are subsequently disposed of under the provisions of S. 434 and the corresponding provisions of the Letters Patent, 7 A. 672 at 674. See 10 C.L.J. 13; 25 M. 61. See also the new amendment of S. 369, supra, and 46 M. 382 at 404.

And thereupon to alter the sentence.—The word "thereupon" has been construed to mean that the determination of the point or points of law reserved must be in favour of the prisoner before the Court can interfere with the conviction and sentence. It has been definitely held that if it be found that the opinion of the trial Judge on the point or points reserved cannot be supported, it is not open to the High Court to direct a retrial. There is a large mass of authority in support of the view that the High Court will not substitute its own finding for the verdict of the Jury and that it might consider whether the evidence or matter improperly admitted was of such a nature that it possibly may have considerably influenced the minds of the Jury and whether it was reasonably certain, that the Jury would, not might, have acted on the 'unobjectionable evidence if the wrongly admitted evidence or matter had not also been presented to them. Further, it has been held that S. 337, infra, has no application to such a case, 50 C.L.J. 105, (F.B.) at 124, following 43 C. 477 and not following 53 C. 350.

435. (1) The High Court or any Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, or any Sub-divisional Magistrate empowered by the local Government in this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding, before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court, and may, when calling for such record, direct that the execution of any sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record.

Explanation.—All Magistrates whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this sub-section and of section 437.

(2) If any Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under sub-section (1) considers that any such finding, sentence or order is illegal or improper or that any such proceedings are irregular, he shall forward the record, with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit to the District Magistrate.

(3) [Omitted by Act, XVIII of 1923, S. 116.]

(4) If an application under this section has been made either to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, no further application shall be entertained by the other of them.

Extent of Amendment.—Power is now expressly given in sub-section (1) to superior Courts when sending for records in any case to suspend the execution of sentence and also to release the accused on bail if he is in confinement, pending revision, and the new explanation added makes it clear that all Magistrates whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction shall be inferior to the Sessions Judge. This removes the doubt which existed before whether a District Magistrate when acting as an appellate Court was subordinate to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this section, and is in accordance with the view in 3 A. 23. Sub-section (3) has now been omitted and orders under Ss. 143 and 144, supra, and proceedings under Chapter XII and S. 176, supra, like other orders passed under the Code are made revivable by the High Court. There is no longer any necessity to invoke the aid of the High Court under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, so far as those orders are concerned. The decisions in 3 D. 742 and Ratanlal 812, which hold that the verdict at the request is not subject to revision by the High Court are no longer law. See in this connection, 51 B 330; 31 Bom. L.R. 1050=29 Cr. L.J. 1063=112 Ind. Cas. 567. See also notes at p. 317.

Scope and Object of the section.—The language of this section is very general and gives power to superior Courts to send for the records of any case from inferior Courts for the purpose of satisfying themselves of the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order and as to the regularity of any proceeding in such subordinate Courts. It states the grounds and provides for the machinery for the exercise of the power which Ss. 436, and 439, infra, confer, and this power may be exercised at all times and may be put in force in matters not merely coming before the Judge in Court, but also on matters coming to his knowledge, on reliable information. Weir II, 538. The object of the Legislature in enacting this section was to secure the setting right of a patent error or defect. In the absence of a well-founded suspicion or error it is inexpedient to scrutinise order of discharge or other orders, which upon the face of them bear token of careful consideration, and appear to be good and lawful. This section does not give the High Court a roving commission either in the direction of stamping with approval the proceedings of a lower Court or in the direction of questioning about and looking to see if possibly, under a fair record, there was some trace of possible error, 1899 A.W.N. 135. This section deals with the grounds upon which revisional jurisdiction may ordinarily be exercised. It states expressly that every finding, sentence or order is liable to review, not only on the ground of illegality or irregularity but also on the ground of incorrectness, i.e., on the ground of its being wrong on the merits. S. 439, infra, is not to be read as independent of this section. This section states the grounds and provides the machinery for the exercise of the powers which, Ss. 436 to 439, infra, confer on the revision Courts, 19 Cr. L.J. 217=22 Ind. Cas. 1001. This section does not deal merely with the finding, sentence or order, but with proceedings generally and the power of the High Court extends to calling for and examining the record of any proceeding for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the regularity of such proceedings, 47 M. 722. The High Court will not ordinarily interfere in proceedings before a Magistrate by directing him to admit certain document in evidence when he refused to receive them as evidence. The proper remedy is for the party to get an order for further enquiry or a retrial from the proper Court after the termination of the proceedings, 1 Cr. L. Rev. 201. The power of superintendence in which the High Court possesses under S. 107 of the Government of India Act is not a legal fiction and it is a term having a legal force and significance. It is the power by which the English Courts interfere by prohibition and mandamus. It is confined to cases in which the Court has acted without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction vested in it by law. The High Court will not interfere merely because there has been an irregularity in the proceedings but the irregularity must have been so serious that one of the parties suffered prejudice, i.e., disability to lay before the Court his version of the facts of the case and the law to be applied. The High Court will not interfere with any decision arrived at after a fair trial, however erroneous in law or fact the decision may appear to be, 1 Pat L.J. 335=17 Cr. L.J. 369=33 Ind. Cas. 801. The finding of the inferior Court should be accepted unless there is any error of law or procedure vitiating the finding or unless there are any special circumstances apparent on the record to show that in arriving at its conclusion of fact the lower Court has misappreciated evidence, 9 Bom. L.R. 1385. Where there is a misreading of the documentary evidence and fundamental errors in principle which vitiate

the conduct and disposal of the case, the case comes within the purview of this section, 28 B. 479. The mere fact that a criminal case was pending for a very long time, such delay not being due to the complainant, is no ground for quashing the proceedings by the High Court. By doing so it would amount to a denial of justice to the complainant which would be a scandal, 28 Cr. L.J. 164=99 Ind. Cas. 596. Under this section the High Court is given very extensive powers to call for and examine proceedings of inferior criminal Courts, if necessity for it is brought to its notice in any manner. But before doing so it would have to be satisfied that there are a priori grounds for apprehending a miscarriage of justice, 20 A.L.J. 909. The decision in 3 C. 742 and Ratanlal 832 which held that the verdict of a Jury at an inquest held is not subject to revision is no longer law as those proceedings at an inquest are proceedings now within this section. See notes at p. 317. The Madras High Court by its circular order, dated 17-12-1884, has called special attention of the Sessions Judges and District Magistrates to the following points in exercising powers of revision under this section :—(1) The rash issue of process, (2) The dealing with disputed claims of right under colour of a charge of criminal trespass or mischief and conviction is had without a finding of a criminal intent, (3) Indiscreet and excessive fines, (4) Light punishments in cases requiring severe punishments which ought to have been sent up to superior Courts, (5) The imposition of heavy fines in addition to imprisonment to extend the term of imprisonment beyond the jurisdiction of Magistrates, (6) Demanding excessive bail or excessive security, (7) Unnecessary delay in the trial of cases. The provisions are not exhaustive of the powers of the High Court, e.g., power to issue a writ of certiorari possessed by the supreme Court cannot be said to have been taken away, 43 M. 146 (P.C.) ; 39 M. 1164 (F.B.).

High Court, Sessions Judge or District Magistrate.—The High Court, Sessions Judges and District Magistrates have co-ordinate powers under this section, but the powers of Sessions Judges and District Magistrates are only limited powers. The controlling power of revision vested in the High Court in criminal cases is a discretionary power and it must be exercised having regard to all the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being paid to the said circumstances which vary greatly, 28 B. 533. Except when exercising powers under Ss. 436 and 437, infra, they can only report for the orders of the High Court under 488, infra. The High Court does not generally entertain an application for revision in cases where the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate having concurrent jurisdiction has not been moved first, 36 C. 643 ; 14 C. 887 ; 28 A. 268 ; 30 A. 116 ; 3 Pat. L.J. 302 ; 19 Cr. L.J. 126 ; 18 L.W. 691, following 43 A. 497 and 36 C. 648 ; 28 Cr. L.J. 544=102 Ind. Cas. 352. But where such concurrent jurisdiction is not possessed, no such rule exists, 1887 A.W.N. 165 ; 1888 A.W.N. 132 ; 1890 A.W.N. 161 ; 14 C. 887. See also 27 Cr. L.J. 71=91 Ind. Cas. 247 where 36 C. 643 ; 48 C. 534 and 3 Pat. L.J. 302 ; 19 Cr. L.J. 589=43 Ind. Cas. 397 are followed. Application for revision under this section can be entertained by the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge who have concurrent jurisdiction in the matter and the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, if he thinks fit, report for the orders of the High Court, the result of such examination and action can be taken under S. 439, infra, by the High Court. Where neither the District Magistrate nor Sessions Judge is moved, in the first instance the High Court will decline to entertain an application for revision, 29 Cr. L.J. 618=109 Ind. Cas. 810. It has been the settled practice of the Allahabad High Court to refuse to hear an application for revision even after an ex parte admission of the application, when the applicant has not first applied to the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge for revision. Where a settled practice has been observed for a number of years, it is not advisable to vary it ; though there may not be any rule of =43 Ind. Cas. 414. But the rule is not inflexible. See 2 L.W. 1126 ; 28 Cr. L.J. 544=102 Ind. Cas. 352 ; 28 Cr. L.J. 818=104 Ind. Cas. 255.

Sub-divisional Magistrates empowered.—All Sub-divisional Magistrates in Madras and the Punjab are empowered to act under this section. But sub-section (2) limits their power to reporting the case to the District Magistrate for orders, 7 M. 560.

May call for and examine records of any proceedings.—Records may be called for of any proceeding under this section. Proceedings under S. 107, supra, are proceedings within this section, and so High Court can suo motu call for records in such proceedings and revise an illegal order passed by a Magistrate, 29 Cr. L.J. 842=111 Ind. Cas. 391 and that too at any stage of the case and the proceedings may be revised by the High Court to prevent manifest and patent injustice, 19 C. 52; 22 C. 131; 25 C. 233; 26 C. 786; 33 C. 68, and even after a prisoner had served out his whole sentence, 7 A. 135. But there is no provision in the Code enabling a Judge to stop a trial already commenced and to refer to the High Court any questions of law arising on the merits of that case, Ratanlal 245. Revisional powers of superior Courts cannot be regarded as in any way impliedly restricting the jurisdiction conferred on Magistrates to inquire into offences, 29 M. 126 (F.B.). The High Court can interfere when it finds that the Court below has abused its discretion or failed to exercise a sound judicial discretion, 2 C. 110. The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere at any stage of the criminal proceedings if it considers that such interference is necessary in the interests of justice. No hard and fast rule can be laid down since it is impossible as well as undesirable to do so, 39 M. 561 at 564; 47 M. 722; 22 C. 131; 25 C. 233; 25 C. 786 10 C.W.N. 822; 20 B. 543; 1892 A.W.N. 102; 14 A.L.J. 851; 16 A.L.J. 458; 21 Cr. L.J. 379 =55 Ind. Cas. 859; 39 C.L.J. 236=25 Cr. L.J. 1233=82 Ind. Cas. 266; 24 Cr. L.J. 591=73 Ind. Cas. 335. It is only in very exceptional instances that the High Court will interfere in revision with the action of a subordinate Court in respect of any pending case especially when such case has reached the stage of a charge being framed and only the defence of the accused remains to be heard, 28 C. 786, followed in 28 Cr. L.J. 644=103 Ind. Cas. 100. It is a very sound general principle that parties should not be encouraged to resort to criminal Courts in cases in which the point at issue between them is one which can more appropriately be decided by a civil Court and the tendency on the part of litigants to do so should be checked by criminal Courts, which should be on their guard against lending their aid to such procedure. When the question between the parties was whether a decree against the complainant had been satisfied or not, by the transfer to the decree-holder of certain lands, the executing Court was the proper place for this matter to be decided, and a complaint of cheating ought not to be entertained when execution proceedings are pending before the civil Court and the order for the issue of warrant of arrest against the decree-holder was quashed by the High Court, 26 Cr. L.J. 287=84 Ind. Cas. 351 where 12 Cr. L.J. 50 =8 Ind. Cas. 1161 is followed. Where the facts do not in any view constitute an offence the continuance of the trial is an abuse of process and it is the duty of the High Court to interfere 52 C. 198, following 22 C. 131. An order under S. 88, supra, refusing to release certain property from attachment is a proceeding within the meaning of this and S. 499, infra, and is subject to revision by the High Court, 25 Cr. L.J. 82=76 Ind. Cas. 18. The High Court has interfered on facts in 28 B. 533, 8 Bom. L.R. 851; 9 Bom. L.R. 706, 12 B. 377; 15 C. 608; 22 C. 998; 32 C. 180; 18 M. L.J. 57; 14 M. L.T. 200. Where a Sessions Judge suo motu called for records of an inferior Court and returned the same without interference he is not precluded subsequently from entertaining an application by a party to re-open the case and he cannot reject it for the reason that he had declined to interfere on his own motion, 16 Cr. L.J. 711=30 Ind. Cas. 999.

Before any Inferior Criminal Court.—"Inferior" means statutorily incompetent to hold or exercise equal powers. There may be inferiority without subordination but there cannot be subordination without inferiority, as subordination means inferior in rank, 9 B. 100 at 103. The word "Inferior" in the section includes the word "subordinate" in S. 497, infra, 8 M. 18 (F.B.). The epithet "Inferior" seems to have been simply used to avoid the use of subordinate on account of the special limitations of the latter word which would prevent Courts of Session from looking into certain cases beyond the line of subordination which yet may be properly examined for the purpose of an order under the following sections of the Code, 9 B. 100 at 103. Inferior criminal Court must mean inferior so far as regards the particular matter in respect of which the superior Court is asked to exercise its revisional jurisdiction, 10 C. 268 at 271. If there is no inferiority then there is no power of revision. A first-class Magistrate is inferior to the District Magistrate and to the Sessions Judge, 6 M.L.J. 157; 8 M. 18 (F.B.); 12 C. 473 (F.B.); 7 A. 833 (F.B.). But the expression "inferior criminal Court" does not include a Civil or Revenue Court, 40 C. 777 (F.B.), followed in 28 Cr. L.J. 16=99 Ind. Cas. 48; 26 A. 249 (F.B.); see also 14 Bom. L.R. 970=13 Cr. L.J. 843=17 Ind. Cas. 717, where it was held that a District Registrar was not an inferior criminal Court. It is only with regard to proceedings of inferior criminal Courts that the High Court has jurisdiction under this section. If it is not so inferior, the High Court has no jurisdiction. For example the Secretary to the Government of Bengal when issuing a warrant under the Goondas Act (Beng. Act I of 1923) is not an inferior Criminal Court within the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, 51 C. 880 at 488, followed 53 C. 962. See also 25 A.L.J. 217; 15 Cr. L.J. 217=22 Ind. Cas. 1001. When a Magistrate hears an appeal under the provisions of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, 8, 86, he is merely an appellate authority having jurisdiction given by the Act to deal with the question of civil liability, and is therefore not an inferior criminal Court subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under this section and therefore the High Court has no power to revise the order of the Magistrate, 27 Cr. L.J. 1127=97 Ind. Cas. 647 where 9 Bom. L.R. 1347=6 Cr. L.J. 425 is followed. The High Court when acting under this section can send for only the record of an inferior criminal Court but not the record of a civil or revenue Court under this section and has no authority to interfere in revision with orders passed by such Courts. The Code classifies criminal Courts in S. 6 supra, and a civil or revenue Court cannot possibly come within this classification, 15 Cr. L.J. 217=22 Ind. Cas. 1001, followed in 23 Cr. L.J. 16=99 Ind. Cas. 48.

Situate within local limits of its or his jurisdiction.—The word "situate" means fixed or located. When referred to the Court it must be taken to mean the place where the Court ordinarily sits, 30 M. 136 at 137. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot have revisional jurisdiction outside the limits of his division or district.

For the purpose of satisfying itself.—This section confers on certain superior judicial officers power to send for records of subordinate Court for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to the correctness, legality or propriety of their proceedings. But this section confers no power to correct the errors etc., which power is expressly given by the succeeding section of the Code. The power herein given is to point out the errors, etc., to subordinate Courts for their future guidance. In exercising the power under the section the judicial officers specified herein are not entitled to take further evidence themselves, 3 Bom. L.R. 677.

Correctness, Legality or Propriety of any finding, Sentence or Order.—Correctness does not mean that the superior Court may inquire whether the finding of the lower Court was acceptable to it on a balance of the evidence recorded in the trial Court. The correctness of the finding, sentence or order also implies a legal defence such as the finding being based on an entire want of evidence, or being incorrect in the sense that the witnesses may have said, for instance that no theft was committed, and the Court may have recorded a finding that theft was committed. Legality and propriety will both include questions of law as to whether a finding, sentence or order was legal or proper having regard to the evidence, 27 A.L.J. 775 at 776=30 Cr. L.J. 736 (2), 117 Ind. Cas. 336 (2). This section applies not only when the order is incorrect or illegal but also when it is improper as violating the principles of natural justice, 38 M. 1091. The High Court can call for the records to satisfy itself of the correctness and propriety of proceedings of the Magistrates. The controlling power of revision of the High Court is a discretionary power which should be fairly exercised according to exigencies of each case. The infliction of an inadequate punishment is undoubtedly an impropriety which the jurisdiction in revision is intended to remedy, 16 B. 580 at 583. No restriction is placed by this section upon the grounds on which the Sessions Judge may order further inquiry. If misappreciation of evidence has led to the passing of an incorrect or improper order of discharge such an order can undoubtedly be revised under this section, 32 M. 216 where 14 M. 334 was followed. If the circumstances of the case and the evidence are such that different Courts might take opposite views and a view of the facts taken by the trial Court is questionable, is not a sufficient ground for ordering a further inquiry, 49 A. 879; 28 Cr. L.J. 342=100 Ind. Cas. 822. Weir II, 253. The High Court can interfere on facts to prevent miscarriage of justice and to correct manifest errors, 17 C.W.N. 379; 12 Ind. Cas. 998; 32 C. 180; 15 C. 608 (F.B.); 14 M.L.T. 200; 18 M.L.J. 57; 21 B. 533. The High Court's power can be exercised not only when inferior Courts act without jurisdiction, but also when they commit illegality or material irregularity, 24 C.W.N. 97=21 Cr. L.J. 25=54 Ind. Cas. 169. A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a re-trial by revising the order of a trial Court, 28 Punj. L.R. 166. The High Court will not entertain a revision for setting aside an order of discharge unless the lower Courts are first moved in revision; 14 C. 897; 36 C. 643; 28 A. 268; 43 A. 497; 18 L. W. 651; 14 B. 331 Ratanlal 449, but this rule is not inflexible 2 L.W. 1126; 28 Cr. L.J. 544=102 Ind. Cas. 352; 23 Cr. L.J. 815=104 Ind. Cas. 253. See notes at page 788.

Regularity of any proceeding of such inferior Court.—These words are very general and wide and empowers the calling of records for revision. The power to call for records is no longer restricted to judicial proceedings, Weir II, 538. The words are wide enough to empower the High Court to revise an order made by a Magistrate under S. 517, infra. The High Court has also power to revise orders under S. 514, or orders by District Magistrates under S. 515, infra, and may also reduce the forfeiture under S. 517, infra. Orders under Ss. 143, 144 and proceedings under Chapter XII and S. 176, are now made revisable, Sessions Judges and District Magistrates may now call for records under S. 145, supra, and also proceedings under S. 176, supra, which relate to inquiries by Magistrates as to cause of death. This section does not apply to proceedings under S. 195, supra, as that section is self-contained, 41 C. 816. The High Court cannot interfere by a writ of certiorari with the ministerial acts of all inferior tribunals under this section, 39 M. 1165 (F.B.).

May direct suspension of sentence and release on bail.—Power to suspend sentence and to release accused on bail pending revision are now expressly provided for.

Explanation to sub-section (1).—This explanation newly added makes a District Magistrate exercising original or appellate jurisdiction inferior to the Sessions Judge who has therefore jurisdiction to call for the records and make a reference to the High Court 23 A.L.J. 834; 28 Cr. L.J. 1282=89 Ind. Cas. 145.

Sub-section (2).—A Sub-divisional Magistrate specially empowered, if he considers that the proceedings are irregular and the course open to him is to forward the records with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit, to the District Magistrate, who alone can act under Ss. 436, 437 or 438, infra. The object of the sub section is to avoid a conflict of orders of District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, and the words "further application" in this sub-section mean any other application in respect of the order in question made by the inferior Criminal Court, 1 Cr. L. Rev. 359; the principle underlying this is that there should be no judicial action by any inferior Court by way of criticism of its superior Court, 45 A. 831.

Sub-section (3), has been repealed now and thereby extending the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court with regard to orders under S. 144, Chapter XII and S. 176, supra. For the effect of the repeal of this sub-section extending the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court see the elaborate judgment in Cr. R. Case No. 273 of 1929 (M.H.C.) by the Chief Justice and Cornish, J., See notes at pages 215 and 216 under S. 144, supra.

Sub-section (4)—This sub-section applies to all cases in which the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge has taken or refused to take action, under this section or S. 436 or S. 437 or S. 438 infra, the object of this section being as stated by the Madras High Court the avoidance of a conflict between the order of a District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge and "further application" means any other application in respect of the order in question of the inferior Court, 14 Cr. L.J. 134=18 Ind. Cas. 885. The Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate have co-ordinate jurisdiction. If an application is made to either of them no further application shall be entertained by the other of them and in practice an express statement is required to be made in the application itself to the effect that no similar application has been presented to the other of them. After a Sessions Judge has refused to take action it is not competent to a District Magistrate to entertain an application under this section, 26 M. 477; 21 Cr. L.J. 91=54 Ind. Cas. 491. Once a Sessions Judge has entertained an application a District Magistrate is prevented from dealing with the same matter suo motu. In such a case the District Magistrate's action will not invalidate any order passed by the Sessions Judge. To hold that the District Magistrate's action will bar the Sessions Judge from adjudicating an application which he had already entertained would be to make the law nugatory, 17 Cr. L.J. 497=36 Ind. Cas. 465, distinguishing 26 M. 477. Where a Sessions Judge directed the committal to the Court of Session of an accused who was discharged by an inferior Magistrate when the District Magistrate during the pendency of the inquiry before the inferior Magistrate had refused to do so, it was held that the Sessions Judge's order was legal and no question of exercising co-ordinate jurisdiction arose in the case, 43 M. 330. But where a District Magistrate sent a complaint for judicial inquiry to a Subordinate Magistrate when it had been dismissed by a subordinate Magistrate merely considering a police report and the report of the Subordinate Magistrate the Sessions Court set aside the order and directed a further inquiry. A Sessions Judge cannot direct further inquiry under S. 436 after the District Magistrate has refused to do so, and vice versa, 22 C. 573; 28 C. 102; 26 M. 477; 17 M.L.J. 153=2 M.L.T. 24=5 Cr. L.J. 132. Under the explanation newly added a Sessions Judge is now empowered to refer the proceedings of the District Magistrate, appellate or original to the High Court under S. 493, infra. The powers of the High Court are wide. Even though a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has refused to take action under this section the High Court is 'entitled to entertain an application and to grant relief in case it finds the order of the inferior Court is not correct, legal or proper. The Code does not empower a District Magistrate to question the decision of a Sessions Judge. It is no part of the duty of the District Magistrate to criticise the judicial decisions of the Sessions Judge, 41 B. 47; 23 C. 250; 18 C. 186; 23 M.L.J. 732; 28 A. 91; 36 A. 378; 24 A.L.J. 224. But if he considers that there has been a miscarriage of justice in proceedings before a Sessions Judge, he should communicate with the Public Prosecutor or move the Local Government for necessary action, but should not report the case to the High Court for necessary action under S. 493, infra, 9 A. 362; 12 A. 431, 15 M. 36; Weir II, 565 and 566; 24 A.L.J. 224 where 28 A. 91; 36 A. 378 and 41 B. 47 are followed.

High Court's Power to stay criminal proceedings.—There is no statutory provision for staying criminal proceedings once started. The question is one of expediency and has to be decided on the merits of the particular case keeping in view the undesirability of the conflict of decisions and the necessity of protecting the accused from prejudice in the civil proceedings, 23 Cr. L.J. 700=69 Ind. Cas. 380. The main principle is that the High Court in the exercise of its function of superintendence should not retard the legal work of the subordinate Courts. A criminal Court is in every way as competent as the Civil Court to examine questions of possession or questions involving genuineness of documents and there is no particular reason for giving priority to the Civil Court. Simultaneous trials in both Civil and Criminal Courts may have their disadvantages but when in any circumstances the two Courts must try the same issue, there is no reason to prefer consecutive trials. It is not as though the trial which is taken first would absorb or govern the other. A criminal Court cannot decline to examine a question of forgery because the forged document has been admitted as genuine in a Civil Court; it must try the case sooner or later and on the general principle that judicial work should not be retarded, the sooner the better. 52 M.L.J. 80=25 L.W. 52=1927 M.W.N. 53. In 44 M.L.J. 642=1923 M.W.N. 276=17 L.W. 570=25 Cr. L.J. 280=16 Ind. Cas. 872, it was held that it was undesirable that a complaint of rioting and mischief should remain undisposed of till the Civil Court have pronounced on the question of title but the Civil Court's judgment will not operate as res judicata in the Criminal Court. There is no special advantage in delaying a criminal trial when a grave charge has been made against a gentleman and it is desirable both for his own sake and for everybody concerned that it should be disposed of as quickly as possible and if proceedings are postponed until the final decision of the Civil Court witnesses may not be available. If delay would avoid conflicting decisions there might be more to be said for it, but it cannot do that. Conflicting decisions are the inherent risk of the decision of causes into civil and criminal. The least undesirable course is to adhere to the main principle and to let both cases proceed with all possible despatch. The general rule is that the High Court should avoid staying proceedings in the lower Courts, unless there are exceptional circumstances for the interference of the High Court, 50 M. 839; see also 33 C.W.N. 16v. A person against whom Criminal proceedings are instituted cannot claim as of right that such proceedings shall be stayed pending the result of a civil suit; otherwise it would be easy for criminals to delay disposal of criminal prosecutions by lodging civil suits. In each case the discretion must be exercised and the particular circumstances of the case duly considered. Justice must not unduly be hampered but on the other hand, where there is no particular hurry, the postponement of the Criminal proceedings some times avoids a regrettable conflict of decisions. One point which may sometimes have considerable weight is the question of priority. An man who has already instituted a civil suit may well urge that a subsequent criminal prosecution shall be stayed pending the result of the civil suit, 17 Cr. L.J. 203=34 Ind. Cas. 317; 29 Cr. L.J. 47=106 Ind. Cas. 463; 26 Cr. L.J. 286=84 Ind. Cas. 350; 28 Cr. L.J. 326=100 Ind. Cas. 710; 13 Cr. L.J. 175=13 Ind. Cas. 927 where 5 C.L.J. 223=5 Cr. L.J. 199 and 5 C.W.N. 44 are referred to. Criminal proceedings tend themselves to unscrupulous application of improper pressure with a view to influence the course of justice in civil proceedings and besides there is the further mischief of criminal proceedings being instituted with an imperfect appreciation of facts not been ascertained in the more searching investigation by the civil Court, 24 C.W.N. 418=21 Cr. L.J. 481=36 Ind. Cas. 577, with regard to stay of criminal proceedings pending a civil suit, the test seems to be whether the prosecution is public or private, 33 C.W.N. 969, where it is public the Court, as a rule, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction would not stay criminal proceedings but where it is private there would not be the same reluctance on the part of the Court to interfere with the criminal proceedings. This was the statement of the law prior to the enactment of S. 561A infra, which now expressly recognizes the inherent power of the High Court to interfere to prevent abuse of the process of the Court or to secure the ends of justice. The High Court has, no doubt on general grounds as well as under S. 561 A, infra, has jurisdiction to stay criminal proceedings, 30 Bom. L.R. 932 at 964. Criminal proceedings should not as a rule be stayed pending the decision of a Civil Court in regard to the same subject-matter, but ordinarily it is not desirable that a criminal prosecution should go on if the parties to the two proceedings are the same, especially when the prosecution is a private prosecution and the questions to be decided in the two Courts are identical. The mere pendency of a civil suit or appeal is not in itself a sufficient ground for staying criminal proceedings 18 B. 581; 14 Bom. L.R. 963. If the object of the criminal proceedings by a private prosecutor is to prejudice the trial of a civil suit or to use them as a lever to coerce the accused into a compromise of the civil suit, the criminal proceedings can properly be stayed. The discretion is to be exercised by the High Court in each case. The ordering stay of proceedings cannot be crystallised into a hard and fast rule and it would largely depend upon the circumstances of each case. The test in every case would be whether the accused is likely to be prejudiced seriously by the continuance of the criminal proceedings pending the trial of the civil suit, 30 Bom. L.R. 962, at 965. It is open to the criminal Court having regard to the facts of each case to consider whether it is desirable that the proceedings before it should be stayed till the decision of the civil suit, or for a limited period. The High Court has stayed criminal proceedings in 30 M. 226; 31 M. 510; 23 C. 610; 4 Lah. L.J. 403; 26 Cr. L.J. 286=84 Ind. Cas. 350; 23 Cr. L.J. 326=100 Ind. Cas. 710; 13 Cr. L.J. 175=13 Ind. Cas. 927 where 5 C.L.J. 199 and 5 C.W.N. 44 are followed, 23 Cr. L.J. 595=68 Ind. Cas. 819; 1 Pat. L.T. 697; 22 Cr. L.J. 439=62 Ind. Cas. 183; 21 Cr. L.J. 399=55 Ind. Cas. 1007; 18 A.L.J. 1011; 27 Cr. L.J. 1114=97 Ind. Cas. 426. Pendency of a civil appeal was held not to be a sufficient ground for stay of criminal proceedings, 43 A. 130. The High Court will not interfere with the right exercise of the discretion of the Magistrate who refuses to stay criminal proceedings, 21 Cr. L.J. 332=55 Ind. Cas. 678; 21 Cr. L.J. 353=55 Ind. Cas. 721. The question whether criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the decision of a civil suit is primarily one of discretion of the Magistrate, 30 Bom. L.R. 962.

436. On examining any record under section 435 or otherwise, the High Court or the Sessions Judge may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the inquiry.

District Magistrate may himself make, or direct any subordinate Magistrate to make further inquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under section 203 or sub-section (3) of section 204 or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged :

Provided that no Court shall make any direction under this section for inquiry into the case of any person who has been discharged unless such person has had an opportunity of showing cause why such direction should not be made.

Amendment.—By the amendment Ss. 436 and 437 have been interchanged. To meet the conflicting rulings as to the exact meaning and scope of the terms "accused person" the words "a person accused of an offence" have now been substituted. Certain rulings of the High Court like 20 C. 729; 30 C. 112; 36 C. 163; 23 C. 493; 27 C. 562; 16 B. 661; 33 M. 85 put a very strict interpretation upon the term and explained the term as meaning a person accused of an offence, while other rulings like 35 A. 147; 24 A. 107; 24 A. 149; 35 B. 401 included within the term "accused person" persons against whom proceedings were taken in any shape or form by a criminal Court acting judicially. By the amendment the conflict of opinion is set at rest. Further inquiry can be made now only in cases where a person accused of an offence before a criminal Court has been discharged. The proviso is new and makes it obligatory on the Court to give an opportunity to the discharged person to show cause against the making of the order.

Scope and object of the section.—This section vests no absolute right in the superior Court to direct a further inquiry. The section is limited by the words "on examining any record under S. 435 or otherwise" and that section lays down that a Court may call for and examine any records for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order passed and as to the regularity of any proceeding of an inferior Court. If a Magistrate finds no illegality or impropriety or irregularity and nothing incorrect in the proceedings he is not entitled to set aside the discharge upon other grounds or on no ground at all, e.g., on the opinion tendered to him by the Legal Remembrancer, 16 C.W.N. 1078=13 Cr. L.J. 763=17 Ind. Cas. 73. A Court of revision merely for the reason of disagreement with the conclusion arrived at after a careful inquiry by the trial Court is not entitled to order further inquiry which can be ordered only where the Magistrate has not taken sufficient trouble or has come to a perverse conclusion, 30 Cr. L.J. 783=117 Ind. Cas. 345. The powers with which the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, is clothed are powers of revision, and in exercising those powers of revision the appellate Court has to see whether the evidence is of such a character that it is possible to come only to one conclusion upon it, namely, that the accused has been guilty. It may not be a question of perversity but it must be very near to it. The appellate Court must satisfy itself that there has been a miscarriage of justice, consequent upon the one-sided or perverse view taken by the trial Court, 10 L.W. 630 at 632; 44 A. 691; 1 Lah. 218; 28 Cr. L.J. 342=100 Ind. Cas. 822. In cases where no fresh evidence is likely to be adduced on further inquiry the superior Court should hesitate before exercising its powers under this section unless there are palpable errors in the decision of the lower Court, 38 C.L.J. 206. This section confers an independent power on a District Magistrate to direct a subordinate Magistrate to make a further inquiry into a complaint which has been dismissed or into the case of any person accused of an offence who had been discharged, 30 Cr. L.J. 233=114 Ind. Cas. 50. Where a Magistrate after proper inquiry finds no case made out, the mere fact that the superior Court does not agree with that opinion is no reason to reopen the case by directing a further inquiry especially where no suggestion is made that any further evidence is available or should be taken, 41 A. 691; 23 Cr. L.J. 63=75 Ind. Cas. 978; 26 Cr. L.J. 838=88 Ind. Cas. 822; 23 Cr. L.J. 601=102 Ind. Cas. 777; 9 A. 52 (F.B.); 18 A.L.J. 1133=59 Ind. Cas. 193. The powers of the High Court and Sessions Judges and District Magistrates are co-extensive and are not limited in any way by this section. Where certain persons were charged by a Magistrate for offences under S. 342 (wrongful confinement) and S. 357 (assault in attempting to unlawfully confine), and the Sessions Judge in revision was of opinion that charges for offences under Ss. 342 and 357, I.P.C., were not the appropriate charges but that the real charge disclosed by the evidence was one of forgery and ordered further inquiry into an offence under S. 467, I.P.C., it was held that the Judge had no jurisdiction under this section to pass the order and it was therefore set aside, 10 Cr. L.J. 534—4 Ind. Cas. 312. The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot under this section himself frame a charge or order the subordinate Magistrate to frame a charge and try the accused, although the District Magistrate may under the latter part of the section make further inquiry himself and frame a charge in the course of the inquiry; the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is not bound to refer to the High Court in cases of difference of opinion owing to mere misappreciation of evidence but would be justified in ordering a re-consideration of the same evidence, 32 M. 220 (F.B.); 6 M.L.T. 157=10 Cr. L.J. 218—3 Ind. Cas. 29; 19 M.L.J. 157; 5 M.L.T. 233. There is little difference in substance between the case of a person who has been discharged after all the prosecution evidence has been taken and weighed by the Magistrate and that of a person who is acquitted after a charge has been framed. In the former case the Magistrate considers the prosecution evidence as so weak that there is nothing for the accused to meet and in latter case the evidence though sufficiently strong to call upon the accused to meet it has in his opinion been met by the defence. There is no reason why different tests should be applied in revision or why an accused should be in a worse position than one against whom it is strong enough to warrant a charge being framed, 33 M.L.J. 518 at 522. A superior Court should hesitate to order further inquiry under this section unless there are palpable errors in the decision of the trial Court and the judgment of a District Magistrate ordering further inquiry should indicate such palpable errors. Otherwise such an order is liable to be set aside by the High Court, 50 C.L.J. 284. An order of discharge should not be set aside unless it is clearly wrong and it will be a travesty of justice to order a re-trial after lapse of considerable time, say one year from the date of discharge, 29 Cr. L.J. 895=111 Ind. Cas. 575. Further inquiry after a discharge is improper unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or based on a record of evidence obviously incomplete, 12 Cr. L.J. 364=11 Ind. Cas. 132. Once a District Magistrate has refused to interfere with an order of discharge under this section he cannot subsequently direct further inquiry under this section as such an order reversing the earlier order is prohibited by S. 369 supra, 13 Cr. L.J. 301=14 Ind. Cas. 765. It is not sufficient for a Court merely to say that the trial Court has not gone fully into the case and declare that a further inquiry is necessary. Before ordering a further inquiry the Court of revision should state in what respect the trial Court's conclusions are either foolish or perverse or otherwise unsatisfactory, and if the case is sent back on the ground that the discharge has been made on incomplete record this should be stated, 26 Cr. L.J. 1393=89 Ind. Cas. 705, where 1 Lah. 216, is followed. See also 24 Cr. L.J. 369=72 Ind. Cas. 369; 22 Cr. L.J. 199=60 Ind. Cas. 59; 23 Cr. L.J. 238 (2)=99 Ind. Cas. 1038 (2); 21 Cr. L.J. 38 at 40=106 Ind. Cas. 334. It is not ordinarily desirable that in the order for further inquiry detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate reasons should be given. Enough should be said in the way of reasons to indicate how the order of discharge is incorrect on a point of law or fact or for want of complete inquiry, 19 Cr. L.J. 14=42 Ind. Cas. 926. The High Court will not as a rule order further inquiry after an order of discharge is made, unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or based upon an obviously incomplete record of evidence. The mere fact that it might take a different view of the evidence and of the probabilities of the case will not justify its interference, 1 Lah. 216; 25 Cr. L.J. 1026=81 Ind. Cas. 802; Weir II, 255; 26 Cr. L.J. 582=85 Ind. Cas. 728; 26 Cr. L.J. 1508=90 Ind. Cas. 292; 26 Cr. L.J. 1393=89 Ind. Cas. 705; 27 Cr. L.J. 565=94 Ind. Cas. 133; 27 Cr. L.J. 661=94 Ind. Cas. 709; 27 Cr. L.J. 771=95 Ind. Cas. 307; 27 Cr. L.J. 1130=97 Ind. Cas. 650; 28 Cr. L.J. 607=102 Ind. Cas. 783 where 12 Cr. L.J. 364=11 Ind. Cas. 132 and 27 Cr. L.J. 561=94 Ind. Cas. 709 are followed. To order fresh inquiry against a discharged co-accused after examining and cross-examining him as a prosecution witness and thus gathering from his own mouth the evidence against him is contrary to the tradition of justice in criminal Courts, 25 Cr. L.J. 311=78 Ind. Cas. 1031.

The jurisdiction of the High Court, Court of Session and District Magistrate is very wide and the discretion thus conferred is a judicial discretion, 15 C. 608 at 622. It is impossible to lay down any general rule or rules which must be applied in every case and it is extremely difficult to arrive at a formula which will be of assistance in all circumstances. The general result of decided cases may be expressed shortly as follows:—(1) That a Magistrate is competent to consider the credibility, weight, and probabilities of the evidence. (2) In this consideration, his discretion is limited. He must not encroach upon the functions of a trial Court while holding a preliminary inquiry with a view to see whether the case should be committed or not. (3) He must keep before him the question whether there are fair grounds for concluding that the accused is guilty upon the evidence, i.e., where there is a prima facie case reasonably credible, he must commit and in all cases where he discharges he should give reasons for so doing and it will be proper to consider those reasons when deciding whether the Magistrate had exercised his direction correctly, 4 Ran. 471. The provisions of this section do not apply to proceedings taken under Chapter VIII of the Code demanding security, 2 Ran. 30. The wording of the section is "any person accused of an offence has been discharged" and this will not include a person proceeded against under the security sections. See notes at pp. 155-56 and 171. A District Magistrate has therefore no power to direct further inquiry into a case under S. 107, supra, and the proper remedy open for him is to report the result of his examination to the High Court under S. 493, infra, 46 A. 235. See also 25 Cr. L.J. 679=81 Ind. Cas. 167; 51 A. 403; 25 Cr. L.J. 89=76 Ind. Cas. 25; 24 Cr. L.J. 825=74 Ind. Cas. 837. Further inquiry may be directed in case of discharge even where no fresh evidence is forthcoming, 14 M. 334 (F.B.); 9 A. 52 (F.B.); 13 B. 376; 21 A. 122; 12 C. 522; 10 C. 207; 15 C. 608; 23 Cr. L.J. 65. Further inquiry does not in all cases mean taking additional evidence but may be re-hearing and re-consideration of the evidence already taken, 26 Cr. L.J. 1537=90 Ind. Cas. 383. Material consideration when ordering further inquiry is the prospect of any public advantage from the case being re-opened two years after the occurrence, 43 M.L.J. 355=16 L.W. 565. The exercise of revisional jurisdiction by the High Court is a matter of discretion and having regard to the length of time that elapsed between the dismissal of the appeal and the application for revision the High Court declined to hear the revision petition, 1907 A.W.N. 203=6 Cr. L.J. 153. It cannot be ordered in the bare possibility of an offence being disclosed on further evidence being taken. There must be something on record to indicate that such an offence was committed or there must be something to show that further evidence which was not taken and would support a charge for that offence is available, 43 M.L.J. 564=16 L.W. 494=(1922) M.W.N. 801. This section does not apply to an acquittal, 20 Cr. L.J. 525=51 Ind. Cas. 633; 2 C.L.J. 622. The power under this section should be sparingly used and with great circumspection, Ratanlal 328; 11 C.W.N. 173, especially when the questions raised are merely matters of fact, 9 A. 52 (F.B.). The powers given to Sessions Judges and District Magistrates under this section to interfere with orders of discharge should be used sparingly and with great caution and circumspection especially in cases where the questions involved are mere matters of fact. If the facts and circumstances and evidence are such that two Courts might take different views of the evidence, the order of discharge is one which cannot be said to be either perverse or prima facie incorrect and when there was no suggestion of any further evidence forthcoming, no further inquiry should be directed, 49 A. 879, following 9 A. 52 (F.B.) and 18 A.L.J. 1135. Where a competent Court has dismissed a case after considering the evidence on record and giving thorough and careful reasons, the order should not be interfered with unless there is a miscarriage of justice and an accused person under such circumstance who had stood his trial ought not to be ordered to run the risk again, 14 A.L.J. 1075. This section does not lay down that further inquiry should be directed only when it is found that the judgment is perverse or foolish. As a rule of prudence, however, it has often been held that the superior Court should not lightly discard the estimate of evidence appraised by the Court which heard it and should not set aside the dismissal or discharge simply because a different view of the evidence might be taken. There must be something more than that 23 Cr. L.J. 857=104 Ind. Cas. 633, following 26 Cr. L.J. 886=86 Ind. Cas. 822 and 9 A. 52. The rule of law is firmly established that generally speaking, further inquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or has been based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete, 23 Cr. L.J. 850=105 Ind. Cas. 636, following 12 Cr. L.J. 264=11 Ind. Cas. 127; 23 Cr. L.J. 944=105 Ind. Cas. 639. An order of discharge ought not to be set aside and further inquiry ordered if there is irregularity, illegality or impropriety in the proceedings and it should not be ordered in a case where Courts are liable to take different views of the evidence and of the probabilities especially where the Magistrate has disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution. 23 Cr. L.J. 1537=93 Ind. Cas. 355; 26 Cr. L.J. 1323=23 Ind. Cas. 272. Further inquiry does not mean proceeding on the evidence already taken; that evidence or other evidence, if there be any, should be taken de novo by the Magistrate who holds the further inquiry. 9 A.L.J. 310=13 Cr. L.J. 235=14 Ind. Cas. 607. See also 27 Cr. L.J. 1130=97 Ind. Cas. 630. A power to order what is practically a re-trial, to give a complainant another opportunity of re-examining his witnesses and adducing fresh evidence, ought not to be presumed as it is unjust to the accused and opens a wide door to perjury and corruption. 31 M. 133 at 135.

On examining the record under S. 435 or otherwise—See notes under B. 437 at p. 802. The words "or otherwise" are significant. In every case of discharge some body must bring the matter to the notice of the superior Court as it cannot be supposed that it is aware of all orders of discharge passed by the Magistrates within its jurisdiction and there is nothing in the Code to limit the persons who can bring the matter to the notice of the superior Court. Thus it is immaterial how the facts were brought to the notice of the superior Court. When once it is brought to its notice it has ample power to deal with the matter. Where a complaint of Court under S. 476, infra, ended in a discharge, undoubtedly it is not the intention of the Legislature that a private party should not bring the order of discharge before the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge is empowered under S. 435 supra, to call for the records in such a case if he is dissatisfied with the correctness, legality or propriety of the finding, and order a further inquiry under this section, 49 A. 230.

High Court or sessions Judge may direct District Magistrate—The High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate, 16 L.W. 494=31 M.L.T. 254=23 Cr. L.J. 592=68 Ind. Cas. 624. The High Court is mentioned in this section for the obvious reason that though S. 430, infra, gives the High Court all the powers of a Court of Appeal under S. 423, supra, the power mentioned in this section is not included in S. 435, supra 9 A. 52 at 55. The controlling power of revision of the High Court in criminal cases is a discretionary power and it must be exercised with regard to all the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly, 28 B. 533. This section does not authorise a Sessions Judge to direct further inquiry by a particular Magistrate, whether it be the Magistrate who originally discharged or any other Magistrate. Sessions Judges should conform to the language of the section in ordering further inquiry. The Legislature appears to have contemplated that the Magistrate of the District should exercise a discretion as to the selection of any Magistrate subordinate to him and this discretion seems to have been vested in the District Magistrate and not in the Sessions Judge. 10 C. 207 at 209. Where the dispute between the parties is of a civil nature further inquiry should not be ordered, 1 Bom. L.R. 832. So also where the nature of the case is such that Courts are liable to take different views on the evidence and probabilities of the case, 8 A.L.J. 45=12 Cr. L.J. 45=9 Ind. Cas. 274; 12 Cr. L.J. 110=9 Ind. Cas. 652. Again when the order of discharge is based on a consideration of the whole evidence and is not manifestly perverse or foolish it should not be set aside and further inquiry ordered, 10 Cr. L.J. 214=27 Ind. Cas. 838. But no Court can properly set aside an order of discharge without assigning solid and substantial reasons for so doing, 15 C. 608 at 621; 27 Cr. L.J. 728=95 Ind. Cas. 56; 32 C. 1090; 13 C.W.N. 76; (1914) M.W.N. 46 (s.c.) (1913) M.W.N. 638=14 Cr. L.J. 572=21 Ind. Cas. 172. In cases where there is concurrent jurisdiction i.e., where the relief sought in the High Court could also have been obtained in the lower Court it is the established practice not to interfere with the lower Court's order, 14 C. 887; 20 C. 643; 28 Cr. L.J. 601=102 Ind. Cas. 777; 28 Cr. L.J. 342=102 Ind. Cas. 822; 28 A. 268; 43 A. 497; 14 B. 331; Ratanlal 449; 3 Pat. L.J. 302 but the rule is not inflexible, 2 L.W. 1126; 28 Cr. L.J. 544=102 Ind. Cas. 352; 28 Cr. L.J. 815=104 Ind. Cas. 253.

Make further inquiry.—A District Magistrate when exercising his revisional jurisdiction should ordinarily confine the exercise of his powers of interference on the grounds expressly specified in this Chapter and should not take upon himself the duty of trying the accused himself although such a course would not be illegal, 27 Cr. L.J. 723=95 Ind. Cas. 56. The term "further inquiry" means an inquiry before the Magistrate preliminary to a trial which results in a charge or discharge and does not include a trial. The terms "further inquiry" "fresh inquiry" are used as meaning the same, 15 C. 603 at 620. The term may signify an inquiry in addition to that which has already been held, but may also signify a fresh consideration to the effect of the evidence already recorded and a re-consideration of that evidence. It does not imply that additional evidence must be forthcoming, 14 M. 334 (F.B.); 15 C. 603 (F.B.); 10 B. 131; 9 A.L.J. 310=13 Cr.L.J. 255=14 Ind.Cas. 607. A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction under this section to revise the order of the lower Court and direct a re-trial of accused person for offences different from those for which they were originally convicted (S. 323 I.P.C., into one under S. 330 I.P.C.) at the instance of a private complainant, 23 Cr. L.J. 575 (2)=102 Ind. Cas. 511. Further inquiry cannot be ordered on the bare possibility of an offence being disclosed on further evidence being taken. There must be something to show that further evidence which was not taken which would support a charge is available, 43 M.L.J. 564=16 L.W. 404=31 M.L.T. 254=23 Cr. L.J. 592=68 Ind. Cas. 624. An order for further inquiry is proper where the revising authority finds on the facts that there were enough materials to warrant a conviction or to call upon the accused to enter on his defence. It is not correct to say that further inquiry cannot be ordered on the same facts as has been considered by the Magistrate and to do so will be putting the law too wide. The revising authority is to take into consideration the facts of the particular case before it and taking down any general rule guiding Courts, in ordering further inquiry, is to stultify the language of the section itself, 23 A.L.J. 20=26 Cr. L.J. 736=86 Ind. Cas. 224; 49 A. 230. When further inquiry is ordered and the case is made over to a subordinate Magistrate he is seised of the whole case and he is competent to hold the inquiry and dispose of the complaint by passing final orders thereon, either by dismissing it or putting the accused on his trial and convicting or acquitting him, 21 Cr. L.J. 594=57 Ind. Cas. 162; 27 C. 921; 39 C. 1041. This section does not empower a trial to be held but only a further inquiry. S. 4 (1) (k) supra defines 'inquiry' which is distinct from 'trial'. Where the Magistrate dismissed a complaint under S. 203 supra and a further inquiry is ordered the Magistrate is competent again to hold an inquiry and dismiss the complaint again. The inquiry contemplated by the section is an inquiry of the same nature as was previously held under S. 203 supra and cannot mean an inquiry after summoning the accused 29 Cr. L.J. 372=103 Ind. Cas. 323 where 30 C.W.N. 312=26 Cr. L.J. 305=81 Ind. Cas. 419 and 104 Ind. Cas. 633 are referred to. Similarly when a complaint is once dismissed by a sub-divisional magistrate and the District Magistrate sets aside that order under this section and directs further inquiry, the sub-divisional Magistrate cannot at once summon the accused without having held an inquiry and exercised his judgment under S. 203, supra, and finding that it was a fit case in which the accused should be summoned. A summons should not issue to the accused from the mere fact that the District Magistrate has set aside the order of dismissal and directed a further inquiry, 29 Cr. L.J. 572=109 Ind. Cas. 508.

Into any complaint Dismissed under S. 203—Ss. 203 and 201 (3) supra are the only provisions enabling a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint. Where the accused were tried and convicted of mischief and the Sessions Judge being of opinion that the accused has been rightly dealt with by the Magistrate ordered a further inquiry against the accused and others for an offence under S. 141, I.P.C., (joining an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons) it was held that the order was without jurisdiction, as none of the accused had even been discharged of that offence nor was any complaint of such offence against them dismissed under S. 203 or 201 (3), supra, 27 C. 538. See also 5 C.W.N. 72. An order of dismissal under S. 203, supra, should not be set aside by a District Magistrate on the mere ground that it is possible that on a further inquiry the accused may be convicted, 17 Cr. L.J. 406=33 Ind. Cas. 568. Material consideration when ordering a further inquiry is the prospect of any public advantage from the case being re-opened, 43 M.L.J. 533=16 L.W. 585. This section as it stands by the amending Act of 1923 clearly makes a distinction between a case in which a complaint is dismissed under S. 203 supra and a case in which the accused is discharged under S. 253 supra or some other section. In the latter case it is now provided in accordance with the general opinion of all the High Courts that notice should be given to the accused as he was present at the trial Court and no order ought to be made in his absence by the Court in revision but when the order is passed under S. 203 supra not only has the accused no right under the law to appear either before the trial Court or before the court of revision and it has been held in several cases (See 21 O.W.N. 127=23 C.L.J. 606; 27 C.W.N. 196=35 C.L.J. 414) that the accused should not be allowed to appear at that stage and in a case where he was allowed by the Magistrate to appear at that stage to cross-examine the witnesses, he acted illegally and this illegal act of the Magistrate does not create a right in the accused to appear at every stage of the proceeding. No doubt it was held in some cases that where the complaint was dismissed under S. 203 supra, it was desirable to allow the accused to appear before an order is passed under this section to his prejudice but these cases were before the amendment of 1923. Courts have no right to legislate however desirable a thing may be on general principle, 49 C.L.J. 422 423-24. Dismissal of a complaint is no bar to a rehearing of the same, 29 M. 126 (F.B.); 28 C. 652 (F.B.); 29 A. 7, even after the District Magistrate had refused to order further inquiry, 36 C. 415.

Into the case of any person.....Discharged.—An order of discharge is not a final order, and the offence against an accused who has been discharged may be further inquired into by a Magistrate upon further evidence, if forthcoming. The High Court has full power to reverse an order of discharge at the instance of a private prosecutor and in considering whether to interfere or not is bound to have regard to the injustice to the accused on the ground of prosecution and want of finality and in the event of its coming to a conclusion that proceedings were taken with a view to furthering either of these objects to the exclusion of other matters proper for it to consider, the High Court would refuse such an application. As there is no appeal against an order of discharge, it would be unjust to deny to a private prosecutor the right to have the order of discharge revised where such an order has been improperly made, 4 Ran. 471 relying on 2 M. 38; 2 A. 448; 36 C. 994. The section now contains the words "any person accused of an offence" instead of "any accused person" and hence it does not include persons against whom proceedings are taken under Chapter VII of the Code, 2 Ran. 30 at 31. Under this section as amended a District Magistrate has no power to revise an order under S. 119 supra, discharging a person who was called upon to furnish security. The conflict of authority which existed before 1923 has been removed now and the view expressed in 33 M. 85 has been adopted by the Legislature. The conduct of a person called upon to furnish security under Part IV of the Code relating to prevention of offences would consist of a number of acts or omission to come within the definition of offences as defined in S. 4 (1) (c) supra. The word punishable is not defined in the Code but words not herein defined are to be deemed to have the same meaning attributed to them in the I.P.C. In S. 53 I.P.C., punishments are described by an exhaustive enumeration but giving security is not included in the list of punishments given there, 51 A. 408. See also 22 A.L.J. 129 and 48 A. 233. See notes at page 155-156 and 171. A person accused of an offence must be discharged by a Magistrate before action is taken under this section. It is not applicable to a case where a Magistrate refused to proceed against some of the persons accused of an offence before police as they never had been before the Magistrate and had not therefore been discharged 5 C.W.N. 489; 4 C.W.N. 242. There is no authority to direct further inquiry against a person against whom no process was issued, 39 C. 238. Where a case against a person who was absent at the trial of his co-accused was dismissed under S. 247, supra owing to the absence of the complainant no order could properly be passed under this section against the absent accused, 4 C.W.N. 346. A discharge by a Presidency Magistrate can be set aside by the High Court under this section and further inquiry could be ordered, 36 C. 994; 33 M.L.J. 513; 27 B. 84. The expression used in S. 437, supra, "is improperly discharged" but we find no such expression in this section.

Proviso.—The Proviso is new and has been enacted to meet the various rulings of the several High Courts as to the necessity of notice being given to the accused in case of discharge.

The Allahabad High Court consistently held that notice was necessary, 9 A. 52 (F.B.); 20 A. 339; 25 A. 375; 35 A. 78; 40 A.; 138 and 416. The Calcutta and Patna High Courts held that although notice was not imperative yet it was a matter of proper discretion of the Court to give notice, 15 C. 603 (F.B.); 29 C. 457; 32 C. 1090; 39 C. 238; 12 C.W.N. 822. The Madras and Bombay High Courts accepted the Allahabad view, 26 M. 51; 15 M. 335; see also 10 B. 131; 8 Bom. L.R. 694. See also 1 Lah. 216. Where a District Magistrate acting under this section entertained a revision petition filed by the complainant against an order of discharge, making some of the accused only as parties and committed all the discharged accused including those who were not parties before him and who had no manner of notice of the revision petition, held that the order against those accused who were not parties was clearly wrong as they had no opportunity of showing cause why an order of commitment should not be made against them under this proviso and the order so far as they were concerned was set aside, 48 M. 874. But all the High Courts have agreed that no notice will be necessary in the case of a dismissal under S. 203, 15 C. 603; 29 C. 457; 35 A. 78; 40 A. 138. This proviso cannot apply to a dismissal under S. 203, supra. Where no process is issued to the accused at all and he does not appear in Court and the complaint is dismissed summarily under S. 203, supra, the accused cannot be said to have been discharged. It is only after he has appeared in court and the evidence against him is found to be insufficient so as to make it unnecessary to call upon him to enter on his defence that he can be discharged. Before the amended Code, Courts were unanimous that in cases of the dismissal of a complaint under S. 203, supra notice was not necessary and the amendment left the ruling in 35 A. 78; 40 A. 138 untouched. See also 47 A. 722; 27 Cr. L.J. 302=92 Ind. Cas. 590; 2 Luck. 573. Where the order of dismissal is passed under S. 203 supra not only has the accused no right under the law to appear either before the trial Court or before the Court of Revision. It has been held in several cases (See 21 C.W.N. 127=25 C.L.J. 606; 27 C.W.N. 196=36 C.L.J. 414) that the accused should not be allowed to appear at that stage. If the Magistrate allowed the accused to appear at that stage to cross-examine the witness he acted illegally and this illegal act of the Magistrate does not create a right in the accused to appear at every stage of the proceeding. In some cases it was held on general principle that it was desirable to give notice to the accused before the dismissal order under S. 203 supra is set aside but those cases were before the amendment of 1923 and Courts have no right to legislate however desirable it may be on principle, 49 C.L.J. 422 at 424. The dismissal of a complaint under S. 203 or under S. 201 (3), supra is before the appearance of an accused and no accused person can be said to be discharged when no process has been issued for his appearance. It is only when a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence and is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding he issues a summons or a warrant for the accused's appearance. An accused person is said to be discharged when the case against him is thrown out under Ss. 209, 253 or 259, supra or when the Advocate-General enters a nolle prosequi, under S. 333, supra. The expression person who has been discharged, occurring herein refers to a person discharged under Ss. 209, 253, or 259. A person against whom no process is issued under S. 204, supra, is not a discharged person and therefore no notice is necessary to him when a District Magistrate, Sessions Judge, or the High Court directs a further inquiry into a complaint dismissed under S. 203 or S. 201 (3), supra 49 M. 918 (F.B.) following 47 A. 722. See also 23 Bom. L.R. 713 following 47 A. 722. But where a complaint is dismissed under S. 203, supra after giving the accused an opportunity of being heard, an order directing further inquiry into the case under this section should not be made without giving notice to him, 27 C.W.N. 532=25 Cr. L.J. 140=76 Ind. Cas. 236. But this decision is of doubtful authority as there is no provision of law for issuing notice before process is issued against the accused. See 49 M. 918 following 47 A. 722. 23 Cr. L.J. 573 (2)=102 Ind. Cas. 511 (2). Where a complaint in a summons case is dismissed for default the order is one under S. 217, supra, and is tantamount to an acquittal and falls outside the purview of this section, 25 Cr. L.J. 359=77 Ind. Cas. 293.

✓ Revision—The High Court will not entertain an application unless the lower Court has been first moved, 23 A. 268; 43 A. 497; 36 C. 643; 18 L.W. 655; 14 C. 837; 14 B. 331; Ratanlal 419; 23 Cr. L.J. 544=102 Ind. Cas. 352. It is the practice not to interfere in a commitment of the accused in the midst of a trial before the inferior Court, 27 Cr. L.J. 317-93 Ind. Cas. 435. The mere fact that the superior Court may take a different view of the evidence and the probabilities of the case will not justify its interference by setting aside the order of discharge, 25 Cr. L.J. 1026-81 Ind. Cas. 802; 26 Cr. L.J. 836-83 Ind. Cas. 822; Weir II, 255.

On examining the Record.—These words occur in Ss. 435 and 436 supra also, but the expression used in S. 439. infra, is "which otherwise comes to its knowledge." A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate must have the records before him when exercising powers under this section or Ss. 436 or 428, infra, but there is no such restriction imposed on the High Court when exercising powers of revision under S. 439, infra. See 30 C.W.N. 840-43 C.L.J. 113-27 Cr. L.J. 871-56 Ind. Cas. 119. The High Court in revision can also direct the commitment of a case to the Court of Session. This section only empowers the Courts named therein to call for the records but, what they have to do after calling for the records and examining them is stated in Ss. 436 to 439 of the Code, 32 M. 220 at 222. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may set aside an order of discharge suo motu, 33 M.L.J. 154-10 L.W. 672-21 Cr. L.J. 91-54 Ind. Cas. 491. Discretion given to a Sessions Judge by this section is very wide and if he has exercised that discretion well and committed the accused to the Court of Session, the High Court should be slow to interfere, 13 A.L.J. 111 where 26-A. 563 is followed. But a District Magistrate cannot act suo motu when a Sessions Judge had previously refused to interfere with an order of discharge 26 M. 477. Where a District Magistrate refused to call for records and commit an accused person to the Court of Sessions when the charge against him was still pending inquiry before an inferior Magistrate, that order is not an order refusing to revise an order of discharge and a Sessions Judge may act under this section and direct a commitment of the accused to the Court of Session after his discharge by the inferior Magistrate, 43 M. 330.

Under S. 435 or otherwise.—No indication is given of the ways otherwise than S. 435, where the record of the case is to be before the Court. The words "or otherwise" being words of general import following the words "under S. 435" must be construed according to the usual rule that they mean "not in any other way whatever" but "in any other way provided by the Code." For examples, in the case of an appeal, the appellate Court is empowered under S. 423, supra, to send for the records and this would be a case in point, 10 C. 268 at 272. The reasons for exercising the powers under this section are reasons which should arise upon materials to be found on record before the Court and not upon any extraneous matter, 1890 A.W.N. 147. The power can also be exercised on matters coming to the knowledge of a Judge on reliable information, e.g., information conveyed by the Famine Commissioner, Weir II, 538. See also 2 M. 38.

Case exclusively triable by Court of Session.—These words mean an offence shown as so triable in the eighth column of the second schedule to the Code, 1904 P.R. (Cr. J.) 60, following 1897 P.R. (Cr. J.) 3. The eighth column mentions what offences are exclusively triable by Court of Session. S. 435 supra, gives power to call for records and this section empowers commitment only when the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, 42 M. 561 at 563; 53 C. 643. The case must be exclusively triable by a Court of Session for a Sessions Judge to direct a commitment even where a District Magistrate discharges the accused, 7 A. 853; 12 C. 473; 9 B. 100; 8 M. 18; 19 Cr. L.J. 801 (2)-46 Ind. Cas. 817 (2). A case does not come within this section merely because a Magistrate is of opinion that the offence could not be adequately punished by him, 1908 A.W.N. 189-8 Cr. L.J. 47. A direction to commit the accused for trial in a case where the offence with which the accused was charged is not triable exclusively by the Court of Session is bad in law, 15 M.L.J. 373; Ratanlal 42; 20 C. 633. A direction by a Court of Session to a Magistrate to commit the accused to Sessions for an offence under S. 471, I.P.O., was held to be beyond its power under this section as the offence is not one exclusively triable by the Court of Session, 42 M. 561. But some meaning must be given for the word "considers" used in this section. If a superior Court considers that the case pointing at an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session was inquired into by the lower Court and the accused discharged, then a commitment may be directed, or at any rate a further inquiry under S. 430, infra, may be ordered. But if the offence which the superior Court thinks made out by the facts was not the subject of an inquiry at all in the lower Court, then no commitment can be ordered under this section and the only course open to the superior Magistrate is to set aside the discharge and direct a further inquiry into the case. It is competent to a Sessions Judge to convict a person on a charge not exclusively triable, e.g., one under S. 427, I.P.C., if it is intimately connected with a charge exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, e.g., a charge under S. 436, I.P.C., and if it forms part of the same transaction, (See 16 Bom. L.R. 80=15 Cr. L.J. 292=23 Ind. Cas. 500), but it is clear that the above requirements are not satisfied in a direction for commitment on a charge under S. 390, I.P.C., the offence thereunder being totally different from the category of offences under Ss. 427 and 436, I.P.C., 53 C. 645 at 649.

Accused has been improperly discharged.—There must be an improper discharge and a commitment should not be ordered merely because the offence is exclusively triable by a Court of Session, Weir II, 260 or that the charge related to the conduct of a police officer and that it was desirable to have the case tried by the Sessions Court without recording a finding on the evidence that the accused was improperly discharged and the offence charged was of such important character which ought to go before the Court of Session, 1 Pat. L.J. 97=17 Cr. L.J. 330=35 Ind. Cas. 506. The fact that a superior Court might be disposed to take the view that the inferior Court discredited the prosecution evidence for insufficient reasons and discharged the accused is no ground for interference, Weir II, 255; 18 M.L.J. 57, but see 32 M. 220 (F.B.) where it was held that a misappreciation of evidence by the lower Court is a good ground for interference under this section. It is the duty of the superior Court under this section to consider all the grounds upon which the order of discharge has been passed including a consideration of the evidence which has not been believed or held to be insufficient to establish a prima facie case, 7 C.W.N. 77; 13 B. 376. This section contemplates a discharge of the accused only and not an acquittal of the offence, 20 C. 633; 23 M. 225. Where a Magistrate being of opinion that the facts did not disclose an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Session tried the accused for a minor charge and acquitted in spite of the prosecution pressing for the framing of a charge for the graver offence triable by the Court of Session, it was held that the Sessions Judge was entitled to direct a commitment under this section for the graver offence, 24 M. 136 (F.B.). The principle of this decision was explained in 41 M. 932 thus: The refusal of the Magistrate to frame a charge for the graver offence might be treated as an order of discharge in respect of that offence and this section would therefore give the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate power to direct the Magistrate to commit the accused to the Court of Session on the graver charge. But where the prosecution did not press for the framing of a charge for the graver offence and that offence was not even mentioned in the police charge-sheet on which the Sub-Magistrate took cognisance, the acquittal in such a case would be a bar to an order under this section, 41 M. 932 at 934. The acquittal of an accused on a charge framed does not necessarily imply that the Magistrate discharged him in respect of any other charge which might have been framed. The Magistrate must consciously do something or make some order which shows that in his opinion on the materials before him the accused should not be discharged for that offence—Per Richardson, J., in 22 C.W.N. 117, following 23 M. 225 and 20 C. 633 and distinguishing 24 M. 136 (F.B.) but Teunon, J., took a different view and held that the order acquitting the accused of the minor offences was tantamount to an order discharging the accused of the graver offence and the fact that no charge was framed and the Magistrate was not asked to frame a charge under the graver section was immaterial.

Instead of directing a fresh inquiry.—This refers to the power conferred on superior officers under S. 436, supra, to order further inquiry into a case of discharge. The power of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is not restricted to order a commitment of the accused in a case triable exclusively by a Court of Session, 15 C. 608 (F.B.). If the evidence on record is sufficient then the discharge may be set aside and a commitment may be ordered. If fresh evidence is available or the evidence on record established some other offence than the one with regard to which a discharge has been made, in such cases a further inquiry will be the proper order, 14 M. 334 at 337. When a further inquiry is ordered the discretion of the subordinate Magistrate to commit or not to the Court of Session is not to be fettered, 15 M. 39.

Upon the matter of which he has been discharged.—A commitment is to be upon the matter in respect of which there has been a discharge. This is in accordance with the decision in 19 W.R. (Cr.) 30. If the trial is to be on any other matter the power under S. 436, supra, or under proviso (b) of this section should be exercised.

Order him to be committed.—It is open to the superior Court to make a commitment itself or direct a subordinate Magistrate to make a commitment and there is nothing to show that the commitment should be made by the discharging Magistrate only. The words "order him to be committed" in this section do not mean more than to pass an order for commitment, 31 M. 40. No intervention of a Magistrate is necessary, 10 B. 319.

Proviso (a).—The accused must be given an opportunity to show cause and omission to do so vitiates the proceedings, 15 M L.J. 373 ; 6 M. 372 ; 7 C. 662. The opportunity must be a reasonable opportunity, Ratanlal 538. But where the District Magistrate failed to give notice to show cause and the committing Magistrate before committing the accused gave notice to the accused of showing cause it was held the omission of the District Magistrate to give notice was only an irregularity cured by S. 537, infra, Ratanlal 899. The language of this proviso shows that the commitment may be made by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate as the power happens to be exercised by the one or the other, 10 B. 319 ; 28 C. 397. An order of commitment made without affording the accused an opportunity to show cause is illegal and vitiates the proceedings, 14 Cr. L.J. 603 (1) = 21 Ind. Cas. 377 (1).

Proviso (b).—This proviso refers to an inquiry into some offence other than the offence which was inquired into and which ended in a discharge. The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is empowered to direct the Magistrate to inquire into this other offence.

Revision.—An order of commitment made under this section unlike an order under S. 213, supra, can be quashed by the High Court under Ss. 435 and 439, on points of law as well as on facts. S. 215, supra, empowers the High Court to quash commitment made under S. 213 only on a point of law. The High Court is entitled to go into facts as well as the law involved when called upon to revise an order of commitment under this section, 30 M. 224 ; 15 C. 603 at 621 ; 27 M. 54 ; 12 C.W.N. 117 = 6 C.L.J. 760 ; 25 Cr. L.J. 1689 = 81 Ind. Cas. 913 ; 7 C.W.N. 727 ; 15 Cr. L.J. 373 = 23 Ind. Cas. 731 ; 21 Cr. L.J. 328 = 53 Ind. Cas. 600. But the High Court should be most unwilling to interfere and should require strong grounds for setting aside an order of commitment made by a Sessions Judge to whom the widest discretion is given by this section, 26 A. 564 ; 13 A.L.J. 111 = 16 Cr. L.J. 139 = 27 Ind. Cas. 203.

438. (1) The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on examining under section 435 or otherwise the record of any proceeding, report for the orders of the High Court the result of such examination, and, when such report contains a recommendation that a sentence be reversed or altered, may order that the execution of such sentence be suspended, and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail, or on his own bond.

Report to High Court

(2) An Additional Sessions Judge shall have and may exercise all the powers of a Sessions Judge under this Chapter in respect of any case which may be transferred to him by or under any general or special order of the Sessions Judge.

Amendment.—In sub-section (2) the words "by or under the general or special order of the Sessions Judge" have been added. In addition to the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate, an Additional Sessions Judge is also empowered to report under this section, but his powers are restricted to cases transferred to him by the Sessions Judge by special or general order.

Scope of the section.—Under this section a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate has no power to refer a case for the opinion of the High Court although such a power is conferred by S. 432, supra, on a Presidency Magistrate. Although the High Court has jurisdiction under S. 433, infra, to exercise its powers of revision whatever the source of its knowledge, it would not as a rule exercise its revisional powers in a case where the reporting officer has jurisdiction to dispose of the matter himself, 23 Cr. L.J. 978=105 Ind. Cas. 802; 15 Cr. L.J. 472 (2)=24 Ind. Cas. 352 (2). A District Magistrate cannot similarly report to the High Court a case of acquittal asking the High Court to set aside the acquittal in revision; he is entitled to move the Local Government to prefer an appeal to the High Court against the acquittal under S. 417 supra, 23 Cr. L.J. 672=110 Ind. Cas. 224. But the Patna High Court has taken a slightly different view. "It is obvious that the Local Government can only deal with a very small proportion of erroneous acquittals. It can therefore be reasonable to refuse to entertain a reference by the District Magistrate only when it is clear that the case is one in which the Local Government would be expected to move on account of its special importance to the administration but has failed to do so. This section covers all cases of irregularity and injustice including acquittals which come to the notice of the eyes and ears of the High Court. Manifestly it must cover at least cases of erroneous acquittals with which the High Court would interfere under S. 439, infra at the instance of a private party who comes direct to the High Court. The greatest caution must be exercised in whittling down a provision of law which is itself clear. The High Court will interfere in a reference by the Sessions Judge even though it may not do so at the instance of the District Magistrate," 7 Pat. 579 at 581-582. See 43 C. 703 at 703 where the report of a District Magistrate to reverse an acquittal when through the Local Government an appeal could be filed if the acquittal was improper was considered to be a revision at the instance of a private party. See also 56 C. 925, which follows, 43 C. 703. The Code does not contemplate that a representation made by the Police to the District Magistrate in the form of an official letter should be taken into consideration by the High Court as ground for setting aside an order passed by a criminal Court and the District Magistrate is wrong in treating such representation as affording ground for his reference under this section, 26 A L.J. 76=23 Cr. L.J. 846=105 Ind. Cas. 658.

Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may report.—In making reports to the High Court under this section the wholesome rule of conduct for the observance of District Magistrates in their relation with Subordinate Magistrates as stated in the Report of the Indian Police Commission, 1902-03 para 127 is worth noting. "If in regard to any case the District Magistrate thinks it necessary to interfere, he should proceed in open Court in the formal manner prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code. If he thinks it is enough to merely point out any comparatively unimportant mistake to the Subordinate Magistrate he should do so in a courteous memorandum or in a personal interview after perusal of the records. He should also show himself ready to give praise for good work as to police mistakes or failure. Nothing is more important than to preserve the importance of the Magistracy while aiming at their improvement and to prevent their having any ground for believing that their work will be condemned on an ex parte statement by the Police." The District Magistrate has two functions. (1) Head of the police responsible for the punishment of criminals; (2) Magistrate and as such subordinate to the Sessions Judge. In his capacity as head of the police he might well apply for revision of an inadequate sentence passed by the Sessions Judge. To allow a subordinate to get his superior's orders modified by applying to an authority superior to both, would be, in most cases improper. It was for that reason that High Courts have invariably refused to act on letters of reference from District Magistrates asking for revision of orders of the Sessions Judges. The proper course in such cases for the District Magistrate, is to more the Public Prosecutor, but that is not enough. The sanction of the Local Government should also be obtained, not necessarily before filing such application, but before proceeding with it. The power of revision in such cases is useful and must be exercised to prevent judicial idiosyncrasies working harm, 26 Cr. L.J. 177=83 Ind. Cas. 881. Where a District Magistrate is of opinion that an order of acquittal is wrong and should be set aside, he should request the Local Government to prefer an appeal to the High Court under S. 417 supra, and should not report the case for the orders of the High Court under this section, Mad. Cr. Rules, of Pr. Rule. 374. And such reports stand in no higher footing than one by a private prosecutor for revision, 56 C. 924, following, 41 C. 703. This section authorises a District Magistrate to report to the High Court on examination of the records of the proceedings of inferior Courts, but such reports should only be made in cases where the proceedings are not in themselves the subject of a revision or appeal pending before him; his duty is therefore to pass a judicial order. This section is not intended to enable the District Magistrate to get the opinion of the High Court on a question of law arising in a case pending before him or to transfer the decision of a difficult case pending before him to the High Court, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 356=15 Cr. L.J. 472=24 Ind. Cas. 352. A District Magistrate has no power to question the propriety of a judgment or sentence passed by a Sessions Judge and to make a report to the High Court for orders under this section, 23 C. 250; 41 B. 47; 5 Lah. 11. There should be no judicial action by way of criticism by an inferior Court of the superior Court, 46 A. 551. It would be contrary to every principle to allow a District Magistrate to report to the High Court against an order made by a Sessions Judge to whom he is subordinate. The words "or otherwise" occurring in this section were not intended to confer on a Magistrate the power to question the propriety of an order of a Sessions Judge, 28 A. 91; 27 Cr. L.J. 327=92 Ind. Cas. 743. The entertainment of such reports by District Magistrates would lead to nothing but friction between the local authorities and would be apt to prove detrimental to the administration, 36 A. 378; 2 Cr. L.J. 515; 8 Cr. L.J. 161, followed in 27 Cr. L.J. 1253=95 Ind. Cas. 101. The only way in which a District Magistrate could challenge the decision of a Sessions Judge is to communicate with the Public Prosecutor and it is open to the Public Prosecutor after receiving proper instructions from the Local Government to place the matter before the High Court on his own initiative, 23 C. 239; 18 C. 186; 6 C. L. R. 245; 36 A. 378; 49 A. 413; 9 A. 362; 41 B. 47; 27 Cr. L.J. 327=92 Ind. Cas. 743; 27 Cr. L.J. 430=93 Ind. Cas. 159; 23 M. L. J. 732=(1912) M. W. N. 812=12 M. L. T. 170=13 Cr. L. J. 714=16 Ind. Cas. 522; 6 Bom. L. R. 1099. But on the other hand the Sessions Judge is authorised to report for orders to the High Court the order of a District Magistrate, 3 Lah. 23; 26 M. 477; 17 M. L. J. 153. Where a Sessions Judge finds that a Magistrate empowered under S. 30, supra, has in fact tried a case which he is not competent to try he should report the case to the High Court for an order that the accused be committed to the Court of Session for trial, 27 Cr. L. J. 543=95 Ind. Cas. 766. A Sessions Judge ought not to refer a case for enhancement unless he has heard the appeal and come to the conclusion that the conviction is justified and then only he should make a reference under this section, 6 A. L. J. 421; 10 Cr. L. J. 27=2 Ind. Cas. 475. Reference for enhancement should be made promptly. The High Court declined to enhance the sentence nine months after conviction even though the sentence originally passed was inadequate, (1912) M. W. N. 50=13 Cr. L. J. 121=13 Ind. Cas. 777; see also 11 Cr. L. J. 93=4 Ind. Cas. 980; 14 Cr. L. J. 595=31 Ind. Cas. 471. It is the duty of the High Court when a case is reported to it for enhancement of sentence to see whether on the record, the sentence passed by the lower Court is clearly inadequate to the offence, 25 Cr. L. J. 821=88 Ind. Cas. 469. If a police officer of several years standing cannot be trusted to investigate a simple case of theft without taking bribes there would be no security whatever for detection of crime or the administration of justice. The purity of the police force is a matter of vital importance to the community and a case of corruption by a police officer cannot be passed over with a light sentence. On the report of the District Magistrate two months' simple imprisonment was enhanced to ten months' rigorous imprisonment by the High Court under this section, 10 Cr. L. J. 217. A District Magistrate is not competent to make a reference under this section for enhancement of sentence passed by a Sessions Judge, 25 Cr. L. J. 923=81 Ind. Cas. 544; 5 Lah. 11. Ordinarily the High Court will not entertain a reference the object of which is to have an order of acquittal passed by an inferior Court set aside, 5 Lah. 16. A District Magistrate making a reference to the High Court under this section has no power to take evidence and if he has power, it is only for the purpose of recommendation to the High Court and the evidence so recorded could not form the basis of an order by the High Court, for example, to award maintenance for children under S. 438, infra, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 430. When a revision petition filed by the accused was dismissed without notice to the public prosecutor that fact will not preclude a reference by the District Magistrate for enhancement of sentence. The order dismissing the revision by the accused dealt with the legality of the conviction and could not be construed as an adjudication on the adequacy or otherwise of the sentence, 26 Cr. L.J. 583=53 Ind. Cas. 727. A Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate is not bound to refer every case in which he detects an error to the High Court. It is only discretionary, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 30. No report is to be made where the recommendation would be merely to alter the conviction of an offence into another cognate offence, 9 C. 847. A reference should not be made to the High Court under this section merely for obtaining the opinion of the High Court on a question of law especially when the referring officer does not really dissent from the conclusion of the trial Court, 47 A. 409. Nor can a report be made by a District Magistrate after taking fresh evidence, 12 A.L.J. 461. When on examining the records a District Magistrate finds that a Subordinate Magistrate has wrongly decided a question of jurisdiction he is not entitled to quash the proceedings in the exercise of his revisional powers but the proper procedure for him is to report the case to the High Court under this section after giving notice to the parties and giving them an opportunity of being heard, 49 C.L.J. 62. A District Magistrate is not competent to refer to the High Court a point of law nor can he transfer the decision of a difficult case on his file to the High Court, 15 Cr. L.J. 472=24 Ind. Cas. 352. In an appeal under S. 515 infra, before the District Magistrate, the Magistrate cannot make a reference under this section to the High Court ostensibly because he doubts the correctness of certain rulings of the High Court. It is his business to dispose of the appeal before him and he cannot divest himself of his powers as an appellate Court merely because he either misunderstands or disapproves of certain decided cases. The appreciation of rulings though a necessary part of his equipment is of less importance than a thorough knowledge of the Code by which he is bound, 15 Cr. L.J. 433 at 437=24 Ind. Cas. 573. When there is an illegality the case should be reported to the High Court and it must be left to the High Court to determine whether the illegality requires correction, Weir II, 564. A case should not be reported to the High Court merely because the conviction is bad on the merits unless it is very clear that the conviction is manifestly wrong and there is no reasonable doubt about it. The power of the High Court to interfere on the merits is undoubted but it will not exercise its power so as virtually to give a right of appeal and the reporting officers must bear in mind the limitation which exists in practice as regards the exercise of powers under this section, 49 A. 554. The mere fact that a different conclusion might have been come to on the evidence is no sufficient ground for interference, 28 Cr. L.J. 946=105 Ind. Cas. 638. See also 33 M.L.T. 15=28 Cr. L.J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 943; 26 M.L.J. 160; 22 C. 998; 4 Bom. L.R. 686; Weir II, 255. Cases of acquittal are not to be reported under this section to the High Court, 24 A. 346; 15 M. 36 and such a reference cannot be entertained by the High Court, 25 A. 128, where a reporting officer could himself dispose of the matter no report should be made to the High Court, Ratanlal 290. When reporting to the High Court there should be a definite recommendation by the reporting officer, 27 A. 23. Where there has been a conviction and substantial sentence also was passed, the High Court will not entertain a reference under this section from the District Magistrate on the ground that the trial was irregular and therefore the accused should be re-tried, 23 Cr. L.J. 757=103 Ind. Cas. 837. A brief abstract of the case and the grounds on which the reference is made should be stated, 9 Cr. L.J. 502=2 Ind. Cas. 159. A reference should be made in the form prescribed by the High Court Circulars, 30 C.W.N. 646=26 Cr. L.J. 1055=87 Ind. Cas. 975.

move the Public Prosecutor, but that is not enough. The sanction of the Local Government should also be obtained, not necessarily before filing such application, but before proceeding with it. The power of revision in such cases is useful and must be exercised to prevent judicial idiosyncrasies working harm, 26 Cr. L.J. 177=83 Ind. Cas. 881. Where a District Magistrate is of opinion that an order of acquittal is wrong and should be set aside, he should request the Local Government to prefer an appeal to the High Court under S. 417 supra, and should not report the case for the orders of the High Court under this section, Mad. Cr. Rules. of Pr. Rule. 274. And such reports stand in no higher footing than one by a private prosecutor for revision, 56 C. 924, following. 43 C. 703. This section authorises a District Magistrate to report to the High Court on examination of the records of the proceedings of inferior Courts, but such reports should only be made in cases where the proceedings are not in themselves the subject of a revision or appeal pending before him; his duty is therefore to pass a judicial order. This section is not intended to enable the District Magistrate to get the opinion of the High Court on a question of law arising in a case pending before him or to transfer the decision of a difficult case pending before him to the High Court, 3 Cr. The purity of the police force is a matter of vital importance to the community and a case of corruption by a police officer cannot be passed over with a light sentence. On the report of the District Magistrate two months' simple imprisonment was enhanced to ten months' rigorous imprisonment by the High Court under this section, 10 Cr. L.J. 217. A District Magistrate is not competent to make a reference under this section for enhancement of sentence passed by a Sessions Judge, 25 Cr. L.J. 928=81 Ind. Cas. 644; 5 Lah. 11. Ordinarily the High Court will not entertain a reference the object of which is to have an order of acquittal passed by an inferior Court set aside, 5 Lah. 16. A District Magistrate making a reference to the High Court under this section has no power to take evidence and if he has power, it is only for the purpose of recommendation to the High Court and the evidence so recorded could not form the basis of an order by the High Court, for example, to award maintenance for children under S. 488, infra, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 430. When a revision petition filed by the accused was dismissed without notice to the public prosecutor that fact will not preclude a reference by the District Magistrate for enhancement of sentence. The order dismissing the revision by the accused dealt with the legality of the conviction and could not be construed as an adjudication on the adequacy or otherwise of the sentence, 26 Cr. L.J. 583=85 Ind. Cas. 727. A Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate is not bound to refer every case in which he detects an error to the High Court. It is only discretionary, 23 W.R. (Cr.) 30. No report is to be made where the recommendation would be merely to alter the conviction of an offence into another cognate offence, 9 C. 847. A reference should not be made to the High Court under this section merely for obtaining the opinion of the High Court on a question of law especially when the referring officer does not really dissent from the conclusion of the trial Court, 47 A. 409. Nor can a report be made by a District Magistrate after taking fresh evidence, 12 A.L.J. 461. When on examining the records a District Magistrate finds that a Subordinate Magistrate has wrongly decided a question of jurisdiction he is not entitled to quash the proceedings in the exercise of his revisional powers but the proper procedure for him is to report the case to the High Court under this section after giving notice to the parties and giving them an opportunity of being heard, 49 C.L.J. 62. A District Magistrate is not competent to refer to the High Court a point of law nor can he transfer the decision of a difficult case on his file to the High Court, 15 Cr. L.J. 472=25 Ind. Cas. 352. In an appeal under S. 515 infra, before the District Magistrate, the Magistrate cannot make a reference under this section to the High Court ostensibly because he doubts the correctness of certain rulings of the High Court. It is his business to dispose of the appeal before him and he cannot divest himself of his powers as an appellate Court merely because he either misunderstands or disapproves of certain decided cases. The appreciation of rulings though a necessary part of his equipment is of less importance than a thorough knowledge of the Code by which he is bound, 15 Cr. L.J. 485 at 487=25 Ind. Cas. 573. When there is an illegality the case should be reported to the High Court and it must be left to the High Court to determine whether the illegality requires correction, Weir II, 564. A case should not be reported to the High Court merely because the conviction is bad on the merits unless it is very clear that the conviction is manifestly wrong and there is no reasonable doubt about it. The power of the High Court to interfere on the merits is undoubted but it will not exercise its power so as virtually to give a right of appeal and the reporting officers must bear in mind the limitation which exists in practice as regards the exercise of powers under this section, 49 A. 551. The mere fact that a different conclusion might have been come to on the evidence is no sufficient ground for interference, 28 Cr. L.J. 946=103 Ind. Cas. 658. See also 33 M.L.T. 15=28 Cr. L.J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 943; 26 M.L.J. 160; 22 C. 998; 4 Bom. L.R. 686; Weir II, 235. Cases of acquittal are not to be reported under this section to the High Court, 24 A. 346; 15 M. 36 and such a reference cannot be entertained by the High Court, 25 A. 128, where a reporting officer could himself dispose of the matter no report should be made to the High Court, Ratanlal 290. When reporting to the High Court there should be a definite recommendation by the reporting officer, 27 A. 25. Where there has been a conviction and substantial sentence also was passed, the High Court will not entertain a reference under this section from the District Magistrate on the ground that the trial was irregular and therefore the accused should be re-tried, 28 Cr. L.J. 757=103 Ind. Cas. 837. A brief abstract of the case and the grounds on which the reference is made should be stated, 9 Cr. L.J. 502=2 Ind. Cas. 159. A reference should be made in the form prescribed by the High Court Circulars, 30 C.W.N. 646=28 Cr. L.J. 1053=87 Ind. Cas. 975.

Or otherwise.—These words are put in this section to meet exceptional cases. Where the Sessions Judge at first refused to make a reference but he did so subsequently when certain new facts were brought to his notice, the reference made by the Judge is with jurisdiction and is in proper form, 29 Bom. L.R. 480=28 Cr. L.J. 896=104 Ind. Cas. 912.

revision with a finding of fact when the occasion requires it and it will do so when it is satisfied that the finding of the lower Court is manifestly erroneous and a miscarriage of justice would result from it if left uncorrected, 17 C.W.N. 379=16 C.L.J. 453=13 Cr. L.J. 897=17 Ind. Cas. 993. In the ordinary course of things, findings of fact are accepted by the Revisional Court as binding upon it. But revision would be an idle farce if the Revisional Court had not the power, which has been exercised a hundred, possibly a thousand times throughout the High Courts in India, to look into the evidence itself and see if those findings can be justified by what appears upon the record. A Revisional Court does not decide the balance of credibility between two conflicting sets of witnesses or two conflicting issues of fact which are either perverse or have been arrived at contrary to well-established principles of law. Much injustice may be done by applying to criminal proceedings the precise and pedantic requirements of Civil Procedure. There is no such language as "pleadings" in a Criminal Court, 48 A. 64; 39 C.L.J. 236=23 Cr. L.J. 1258=82 Ind. Cas. 266; 23 Cr. L.J. 1368=82 Ind. Cas. 760; 25 Cr. L.J. 435=77 Ind. Cas. 723. It is not generally speaking within the function of the High Court to go behind the findings of fact, in revision, 27 Cr. L.J. 74=91 Ind. Cas. 250; 29 Cr. L.J. 86=106 Ind. Cas. 678. It is not the practice in the High Court to interfere in revision merely because the evidence has not been properly appreciated by the trial Court. The law does not contemplate that a revision case is to be argued as if it were a criminal appeal on the facts, 28 Cr. L.J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 843. Ordinarily the High Court will not in revision go into facts in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness and propriety of the findings arrived at by the lower Court. The conclusions of the lower Court may be wrong; it may be that the High Court trying the case, on appeal may have come to a different conclusion but the Legislature has made the lower Courts the Courts of appeal and the High Court cannot admit a second appeal in a criminal matter on the ground of misappreciation of evidence, Ratanlal 177. But in exceptional cases it is not only open to the High Court to examine the evidence but it is its duty to do so as the High Court is not debarred from going into the evidence, 26 Cr. L.J. 113=83 Ind. Cas. 673; 26 Cr. L.J. 393=84 Ind. Cas. 937. There is ample authority for the position that the High Court as a Court of Revision may re-examine the evidence if there are prima facie grounds for so doing, more especially when the accused has been given a non-appealable sentence and has no means of vindicating his character except by way of revision, 19 Cr. L.J. 386=43 Ind. Cas. 1002; 23 C.W.N. 438, or when the interests of justice require such interference, eg, where the dispute between the parties is purely of a Civil nature and the conviction had is one of cheating, 28 Cr. L.J. 834=104 Ind. Cas. 450; 29 Cr. L.J. 86=106 Ind. Cas. 678; or where there is no evidence on record to sustain a finding or an order, 9 C.W.N. 829, 5 C.W.N. 411; 34 C. 840; 25 M.L.T. 173; 2 A.L.J. 53; 9 L.B.R. 203, or when there is a substantial error of law to justify interference, 28 Cr. L.J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 813; 27 Cr. L.J. 74=91 Ind. Cas. 250; 29 Cr. L.J. 86=103 Ind. Cas. 678.

The circumstances which will justify the interference of the High Court have not been and cannot be laid down with precision, while the Judges have repeatedly held that only when exceptional grounds exist, the High Court ought to interfere. The decided cases show, that no hard and fast rule can be laid down, but when, in the interests of justice the High Court's intervention became necessary it was not refused, 47 M. 722. The proper function of a Court of Revision is to see that subordinate Courts do conduct cases with fairness and propriety and that nothing is done on the trial of an accused which may reasonably lead to the impression that the accused has not received fair treatment or impartial and fair trial, 21 Cr. L.J. 289=55 Ind. Cas. 337; the High Court when exercising its revisional jurisdiction is to act only as a Court of justice which will interfere only when the order sought to be revised is unjust and not as an academy of law, 30 Cr. L.J. 220 (?) = 113 Ind. Cas. 911. The object of revisional jurisdiction is to confer upon superior Courts a kind of parental or supervisory jurisdiction to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of treatment which has resulted in injury to the due maintenance of order or some undeserved hardship to individuals, 23 Cr. L.J. 446=100 Ind. Cas. 567. No useful purpose can be achieved by a critical examination of the judgments of Subordinate Courts and it is safer to ascertain a broad and comprehensive view of the facts and then to ascertain whether there has been a failure of justice. This was the course adopted in 2 C.L.J. 524. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court as a Court of Revision is not to inquire into the reasons given by the lower Court to interfere in revision, 2 Pat 708. Mere illegality of procedure of the lower Court is not a ground for interference under this section unless it is proved that the accused had suffered a hardship through such illegality, 27 Cr. L.J. 475=93 Ind. Cas. 699; 27 Cr. L.J. 727=93 Ind. Cas. 55. The High Court will not interfere in revision where the illegality in the trial is purely technical and has not prejudiced the petitioner, 27 Cr. L.J. 538=93 Ind. Cas. 1034. The High Court is not bound to interfere in revision with an order under S. 562, infra, even in a case where it is illegal, 27 Cr. L.J. 624=93 Ind. Cas. 369. The powers of the High Court under this section are wholly discretionary and in 28 B. 533 at 566, Jenkins, C.J., observes thus: "If we have been entrusted with the responsibility of a wide discretion, we should be the last to attempt to fetter that discretion, and when it is argued that judicial decisions have, deprived us of the power that the Legislature has given us, I recall the words of an eminent English Judge, 'I desire to repeat' he said, 'what I have said before, that this controlling power of this Court is a discretionary power and must be exercised with regard to all the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly. For myself I say emphatically that this discretion ought not to be crystallised, as it would become in course of time, by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion, which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like all other judicial discretions ought, so far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free, so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case.' These weighty words appear to me to breathe the spirit that should guide us in the exercise of our discretionary power of revision. This may perhaps increase our responsibility and add to our labours, but no one would shrink the one or grudge the other." The power of revision is to be exercised in exceptional cases and as a last resort after all other available remedies have been exhausted. It is essentially a discretionary power of control not to be crystallised under hard and fast rules, but to be left untrammelled by the exigencies of each case, 9 Cr. L.J. 211=1 Ind. Cas. 238, relying on 28 B. 533 22 C. 998. See also 26 Cr. L.J. 466=85 Ind. Cas. 146 and 26 Cr. L.J. 1101=88 Ind. Cas. 189. "Discretion" says Lord Mansfield when applied to Courts of Justice, 'means sound discretion guided by law. It must be governed by rule, and not by human caprice. It must not be arbitrary, vague and fanciful but legal and regular.' The controlling power of the High Court in revision is by its terms entirely discretionary and the Court is not bound in revision to set aside a conviction in every case in which an illegality has been committed especially where no prejudice is shown to have been caused by such illegality, 4 Cr. L.J. 73=1336 P.R. (Cr.) 5, followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 905=111 Ind. Cas. 665. It is not imperative on the High Court to set aside every void order which comes to its notice when the person aggrieved does not move it to do so, 7 Cr. L.J. 422=4 L.B.R. 143. When a point is not taken in the Court of first instance or in the appellate Court it has been the rule of the High Court not to interfere in revision unless a miscarriage of justice has been occasioned, 21 Cr. L.J. 56=84 Ind. Cas. 496. Absence of evidence necessary to support a finding or order of the lower Court is a ground for revision, 9 C.W.N. 829; 5 C.W.N. 411; 34 C. 840; 25 M.L.T. 175; 2 A.L.J. 53; 9 L.B.R. 208. Interference in revision in criminal cases is purely discretionary and the Court will refuse to interfere in belated applications for revision as the finality of criminal orders should not be left in doubt for a long time, 13 Cr. L.J. 531=15 Ind. Cas. 893. Although the High Court has a very wide discretion under this section when it is satisfied that a conviction had is bad in law, it is not necessarily bound to go into the question whether on the facts found a conviction for a lesser offence might or might not be recorded, 41 A. 587. Although it has been the long practice of the High Court not to interfere on facts in revision yet it is not an absolute rule, 20 A.L.J. 276; 9 Bom. L.R. 703; 8 B. 197; 23 Cr. L.J. 1073=81 Ind. Ordinarily the High Court will not in revision go into facts in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness and propriety of the findings arrived at by the lower Court. The conclusions of the lower Court may be wrong; it may be that the High Court trying the case, on appeal may have come to a different conclusion but the Legislature has made the lower Courts the Courts of appeal and the High Court cannot admit a second appeal in a criminal matter on the ground of misappreciation of evidence, Ratanlal 177. But in exceptional cases it is not only open to the High Court to examine the evidence but it is its duty to do so as the High Court is not debarred from going into the evidence, 26 Cr. L.J. 113=83 Ind. Cas. 673; 26 Cr. L.J. 393=83 Ind. Cas. 937. There is ample authority for the position that the High Court as a Court of Revision may re-examine the evidence if there are prima facie grounds for so doing, more especially when the accused has been given a non-appealable sentence and has no means of vindicating his character except by way of revision, 19 Cr. L.J. 666=43 Ind. Cas. 1002; 23 C.W.N. 439, or when the interests of justice require such interference, e.g., where the dispute between the parties is purely of a Civil nature and the conviction had is one of cheating, 23 Cr. L.J. 831=103 Ind. Cas. 350; 29 Cr. L.J. 86=106 Ind. Cas. 678; or where there is no evidence on record to sustain a finding or an order, 9 C.W.N. 829; 5 C.W.N. 411; 34 C. 330; 23 M.L.T. 173; 2 A.L.J. 53; 9 L.B.R. 203, or when there is a substantial error of law to justify interference, 28 Cr. L.J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 913; 27 Cr. L.J. 74=91 Ind. Cas. 250; 29 Cr. L.J. 86=103 Ind. Cas. 678.

The circumstances which will justify the interference of the High Court have not been and cannot be laid down with precision, while the Judges have repeatedly held that only when exceptional grounds exist, the High Court ought to interfere. The decided cases show, that no hard and fast rule can be laid down, but when, in the interests of justice the High Court's intervention became necessary it was not refused, 47 M. 722. The proper function of a Court of Revision is to see that subordinate Courts do conduct cases with fairness and propriety and that nothing is done on the trial of an accused which may reasonably lead to the impression that the accused has not received fair treatment or impartial and fair trial, 21 Cr. L.J. 289=55 Ind. Cas. 337; the High Court when exercising its revisional jurisdiction is to act only as a Court of justice which will interfere only when the order sought to be revised is unjust and not as an academy of law, 30 Cr. L.J. 220 (?) = 113 Ind. Cas. 911. The object of revisional jurisdiction is to confer upon superior Courts a kind of parental or supervisory jurisdiction to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of treatment which has resulted in injury to the due maintenance of order or some undeserved hardship to individuals, 23 Cr. L.J. 448=103 Ind. Cas. 567. No useful purpose can be achieved by a critical examination of the judgments of Subordinate Courts and it is safer to ascertain a broad and comprehensive view of the facts and then to ascertain whether there has been a failure of justice. This was the course adopted in 2 C.L.J. 524. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court as a Court of Revision is not to inquire into the reasons given by the lower Court to interfere in revision, 2 Pat. 708. Mere illegality of procedure of the lower Court is not a ground for interference under this section unless it is proved that the accused had suffered a hardship through such illegality, 27 Cr. L.J. 475-93 Ind. Cas. 699; 27 Cr. L.J. 727-93 Ind. Cas. 55. The High Court will not interfere in revision where the illegality in the trial is purely technical and has not prejudiced the petitioner, 27 Cr. L.J. 558-93 Ind. Cas. 1054. The High Court is not bound to interfere in revision with an order under S. 562, infra, even in a case where it is illegal, 27 Cr. L.J. 624-94 Ind. Cas. 368. The powers of the High Court under this section are wholly discretionary and in 28 B. 533 at 566, Jenkins, C.J., observes thus: "If we have been entrusted with the responsibility of a wide discretion, we should be the last to attempt to fetter that discretion, and when it is argued that judicial decisions have, deprived us of the power that the Legislature has given us, I recall the words of an eminent English Judge, 'I desire to repeat' he said, 'what I have said before, that this controlling power of this Court is a discretionary power and must be exercised with regard to all the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly. For myself I say emphatically that this discretion ought not to be crystallised, as it would become in course of time, by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion, which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like all other judicial discretions ought, so far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free, so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case' These weighty words appear to me to breathe the spirit that should guide us in the exercise of our discretionary power of revision. This may perhaps increase our responsibility and add to our labours, but no one would shrink the one or grudge the other." The power of revision is to be exercised in exceptional cases and as a last resort after all other available remedies have been exhausted. It is essentially a discretionary power of control not to be crystallised under hard and fast rules, but to be left untrammelled by the exigencies of each case, 9 Cr. L.J. 211-1 Ind. Cas. 239, relying on 28 B. 533 22 C. 998. See also 26 Cr. L.J. 466-85 Ind. Cas. 145 and 26 Cr. L.J. 1101-88 Ind. Cas. 189. 'Discretion' says Lord Mansfield when applied to Courts of Justice, 'means sound discretion guided by law. It must be governed by rule, and not by human caprice. It must not be arbitrary, vague and fanciful but legal and regular.' The controlling power of the High Court in revision is by its terms entirely discretionary and the Court is not bound in revision to set aside a conviction in every case in which an illegality has been committed especially where no prejudice is shown to have been caused by such illegality, 4 Cr. L.J. 75-1306 P.R. (Cr.) 5, followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 905-111 Ind. Cas. 685. It is not imperative on the High Court to set aside every void order which comes to its notice when the person aggrieved does not move it to do so, 7 Cr. L.J. 422-4 L.B.R. 143. When a point is not taken in the Court of first instance or in the appellate Court it has been the rule of the High Court not to interfere in revision unless a miscarriage of justice has been occasioned, 21 Cr. L.J. 56-54 Ind. Cas. 528. Absence of evidence necessary to support a finding or order of the lower Court is a ground for revision, 9 C.W.N. 829; 5 C.W.N. 411; 34 C. 840; 25 M.L.T. 175; 2 A.L.J. 53; 9 L.B.R. 398. Interference in revision in criminal cases is purely discretionary and the Court will not interfere in belated applications for revision as the finality of criminal orders left in doubt for a long time, 13 Cr. L.J. 531-15 Ind. Cas. 893. Although the High Court has a very wide discretion under this section when it is satisfied that a conviction has been obtained in bad law, it is not necessarily bound to go into the question whether on the facts the conviction for a lesser offence might or might not be recorded, 41 A. 867. It has been the long practice of the High Court not to interfere on facts in absolute rule, 20 A.L.J. 276; 9 Bom. L.R. 703; 8 B. 197; 24 Cr. Cas. 897; 25 Cr. L.J. 274-76 Ind. Cas. 870; 25 Cr. L.J. 1028-84 Ind. Cas. 476-72 Ind. Cas. 892; 24 Cr. L.J. 203-71 Ind. Cas. 667; 26 Cr. L.J. 527-85 Ind. Cas. 357; 22 L.W. 631.

revision with a finding of fact when the occasion requires it and it will do so when it is satisfied that the finding of the lower Court is manifestly erroneous and a miscarriage of justice would result from it if left uncorrected, 17 C.W.N. 378=15 C.L.J. 433=13 Cr. L.J. 897=17 Ind. Cas. 993. In the ordinary course of things, findings of fact are accepted by the Revisional Court as binding upon it. But revision would be an idle farce if the Revisional Court had not the power, which has been exercised a hundred, possibly a thousand times throughout the High Courts in India, to look into the evidence itself and see if those findings can be justified by what appears upon the record. A Revisional Court does not decide the balance of credibility between two conflicting sets of witnesses or two conflicting issues of fact which are either perverse or have been arrived at contrary to well-established principles of law. Much injustice may be done by applying to criminal proceedings the precise and pedantic requirements of Civil Procedure. There is no such language as "pleadings" in a Criminal Court, 46 A. 64; 39 C.L.J. 236=23 Cr. L.J. 1258=82 Ind. Cas. 266; 25 Cr. L.J. 1363=82 Ind. Cas. 780; 25 Cr. L.J. 435=77 Ind. Cas. 723. It is not generally speaking within the function of the High Court to go behind the findings of fact, in revision, 27 Cr. L.J. 74=91 Ind. Cas. 250; 29 Cr. L.J. 85=106 Ind. Cas. 678. It is not the practice in the High Court to interfere in revision merely because the evidence has not been properly appreciated by the trial Court. The law does not contemplate that a revision case is to be argued as if it were a criminal appeal on the facts, 28 Cr. L.J. 207=93 Ind. Cas. 643. Ordinarily the High Court will not in revision go into facts in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness and propriety of the findings arrived at by the lower Court. The conclusions of the lower Court may be wrong; it may be that the High Court trying the case, on appeal may have come to a different conclusion but the Legislature has made the lower Courts the Courts of appeal and the High Court cannot admit a second appeal in a criminal matter on the ground of misappreciation of evidence, Ratanlal 177. But in exceptional cases it is not only open to the High Court to examine the evidence but it is its duty to do so as the High Court is not debarred from going into the evidence, 26 Cr. L.J. 113=83 Ind. Cas. 673; 26 Cr. L.J. 393=84 Ind. Cas. 937. There is ample authority for the position that the High Court as a Court of Revision may re-examine the evidence if there are prima facie grounds for so doing, more especially when the accused has been given a non-appealable sentence and has no means of vindicating his character except by way of revision, 19 Cr. L.J. 666=43 Ind. Cas. 1002; 23 C.W.N. 439, or when the interests of justice require such interference, s.g., where the dispute between the parties is purely of a Civil nature and the conviction had is one of cheating, 23 Cr. L.J. 834=101 Ind. Cas. 450; 29 Cr. L.J. 85=106 Ind. Cas. 678; or where there is no evidence on record to sustain a finding or an order, 9 C.W.N. 829; 5 C.W.N. 411; 34 C. 850; 23 M.L.T. 173; 2 A.L.J. 53; 9 L.B.R. 203, or when there is a substantial error of law to justify interference, 23 Cr. L.J. 207=93 Ind. Cas. 913; 27 Cr. L.J. 74=91 Ind. Cas. 250; 29 Cr. L.J. 85=103 Ind. Cas. 678.

Cas. 337; the High Court when exercising its revisional jurisdiction is to act only as a Court of justice which will interfere only when the order sought to be revised is unjust and not as an academy of law, 30 Cr. L.J. 226 (2)=113 Ind. Cas. 911. The object of revisional jurisdiction is to confer upon superior Courts a kind of parental or supervisory jurisdiction to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of treatment which has resulted in injury to the due maintenance of order or some undeserved hardship to individuals, 23 Cr. It is not imperative on the High Court to set aside every void order which comes to its notice when the person aggrieved does not move it to do so, 7 Cr. L.J. 422=4 L.B.R. 143. When a point is not taken in the Court of first instance or in the appellate Court it has been the rule of the High Court not to interfere in revision unless a miscarriage of justice has been occasioned, 21 Cr. Absence of evidence necessary to support a finding or order of the lower Court is a ground for revision, 9 C.W.N. 829, 5 C.W.N. 411; 34 C. 840; 25 M.L.T. 178; 2 A.L.J. 83; 9 L.B.R. 208. Interference in revision in criminal cases is purely discretionary and the Court will refuse to interfere in belated applications for revision as the finality of criminal orders should not be left in doubt for a long time, 13 Cr. Although the High Court has a very wide discretion under this section when it is satisfied that a conviction had in bad in law, it is not necessarily bound to go into the question whether on the facts found a conviction for a lesser offence might or might not be recorded, 41 A. 587. Although it has been the long practice of the High Court not to interfere on facts in revision yet it is not an absolute rule, 20 A.L.J. 278; 9 Bom. L.R. 703; 8 B. 197; 25 Cr. L.J. 1973=81 Ind. Cas. 897; 25 Cr. L.J. 273=76 Ind. Cas. 870; 25 Cr. L.J. 1026=81 Ind. Cas. 802; 24 Cr. L.J. 476=72 Ind. Cas. 892; 24 Cr. L.J. 203=71 Ind. Cas. 667; 26 Cr. L.J. 878=84 Ind. Cas. 669; 25 Cr. L.J. 527=85 Ind. Cas. 367; 22 L.W. 831. Objection

e.g., misjoinder, can be raised in revision for the first time even though no objection was taken in the Courts below. If the trial is bad no question of prejudice arises and there is no obligation cast on an accused person when the trial is illegal to prove prejudice, 25 Cr. L.J. 807=81 Ind. Cas. 343. It is necessary in revision to see whether there has been any error in the law, any irregularity, any abuse or failure to exercise judicial discretion which would justify interference in revision, 23 A. 249. Ordinarily a finding of fact cannot be interfered with in revision. 14 Cr. L.J. 565=21 Ind. Cas. 467; 27 Cr. L.J. 1233=93 Ind. Cas. 47; 27 Cr. L.J. 74=91 Ind. Cas. 250. Where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate of an offence when the facts proved disclosed the commission of an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the High Court in revision set aside the conviction and directed a commitment, 30 C.W.N. 840=43 C.L.J. 113=27 Cr. L.J. 871=96 Ind. Cas. 119, where 5 C. 717 is referred to. Similarly in 6 M. 396, the High Court interfered in revision and ordered a retrial in a case against a Head Constable of many years service who was convicted on a summary trial of criminal intimidation in preventing a person giving evidence of a serious crime holding that the case was not a fit one for summarily depriving the right of appeal to the accused. But in 30 Cr.L.J. 869=118 Ind. Cas. 312, it was held that where a Railway watchman was convicted of theft of a silver topped stick from a Railway carriage in a summary trial, the trial was held not bad and the reasoning in 6 M. 396 no longer applied since the amendment in, 1923 of S. 414, supra, gave a right of appeal when any sentence of imprisonment is passed.

The object of the Legislature in conferring this revisional jurisdiction is, that superior Courts should have a kind of parental or supervisory jurisdiction to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law irregularities in procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of punishment, 29 Cr. L.J. 446=108 Ind. Cas. 567. Only in cases of (1) of defective investigation, (2) of failure to consider important evidence, (3) of consideration of evidence from a wrong point of view, (4) of contravention of any express provision of law, (5) of conviction upon facts which will not support the same, will the revisionary powers of the High Court be exercised, 31 M. 133 at 135. Absence of evidence on record to support a conviction is good ground for revision, 2 A.L.J. 53=2 Cr. L.J. 22; 11 Cr. L.J. 97=4 Ind. Cas. 978. Power of revision will be exercised when there is a misreading of the documentary evidence and the fundamental errors in principle which vitiate the conduct and disposal of the case, 28 B. 479 at 501. Powers of revision are to be exercised in exceptional cases and as the last resort when all other available remedies have been exhausted, 1884 A.W.N. 293; 22 C. 993; 28 B. 533. Great delay in applying to the High Court for revision will be a ground for not exercising the same, 8 A. 514, and in proper case the High Court may exercise its powers of revision even after the expiry of the sentence, 7 A. 135. Once a revision petition is dismissed on the merits or for default, the rules of justice equity and good conscience require that no other petition of the same matter should be entertained, (1915) M.W.N. 786=15 Cr. L.J. 697=30 Ind. Cas. 743 where 23 M.L.J. 371 is followed. The High Court rarely interferes in revision in pending cases except where it is prima facie vexatious and interference is clearly required to prevent abuse of process of Court 9 Cr. L.J. 151=1 Ind. Cas. 93. If a charge is framed by the Magistrate where none should have been framed it might be said without violence to the language of the Code that the procedure is irregular and the High Court has power to interfere, 23 A.L.J. 21; 25 Cr. L.J. 749=86 Ind. Cas. 294; 39 M. 561. An order passed by a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate under S. 7 of the Indian Extradition Act XV of 1903 is a judicial order and not an executive order and can therefore be revised by the High Court under this section or under S. 561 A, infra, or can be interfered with under S. 491, infra, 31 Bom. L.R. 62 following 7 B.H.C.R. 483; 41 C. 493; 1 Pat. 97 and dissenting from 42 C. 793. The High Court cannot interfere under this section with orders of Village Panchayat Courts established under Act II of 1920, but the remedy is under S. 107 of the Government of India Act under which the High Court can interfere in revision, (1925) M.W.N. 603. The High Court has power to revise the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate under the provisions of the Maintenance Orders Enforcement Act, 1921. The Chief Presidency Magistrate is an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of S. 435, supra, and the revisional powers of the High Court are further declared by S. 107 of the Government of India Act and by the provisions of the Letters Patent, and Act XVIII of 1921, nowhere says that orders by Presidency Magistrate under the Act are final 52 B. 282. Where a youthful offender of fourteen and a half years was illegally sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, under S. 411, I.P.C., and in lieu of this sentence the offender had been ordered to be detained in the Reformatory School, the High Court has jurisdiction in revision to interfere with the order of detention, 25 Cr. L.J. 1312=82 Ind. Cas. 490. It is very difficult for the High Court in revision under this section to interfere with orders passed under S. 110, supra. But when a person is sentenced to imprisonment for failure to furnish security the High Court has to be satisfied that the evidence is of such a character as will support an inference that it is necessary in the interests of public peace and security to send the person to prison or to bind him over, 22 A.L.J. 678=23 Cr. L.J. 1172=82 Ind. Cas. 33. It must be noticed that this section as amended makes no mention of S. 195, supra. Therefore the High Court will take a very wide view of its powers under this section and it would therefore be competent to revise an order made by an appellate authority directing the withdrawal of a complaint under S. 476B, infra. But such power will be exercised only in very exceptional cases, 43 B. 401. Where an Assistant Sessions Judge agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the Jury convicts an accused person and on appeal to the Sessions Judge the conviction is confirmed on the ground that there was no misdirection by the trial Court, a revision does lie against the Sessions Judge's order and in revision the petitioner starts with a heavy onus on him to show that the Sessions Judge had decided wrongly. It is not the intention of the law that the revision should be heard by the High Court as an appeal; if that were the case, there would be no object in giving a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge at all (1923) Pat. 109. The High Court has power to interfere at an interlocutory stage and quash proceedings, ordinarily it will not interfere at an interlocutory stage and quash proceedings but when it appears that on the face of the proceedings that the accused cannot be held guilty, it will interfere to prevent further harassment of the accused, 52 B. 151 at 155; 1 Luck 49; 28 Cr. L.J. 814=104 Ind. Cas. 25; 29 Cr. L.J. 532=109 Ind. Cas. 336. The power of interference should be exercised with great caution and it is only when the allegations of the gravest departure from procedure occur, the High Court takes the conduct of a case out of the hands of a trial Court, 51 M. 84. In 22 C. 131; 26 C. 786; 39 M. 551, the High Court quashed the proceedings after a charge had been framed, while in 38 C. 68; 20 B. 543; 23 Cr. L.J. 429=67 Ind. Cas. 589; 29 Cr. L.J. 1009=112 Ind. Cas. 224, the High Court interfered upon issue of summons to the accused. It is well established that the power of the High Court to take action under this section by quashing proceedings at any stage is undoubted though such power will be exercised only in exceptional cases. The High Court quashed the charge framed against the accused and set aside the proceedings in, 30 Cr. L.J. 162=113 Ind. Cas. 535, following 12 Cr. L.J. 50=8 Ind. Cas. 1161; 23 Cr. L.J. 1040=106 Ind. Cas. 224; 28 Cr. L.J. 755=103 Ind. Cas. 835; 29 Cr. L.J. 1078=112 Ind. Cas. 224. The High Court has power to quash a charge and dismiss a complaint where on the facts proved no offence is disclosed against the accused, 28 Cr. L.J. 1040=106 Ind. Cas. 224; 52 B. 151; 39 M. 561; 23 A.L.J. 21=26 Cr. L.J. 748=86 Ind. Cas. 234. See also 47 M. 722; 25 C. 233; 1852 A.W.N. 102; 14 A.L.J. 851; 16 A.L.J. 433; 21 Cr. L.J. 379=55 Ind. Cas. 839; 39 Cr. L.J. 236=25 Cr. L.J. 1259=92 Ind. Cas. 266; 24 Cr. L.J. 591=73 Ind. Cas. 335; 24 Cr. L.J. 118=71 Ind. Cas. 245; 26 Cr. L.J. 421=85 Ind. Cas. 37; 26 Cr. L.J. 743=86 Ind. Cas. 234; 26 Cr. L.J. 1033=89 Ind. Cas. 181; 26 Cr. L.J. 1303=89 Ind. Cas. 247. The High Court has power to correct an erroneous order under S. 476, infra; where it stated "sanction to prosecute Hugal," the High Court altered it into "make a complaint against Hugal," 27 Cr. L.J. 523=93 Ind. Cas. 937. Suspicion is not sufficient to base a conviction and mere suspicion will not warrant harassment of the suspected person by criminal proceedings and the High Court interfered in revision and quashed proceedings instituted on mere suspicion, 29 Cr. L.J. 532=103 Ind. Cas. 335. Where the Court denied the accused his right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses before charge and framed a charge, the High Court interfered in revision and quashed the charge framed and sent back the case for the cross-examination of the prosecution 49 L.W. 391=25 Cr. L.J. 556=81 Ind. Cas. 44.

Proceedings—The word "Judicial" had been properly omitted in the Code of 1832 and thereby widening the powers of revision of the High Court. Where an illegal order has been passed by a subordinate officer and action is taken by the High Court which involves matters coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope and authority of the Courts, such authority cannot be ousted by the mere ipse dixit of the officer that he was not acting as a judicial officer more particularly when no authority other than as a judicial officer for the action is cited, 7 Cr. L. J. 202 at 203. The omission of sub-section (3) from S. 435, supra, has still more enlarged the powers of the High Court to revise practically all proceedings had under the Code.

Record has been called for by itself.—Power to call for records of inferior Courts is given specially by the provisions of S. 435, supra.

Which has been reported for orders.—The report is made under S. 438, supra, by the Sessions Judge or by the District Magistrate and in special cases by the Additional Sessions Judges also.

Which otherwise comes to its knowledge.—The words are very wide and enable the High Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction unfettered. The intention of the Legislature in framing this section is to make the terms thereof sufficiently wide and comprehensive to cover all cases which were not included in S. 435, supra, where the words used are "or otherwise," 27 B. 84 at 87. A record may be before the High Court on appeal from a conviction and the High Court may and infrequently does act in revision, say, to enhance the sentence, without necessity of calling for the records of the case, under S. 435 supra. See also 13 Bom. L.R. 1183. Although this section gives the High Court power to call for cases not only in judicial information but also which comes to its knowledge, yet in most cases it is the right practice that the Judges should be moved in open Court; publicity is thus secured and a further hearing in open Court of the reason which moves the Government is thus afforded in the interests of the public order or a private party in his right. It is, therefore, desirable that such matters should be made in the required usual manner however wide the powers of Judges may be to interfere on knowledge or otherwise, 16 B. 580 at 582.

May in His Discretion.—"Discretion" says Lord Mansfield when applied to a Court of justice "means sound discretion guided by law." It must be governed by rule and not by humour or caprice. It must not be arbitrary, vague and fanciful but legal and regular. The following passage from Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, clearly brings out what is meant by "discretion." "Whereas, in a multitude of statutes, something is left to be done according to the discretion of the authority on whom the power of doing it is conferred, the discretion must be exercised honestly and in the spirit of the statute, 'may in his discretion' means according to the rules of reason and justice, not private opinion; according to law and not humour; it is to be, not arbitrary, vague and fanciful but legal and regular, to be exercised not capriciously but on judicial grounds and for substantive reasons. And it must be exercised within the limits to which an honest man competent to the discharge of his office ought to confine himself, that is, within the limits and for the objects intended by the Legislature. These dicta may be summed up in the statement of Lord Esher, 'that the discretion must be exercised without taking into account any reason which is not a legal one. If people who have to exercise a public duty by exercising the discretion take into account matters which the Courts consider not to be proper for the guidance of their discretion, then in the eye of the law they have not exercised their discretion.' The discretion of the Court is not arbitrary, but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of appeal, See, S. 22 of Eg. Relief Act, I of 1877. Interference is discretionary even where the Magistrate's order is illegal. The party aggrieved must show prejudice, for the High Court to interfere in revision. See on this point the weighty observations of Jenkins, C.J., in 23 B. 333 at 566 noted above at p. 811. The word "may" can only be used in the section and its use is not conclusive, 13 Cr. L. J. 235=23 Ind. Cas. 493. When a point was never taken in the Court of first instance or before the appellate Court on appeal the High Court as a rule will not interfere in revision on that ground unless there has been a miscarriage of justice, 21 Cr. L. J. 96=54 Ind. Cas. 498.

Exercise any of the Powers conferred on a Court of Appeal.—S 423 supra, enumerates the powers of the appellate Court and in 6 A. 40 at 42 it was contended that those powers were confined to cases where there has been an acquittal or conviction, and there must be the same limitations to the High Court when it exercises the powers of revision under this section. This contention was overruled as this section mentions the words "in the case of any proceeding" which are wide and comprehensive enough to cover a case in which a man has been improperly discharged. The decision in 6 A. 40 was followed in 36 C. 995, where it was held that it was not necessary that there should be a right of appeal in order that the High Court may exercise its revisional powers conferred by this section. The High Court when exercising powers of revision is also entitled to make any amendment or any incidental or consequential order that may be just or proper as such a power is given to the appellate Court by S. 423 (1) (d), 27 A. 415; 36 C. 41; 5 C. L.J. 229. The High Court can under this section direct a committal of the accused to the Court of Session for an offence prima facie made out exclusively triable by a Court of Session, when setting aside a conviction had, 30 C.W.N. 840 following 5 C. 717. This section confers on the High Court all the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by S. 423, supra, and one of these powers is to direct an accused person to be committed for trial after setting aside the order of discharge passed by the lower Court, 85 M.L.J. 674—28 L.W. 651, following 15 C. 608; 6 A. 43; 27 B. 84. The powers that a Court of revision has under the Code are confined to the powers of an appellate Court and S. 423 (2) supra says that the Court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of a Jury until the Court is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a mis-direction by the Judge or to a mis-understanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by the Judge. So the High Court in revision cannot interfere with the verdict of the Jury except on the grounds mentioned in S. 423 (2) supra, 30 Cr. L.J. 622 (2)=116 Ind. Cas. 297. Similarly the High Court has power under this section to order the detention of a youthful offender in a Reformatory and it is not the intention of the Legislature to limit the exercise of this power merely to a case which comes before the High Court on appeal, 30 Bom. L.R. 932=29 Cr. L.J. 1016=112 Ind. Cas. 334. It is contended that none of the sections specified in this section gives the High Court power to set aside or quash proceedings in a pending trial. The answer is simple. The sections dealing with the powers of a Court of appeal necessarily deal with those orders only, from which under the Code there is an appeal provided. With reference to such orders, the sections lay down the powers of a Court of appeal. Ex hypothesi the revisional powers of the High Court are invoked when no right of appeal exists and although in some cases, the High Court may by exercising the powers conferred on a Court of appeal be able to correct an error it does not follow, having regard to the variety of orders or proceedings which it may be called on to revise or deal with in its revisional jurisdiction, that it can by exercising those powers only redress a wrong or do complete justice. In other words S. 439 does not say, that the High Court shall exercise only those powers that are conferred on a Court of appeal. But on the other hand, it enacts that among the powers possessed by the High Court, are the powers conferred on an appellate Court. Sections dealing with the powers of an appellate Court necessarily describe and define the powers of the Court, with reference to orders that are appealable. The Legislature in enumerating the powers of the Court of appeal had before its mind only a certain class of orders and in the nature of things that enumeration cannot be found complete or exhaustive, when the Court is called on to deal with orders of a different kind, orders not in the contemplation of the Legislature when it was defining the powers of a Court of appeal, 47 M. 722. S. 426 deals with suspension of sentence pending appeal and releasing the appellant on bail. This power can be exercised in revision by the High Court. S. 427 refers to arrest of accused pending appeal against acquittal and S. 428 deals with power of taking further evidence or directing it to be taken by a Magistrate. S. 533 deals with power to direct tender of pardon to approver. These powers are expressly conferred on the High Court under this section. In cases of difference of opinion the procedure contained in S. 429, supra, hearing before a third Judge, is made applicable. The new sub-section (5A) to S. 345, supra, empowers the High Court in revision to allow any person to compound an offence which he is legally competent to compound, 30 Cr. L.J. 860 118 Ind. Cas. 63. The decisions in 37 A. 127; 43 C. 1143; 39 M. 604; 18 C.W.N. 1212; 29 M.L.J. 521; 42 A. 474 which took a different view are no longer law.

Proceedings.—The word "Judicial" had been properly omitted in the Code of 1883 and thereby widening the powers of revision of the High Court. Where an illegal order has been passed by a subordinate officer and action is taken by the High Court which involves matters coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope and authority of the Courts, such authority cannot be ousted by the mere ipse dixit of the officer that he was not acting as a judicial officer more particularly when no authority other than as a judicial officer for the action is cited, 7 Cr. L.J. 202 at 204. The omission of sub-section (3) from S. 435, supra, has still more enlarged the powers of the High Court to revise practically all proceedings had under the Code.

Record has been called for by itself.—Power to call for records of inferior Courts is given specially by the provisions of S. 435, supra.

Which has been reported for orders.—The report is made under S. 435, supra, by the Sessions Judge or by the District Magistrate and in special cases by the Additional Sessions Judges also.

Exercise any of the Powers conferred on a Court of Appeal—S 423 supra, enumerates the powers of the appellate Court and in 6 A. 40 at 42 it was contended that those powers were confined to cases where there has been an acquittal or conviction, and there must be the same limitations to the High Court when it exercises the power of revision under this section. This contention was overruled as this section mentions the words "in the case of any proceeding" which are wide and comprehensive enough to cover a case in which a man has been improperly discharged. The decision in 6 A. 40 was followed in 36 C. 993, where it was held that it was not necessary that there should be a right of appeal in order that the High Court may exercise its revisional powers conferred by this section. The High Court when exercising powers of revision is also entitled to make any amendment or any incidental or consequential order that may be just or proper as such a power is given to the appellate Court by S. 423 (1) (d), 27 A. 415; 36 C. 41; 5 C.L.J. 229. The High Court can under this section direct a committal of the accused to the Court of Session for an offence prima facie made out exclusively triable by a Court of Session, when setting aside a conviction had, 30 C.W.N. 850 following 5 C. 717. This section confers on the High Court all the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by S. 423, supra, and one of those powers is to direct an accused person to be committed for trial after setting aside the order of discharge passed by the lower Court, 35 M.L.J. 674—28 L.W. 631, following 15 C. 808; 6 A. 43; 27 B. 83. The powers that a Court of revision has under the Code are confined to the powers of an appellate Court and S. 423 (2) supra says that the Court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of a Jury until the Court is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a mis-direction by the Judge or to a mis-understanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by the Judge. So the High Court in revision cannot interfere with the verdict of the Jury except on the grounds mentioned in S. 423 (2) supra, 30 Cr. L.J. 822 (2)—116 Ind. Cas. 297. Similarly the High Court has power under this section to order the detention of a youthful offender in a Reformatory and it is not the intention of the Legislature to limit the exercise of this power merely to a case which comes before the High Court on appeal, 30 Bom. L.R. 932—29 Cr. L.J. 1018—112 Ind. Cas. 344. It is contended that none of the sections specified in this section gives the High Court power to set aside or quash proceedings in a pending trial. The answer is simple. The sections dealing with the powers of a Court of appeal necessarily deal with those orders only, from which under the Code there is an appeal provided. The new sub-section (5A) to S. 345, supra, empowers the High Court in revision to allow any person to compound an offence which he is legally competent to compound, 27 Cr. L.J. 822—118 Ind. Cas. 63. The decisions in 37 A. 127; 43 C. 1143; 33 M. 674; 18 C.W.N. 1217; M.L.J. 821; 42 A. 478 which took a different view are no longer law.

Revision against acquittal.—It has been laid down in a long series of cases what should be the guiding principle to be acted upon by the High Court in dealing with the applications for revision against acquittal. The principle has been clearly laid down by Jenkins, C. J., in 42 C. 612 upon a review of the practice in almost all the High Courts in India and that decision has been followed since in 47 C. 818; 41 B. 560; 45 M. 913 (F.B.); the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere but it will do so only sparingly and when it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, 56 C. 924. The general principle of criminal law is that a person is entitled to the benefit of doubt and if he has been properly tried by a competent Court and acquitted the least that can be said is that there is a reasonable doubt as to his guilt and the usual practice is not to encourage the prosecution to have a second shot unless there is very strong ground in the public interest, 14 A. L. J. 1073. Although the High Court has undoubtedly the jurisdiction to set aside an order of acquittal that power is to be exercised in rare and exceptional cases, 27 Cr. L. J. 1407=58 Ind. Cas. 719, 29 Cr. L. J. 343=108 Ind. Cas. 162; 63 B. 563. In 14 M. 363 the law is stated thus. An appeal against acquittal by way of revision is not contemplated by the Code, and should on public grounds be discouraged. In the case of an acquittal the law allows an appeal on behalf of the Local Government and the reason for such provision is obvious, but a private prosecutor should not be allowed to put the Court in motion to revise an acquittal deliberately arrived at by the lower Court. See also 43 M. 913 (F.B.); 42 M. 103; 15 M. L. J. 225; 39 M. 803; 38 M. 1028; 20 Cr. L. J. 101; 43 Ind. Cas. 881; 42 C. 612; 23 C. 243; 25 A. 128; 24 A. 348; 21 Cr. L. J. 564, 39 C. 786; 8 Pat. 25; 9 Bom. L. R. 156; 40. A. 84; (1915) M. W. N. 411=17 M. L. T. 437=18 Cr. L. J. 553=29 Ind. Cas. 830; 41 B. 560; 47 A. 403; 25 Cr. L. J. 1383=83 Ind. Cas. 341; 25 Cr. L. J. 1266=82 Ind. Cas. 274; 45 M. 936; 24 Cr. L. J. 186=71 Ind. Cas. 602; 22 A. L. J. 820 at 822; 20 L. W. 327; 14 Cr. L. J. 177=19 Ind. Cas. 177; 27 Cr. L. J. 854=95 Ind. Cas. 934; 29 Cr. L. J. 833=109 Ind. Cas. 362; 28 Cr. L. J. 523=102 Ind. Cas. 219; 53 B. 563; 56 C. 924. The general question whether the High Court has power to interfere in revision with an order of acquittal according to the decisions of the various High Courts in India has not been considered and decided by the Privy Council in 50 A. 722 (P.C.) though the reasons given in the judgment might suggest a contrary inference but their Lordships were considering the powers of the High Court under S. 439 (4) which excludes the power to convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction in revision. 53 B. 564 where 9 A. 134 (F.B.) and 50 A. 722 (P.C.) are referred to. It is unquestionable that the preponderance of authority is in favour of the proposition that the High Court may revise an order of acquittal at the instance of the Public Prosecutor, 4 Ran. 471, but in the case of a private party, the proper remedy for setting aside an acquittal is to approach the District Magistrate to move the Local Government to prefer an appeal against the acquittal under S. 417, supra, and if he refuses to move in the matter then the party may seek remedy in the High Court in revision, 26 Cr. L. J. 93=83 Ind. Cas. 659; 26 Cr. L. J. 1596=90 Ind. Cas. 668; 25 Cr. L. J. 511=83 Ind. Cas. 235; 26 Cr. L. J. 516=85 Ind. Cas. 355; 26 Cr. L. J. 1349=89 Ind. Cas. 388; 5 Pat. 23; 33 C. W. N. 576. When it interferes it can only order a new trial. When the offences are so essentially of a personal character and a failure of justice has been occasioned but the Local Government is loathe to appeal from such an acquittal, the matter being of no public interest, the High Courts have entertained revision at the instance of private parties. When an acquittal was made without taking the evidence of witnesses present in Court but upon the result of a local inspection by the Magistrate, the acquittal was set aside, 39 C. 931. Where the judgment of acquittal proceeded entirely on a mistaken view of the law and the matter was one of great importance to the complainant in his position as the author of the book which if the judgment stood will be pirated by another who will secure for himself the gains which ought legitimately to go to the complainant, the acquittal was set aside in revision and a retrial was ordered, 51 M. 180. See also 6 A. L. J. 733, 29 Cr. L. J. 416=108 Ind. Cas. 567. Similarly when the trial was wrongly held to be barred by the provisions of S. 403, supra, the acquittal was interfered with, 12 Bom. L. R. 228; mere error of procedure by itself is no good ground for setting aside an acquittal. But if it is of a grave character and not mere error of improper admission of evidence it would afford a ground for interference, 21 Cr. L. J. 1255=82 Ind. Cas. 274; 25 Bom. L. R. 433=21 Cr. L. J. 731=73 Ind. Cas. 974. Errors of law committed by a Magistrate by which some inadmissible evidence was let in, cannot afford sufficient grounds for interfering in revision against acquittal especially when such inadmissible evidence does not form a material portion of the facts relied on by the Magistrate for his conclusion, 3 Cr. L. Rev. 309. For instances where the High Court interfered in revision against acquittals, see 15 M. L. J. 225; 41 M. 683; 5 M. L. T. 238; 9 Bom. L. R. 156; 4 Bom. L. R. 686; 11 C. L. J. 113; 39 C. 931; 27 C. 323; 6 A. L. J. 758; 18 A. L. J. 846; 13 Cr. L. J. 771; 18 Cr. L. J. 732; 20 Cr. L. J. 708; 21 Cr. L. J. 564.

May enhance the Sentence.—As a Court of revision, the High Court has all the powers of a Court of appeal and in addition the power to enhance the sentence, 30 Bom. L. R. 952=29 Cr. L. J. 1016=112 Ind. Cas. 344. Enhancement of sentence is a very serious proceeding and when there is a proposal to that effect, it ought, if it is a sound proposal to be supported by the Government Pleader under instructions which will enable him to place before the High Court cogent reasons as to why there should be an enhancement, 16 Bom. L. R. 202=15 Cr. L. J. 385=23 Ind. Cas. 733. Ordinarily the High Court will not exercise its power of enhancement except on the motion of the Local Government, 29 Cr. L. J. 313=107 Ind. Cas. 912. Such applications are entirely a matter for the Crown. It is not for a private individual to move the High Court for enhancement of a sentence passed on an accused person. Such applications are rarely made and should not be encouraged, 28 Cr. L. J. 802=104 Ind. Cas. 242; 16 Bom. L. R. 202=15 Cr. L. J. 385=23 Ind. Cas. 733. The High Court has power to entertain an application for enhancement of sentence by a private party but it has been adopted to be a safe working rule not to interfere at the instance of a private party but when a rule has been issued at the instance of a private party the Court must deal with the case on the merits, 55 C. 964. The High Court will naturally be loath to act on the motion of a private individual for enhancement of sentence but it undoubtedly has the power to do so in extreme cases 30 Cr. L. J. 218=113 Ind. Cas. 766. See also 30 Cr. L. J. 240=114 Ind. Cas. 72. The mere fact that the High Court if it acted as a Court of first instance would have passed a heavier sentence is by itself no ground for enhancing a sentence in revision especially when the sentence passed is substantial 29 Cr. L. J. 276=107 Ind. Cas. 759, but it will interfere only when the sentence passed is grossly inadequate, 29 Cr. L. J. 784=110 Ind. Cas. 796, where 29 Cr. L. J. 276=173 Ind. Cas. 769 and 29 Cr. L. J. 291=167 Ind. Cas. 773 are followed. Where no question of principle is involved and a sentence apparently right has been passed by the lower Court on a consideration of all the circumstances of the case, the High Court will not enhance the sentence, 29 Cr. L. J. 446=108 Ind. Cas. 567. Even in cases of communal riots and disturbances, the Local Government should refrain from applying for enhancement unless violence has been done to some general principle which requires immediate and authoritative correction by the High Court in revision, 29 Cr. L. J. 448=103 Ind. Cas. 567. The High Court will be extremely reluctant to enhance the sentence passed by a Sessions Court except on very serious grounds, 26 Cr. L. J. 177=83 Ind. Cas. 831; 26 Cr. L. J. 1364=89 Ind. Cas. 452. A District Magistrate, a Sessions Judge or a Public Prosecutor may draw the attention of the High Court to a sentence with a view to its being enhanced; or the High Court can of its own motion send for the record and take action with a like object. If a private complainant considers the sentence unduly lenient, he may, draw the attention of the Government to the fact, 27 Cr. L. J. 818=95 Ind. Cas. 594. It is very undesirable to trust exclusively to the powers of the High Court of correcting sentences of the lower Courts where the authorities ought to be deterrent. In such cases where the prosecuting authorities are of opinion that a sentence ought to be deterrent they ought to put before the lower Court those circumstances on which they rely on and they ought to ask the trying Court to impose a sentence which will serve the purpose that they think should be served. If this is done, there will be fewer references to the High Court for enhancing the sentences, 16 Bom. L. R. 202=15 Cr. L. J. 385=23 Ind. Cas. 735. Even when the District authorities consider the sentence passed to be adequate, there are occasions when the High Court enforced its own opinion contrary to that of the District authorities and enhanced the sentence, 30 Cr. L. J. 276=113 Ind. Cas. 766. It has been the practice of the High Court that when an accused person has committed his sentence of imprisonment not to enhance the sentence and when the sentence is not only in exceptional circumstances, 1 Lah. 433; 2 Cr. L. Rev. 389; 30 Cr. L.J. 300=114 Ind. Cas. 442. See also 1919 P.R. (Cr. J.) 7; 10 Sind. L.R. 207. The principles upon which this Court habitually acts as a Court of revision in relation to the enhancement of sentences are that it would not interfere if the sentence passed involves substantial punishment and should interfere if the sentence is manifestly inadequate in after the lapse of, say, nine months even in a case where the sentence is inadequate, 13 Cr. L.J. 121=(1912) M.W.N. 50=13 Ind. Cas. 777. "The Court is in particular, slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail though this circumstance is no insuperable obstacle. Again the Court frequently declines to interfere, in order to enhance a sentence, on the mere ground that it would itself have passed a heavier sentence contenting itself with pointing out that the sentence is so light that far heavier sentence would have been maintained" 1889 P.R. (Cr. J.) 6. The High Court is slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail after serving out the sentence imposed by the lower Court; the High Court is not always bound to interfere even when the order of the lower Court is clearly wrong in law 15 Cr. L.J. 599=21 Ind. Cas. 471 where 11 Cr. L.J. 389=6 Ind. Cas. 639 and 1889 P.R. (Cr. J.) 7 are followed. It is not the practice of the High Court to enhance the sentence in revision after the accused person had served out the whole sentence and has come out of jail. As a general practice a convict is not to be sent back to jail after he has undergone the sentence and been released, 30 Cr. L.J. 2=112 Ind. Cas. 769. In all cases where the sentence is considered inadequate, the District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge as the case may be should be moved by the Police at the earliest possible moment after the trial, and certainly where possible, before the accused has served his sentence. There are many cases where a very short sentence is imposed in which it is impossible to move the High Court before the sentence has expired and the fact that the sentence has expired before such action is taken, is in itself no reason for refusing to interfere. At the same time where an accused has been released after being imprisoned say for six weeks or more and no action is taken during that period to move for an enhancement, he may reasonably expect that no further action will be taken and that he has expiated his crime and it is an additional hardship upon him if he should find afterwards that he has to go back to prison again for a further term. Where there is regrettable delay on the part of the Police to bring the matter to the notice of the authorities for them to report to the High Court and the delay has not been accounted for, the High Court will not interfere in revision and enhance the sentence, 29 Cr. L.J. 261=107 Ind. Cas. 536. But it cannot be laid down as an invariable proposition that in no case can the High Court pass a substantive period of imprisonment if the accused has served out the sentence passed on him by the Court below. When the accused was sentenced to a nominal sentence of one day's imprisonment which was served out at the end of the day's sitting, such a practice would not prevent the High Court from passing a substantive term of imprisonment in a suitable case and the High Court in the particular case sentenced the accused to six months' imprisonment in addition to the sentence already served out, 27 Cr. L.J. 657=93 Ind. Cas. 1053 where 1 Lah. 433 is distinguished. The High Court alone has got under the Code the power to enhance the sentence in revision; power to enhance the sentence is expressly given in this section while this power is expressly excluded in B. 423, clause (1) (b), where we find the words "not so as to enhance the same." The power of enhancement of sentence is subject to the limitation contained in sub-section (4) of this section. Where a case comes to the notice of the High Court by way of an appeal proffered by the accused, it is not desirable under this section if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. It is absolutely incongruous that the Court should in the same breath admit an appeal and issue notice why the sentence should not be enhanced. The appeal should be heard first and then the question of enhancement should be considered, 49 B. 430 at 432 followed in 27 Cr. L.J. 338=93 Ind. Cas. 851. As a matter of practice the High Court will not entertain a revision application for the enhancement of sentence at the instance of a private complainant 30 Cr. L.J. 300=114 Ind. Cas. 442; 29 Cr. L.J. 313=108 Ind. Cas. 162; 28 Cr. L.J. 802=104 Ind. Cas. 242; 15 Cr. L.J. 385=23 Ind. Cas. 733; 30 Cr. L.J. 219=113 Ind. Cas. 768; 30 Cr. L.J. 240=114 Ind. Cas. 72.

But where the Crown has not thought necessary in the interests of public justice either to apply for enhancement or on the matter being brought to the notice of the High Court by the complainant to appear in support of the rule issued by the High Court it cannot be laid down as an absolute rule that the complainant cannot move the Court where there is manifestly a ground for interference beyond all reasonable doubt. In such a case it matters not whether the case comes before the High Court on its own motion or at the instance of a private prosecutor or through any other channel. From the mere fact that an ex parte rule has been issued it cannot be held that there was nothing to be done, but to consider whether or not the sentence should be enhanced for instance, ex parte the contentions urged on behalf of the accused, the attitude of the Crown and other possible contingencies should be taken into consideration, 50 C. L. J. 176; 55 C. 964. The remedy of a private complainant is to draw the attention of Government to that fact and the District Magistrate, Sessions Judge or Public Prosecutor may draw the attention of the High Court to the inadequacy of a sentence with a view to its being enhanced. The High Court, may also, of its own motion send for the records and take such action as it thinks necessary. 48 B. 358; 27 Cr. L. J. 818=93 Ind. Cas. 594; where an appellate Court reduced the sentence passed by the trial Court the High Court in revision restored the sentence of the trial Court, 28 Cr. L. J. 31=99 Ind. Cas. 63; where an accused was convicted of cheating in having obtained fraudulently large sums of money and sentenced to imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine, the High Court in revision held that sentence was unwarranted and grossly inadequate, 25 L. W. 220=28 Cr. L. J. 235=99 Ind. Cas. 1035; where the law says that on conviction for certain offences like S. 193 or 471 I. P. O., the accused shall be punished with imprisonment it means that the offender should be sent to jail and not awarded imprisonment till the rising of the Court and the High Court in such a case enhanced the sentence in revision to one of six months' imprisonment, 1929 M. W. N. 114=30 Cr. L. J. 247=114 Ind. Cas. 234. The fact that an accused person is a man of education and position and member of the Legislative Council cannot be urged for the imposition of a fine only on conviction and the High Court in revision enhanced the sentence to three months' simple imprisonment.

Sub-section (2).—The language of this sub-section is mandatory and is clearly an exception to S. 440, infra, 47 M. 428 at 432. It is here expressly enacted that notice to the accused is necessary before an order is passed by the High Court in revision, to his prejudice. When an order of enhancement is made by a single Judge without affording the petitioner an opportunity of being heard, the order so passed is a nullity and the matter could be re-heard after giving the accused a reasonable opportunity to show cause, 31 C. W. N. 96; 47 M. 428 at 432, 437, 438, followed in 26 Cr. L. J. 543=85 Ind. Cas. 383. Where the High Court on a reference under S. 433, supra, for enhancement of sentence on an accused who had been released on probation of good conduct under S. 562, infra, by the lower Court accepted the reference without giving notice to the accused and affording him an opportunity of being heard, the High Court being under the mistaken impression that notice to show cause had been given to the accused, the order passed was held to be one per incuriam bordering to a nullity and there was no bar to the order being vacated and re-hearing the reference in the presence of the parties under the amended Code and the High Court had ample powers in cases of this description to vacate the original order, 55 C. 417.

Sub-section (3).—The maximum term of imprisonment which the High Court is empowered to pass in cases tried by Magistrates cannot exceed the sentencing power of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, namely, two years. Such a sentence could be passed even in cases where the accused was originally tried by a third-class Magistrate who could inflict only a maximum sentence of one month's imprisonment, 1 L. W. 453, following, 18 Cr. L. J. 712=39 Ind. Cas. 1000, and in enhancing the sentence the High Court cannot pass a higher sentence than is prescribed for the offence by the Penal Code. The Magistrates empowered under S. 30 supra can pass any sentence under S. 31, supra, except a sentence of death or transportation for a term exceeding seven years or imprisonment for a term exceeding seven years. Sentence should not be enhanced when the convicted person has duly served out the sentence before the enhancement is made, 11 Cr. L. J. 93=5 Ind. Cas. 520. See Notes under heading 'May enhance sentence.'

Sub-section (4).—S. 273, supra, relates to an entry in the High Court Sessions by the presiding Judge that any charge is clearly unsustainable against the accused. It has not the effect of an acquittal, but such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge. Such an order cannot be revised by the High Court under this section. Notwithstanding the reference to S. 273 this section does not empower the High Court to revise the judgment of one or more of its own Judges, 46 M. 382 at 387. Where an accused was convicted under Ss. 420 and 507, I.P.O., and on appeal the conviction was altered into one under Ss. 385 and 508, I.P.O., holding that Ss. 420 and 507 were not applicable to the case it was open to the High Court in revision to find the accused guilty of an attempt to cheat under Ss. 420 and 511, I.P.O., as the prohibition under this clause did not apply to such a case. The case was one in which it was difficult to say what offence was committed and it was doubtful whether the alteration of one section into another can be said to be an acquittal within this sub-section, 48 M. 774 at 780.

Convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction.—This sub-section deprives the High Court of the power which it would otherwise have had under sub-section (1) of this section read with S. 423 (1) (a) supra. It prohibits only converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. Where there is no acquittal of the accused of an offence say, grievous hurt under S. 325, I.P.O., the accused being tried under S. 302, I.P.O., and convicted of hurt under S. 323, I.P.O., the High Court is not precluded by reason of this sub-section from recording a conviction and sentence for grievous hurt under S. 325, I.P.O., 27 Cr. L.J. 564—94 Ind. Cas. 132, but there is nothing here to prevent the High Court from setting aside the acquittal and ordering a re-trial of the case. The only method of securing a conviction in a case of acquittal is that provided in S. 417, supra, viz., an appeal by Local Government against the order of acquittal, 44 A. 332; 40 A. 84; 20 L.W. 327; 2 Pat. 708 at 710; 22 A.L.J. 820 at 822. There was a conflict of decisions between the various High Courts as to the power of the High Court to alter a conviction under S. 304, I.P.O., into one under S. 302 I.P.O. and then sentence the accused for the offence under S. 300 I.P.O., with which he was originally charged and tried. The question was whether the High Courts can itself convict the accused who was charged with the major offence of murder under S. 302 I.P.O., but was acquitted expressly or impliedly of that offence and convicted of a minor offence under S. 304 or S. 325, I.P.O., and then enhance the sentence in revision, 37 M. 119; 1 Ran. 436 8 Lah. 138; 27 Cr. L.J. 1121—87 Ind. Cas. 641; 27 Cr. L.J. 566—94 Ind. Cas. 134; 6 Pat. 217 took one view but 50 M. 259; 44 A. 332; 4 Ran. 140 and 48 B. 510, took a different view, but this conflict of authority has now been set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council, in 50 A. 722 (P.C.) where it was held that the High Court in revision has no power to alter a conviction under S. 304, I.P.O., into one under S. 302 I.P.O., and then sentence the accused to death under S. 302 I.P.O., as the trial Court must be taken to have acquitted the accused to the charge under S. 302 I.P.O. and the Local Government having a right of appeal under S. 417 supra has not chosen to appeal. Their Lordships in the course of the judgment in 50 A. 722 (P.C.) observed that if the learned Judges who decided 37 M. 119, intended to hold that the prohibition in this sub-section refers only to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal of the accused in respect of all the charges or offences and not to a case where the accused charged with murder but acquitted of that charge and convicted of a lesser offence under S. 304 I.P.O., their Lordships were unable to agree with that part of the decision as the words of this section are clear and there can be no doubt as to their meaning and there was no justification for the qualification which the learned Judges in 37 M. 119, attached to this sub-section. See also 53 B. 564 and 30 Cr. L.J. 552(2)—116 Ind. Cas. 854 following 50 A. 722 (P.C.) Altering a finding of acquittal into one of conviction is permissible only through the medium of an appeal by the Local Government as pointed out in 44 A. 332 and 48 B. 510 quoted with approval in 50 A. 722 (P.C.), 30 Cr. L.J. 552 (1)—116 Ind. Cas. 79. It is a well-settled view of all the High Courts in India that as a general rule it is not expedient to interfere in an acquittal at the instance of a private party and such application should be discouraged, 41 M. 613; 42 M. 107; 39 M. 505; 38 M. 1028; 23 M.L.J. 652; 14 M. 363; 42 C. 612; 38 C. 786; 41 B. 860; 41 A. 332; 40 A. 84; 2 Pat. 709; 4 Ran. 140. In 14 M. 363 the Madras High Court refused to hear Counsel for private, complainant in a case of revision against acquittal, but in, 50 C. 159. Counsel for private complainant was heard in spite of objection raised on the facts of the case. There is deeper and fundamental reason for non-interference which turns upon the position of a private prosecutor in prosecutions for cognizable offences. The private prosecutor has no position at all in the litigation. The Crown is the prosecutor and custodian of the public peace and if it decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object because he has not taken his full dose of private vengeance, 2 Pat. 703 at 710. See 56 C. 924.

Sub-section (5).—This sub-section precludes the High Court from entertaining any proceeding by way of revision, when an appeal is specially provided and no appeal is brought by the party seeking revision 30 Cr. L.J. 765=117 Ind. Cas. 309. So at the instance of the Local Government no revision for a mere enhancement of sentence may lie when the Local Government could have appealed to the High Court. Where the accused is charged with dacoity and murder and acquitted of the latter offence but convicted of the former, it is not open to the Local Government to apply to have the conviction under S. 895 altered to one under S. 396 I.P.C. The High Court will not exercise its revisional powers to enhance the sentence unless it is manifestly inadequate and it is not enough to show that if the trial Court had imposed a more severe sentence the High Court in appeal would have maintained it, 26 Cr. L.J. 1364=89 Ind. Cas. 452, following 2 C. 273. The prohibition contained in this section is to the entertaining an application for revision at the instance of a party who could have appealed. Having regard to this sub-section when an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision can be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed, and if proceedings by way of revision are instituted by such party, the High Court cannot interfere even of its own motion under sub-section (1) supra, 25 Cr. L.J. 1362=82 Ind. Cas. 754; 46 A. 769. A reference under S. 438 supra, say by a District Magistrate against an acquittal stands on no higher footing than an application by a private party for revision against an order of acquittal, 56 C. 924 following 43 C. 703 at 709 where the reference by a District Magistrate against an acquittal was put on the same footing as a revision by a private party as he could have moved the Local Government to prefer an appeal under S. 417 supra. But in a case where the effect of allowing the revision in the case of those who could have appealed, and did not appeal would be to sustain a sentence of eight and ten years imprisonment, when they could only be convicted under S. 113, I.P.C. (maximum sentence being only six months' imprisonment), it is right to hear the case under the general powers of revision and the High Court interfered with the conviction in revision, 20 L.W. 914=26 Cr. L.J. 747=86 Ind. Cas. 283. It will be still open to the High Court, if it so desired to act, whenever the matter comes to its knowledge otherwise than by an application for revision, by the person who could have appealed but did not choose to do so, or on reference from the lower Court under S. 438 when the matter otherwise comes to its knowledge under this section, (see 9 C. 513,) to interfere in revision in a matter falling within this sub-section. Where a District Magistrate did not move the Local Government to prefer an appeal against an acquittal but sent up a case direct to the High Court for revision by it was held to be inexpedient to exercise the High Court's powers of revision, 24 A. 346, see also 25 A. 128 and 38 M. 1028. An application by a private complainant direct to the High Court when the Local Government had not chosen to appeal against the acquittal does not come within the prohibition contained in this sub-section, 33 C. 785. In 2 Bom. L.R. 334 certain convicted persons did not appeal but others who were tried with them and convicted appealed from the conviction and they were acquitted on appeal, and the High Court, when moved by the District Magistrate for setting aside the conviction of those who did not appeal refused to interfere on the ground that the accused did not choose to have recourse to the proper remedy open to them, namely, to appeal. The High Court can under this section deal in revision with the case of an accused person who has not appealed when hearing an appeal from others jointly tried and convicted when it found that the entire prosecution evidence was unworthy of credit, 6 C.W.N. 330. This sub-section does not preclude the High Court from interfering in revision with the conviction of an accused who has not appealed when the Court deals with an appeal preferred by a co-accused convicted along with him, 29 Cr. L.J. 325 at 334=106 Ind. Cas. 81. District Magistrates should not exercise their powers of revision within the period allowed for appeal. Since this sub-section directs that where an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision should be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed, it is clearly desirable that District Magistrates should not place difficulties in the way of persons entitled to appeal by calling for the records of the proceedings and taking action in revision within the period allowed for appeal, 10 Bur. L.T. 187.

Sub-section (6).—This sub-section is new. The main reason for the introduction of this new sub-section was the provision in sub-section (5) supra, to the effect that 'when under the Code an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed.' In the case of an accused to whom a notice has been issued and who has not appealed or if no appeal lay, has not applied for revision of his conviction, naturally it would be contended that he could not question the correctness of the conviction. It was presumably to overrule this view (See 32 B. 162) that this new sub-section was inserted. So this sub-section is primarily intended to operate as an exception to what is otherwise laid down or implied in this section. Importance should be attached to the opening words of this sub-section, viz., 'notwithstanding anything contained in this section' 50 B. 783. The provisions of this sub-section do not override the time honoured practice of the High Courts in India not to upset save in exceptional circumstances concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below. This sub-section must be interpreted consistently with the practice. While it is open to the accused in showing cause against the conviction, the High Court will not lightly interfere with the conviction if supported by findings of fact of the lower Courts, 27 Cr. L.J. 1233=98 Ind. Cas. 49, followed in 29 Cr. L.J. 936=111 Ind. Cas. 836. See also 10 Lah. 241 where 50 B. 783 and 8 Lah. 521 are followed. The effect of enactment of this sub-section is that the High Court when adjudicating upon an application for enhancement of sentence is converted into a Court of appeal against the conviction and the accused person is now entitled to show that his conviction is unsustainable, 27 Cr. L.J. 380=92 Ind. Cas. 892. When a notice under sub-section (2) of this section is issued to the accused to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be altered, then sub-section (6) of this section becomes applicable and the accused is entitled to show cause against the conviction, 27 Cr. L.J. 593=94 Ind. Cas. 257. It was held in 32 B. 162, that it has been the invariable practice of the High Court of Bombay in cases that come before it for enhancement to accept the conviction as conclusive and to consider the question of enhancement of the sentence on that basis; it was open to the accused to apply for revision of the conviction, but having failed to avail himself of that, he cannot be permitted to assail the conviction in a proceeding where the sole question is whether the sentence passed was adequate. This ruling has now been overruled by the new sub-section and is no longer law. The accused is now entitled to question the propriety and legality of the conviction when he has been called upon to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. It is in accordance with justice that the accused should be entitled to show cause not only against the sentence being enhanced, but also against the conviction. But in the case of an appeal preferred by the accused it is absolutely incongruous that the Court should admit the appeal and issue notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced especially in a case of murder when transportation for life is awarded, 49 B. 450 at 452. But a practical difficulty may arise in practice. An application for enhancement of sentence can be heard even after the disposal of the appeal by the convicted person. In the judgment confirming the conviction and rejecting the appeal, the Court saw no reason to reduce the sentence. That in no way was a decision that the sentence should not be enhanced and so far as the judgment went, there was nothing which in any way tied the hands of the High Court hearing an application for enhancement. The provisions of Ss. 309 and 430, supra, show clearly that the judgment pronounced was final and though this sub-section entitles the accused in showing cause to question the legality and propriety of the conviction, the accused will not be entitled to re-open the correctness of the conviction as he is debarred from asking the same Bench which heard and disposed of his appeal and much less another Bench to go into of the merits of the conviction. The observation in, 49 B. 450 are merely obiter, 50 B. 783. The principle of the decision in 50 B. 783 applies equally to a previous order on revision and a previous order on appeal and to the dismissal of the revision by the accused against his conviction, the right which he had under this sub-section to question the correctness and propriety of the conviction also vanished on account of the inherent incapacity of any Judge of the High Court to re-consider his own decision much less the decision given by another Judge, 8 Lah. 521, followed in 10 Lah. 241. When a revision petition against the conviction had been dismissed in limine or after notice, the right of the accused to show that the conviction is illegal on receipt of notice for enhancement is lost, 30 Cr. L. J. 815=117 Ind. Cas. 669. The language of this sub-section is very wide and it is open to an accused person when called upon to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced to raise any question that might be urged against his conviction; thus it is competent under this sub-section to an accused person to object to the legality of his trial on the ground of mis-joinder of charges, 49 B. 892. There was a difference of opinion among the Judges 33 C.W.N. 599; 49 C.L.J. 432 as to the right of the accused to show cause against the conviction when he was convicted and sentenced on his own plea of guilty under S. 271 (2) supra but the majority view was that the accused cannot go beyond his plea of guilty and re-open the propriety and correctness and legality of his conviction as he could do under this sub-section in an ordinary case of conviction on a trial on the evidence. The word 'conviction' in the sub-section in its relation to a case where the accused pleaded guilty, limits the accused from impugning the judgments on the merits and the accused can show cause only against the enhancement of the sentence and cannot go beyond the plea of guilty. The words 'show cause against the conviction' apply only where the accused had been convicted on the evidence and in that case and that case only, he is entitled to show that the conviction is wrong either upon the facts or through some error of law. See also 33 C.W.N. 695=50 C.L.J. 176. It is competent to the accused to show from the whole record that he ought to have been acquitted and he cannot be restricted with any consideration that the application was in revision only not an appeal, 30 Cr. L. J. 693=116 Ind. Cas. 883.

Dismissal for default.—When the High Court dismissed a criminal revision petition for default of appearance, it has no power to restore it to file subsequently, 23 M.L.J. 499. This ruling was followed in 44 M.L.J. 27=17 L.W. 23 where it was held that it was an universal principle of law in the absence of direct statutory provision, that when a matter has been finally disposed of by the Court, the Court is functus officio and cannot entertain a fresh prayer for the same relief, unless or until the previous order of final disposal has been set aside, and therefore a second revision petition cannot lie to re-hear a previously disposed of petition though the latter petition was dismissed for default of appearance. But a different view has even been expressed in 43 M. 382. In the case of a criminal appeal or revision petition there is no provision in the Code for dismissing an appeal or revision petition for default of appearance. In a criminal matter the question is not one between party and party. It is the duty of the Court to go into the matter and dispose of it on the merits, and if a case has been dismissed for default, it is not a legal disposal and must be considered to be still pending, and the party can in such a case move to have the petition heard and disposed of on the merits, 46 M. 382 at 401, where 23 M.L.J. 371 is disapproved. See also 47 M. 402 and 26 Cr. L. J. 543=85 Ind. Cas. 393. See also 27 C.W.N. 947. The High Court has power under this section to set aside the judgment of a Court below merely on the ground that the accused's Counsel was prevented from being present in the Court by unavoidable circumstances, say a railway strike and therefore could not appear, 27 Cr. L. J. 118=71 Ind. Cas. 246. The High Court has power under this section to set aside the order of a Sessions Judge rejecting an appeal filed by a practitioner on the ground that the appellant was not present in Court, and to allow a subsequent appeal from jail by the convicted accused has been dismissed, 10 C. 502 on the ground that the accused's Counsel was prevented from being present in Court by unavoidable circumstances, say a railway strike and therefore could not appear, 27 Cr. L. J. 118=71 Ind. Cas. 246. The High Court has power under this section to set aside the order of dismissal directed the Sessions Judge to re-hear the appeal and to give the appellant an opportunity of being heard, 43 A. 293; 25 Cr. L. J. 157=71 Ind. Cas. 246.

Revision against decision of a single Judge of the High Court.—The powers of a single Judge of the High Court in a matter in which he has made a decision are the powers of the Court and cannot in any way be limited by the provisions of the Code, 43 A. 293; 25 Cr. L. J. 157=71 Ind. Cas. 246.

a Full Bench of the Court. As no appeal lies from the decision of a single Judge in a criminal matter, there can be no revision. Both procedure imply subordination or inferiority which does not exist. Except on a reference by the Judge under S. 434, supra, the proceedings of a single Judge of the High Court cannot be revised 1909 P.R. (Cr. J.) 1=9 Cr. L.J. 306; 1909 P.R. (Cr. J.) 4, see also 14 C. 42 (F.B.)

Limitation for presenting revision petitions.—That an application to the High Court for revision against the order of the Court below should be made within 60 days from the date of the order, time allowed for criminal appeals under Art. 155, Sch. II of the Limitation Act is now well established by the authorities. It is a question of practice, no doubt, but the practice is uniform and only in special circumstances it can be departed from. 54 C. 393 following 43 C. 1029; 25 C.L.J. 564=18 Cr. L.J. 694=40 Ind. Cas. 694. The well-known practice of the Calcutta High Court is that an application for revision must be made within 60 days from the date of the order complained of. The practice of the Patna High Court is the same as that of the Calcutta High Court, 8 Pat. 468. The Madras High Court insists that Revision petitions should be presented as expeditiously as possible and a new rule in the Criminal Rules of Practice fixing a period of 90 days for presentation of revision petitions is in contemplation. The Court has allowed in addition to the 60 days, the time which is necessary for obtaining copies. This is not a question of limitation but a rule of practice of the Court to the effect that an application for revision must be made within a reasonable time. It is not an inflexible rule, and in exceptional circumstances the rule might be departed from 43 C. 1029. See 8 A. 514; 27 A. 483; 6 A. 485. The fact that an ex parte rule was issued by a Bench of the High Court in revision will not preclude another Bench hearing the revision finally, from disposing of the application as being made very late and therefore barred 54 C. 394; 50 C. 323. Persons who move the High Court in revision say, against an order under S. 107, supra, should do so with the utmost promptitude and at any rate within 30 days of the order complained against 49 A. 228.

Power to expunge Remarks in a Judgment.—The High Court as the supreme Court of Revision must be deemed to have the power to see that Courts below do not unjustly and without any lawful excuse take away the character of a party or a witness or a Counsel before it. Such Jurisdiction however, can be exercised when there is no foundation whatever for the remark objected to and not where it is a matter of inference from evidence. 49 A. 254. This Jurisdiction of the High Court is of an extraordinary nature and should be exercised with care and caution, 9 Lah. 269. The right of a Magistrate to make disparaging remarks on persons who appear or are named in the course of the trial is one that should be exercised with great reserve and moderation especially when the person disparaged has no opportunity of explaining or defending himself and the High Court has inherent power to expunge such offending passages in the judgment of the lower Court, 9 Lah 269. A Magistrate is not empowered to make observations in his judgment concerning a person who was not a party to the proceedings before him and who had no opportunity of being heard on materials not admissible in evidence and which would not justify the observations in question and such a course amounts to an abuse of judicial privilege. It would be denial of justice to allow the reflection upon the character of the person to stand, and the High Court in revision directed that portion of the offending judgment to be expunged, 8 Lah. 166. See notes under S. 501A infra and see also 1104 P.L.R. (Cr. J.) 29; 27 Cr. L.J. 510=13 Ind. Cas. 174; 13 Cr. L.J. 258=14 Ind. Cas. 643; 12 Cr. L.J. 464=11 Ind. Cas. 1000, 5 Lah. 476; 6 Lah. 166; 29 Cr. L.J. 1102=112 Ind. Cas. 636; 15 Cr. L.J. 420=24 Ind. Cas. 150.

Power to award cost.—The question of awarding cost in revision petitions filed not by the Crown but by a private prosecutor against an acquittal came for consideration in 43 M. 913 (F.B.) and the power of the High Court to award costs was negatived as there was no general provision in the code like the Civil Procedure code providing for costs except in certain specific instances, referred to in Es. 148, 483, 488, 490, 545 etc. where power is expressly given for awarding costs. The suggestion was also thrown out that it was for the Legislature to consider whether it should not be safeguarded by arming the High Court with power at least in revisions against acquittals by private prosecutors of mulcting them in proper cases by awarding costs 442 p. 971.

Optional with Court to hear parties.

440. No party has any right to be heard either personally or by pleader before any Court when exercising its powers of revision :

Provided that the Court may, if it thinks fit, when exercising such powers, hear any party either personally or by pleader, and that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect section 439, sub-section (2).

Scope of the section.—This rule enacted by this section is the general rule provided by the Legislature and must be taken to be a legislative rescission of the general principle that persons are entitled to be heard before any order affecting them prejudicially can be made, 10 C. 208. Whether the matter is one of importance must be left to the discretion of the Judge. It is a good practice and one which may usefully be followed 25 A.L.J. 1010 = 29 Cr. L.J. 88 = 106 Ind. Cas. 680. In an appealable case, there would be no right at all for a complainant to be heard. The right of appeal would be in the Crown. In revision although the High Court has wide powers under Ss. 435 and 439, supra, this section enacts that the Court has a discretion to hear parties and this applies to an accused and therefore still more strongly to a complainant and hear him in order to see what his case is about, 1 Bom. L.R. 1145.

No party has a right to be heard in revision.—This section does not affect the provisions of section 446, proviso (a) and S. 439 (2) supra. In 14 M. 363 the High Court refused to hear Counsel in a petition filed to revise an acquittal by the lower Court acting under the provisions of this section but in matters of importance the Calcutta High Court always hears Counsel, 15 C. 380. In the Allahabad High Court the Judges make a practice of hearing Pleaders in revision but at the same time professional gentlemen ought to be extremely careful that this privilege is not abused, 8 A.L.J. 237. In 1 B. 64 the Bombay High Court refused to hear Counsel in a reference under S. 438, supra. The Court may under this section determine the points raised without hearing Counsel or pleader on either side, but where it has not been done so but merely disposed of the case in default of appearance, the Court has power to restore the case and to hear and determine it, 10 C.L.J. 80, where 14 C. 42 and 10 B. 176. are distinguished, see also 46 M. 332 ; 50 C. 159. but in matters of importance, the High Court though it acts as a Court of Reference and Revision always hears Counsel, 19 C. 380. Where in a reference to the High Court for revision the Sessions Judge has written a complete order setting forth his view and a reply has been submitted by the Magistrate concerned and the facts are clear beyond all doubt, it may not be necessary to hear Counsel. Such a practice will be a direct conflict with the provisions of this section which allows a discretion to the High Court and such practice would prevent revisional References being decided in chambers. Each case must depend on its merits, 25 A.L.J. 1010 at 1012 = 29 Cr. L.J. 88 = 106 Ind. Cas. 680 where 43 A. 11 ; 19 C. 380 ; 8 A.L.J. 237 are referred to. Where an accused person applied in revision to the High Court and pending the revision the High Court released him on bail and subsequently he disappeared, it was held, that the High Court would not hear his application for revision, 24 Cr. L.J. 240 = 71 Ind. Cas. 704.

441. When the record of any proceeding of any Presidency Magistrate is called for by the High Court under section 435, the Magistrate may submit with the record a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision or order and any facts which he thinks material to the issue ; and the Court shall consider such statement before overruling or setting aside the said decision or order.

This section evidently applies to cases in which a Presidency Magistrate passes a non-appealable sentence. Under S. 370, supra, a Presidency Magistrate need not write a judgment in non-appealable cases but is only required to record certain particulars and even reasons for conviction need not be stated. The High Court may call for the records under S. 425, supra, and the Magistrate may then give his reasons for his conclusion under this section. A statement submitted under this section by a Presidency Magistrate, supplies the defect, if any, in the record and is conclusive as against affidavits filed in support of the revision, 12 B. 377, but this section is not enacted to enable a Presidency Magistrate to give fresh reasons for his decision contrary to those already given; but to enable him to supply reasons where in the exercise of his privilege under S. 370, supra, he has given no reasons at all, 1929 M.W.N. 893 at 894. Mere omission by the Magistrate to give reasons before referring a case for police investigation under S. 202, supra, and dismissing the complaint under S. 203, supra, is only an irregularity which can be rectified by a statement submitted under this section, 5 M.L.T. 79-2 Ind. Cas. 618. This section permits the Magistrate to supplement his reasons but does not abrogate the terms of S. 263 or S. 370, supra, and a Bench of Presidency Magistrates imposing a sentence of imprisonment for the offence must record the reasons for the conviction, 1929 M.W.N. 893: the omission to do so especially where there is no record of evidence, is a grave irregularity entitling the High Court to interfere in revision, 46 M. 253; 18 B. 97; 6 C. 579.

442. When a case is revised under this Chapter by the High Court it shall, in manner hereinbefore provided by section 425, certify its decision or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order revised was recorded or passed, and the Court or Magistrate to which the decision or order is so certified shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the decision so certified; and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

High Court's order to be certified to lower Court or Magistrate.

This section provides for the High Court's order in revision to be certified to the Court below to enable that Court to make such orders as are conformable to the decision of the High Court. S. 425, supra, relates to the order of the High Court on appeal being certified to the Court below and the manner of certifying is specified there. The provision in this and S. 425 supra that the High Court is to certify its decision or order to the lower Court negatives the idea that the High Court can revise its own findings. In such a case it has to certify to itself which could not be done, 1909 P.R. (Cr. J.) 4=9 Cr. L.J. 278-1 Ind. Cas. 747.

PART VIII.

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CASES IN WHICH EUROPEAN AND INDIAN BRITISH SUBJECTS ARE CONCERNED.

Scope and Object of the Chapter.—This Chapter has been newly introduced at the suggestion of the Racial Distinctions Committee by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1927 in substitution of the old Chapter which applied only to European British subjects and other Europeans and Americans. It lays down the procedure in respect of the trial of summons and warrant cases, concerning European British subjects and the same right is now extended to Indian British subjects. In this Chapter, some attempt is made at equality before the law irrespective of race and colour. According to the procedure laid down in this Chapter cases are divided into summons and warrant cases punishable with imprisonment and it applies only to cases arising outside the Presidency towns. The word 'complainant' is specially defined and the procedure in summons and warrant cases is specially laid down. In cases not falling under this Chapter the procedure is that laid down in Chapters XX to XXII, supra (Sec S. 528A). This Chapter deals with special provisions relating to cases in which European and Indian British subjects are concerned. By S. 443 to which Ss. 444, 445 and 446 refer, the provisions are applicable to a trial outside a Presidency Town; S. 447 enjoins on a Magistrate to forthwith inform the accused of his rights under this Chapter when he appears to be one which is, or might be held to be one which ought to be tried under this Chapter. S. 448 relates to references made in trial in Rangoon and S. 449 makes certain special provisions as to appeals. The special procedure laid down in the Chapter is available if the trial is outside the Presidency Town, of offences punishable with imprisonment and if the condition mentioned in Cl. (a) or (b) of S. 443, (1) is satisfied and a claim is made under this Chapter, either at the accused's own instance or on his being apprised of his rights by the Magistrate. If the claim is rejected the person may appeal to the Sessions Judge whose decision shall be final and not open to further appeal or revision. The stage at which this claim is to be preferred is specifically mentioned in sub-section (1) of S. 443, where it is put forward by the accused on his own initiative. But such a restriction does not exist where the Magistrate informs him about it, which the law enjoins the Magistrate shall forthwith do, at any stage of the inquiry or trial at which the case appears to him to be of such a nature. A claim to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter is wholly different from a claim to be tried as an European British subject, or an Indian British subject or European, not being an European British subject or an American, and it is the latter claim only which is dealt with in Chapter XLIVA of the Code in which Ss. 528A and 528B occur. So far as the former claim is concerned the question of status of the claimant does not always arise as is evident from the provisions of S. 443 (1) (b); whereas in a claim to be dealt with as an European British subject, or an Indian British subject or an European, not being an European British subject, or an American, the claimant has to prove his own status, in a claim to be tried under this Chapter, the claimant may or may not have to do so. If the latter claim is based upon clause (a) of S. 443 (1), the claimant will have to prove that the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects. If it is based upon clause (b) of S. 443 (1), the claimant will have to prove that in view of the connection with the case of both an European British subject, and an Indian British subject, it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case should be tried under this Chapter which may or may not involve a question of the claimant's own status. It will also be seen that S. 528A is expressly limited in its operation to a case to which the provisions of this Chapter do not apply and S. 528B applies only to such cases as are contemplated by S. 528A and S. 449 under which the right of appeal is claimed under this Chapter; consequently Ss. 528A and 528B can have no application to S. 443, infra, 52 C. 347. The mere fact of a person being a European British subject, does not entitle him to the benefit of this Chapter which is devised for the benefit of both European and Indian British subjects. An Indian British subject has certain privileges just like a European British subject under this Chapter. The distinctive rights of a European British subject are detailed in Chapter XLIVA which also deals with the distinctive rights of an Indian British subject. The determination of this question of the class of British subjects, is necessary for the application of the provisions of S. 275, supra, in the case of Jury and of S. 284A in the case of Assessors. When a person has been found by a Magistrate under the provisions of Chapter XLIVA to be an European British subject, he is entitled to have the majority of the Jury to be European British subjects, and all the Assessors in Assessor trials to be European British subjects. That is the necessity for the determination of the question whether an accused person is an European British subject or not, 26 Cr. L. J. 1217=83 Ind. Cas. 833. The fact that an accused person made no claim to the status of a European British subject under Chapter XLIVA of the Code will not debar him from urging that the conditions mentioned in clause (a) or (b) of this section exist. The clauses do not refer only to the status of the accused person, but to the status of two persons. Where an accused person claims to be tried under this Chapter the duty of the Magistrate is to satisfy himself that (1) the complainant and the accused are respectively European and Indian British subjects and vice versa (2) that in view of such status of complainant and accused respectively it is expedient in the interest of justice that the case should be tried under the provisions of this Chapter. If the Magistrate is so satisfied he must record a finding that the case should be tried under this Chapter and the trial is to take place under S. 446, infra, which provides for a trial in accordance with S. 375, supra, and other provisions of Chapter XXIII so far as they are applicable, i. e., the accused must be tried by Jury the majority of whom if he so requires must be of the category within which the accused comes. But the trial in the Sessions Court would be in the ordinary course, i. e., in the absence of a claim by accused to be tried under this Chapter or in the absence of a government notification under S. 269, supra, with the aid of Assessors and the accused has the right under S. 466 to be tried by Assessors all of whom shall be Europeans, Americans or Indians according to the category within which the accused comes, 5 Lah. 515 (F.B.).

443. (1) Where, in the course of the trial outside a presidency town of any offence punishable with imprisonment, the accused person, at any time before he is committed for trial under section 213 or is asked to show garding applicability of cause under section 242 or enters on his defence under section 256, as the case may be, claims that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case, after making such inquiry as he thinks necessary, and after allowing the accused person reasonable time within which to adduce evidence in support of his claim, shall, if he is satisfied—

(a) that the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects, or

(b) that, in view of the connection with the case of both an European British subject and an Indian British subject, it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case should be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, record a finding that the case is a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, or, if he is not so satisfied, record a finding that it is not such a case.

(2) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person by whom it was made may appeal to the Sessions Judge, and the decision of the Sessions Judge thereon shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Court in appeal or revision.

(3) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, he shall stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal or, if an appeal is presented, until it has been decided.

Scope of the section.—The procedure herein prescribed applies to European and Indian British subjects alike. A claim under this section by the accused and a finding by the Magistrate are necessary ingredients for the application of the provisions of this Chapter. If no claim is made prior to commitment and no finding is recorded by the Magistrate, the question cannot be raised in the Sessions Court. If a claim is made and found in accused's favour the Sessions Judge is bound to accept it and act under the provisions of this Chapter and cannot go behind it, holding that the provisions of the Chapter cannot apply. A finding by the Magistrate in favour of the accused is final, and any adverse finding is also final unless appealed against to the Sessions Judge. The matter could not be re-agitated again in the High Court after a prolonged trial in the Sessions Court, 26 Cr L J. 1217=88 Ind. Cas. 833. There is no provision in the Code enabling a person to put forward a claim to be dealt with under the provisions of this Chapter either before a Magistrate holding an inquiry or trial in a Presidency town or before the High Court Sessions during the trial of the case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature ever intended that where there was no knowing whether there would be a conviction or an acquittal and both open to appeal under S. 449, (infra) any inquiry might be asked for and the Court required to decide on the question as to whether, if the accused be tried outside the Presidency town the case would have been triable under this Chapter. The only object of such inquiry being that the result of it may be availed of, for an appeal by the accused when convicted and by the Crown when acquitted. The proper time to raise the question is when leave to appeal is applied for and that is when appellant has raised it, 25 C. 347. An application for the determination of the prisoner's status must necessarily precede an application for leave to appeal. There are no doubt three stages in cases of this kind (1) the question of the determination of the prisoner's status, (2) application for leave to appeal, (3) admission of the appeal itself, no application for leave to appeal can be presented if the time for presenting the appeal had expired and the application for determining the prisoner's status so far as to enable him to apply for leave to appeal must necessarily be out of time as well, 53 C 746. For definition of European British subject, see S. 4 (1) (i) supra, newly given at p. 25. There is no definition of the term "Indian British subject" in the Code.

Trial outside a Presidency Town.—The special provisions of this Chapter do not apply to trial by Magistrates in a Presidency town. See S. 3 (4) of Act X of 1837 (general clauses) which defines 'Presidency Town' as the local limits for the time being of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, Madras, or Bombay, as the case may be. The trial must relate to an offence punishable with imprisonment and not to other offences. The complainant and the accused persons or any of them are to be European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects. The applicability of the provision of this Chapter must be determined preliminary to the trial and from such determination as to the non-applicability of the provisions of this Chapter, an appeal is provided for to the Sessions Court and the decision of the Sessions Judge shall be final and the Magistrate is bound to stay proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for appeal and pending the disposal of the appeal presented. The Magistrate is bound to allow the accused person reasonable time to adduce evidence in support of his claim to be tried under this Chapter and on the evidence he is to be satisfied that the claim is well founded and the ends of justice require that the accused should be tried under the provisions of this Chapter. It is the duty of the accused to claim to be tried under this Chapter.

See Art. 150A of Sch. II, Limitation Act, which prescribes seven days' time for preferring an appeal under sub-section (2), from the date of the finding of the Sessions Judge rejecting a claim under this section. See S. 42, Act XII of 1923.

444. For the purpose of section 443, "Complainant" means any person making a complaint or, in relation to any case of which cognizance is taken under clause (b) of section 190, sub-section (1), any person who has given information relating to the commission of the offence within the meaning of section 154:

Definition of "Complainant."

Provided that a Public Prosecutor, a public servant, a member, officer or servant of any local authority, a railway servant as defined in section 3 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, or an officer or servant of any company, association or other body to which the Local Government may, by general or special order published in the local official Gazette, declare the provisions of this section to apply, shall not, by reason only of the fact that he has made a complaint of, or given information of, an offence in his capacity as such Public Prosecutor public servant, railway servant, member, officer or servant, be deemed to be a complainant within the meaning of this section, nor shall a police-officer be so deemed by reason only of the fact that a report under section 173 relating to a case has been made by or through him.

The word "Complainant" has been specially defined here for the purposes of the previous section and the proviso excludes a Public Prosecutor, a public servant, member, officer or a servant of any local authority, a railway servant or an officer or servant of any company from the definition, merely by reason of the fact that he has made a complaint in his capacity as such Public Prosecutor, public servant, etc. A police-officer making a report under S. 173, supra, is also excluded under this section.

Proviso.—This proviso enacts that where a public servant makes a complaint under the orders of Government as such public servant the provisions of this Chapter do not apply, 27 Cr. L. J. 1051=97 Ind. Cas. 17. Every case in which a public servant, etc., filed a complaint or lodged information before the police would not become triable under the provisions of this Chapter, if the accused was a European British subject and the complainant or informant an Indian or vice versa. It was not contemplated by the Legislature in framing this proviso that in every case it would be open to the accused to allege that the formal complainant, a public servant, etc., had a personal knowledge of the facts of the case or a personal knowledge therein and in every such case the Magistrate would be obliged to institute an inquiry into the truth or otherwise of the allegations, 27 Cr. L. J. 770=95 Ind. Cas. 306.

445. (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides under section 443 that a case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a summons case, the Magistrate trying the same shall direct that the case be referred to a Bench of two Magistrates and shall send a copy of such order to the district Magistrate who shall forthwith provide for the constitution of a Bench of two Magistrates of the first class, of whom one shall be an European and the other an Indian for the trial of the case.

(2) Where the Magistrates constituting the Bench by which a case is tried under this section differ in opinion, the case, together with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before the Sessions Judge, who may examine any party or recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall thereafter pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit and as is according to law.

(3) Any person convicted by a Bench under this section shall have the same right of appeal as if he had been convicted by a Magistrate of the first class, and any person convicted by a Sessions Judge under sub-section (2) shall have the same right of appeal to the High Court as if he had been convicted by the Sessions Judge at a trial held by the Sessions Judge under this Code.

(4) In any case in which it is impracticable to constitute a Bench in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) in any district, the District Magistrate shall transfer the case for trial by a like Bench to such other district as the High Court may, by general or special order, direct.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that all summons-cases tried under the provisions of this Chapter in any district specified in the notification shall be tried as if they were warrant-cases in accordance with the provisions hereinafter in this Chapter laid down for the trial of warrant-cases.

This section prescribes the procedure in summons-cases before Magistrates and Benches in which European and Indian British subjects are concerned. When members of the Bench differ in opinion the case is to be laid before the Sessions Judge, who is to pass such judgment, sentence or order as he thinks fit according to law. From a conviction by a Bench and by the Sessions Judge an appeal will lie to the Sessions Court and the High Court, respectively.

446. (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides under section 443 that a case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a warrant-case, the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case shall, if he does not discharge the accused under section 209 or section 253, as the case may be, commit the case for trial to the Court of Session, whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court.

(2) Where an accused is committed to the Court of Session under sub-section (1), the Court shall proceed to try the case as if the accused had required to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275, and the provisions of that section and the other provisions of Chapter XXIII, so far as they are applicable, shall apply accordingly:

Provided that where the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors and the accused, or all of them jointly, require to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 284A, the trial shall be held with the aid of assessors all of whom shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians.

Procedure in Warrant-cases.

This section prescribes the procedure to be followed, viz., that prescribed for warrant-cases. Where the Magistrate decides under S. 443, supra, that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a warrant-case, the Magistrate enquiring into the case shall, if he does not discharge the accused under S. 209 or S. 233 supra, commit the case for trial to the Court of Session whether the case is or is not one exclusively triable by the Court of Session. The provisions of this section are mandatory and if a Magistrate after once deciding that he has no jurisdiction cannot assume jurisdiction by discharging the European British subject and the wording of the section does not permit of such assumption of jurisdiction when a discharge is made obviously with a view to assume jurisdiction; the Magistrate acts illegally and without jurisdiction, in so acting, 27 A.L.J. 183=30 Cr L.J. 128=113 Ind. Cas. 754. A Magistrate therefore is entitled to commit the case for trial to the Court of Session whether the case is or is not triable exclusively by that Court. The trial in the Sessions Court is to be conducted in accordance with S. 275 and the provisions of this Chapter. When an accused committed to the Sessions Court under this section had not required to be tried by European Assessors but claimed to be tried by a Jury of his own nationality and the Sessions Judge refused the prayer in the absence of a notification by the Local Government under S. 269, supra, it was held, that the object of the Legislature was to place Indian and European British subjects on the same footing by enacting this Chapter. The trial ought to be by Jury unless he required to be tried by European Assessors under this section. By the words "in the ordinary course" is meant the course which would be followed in the absence of a notification by the Local Government under S. 269, supra, 5 Lah 515 (F.B.). When an European British subject is committed to the Court of Session before the amended Code came into force, he having a substantive right under the law as it stood to be tried by a Jury, such substantive right cannot be taken away by the amendment of the law taking away his right of trial by Jury and substituting in its place a trial by the Court of Session with the aid of Assessors. The right which a person had to be tried by Jury when committed for trial, could not be taken away by subsequent amendment of the law, the right being a substantive right and not one of procedure only, 6 Lah. 262.

447. If at any stage of an inquiry or trial under this Code it appears to the Magistrate that the case is or might be held to be a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, he shall forthwith inform the accused person of his rights under this Chapter.

Court to inform accused persons of their rights in certain cases.

See the new S. 531, infra, which enacts that the omission to inform a person of his rights will not affect the validity of the proceedings. Omission on the part of the Magistrate to inform the accused under this section of his rights under Chapter XXXIII is cured by the new section S. 534 which enacts, that such omission shall not affect the validity of any proceeding. When a case triable under this Chapter has been actually tried in the High Court Session under Chapter XXIII, without a claim on the accused's part under S. 275, supra for a trial under this Chapter no appeal will lie in such a case, 3 Ran. 220. See S. 347 supra, which corresponds to this section.

References to Sessions Judge to be construed as references to High Court in Rangoon.

448. For the purpose of the trial in Rangoon of any person under the provisions of this Chapter, references to the Sessions Judge shall be construed as references to the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon.

Special provisions relating to appeal.

449. (1) Where—

(a) a case is tried by jury in a High Court or Court of Session under the provisions of this Chapter, or

(b) a case which would otherwise have been tried under the provisions of this Chapter is under this Code committed to or transferred to the High Court and is tried by jury in the High Court, or

(c) a case is tried by jury in the High Court in a Presidency-town and the High Court grants leave to appeal on the ground that the case would, if it had been tried outside a Presidency-town, have been triable under the provisions of this Chapter, then, notwithstanding anything contained in section 418 or section 423, sub-section (2), or in the Letters Patent of any High Court, an appeal may lie to the High Court, on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Letters Patent of any High Court, the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original order of acquittal passed by the High Court in any such trial as is referred to in sub-section (1).

(3) An appeal under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall, where the High Court consists of more than one Judge, be heard by two Judges of the High Court.

Scope of the section.—In ordinary cases tried by Jury there is no appeal except on a matter of law under S. 418, supra, but when a case is tried by Jury under the special provisions of this Chapter an appeal is provided for by this section to the High Court on matters of fact as well as on matters of law and the finding of the Jury on a question of fact is no longer final, 26 Cr. L.J. 1241=88 Ind. Cas 857. When a case triable under this Chapter has been tried by the High Court Sessions under Chapter XXIII without any claim by the accused under S. 275, supra, for a trial under this Chapter, no appeal would lie under this section. The claim to be dealt with under this Chapter must be made before the first Juror is called and accepted, 3 Ran. 220. This section gives a right of appeal against the decision of the High Court in three classes of cases: (1) cases tried by the High Court by Jury under this Chapter; (2) cases which would otherwise be tried under this Chapter but are committed or transferred to the High Court and tried by Jury. In these two classes of cases an absolute right of appeal is given; (3) cases tried by the High Court by Jury in Presidency Towns. The necessity of granting leave to appeal under clause (c) is due to the fact that in cases falling under clause (b) the question, whether Chapter XXXIII is applicable or not has been decided before the case is committed to or transferred to the High Court. In cases falling under cl. (c) this question, has not arisen, and it was necessary for the Legislature to provide for a decision of this question. The clause is not well drafted, but its meaning is that the question of status is to be decided by the High Court before leave to appeal is granted, and that, if that is decided in the accused's favour, he is entitled as of right to appeal. The wording of cl. (c) also supports this view, since it states the ground on which leave to appeal may be granted. This ground would not be stated in this manner if other grounds be considered by the Court when granting leave to appeal. Power to grant leave to appeal also includes power to refuse leave to appeal, but if the power to grant leave to appeal is limited to a single ground, all that follows is, that the Court which has power to grant leave to appeal on that ground can refuse leave to appeal when that ground is not established. Therefore the Court to which an application for leave to appeal is made has only to decide whether the case would, if it had been tried outside the Presidency town, have been triable under the provisions of this Chapter. The conditions that would make a case, if it had been tried outside a Presidency-town triable under this Chapter are set out in sub-section (1) (a) and (b) of S. 443, supra, 52 C. 636. As a matter of convenience and expediency the application for leave to appeal should be made to the Judge who tried the case, 52 C. 347 and 52 C. 636. It is desirable that applications for leave should be made to the trial Judge who is better qualified than any one else to decide whether circumstances which had nothing to do with the guilt of the accused, exist or not. Notice should be given of such applications to the Crown. The right of appeal confined herein is at best a qualified right and very different from that conferred by S. 410, supra, 52 C. 347. In this country it is unusual for the Legislature to make a provision for leave to appeal to be granted by the Court against which an appeal is sought to be preferred, although in England it is frequent. On general grounds it is better in the interests of justice that the application is heard by a Bench of two Judges, 52 C. 636. In the cases reported in 52 C. 347 and 52 C. 636, special leave to appeal was granted from a conviction had at the High Court Sessions and the High Court interfered on the merits also. The proper and the only permissible course in a case under this new section where a new right of appeal is given by the Code to the subject is for this right of appeal to be exercised so long as the present rules of the High Court remain unchanged in the way laid down by the Rules of the Original Side of the High Court, viz., on the footing it is part of the business of the Court which as the Rules stand Vakils are excluded, 53 C. 858.

Sub-section (1).—When a claim to be tried as a European British subject was asserted before the Magistrate and such claim was allowed and it was not clear whether the claim was to be tried according to the provisions of this Chapter and the Crown did not take any steps to get the order of the Magistrate set aside or corrected, it was held that on an appeal from a conviction by the Sessions Court, the appellant was entitled to appeal under this section both on matters of fact and matters of law, 29 C.W.N. 260=41 C.L.J. 87=26 Cr. L.J. 662=88 Ind. Cas. 38. There is no reason for thinking that Art. 155 of the 2nd Schedule to the Limitation Act is only limited to appeals to the High Court from Sessions Judges in the mufassal or from other Courts from which appeals will lie direct to the High Court. An appeal under this sub-section preferred from a conviction and sentence is governed by Art. 155 of the 2nd Schedule to the Limitation Act, i.e., sixty days from date of conviction and sentence. The question of limitation arises on an application for leave to appeal under Cl. (c) of this sub-section because if the appeal is barred, the application for leave is necessarily out of time, 53 C. 746. When leave to appeal is granted to a European British subject under this section, an Indian British subject jointly tried and convicted along with the European British subject is also entitled to have leave to appeal by the application of S. 415 supra, as the judgment by which both of them were convicted was found to be appealable, 54 C. 52, following 53 C. 746.

Affidavit of the applicant in support of an application for leave to appeal under this section is admissible and the provisions of S. 342 (4) apply only to an accused person while he is under trial, 54 C. 52 at 55.

Sub-section (2).—An appeal against an original order of acquittal under this Chapter passed by the High Court in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction is provided—a power similar to that contained in S. 417 of the Code.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

LUNATICS.

464. (1) When a Magistrate holding an inquiry or a trial has reason to believe that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate shall inquire into the fact of such unsoundness, and shall cause such person to be examined by the Civil Surgeon of the district or such other medical officer as the Local Government directs and thereupon shall examine such Surgeon or other officer as a witness, and shall reduce the examination to writing.

(1A) Pending such examination and inquiry, the Magistrate may deal with the accused in accordance with the provisions of section 466.

(2) If such Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, he shall record a finding to that effect and shall postpone further proceedings in the case.

Amendment.—Sub-section (1A) is new and empowers the Magistrate to release the accused alleged to be a lunatic on bail pending his examination and inquiry into the fact of lunacy. The addition of the words "shall record a finding to that effect and" in sub-section (2) makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to record a finding as to unsoundness of mind and consequent incapability of making defence.

Scope of the section.—This section contemplates a case in which an accused person appears to be unsound when a Magistrate is holding a preliminary inquiry or trial while the next section deals with a case in which a person committed for trial to the Court of Session, appears at the Sessions trial to be of unsound mind. The section has nothing whatever to do with the question whether the accused was or was not of unsound mind at the time when he is alleged to have committed the offence of which he is accused, 1906 A.W.N. 47. See 42 A. 137, 12 M. 359; 10 B. 512; 24 W.R. (Cr.) 5; See 9 Lah. 371.

When an accused person appears to be of unsound mind the Court should inquire into the fact of such unsoundness before calling upon him to answer the charge. 1905 A.W.N. 2= 2 Cr. L.J. 91. If after holding the inquiry into the fact of the unsoundness of mind of the accused person, the Magistrate finds the accused to be of unsound mind, then he should follow the procedure under this section and not S. 311, supra, and then act under S. 466, infra, Ratanlal 832; see 9 Lah. 371. The procedure laid down in this Chapter will not strictly apply to maintenance proceedings under Ch. XXXVI because the person proceeded against under the amended S. 483, infra, is not an accused person. The word "accused" used in the old section is avoided in the new section evidently with deliberation. However the provisions of this section as well as those which a Court of equity and good conscience would naturally follow, i.e., if it finds that the person proceeded against is insane and incapable of understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers, further proceedings must be postponed and this is all the more necessary in a maintenance case in which he will be an important witness and has the right of offering terms, 48 M. 388 at 390-391. Where a Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and therefore incapable of making his defence, he cannot legally acquit him but he is bound to postpone further proceedings in the case, Welf II, 581; 11 M. L.T. 24=13 Cr. L.J. 24=13 Ind. Cas. 215; 10 W.R. (Cr.) 37; 1 W.R. (Cr.) 11. A Magistrate cannot act on his own opinion and consign a person to an asylum. He must have before him the statement of a medical officer reduced to writing; a mere written certificate of a medical officer is not sufficient evidence of a prisoner being of unsound mind, Weir II, 580 and 582; 9 W.R. (Cr.) 23. When the evidence of a medical witness reduced to writing cannot be considered to be decisive on the question of the prisoner's state of mind, then the Magistrate should take further evidence of regarding the prisoner's ordinary habits both before and after the commission of the alleged offence, 5 C. 826. The postponement contemplated by this section must be sine die after recording a finding that the accused is of unsound mind incapable of making his defence and the Magistrate may be required to resume the inquiry under S. 467 infra.

465. (1) If any person committed for trial before a Court of Session or a High Court appears to the Court at his trial to be of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the Jury, or the Court with the aid of assessors, shall, in the first instance, try the fact of such unsoundness and incapacity, and if the jury or Court, as the case may be, is satisfied of the fact, the Judge shall record a finding to that effect, and shall postpone further proceedings in the case and the Jury if any, shall be discharged.

(2) The trial of the fact of the unsoundness of mind and incapacity of the accused shall be deemed to be part of his trial before the Court.

Amendment.—In sub-section (1) it is enacted that if the Jury or Court is satisfied of the fact of unsoundness, the Judge shall record a finding to that effect and shall then postpone further proceedings and discharge the Jury.

Scope of the section.—The provisions of this section are mandatory. It is incumbent on the Sessions Judge himself to hold an inquiry on the question whether the accused was capable of making his defence when the case comes before him after commitment. He is also to take the opinion of the Assessors on that question and come to a decision before proceeding further with the trial. The question whether when the accused was brought up for trial, was of sound mind, is entirely different from the one whether he was of unsound mind at the time of alleged offence and non-compliance with the provisions of this section vitiates the trial, 7 Lah. 315; 44 C.L.J. 285=27 Cr. L.J. 896=96 Ind. Cas. 160. Where in the course of the trial an accused person showed signs of insanity, the Judge instead of raising a preliminary issue as to the soundness of mind of the accused and his capacity to understand the proceedings to be tried by the Jury first asked the Jury to observe the accused closely and to form their own opinion and proceeded with the trial and the Jury found the accused not insane it was held the procedure adopted was improper and re-trial was ordered to try the issue of insanity, first, 44 C.L.J. 235. Under this section the issue of unsoundness should be tried first and the trial of that question shall be deemed to be part of the trial before the Court, 27 Cr. L.J. 896=96 Ind. Cas. 160; 15 A.L.J. 239=18 Cr. L.J. 470=39 Ind. Cas. 310; 1905 A.W.N. 2, and should be submitted to the Jury first, 19 W.R. (Cr.) 45; 10 W.R. (Cr.) 37; 1892 A.W.N. 109. See also 9 Lah. 371. The Sessions Judge should not merely question the accused but should try the fact of his unsoundness of mind by examining the Civil Surgeon or some other medical officer and by taking evidence of persons resident in the accused's village to ascertain whether the accused had at any time prior to the commission of the offence exhibited symptom of insanity, 1 B.H.C.R. (Cr. Ca.) 33; the Judge alone cannot try the preliminary question, but the trial is to be by Judge and Jury or by the Judge with the aid of Assessors as the case may be, 10 B.L.R. Appx. 10=19 W.R. (Cr.) 15; 19 W.R. (Cr.) 26.

Under this section the onus is on the prosecution to show that the accused was at the time, of sound mind capable of making a defence, 51 C. 584. The most satisfactory method to adopt is that if the inquiry is to be commenced under this section it should be regarded not so much as an issue joined between the parties but as a preliminary issue which is conducted for the satisfaction of the Court and in that view the prosecution ought to commence and to give their evidence, See 9 Lsh. 371; 51 C. 827. The preliminary inquiry cannot be held to be tried in the sense of ascertaining the guilt or not of the offence charged, 3 Pat. L.J. 291 (F.B.)=19 Cr. L.J. 135=43 Ind. Cas. 423.

Sub-section (2)—This sub section is merely an enabling enactment giving the Court which should subsequently try the accused, power to take into consideration the earlier proceedings as if they were part of the record in the trial without the necessity of formal proof and does not make it necessary to hold a preliminary inquiry first and then a subsequent trial with a consequence that the personnel of the Court must remain throughout as originally constituted, 3 Pat. L.J. 291 (F.B.)=19 Cr. L.J. 135=43 Ind. Cas. 423. If as a result of such trial the Court is satisfied that the accused is capable of making his defence the trial shall proceed upon the charge on which the accused stands committed, 15 A.L.J. 239=18 Cr. L.J. 470=39 Ind. Cas. 310. Failure to record a finding on this point vitiates the entire proceeding in the Sessions Court as the provisions of this section are obligatory, 21 Cr. L.J. 83=54 Ind. Cas. 483.

466. (1) Whenever an accused person is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, whether the case is one in which bail may be taken or not, may release him on sufficient security being given that he shall be properly taken care of and shall be prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and for his appearance when required before the Magistrate or Court or such officer as the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf.

(2) If the case is one in which, in the opinion of the Magistrate or Court, bail should not be taken, or if sufficient security is not given, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, shall order the accused to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as he or it may think fit, and shall report the action taken to the Local Government:

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Local Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912,

Amendment.—This section is amended so as to allow bail to be granted at the discretion of the Court, in any case in which the accused is a lunatic and the amendment also permits the accused to be kept in custody. The object in view is to delegate the power of the Local Government and to do away with the existing distinction in respect of bailable and non-bailable cases. St. of Objects and Reasons.

The object of the preliminary inquiry provided by this section is to determine whether the accused is then in a fit state to be tried. The preliminary inquiry is to ascertain the guilt of the accused. If the inquiry results in the accused making his defence then the trial will proceed and if not, the trial will be adjourned. The word "adjournment" in S. 295 and other sections implies the trial. The word "postponement" used here indicates something different.

Pat. 87. Where the accused is found to be of unsound mind and the trial is postponed, the Magistrate or Court may release the accused on bail or report the case to the Local Government, Weir II, 531. The jurisdiction of the Court over the lunatic accused ceases after his transmission to the place of safe custody appointed by the Local Government and does not revive until the accused is sent back with a certificate that he is capable of making his defence under S. 473 infra, 2 C. 356.

467. (1) Whenever an inquiry or a trial is postponed under section 464 or section 465, the Magistrate or Court, Resumption of inquiry or trial. as the case may be, may at any time resume the inquiry or trial, and require the accused to appear or be brought before such Magistrate or Court.

(2) When the accused has been released under section 466, and the sureties for his appearance produce him to the officer whom the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf, the certificate of such officer that the accused is capable of making his defence shall be receivable in evidence.

Section 464, supra, makes it necessary to examine the medical witness but under this section, the certificate of such officer is sufficient for reviving the proceedings.

When a trial is postponed under S. 465, supra, on the ground of unsoundness of mind of the accused and he being consequently incapable of making his defence the trial should not be resumed from the point at which it was previously stopped but should be commenced de novo when the Court finds him capable of making his defence, Weir II, 532; 5 W.R. (Cr.) 3. The jurisdiction of the Magistrate ceases the moment the lunatic is handed over for safe custody and it does not revive until the accused is sent back to the Magistrate under S. 473, infra, 2 C. 356.

468 (1) If, when the accused appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed. Procedure on accused appearing before Magistrate or Court.

(2) If the Magistrate or Court considers the accused to be still incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court shall again act according to the provisions of section 464 or section 465, as the case may be, and if the accused is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, shall deal with such accused in accordance with the provisions of section 466.

The Amendment in sub-section (2) is in consequence of the change in sub-section (2) of S. 466, supra. A trial postponed on the ground of the accused's insanity ought not to be resumed from the point at which it was previously stopped but should be commenced de novo when the Court finds that the accused is capable of making his defence Weir II, 532.

469. When the accused appears to be of sound mind at the time of inquiry or trial, and the Magistrate is satisfied from the evidence given before him that there is reason to believe that the accused committed an act which, if he had been of sound mind, would have been an offence, and that he was, at the time when the act was When accused appears to have been insane.

committed, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the Magistrate shall proceed with the case, and, if the accused ought to be committed to the Court of Session or High Court, send him for trial before the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

A Magistrate acts properly within his powers under this section when he commits an accused person for trial to the Sessions Court for murder and when he finds that the accused is insane at the preliminary inquiry, although he appeared to be insane when he committed the act, 9 W.R. (Cr.) 23. There is no provision of law making it incumbent upon a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry to order the making of a medical inquiry upon a defence of insanity. It is only in cases where the accused appears to be incapable of taking his trial by reason of mental infirmity that the issue of insanity must be tried as preliminary issue; where the Magistrate is satisfied of the sanity of the accused he has no alternative but to proceed under this section, 9 Lah. 371. A Magistrate cannot discharge the accused when the accused committed the offence when he was suffering from temporary insanity, Weir II, 582.

470. Whenever any person is acquitted upon the ground that at the time at which he is alleged to have committed an offence, he was, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act alleged as constituting the offence, or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the finding shall state specifically whether he committed the act or not.

Judgment of acquittal on ground of lunacy.

The acquittal must be by a duly constituted Court and after a regular trial; otherwise the acquittal is illegal and cannot stand, 2 N.W.P.H.C.R. 110. The leading principle relating to insanity is still to be found in the answers given by the learned Judges in Macnaughten's case. The law is that every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to make him responsible for his acts until the contrary is proved to the satisfaction of the Jury. In other words, the onus of proof where unsoundness of mind is pleaded, is upon the accused and not on the prosecution. The accused's sanity is presumed and it is for him if he can that at the time of committing the offence he was insane. He is to prove clearly that at the time of committing the offence he was labouring under such a defect of reason and disease of mind that he did not know the nature and quality of his act or that he was doing what was wrong. When an accused person relies on S. 84, I.P.C., to escape the legal consequences of his act, the onus is on him to prove that he was at the time when he committed the act, he was incapable of knowing its nature that it was wrong by reason of unsoundness of mind. That onus may be discharged by producing evidence as to his conduct at the time or immediately after the act and also by evidence of his mental conditions, his family history, etc., 9 Lah. 371.

See 7 W.R. (Cr.) 42 where the High Court acquitted an accused who was convicted by the Sessions Court on the ground of insanity and directed him to be kept in safe custody pending orders of the Local Government. See also 32 M.L.J. 72=30 M.L.T. 74=1922 M.W.N. 10=23 Cr. L.J. 71=65 Ind. Cas. 423.

471. (1) Whenever the finding states that the accused person committed the act alleged, the Magistrate or Court before whom or which the trial has been held, shall, if such act would, but for the incapacity found, have constituted an offence, order such person to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as the Magistrate or Person acquitted on such ground to be detained in safe custody.

Court thinks fit, and shall report the action taken to the Local Government :

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Local Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.

- (2) The Local Government may empower the officer in charge of the jail in which a person is confined under the provisions of section 466, or this section to discharge all or any of the functions of the Inspector General of Prisons under section 473 or section 474.

Power of Local Government to relieve Inspector General of certain function

This section as amended by Act X of 1914 no longer requires the case to be reported to the Local Government. The Court can itself issue a direction for the detention of the person in a lunatic asylum or, if there is no accommodation in it, in jail or some other place of safe custody in British India, 21 Cr. L. J. 46=54 Ind. Cas. 754. 'Detained in safe custody' does not mean having regard to the language used in S. 475, infra, detained in the custody of friends and relations and that is quite clear, 55 C. 208.

The intention of the Legislature in amending this section was that in a case where it has been found that an offence has been committed by a lunatic, that the Court should confine itself to make an order that he should be kept in safe custody in such place and manner as the Court thinks fit. After that, it is for the Local Government under its powers to decide what should be done with the lunatic prisoner, 25 Bom. L. R. 286=26 Cr. L. J. 348=84 Ind. Cas. 652; 58 C. 208. This section does not compel the Court to send the accused to a lunatic asylum. All that is necessary to see is that such safe-guards are taken as would keep him from mischief. When the lower Court failed to pass an order when acquitting the accused, the High Court in revision can pass the necessary orders, 42 M. L. J. 72=30 M. L. T. 74=1922 M. W. N. 10=23 Cr. L. J. 71=65 Ind. Cas. 423. He may therefore be ordered to be kept under the control of his parents, 23 Cr. L. J. 71=65 Ind. Cas. 423. When a criminal lunatic is acquitted, the Court can order under this section that he be detained in custody in the jail where he then is until further orders of the Government to whom the case is to be reported, 43 B. 134. The High Court will not set aside an acquittal by a Jury on the ground of unsoundness of mind of the accused in the absence of the very clearest proof that the Jury were mistaken, 19 W. R. (Cr.) 43.

472. Repealed by Act IV of 1912, S. 101 and Sch. II (The Indian Lunacy Act).

473. If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466, and in the case of a person detained in a jail, the Inspector General of Prisons, or, in the case of a person detained in a lunatic asylum, the visitors of such asylum or any two of them shall certify, that, in his or their opinion, such person is capable of making his defence, he shall be taken before the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, at such time as the Magistrate or Court appoints, and the Magistrate or Court shall deal with such person under the provisions of section 468 ; and the certificate of such Inspector General or visitors as aforesaid shall be receivable as evidence.

Procedure where lunatic prisoner is reported capable of making his defence

474. (1) If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466 or section 471, and such Inspector-General or visitors shall certify that, in his or their judgment, he may be released without danger of his doing injury to himself or to any other person, the Local Government may thereupon order him to be released, or to be detained in custody, or to be transferred to a public lunatic asylum if he has not been already sent to such an asylum ; and, in case it orders him to be transferred to an asylum, may appoint a Commission, consisting of a judicial and two medical officers.

(2) Such Commission shall make formal inquiry into the state of mind of such person, taking such evidence as is necessary, and shall report to the Local Government, which may order his release or detention as it thinks fit.

475. (1) Whenever any relative or friend of any person detained under the provisions of section 466 or section 471 desires that he shall be delivered to his care and custody, the Local Government may, upon the application of such relative or friend and on his giving security to the satisfaction of such Local Government that the person delivered shall—

(a) be properly taken care of and prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and

(b) be produced for the inspection of such officer, and at such times and places, as the Local Government may direct, and

(c) In the case of a person detained under section 466, be produced when required before such Magistrate or Court, order such person to be delivered to such relative or friend.

(2) If the person so delivered is accused of any offence the trial of which has been postponed by reason of his being of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, and the inspecting officer referred to in sub-section (1), clause (b), certifies at any time to the Magistrate or Court that such person is capable of making his defence, such Magistrate or Court shall call upon the relative or friend to whom such accused was delivered to produce him before the Magistrate or Court ; and, upon such production, the Magistrate or Court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 468, and the certificate of the inspecting officer shall be receivable as evidence.

This section has been redrafted and sub-section (1) (c) and sub-section (2) are new.

* Detained in custody * within S. 471 does not mean detained in the custody of friends or relations and a Judge has no power to direct a lunatic accused acquitted by him by reason of insanity to be kept in the safe custody of his relatives on their furnishing proper security. It is the Local Government alone who can make such an order under this section when relatives or friends of the accused apply to them on that behalf, 58 C. 203.

CHAPTER XXXV.

PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AFFECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

476. (1) When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in section 195, sub-section (1), clause (b) or clause (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate or if the alleged offence is non-bailable may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate.

*Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint.

For the purposes of this sub-section, a [Chief]† Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the first class.

(2) Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law and as if upon complaint made under section 200.

(3) Where it is brought to the notice of such Magistrate, or of any other Magistrate to whom the case may have been transferred, that an appeal is pending against the decision arrived at in the judicial proceeding out of which the matter has arisen, he may, if he thinks fit, at any stage adjourn the hearing of the case until such appeal is decided.

Amendment — This section is practically new. The Court may act on its own motion when it is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice to do so. The alleged offence must fall within the offences mentioned in S. 195(1) (b) or (c) and a finding is to be recorded to that effect and then a complaint in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court is to be forwarded not to the nearest Magistrate of the first class as before but to the first class Magistrate having jurisdiction in the matter. By Act II of 1926, S. 6, it is now enacted that a Presidency Magistrate is to be deemed a first-class Magistrate and not a Chief Presidency Magistrate as it stood before, for purposes of this section. By this new amendment a Chief Presidency Magistrate who was not competent to take action under this section as the law stood before the amendment is now empowered to take action and thus a real omission has been supplied. Even before the amendment it was held in 53 C. 350 (F.B.) that when the Chief Presidency Magistrate made a complaint to himself and transferred it to another Presidency Magistrate for disposal and the latter committed the case to the High Court Sessions the procedure was substantially correct and the technical error did not go to the root of the case. Power is also given by enacting sub-section (3) to adjourn the trial of the case pending the disposal of an appeal from the original decision out of which proceedings under this section were initiated. Ss. 476A and 476B have been newly added providing for appeals and giving power to superior Court to make a complaint. The new proviso added to sub-section (1) by Act II of 1925 removes the inconvenience felt by the High Court in having the complaint of Court signed by the presiding Judge; now such complaints can be signed by such officer as the Court may appoint.

* This proviso was added by Act II of 1926, S. 6.

† Omitted by Act II of 1926, S. 6.

Scope and object of the section.—The combined effect of this section and S. 195 (1) supra, as amended by Act XVIII of 1923 is to substitute the Complaint of Court for the sanction in respect of prosecutions for offences indicated in the latter section. The recent decided cases are in favour of the view that it makes no difference whether the offender is a party to the proceeding or not. In relation to documents alleged to be forged which is produced or given in evidence in any proceeding before any Court the law requires that unless the Court lodges the complaint in the proper criminal Court, the latter is incompetent to take cognizance of it. The absence of the complaint by Court in writing as required by this section is an illegality which vitiates the proceedings, 28 Cr. L.J. 388=100 Ind. Cas. 1044. The law requires that when certain classes of offences are committed no Court shall take cognizance of such offences unless the Court before whom or in relation to the proceedings before it, such offences have been committed moves for the purpose and removes the legal bar to the prosecution. The Court should apply its mind to the matter and decide what offences are committed and who had committed them and then lay a complaint of Court before the proper criminal Court, 28 Cr. L.J. 843=104 Ind. Cas. 456. Before a Court makes an order under this section it ought to have before it direct evidence fixing the offence upon the person sought to be proceeded against. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the earlier case may induce some kind of suspicion about his guilt. Nature of proof required to establish a case of forgery in a civil Court is very different from that required in a criminal Court to secure a conviction, 30 Cr. L.J. 407=115 Ind. Cas. 174 where 16 C. 730 and 15 Cr. L.J. 33=22 Ind. Cas. 177 are followed. The object of the Legislature in enacting this and S. 476A and S. 476B supra was to sweep away the cloud of rulings which threatened to smother the original enactment and to lay down a simplified procedure on the lines of the existing procedure as to complaints, 30 Cr. L.J. 545=115 Ind. Cas. 832. Under this section as amended it is not essential that the proceedings in respect of which action is taken should be of a judicial character, 26 Cr. L.J. 170 at 173=83 Ind. Cas. 730. This section has no application to offences not mentioned in S. 195, supra, 39 C.L.J. 33. A Court cannot direct an inquiry into an offence under S. 161, I.P.C. as that section is not mentioned in S. 195, supra, 17 Cr. L.J. 388=35 Ind. Cas. 820. Moreover the jurisdiction to make a complaint of Court under this section is limited only to offences mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b) and (c) and not to offences mentioned in S. 195 (1) (a), 2 Luck. 395. The recent amendment to this section and S. 195 supra, have resulted in connecting the two sections more closely together and they must be read together, 2 Ran. 374, following 15 M. 224; 18 M.L.T. 433; 14 Bom. L.R. 968; 18 B. 581 and 22 C. 1004. The expression "Court" occurring in S. 195 supra, is of wider scope than the expression "Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court" occurring in this section, 4 Pat. 24; 43 A. 60. This section lays down the procedure to be adopted in cases falling under S. 195 (1) (b) and (c), viz., offences relating to public justice and offences relating to documents produced or given in evidence in proceedings before Civil, Revenue or Criminal Courts and not to S. 195 (1) (a) dealing with contempts of lawful authority of public servants. The Court may act suo motu or may do so on the application made to it in this behalf. The offence must appear to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding (not merely judicial proceeding as before) in any Court and the Court must be satisfied that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into the case. The Court after recording a finding may make a complaint in writing signed by the presiding officer and forward the same to a First-class Magistrate having jurisdiction. In the presidency town the Chief Presidency Magistrate was deemed to be a First class Magistrate, but curiously enough no provision was made when an offence is alleged to be committed before the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Now by the new amendment, viz., S. 6 of Act II of 1926 this omission has been rectified by omitting the word 'Chief.' The Court may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate and in non-bailable offences send the accused in custody and may bind over persons to give evidence before the Magistrate. To avoid inconvenience, the presiding officer need not appear before a Magistrate to give a sworn statement and on receipt of a complaint the Magistrate shall proceed according to law as if on complaint made under S. 200, supra. When a Court has taken cognizance of the offence of perjury on a sanction granted, before the amended Code came into force but has not completed the trial before the amended Code which abolished sanctions the trial can go on without a fresh complaint of Court under this section, 49 M.L.J. 276=22 L.W. 654=1925 M.W.N. 666. Once a Court is properly seized of a case any subsequent amendment of law except one which takes away its jurisdiction to try the offence cannot affect the Court's authority to proceed with the trial. The consequence of an amendment of procedure is not that all matters properly begun under the old procedure collapse and have to be begun again under the new procedure, but that they should be continued under the new procedure from time to time when the new procedure came into force. If this was the intention of the Legislature it would have said so. Ibid p. 278. The law does not compel a detailed inquiry. The grant of a right of appeal under S. 476B has not conferred any new right upon the accused and the extent of the preliminary inquiry is still left to the discretion of the Court, 3 Pat 494. It is not obligatory on a Court to wait till the termination of the proceedings in Court in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed to start proceedings under this section, 27 Cr. L.J. 1249=98 Ind. Cas. 87, but the proper time to take action, say, against a witness for perjury will be at the time of pronouncing the judgment in the main case. Any action taken in the course of the trial is bound to strike terror in the heart of the other witnesses especially defence witnesses and they would be most unwilling to give evidence, and this would be prejudicial to the accused, 29 Cr. L.J. 40=106 Ind. Cas. 456. Proceedings under this section when they relate to the merits of the statement made by witnesses in Court; if started before the close of the trial, are calculated to seriously affect the case of the party who calls them, as such action is bound to frighten the remaining witnesses who must assume it as an indication of the treatment they themselves are likely to receive if they make similar statement in Court, 30 Cr. L.J. 129=113 Ind. Cas. 321, following, 29 C.W.N. 316=26 Cr. L.J. 1249=98 Ind. Cas. 993. Action should not be taken before all the prosecution witnesses are cross-examined and without giving the accused an opportunity to show the falsity of the prosecution evidence and such action is obviously premature, 1912 M.W.N. 400=11 M.L.T. 191=13 Cr. L.J. 141=13 Ind. Cas. 532. Where an offence is committed before a Judge and he is transferred, his successor can validly take action under this section. It is clear whether the Judge or presiding officer is the same or a different person, the Court remains the same, and it is the Court that is to make the complaint, 29 Cr. L.J. 123=112 Ind. Cas. 336.

Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court.—The term "Court" used in this and S. 195 has a wider meaning than Court of justice as defined in the I.P.C., and it includes a tribunal entitled to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence thereof, 45 C. 585. The Court entitled to take action under this section, viz., to make a complaint of Court, is the Court, which disposed of the case and not the Court where the complaint was originally filed, 53 C. 433, where 6 C.W.N. 33 and 3 C.W.N. 33 is followed. Generally there is not much difficulty as to what is a Civil or Criminal Court. But the difficulty arises in finding out whether a Revenue officer acting under this section is a Court. In 24 M. 121 it was held, that a Tahsildar when holding an inquiry as to whether transfer of the names in a land register should be made or not, is a revenue Court, because he was authorised under Madras Act III of 1862 to receive evidence and decide the question of transfer and was therefore a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence on that matter in order to enable him to arrive at a determination, 23 M.L.J. 123=(1915) M.W.N. 177=2 L.W. 189=16 Cr. L.J. 231=23 Ind. Cas. 97, See 17 C. 872; 45 C. 338 and 585. A Magistrate holding an inquiry under S. 23 of the Legal Practitioner's Act is a Court, 9 A.L.J. 158=13 Cr. L.J. 190=13 Ind. Cas. 1039. Where the Collector was acting as a Revenue Court and was exercising judicial powers in setting aside the order of a Deputy Collector, he was subject to the superintendence of the High Court and his order was reversible under S. 115, C.P.C., and also under S. 107 of the Government of India Act and the High Court set aside the order directing the institution of criminal proceedings, 26 Cr. L.J. 1565=90 Ind. Cas. 445. A High Court while exercising its revision under the Code can take action under this section and lay a complaint of Court, powers of 3 Ran. 303 (F.B.). Where a Sessions Judge in the course of a Sessions trial makes an inquiry into the conduct of the Jury as to which exception was taken and records evidence, the Judge is entitled to make a complaint of Court under this section in respect of false evidence given in the inquiry before the Judge, which is certainly a judicial inquiry, 54 C. 279. See sub-section (2) of S. 193 as to what are included in the term "Court." "Court" in this section includes the successor of the Judge before whom the alleged offence was alleged to have been committed, 4 Lah. 53; 37 C. 642; 34 A. 393; 3 Ran. 49; 15 C.W.N. 691; 32 B. 184; 29 M. 331; 22 A.L.J. 772; 12 A.L.J. 1003=16 Cr. L.J. 97=27 Ind. Cas. 141; 15 C.W.N. 691=14 C.L.J. 123=12 Cr. L.J. 209=10 Ind. Cas. 66; 27 Cr. L.J. 527=93 Ind. Cas. 991; 30 Cr. L.J. 882=117 Ind. Cas. 906. The Court contemplated herein is the Court before which the offence is alleged to have been committed. The fact that a particular District is taken out of the jurisdiction of a particular Sessions division and constituted a new Sessions division, will not give the new Sessions Court power to make a complaint of Court relating to an offence alleged to have been committed before the Judge of the original Sessions division, and the new Sessions Judge cannot be regarded as the successor of the original Sessions Judge, 29 Bom. L.R. 1296=28 Cr. L.J. 49=99 Ind. Cas. 81. When a suit is tried by a Judge of the High Court, the term "Court" occurring in the section must be taken to mean the High Court. Any Judge of the High Court has therefore power to hear and dispose of an application under this section whether the matter out of which the application arises was heard by him or some other Judge. No doubt as a matter of convenience that would seldom be done, but where the Judge has ceased to hold office there is nothing in the language of the section to prevent any Judge from disposing of the matter. The result of the amendment of the Code has robbed decisions upon the terms of the former Code, of much of their significance, 49 B. 710 where 33 C. 193; 34 C. 551; 37 C. 642 are referred to, 49 A. 60. The word "Court" includes a Court in which a deposit is made under S. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and such a Court is entitled under this section to make a complaint in writing with respect of a document filed with such an application, 4 Pat. 25. A District Registrar, is not a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court under this section. 2 Pat. 459. It cannot be suggested that Election Commissioners were either Civil or Criminal Court. Their function was obviously not that of either of such Courts. Election Commissioners were of opinion that they were a Civil Court and relied on the definition of 'Court' in S. 3 of the Indian Evidence Act, but S. 6 of Act XXXIX of 1920 (Election Offences Inquiries Act) makes the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act applicable subject to the provisions of the former Act. Even if the Election Commissioners are legally entitled to take evidence that would make them a Court and not a civil Court. The Election Commissioners have not the powers of a civil Court and their power is restricted to matters in S. 5 of Act XXXIX of 1920 which makes no mention of this section but refers to Ss. 480 and 482 of the Code. Election Commissioners are not a civil Court and therefore had no power to take action under this section, but the High Court entertained an appeal from the order and setting aside the order made under this section, maintained it as a 'complaint' under S. 190 supra, 47 A. 934 where 47 A. 813; 45 C. 585; 32 C. 1; 36 M. 72; 43 C. 926; 24 C. L. J. 235 are referred to.

Whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise.—These words have been newly added enabling a party to move the Court to take action under this section by making a complaint in writing against a person. The complaint required by this section must be a formal complaint as defined in S. 4 (1) (h) supra, and when it does not comply with the provisions of that section, the proceedings are liable to be quashed, 26 Cr. L. J. 1459 = 89 Ind. Cas. 1027. This section provides that the complaint may be made by a Court, either "on application or otherwise." Therefore it is immaterial whether an applicant was a party to the original proceedings in Court. There is no reason to refuse to take action, because the person applying is not a party but only brings facts to the notice of the Court, if it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into the offence. So a complaint in respect of a forged document may be made by the court under this section even though moved to do so by a person not a party to the proceeding in which the document was used, 8 Pat. 736 at 739. The fact whether a private party moves the Court or the Court takes action suo motu is important for purposes of appeal. In 30 Cr. L. J. 163 = 113 Ind. Cas. 537, it was held that no appeal lay when the Court acts suo motu under this section. Action can be taken under this section by the Court and a person can be called upon to show cause even though previous proceedings under this section had been dismissed for non-prosecution by a party, 8 Pat. 376.

Expedient in the interests of justice.—These words are new and the sole consideration is whether the ends of justice require the initiation of proceedings against a certain person. Prosecution for offences against public justice should be allowed primarily in the interests of public justice, 37 C. 13 at 20; [1919] Pat. 286; 20 Cr. L. J. 337 = 50 Ind. Cas. 817. The Court is bound to satisfy itself that the interests of justice require a prosecution, 10 M. L. T. 117; 1 C. W. N. 400; see also 26 M. 116; 4 L. W. 616; 39 M. 677. There is no use of passing an order under this section unless there is a reasonable probability of a conviction, 24 Cr. L. J. 823 = 74 Ind. Cas. 855; 28 Cr. L. J. 1007 = 105 Ind. Cas. 831. It is absolutely essential to the validity of an order under this section that the Court which passes the order should apply its mind to the matter upon its merits and when this essential condition is wanting, the order cannot be sustained. Where in a case, a Sessions Judge passed the following order: "the accused want to be let off but as Mr. Justice Walsh has ordered me to prosecute them, I cannot help them. I therefore order their prosecution," it was set aside by the High Court as unsustainable, 26 Cr. L. J. 18 = 83 Ind. Cas. 498. A complaint of Court is not to be filed merely because there is a contradiction in the evidence of the witness but only when it is in the interests of justice, 30 Cr. L. J. 221 = 113 Ind. Cas. 842. It is not customary to prosecute persons under this section in mere matters of oath against oath; which may be a question of public policy rather than a question of law. It would be manifestly absurd at the end of most criminal trials to send all the alibi witnesses up for trial under this section, 39 M. L. T. 414 = 26 L. W. 479 = 28 Cr. L. J. 1007 (1) = 105 Ind. Cas. 831 (1). If a false statement made is clearly immaterial and nothing hinges on it, then the case is not a fit one for making a complaint of Court to prosecute the witness, 28 Cr. L. J. 310 = 100 Ind. Cas. 534. Prosecution should not be started when it is bound to fail, 28 Cr. L. J. 293 = 100 Ind. Cas. 373; provided that the Court is satisfied that a complaint of Court should be filed in the interests of justice, the mere fact that the parties in the appellate Court had agreed to compromise the matter or decided to refer it to arbitration cannot take away the jurisdiction of the Court if the offence alleged to have been committed falls under S. 195 (1) (b) or (c) supra, 43 A. 792.

Inquiry into an offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (b) or (c).—Before the amendment, the words were "into an offence referred to in S. 195" and there was a good deal of conflict between the various High Courts as to the interpretation of these words, viz., whether they were words of description or limitation. The amendment is in accordance with the Full Bench decision in 42 M. 540, which following the decisions in 40 M. 100 and 45 M. 224, held that the qualifying circumstances mentioned in S. 195, supra, are included in the reference to S. 195. See 2 Ran. 374; 6 Lah. 34; 3 Ran. 48, 23 C. W. N. 830. In this connection the decisions in 40 A. 116 and 24; 1 Pat. L. J. 293; [1918] Pat. 352; 20 Cr. L. J. 267=49 Ind. Cas. 650; 20 Cr. L. J. 630=52 Ind. Cas. 390, 18 B. 531; 14 Bom. L.R. 968; 32 M. 49 at 87 are no longer law. The jurisdiction to make a complaint of Court is limited only to such cases as are provided for in sub-section (1) (b) or (1) (c) of S. 195, supra. This section does not authorise a complaint of Court being filed with regard to offences described in sub-section (1) (a) of S. 195, supra, committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court, 2 Luck. 393. There is a distinction between the procedure to be adopted under S. 195 (1) (a) and under S. 195 (1) (b) and (c). In cases falling under the former the officer is in the position of a public servant. He exercises no quasi judicial function of any kind. In cases falling under the latter he is the presiding officer of a Court exercising judicial or quasi judicial functions and it is only in such cases action can be taken under this section and a complaint of Court filed, 2 Luck. 646. It seems clear that this section must be read with S. 195, supra, and the Legislature did not intend that Courts should exercise powers with regard to offences mentioned in S. 195 (1) (c) unless committed by parties to the proceedings in such Court. No doubt this view is attended with inconvenient consequences. It is obviously desirable that persons who abetted the offence not parties to the proceedings in Court should also be tried. It is undesirable that Courts should have power to initiate proceedings against parties before it and not against abettors. The question of the prosecution of the abettors should not be left to the public spirit or to the opponent in the suit or some other member of the public. This section is confined to parties alone but a Magistrate who receives information as to abettors may act under S. 190 (1) (c) if so empowered and then transfer the case to some other Magistrate subordinate to him, 26 A. L. J. 46; 28 Cr. L. J. 978=105 Ind. Cas. 802, 23 Cr. L. J. 31=64 Ind. Cas. 511. The question whether it was permissible to proceed against a person for offences which did not require a complaint of Court while other offences alleged to have been committed by him required a complaint of Court was left undecided in 56 C. 1041. In cases falling under S. 195 (1) (a) action by Court under this section is ultra vires and without jurisdiction, 2 Luck. 393. The Court has jurisdiction to act only with regard to offences mentioned in S. 195. It has therefore no jurisdiction to take action for an offence under S. 409, I.P.C., 1 Luck. 527. S. 195, supra, is a restrictive section and there is nothing in that or this section to prevent a Court from making a complaint under the ordinary law in respect of an offence under S. 471, I.P.C., which it finds to have been committed before it, 26 Cr. L. J. 1506=50 Ind. Cas. 290. The Court has jurisdiction to act under this section where a forgery is committed in respect of proceedings in Court whether the person proceeded against was a party or not, 28 Cr. L. J. 305=100 Ind. Cas. 259. There is nothing in law to prevent the trial of an abettor of an offence by a party to a proceeding in Court without a complaint of Court under this section, 30 Cr. L. J. 485=115 Ind. Cas. 529; following, 32 A. 74; 15 C.W.N. 565=12 Cr. L. J. 101=9 Ind. Cas. 577 and 29 Cr. L. J. 632=110 Ind. Cas. 108. No action should be taken when the circumstances against the person sought to be proceeded against do not amount to more than mere suspicion 29 Cr. L. J. 534=109 Ind. Cas. 358; 30 Cr. L. J. 407=115 Ind. Cas. 174

Committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court—Before the amendment the words were “committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding.” The various restrictions which existed before, have now been removed. The alleged offence need not be committed before it and it need not be in the course of a judicial proceeding. The words ‘in relation to’ are sufficiently wide to cover a case where the offence was actually committed before the proceedings are begun in the complaining Court. Where a person prefers a false charge to the police, he commits an offence in relation to the proceedings in the Sessions Court to which the accused is subsequently committed for trial and therefore the Sessions Court is competent to take action under this section. If two offences are even remotely connected by the relationship of cause and effect, then the first may be said to be committed in relation to the second. The institution of the false charge to the police may be considered as the cause of the proceedings before the Sessions Court and the false case instituted before the police was in relation to the proceedings in the Sessions Court, 28 Cr. L. J. 324=100 Ind. Cas. 708 where 5 Pat. 33 is followed. When a person who is alleged to have preferred a false charge to the police, has also taken the same facts by way of a complaint to a Magistrate, a complaint of Court under this section is necessary before he can be prosecuted under S. 211, I.P.C., for preferring the false charge. It would be a most extraordinary result if while the Magistrate was still engaged in trying a complaint and possibly inclined to believe the same, the complainant could himself be put into the dock in another proceeding on the allegation that he had preferred a false charge with regard to the same occurrence to the police, 53 M.L.J. 435=1927 M.W.N. 694=39 M.L.T. 103=26 L.W. 405=28 Cr. L.J. 849=104 Ind. Cas. 625, following 43 C. 1152 and 7 M. 292. A proceeding under this section need not necessarily be one between two parties actually cited to appear before the Court, but includes proceedings, say, under the Guardian and Wards Act for the appointment of a guardian to a minor, 28 Cr.L.J. 388=100 Ind. Cas. 1044. There was a conflict of opinion as to the appropriate time for taking action under this section. When action was taken after the termination of the judicial proceedings before the Court, it was held that the Magistrate or Court acted without jurisdiction as action under this section should be taken at or immediately after the termination of the proceedings, before the matter has left the ken of the Court, 31 M. 140; 32 M. 49; 42 M. 422; 34 C. 851; 40 C. 444, Weir II, 597; 6 M. L. T. 92, but the Bombay High Court took a different view in 32 B. 184, and even in Madras the Judges were not unanimous, Meller, J., dissented from the majority view in 31 M. 140, and later on, a Bench of the Madras High Court questioned the correctness of the view expressed and referred the matter to another Full Bench. See 42 M. 422 and 22 L.W. 863=27 Cr. L.J. 230=92 Ind. Cas. 456. All this difficulty has been got over by the amendment. See fuller discussion at p. 850. Even where an offence is committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court but the offence falls under S. 195 (1) (a) supra, there is no jurisdiction to act under this section by making a complaint of Court, 2 Luck 395. The words "committed in or in relation to any proceeding before that Court" occur in S. 195 (1) (b). Proceedings after an ex-parte decree is set aside must be regarded as continuation of the trial which ended in the ex-parte decree and it is therefore competent to the Court at the time of the final disposal of the suit to proceed against a witness under this section who gave evidence before the passing of the ex-parte decree, for offences under Ss. 193 and 196, I.P.C., 48 L.W. 133=25 Cr.L.J. 731=81 Ind. Cas. 219. Under O. XX, r. 20, C.P.C., it is the duty of the Court which decided a case to give a copy of the judgment on application made to it. The proceedings arising out of the application to obtain a certified copy is therefore proceedings before the Court. The Court can delegate its powers and the official to which such functions are delegated really exercises them on behalf of the Court and acts as its ministerial officer. He is the custodian of the records of the Court on its behalf and therefore the application made to that official must also be deemed to have been made to the Court and any offence alleged to have been committed in regard to such an application is an offence committed in connection with proceedings in Court and a complaint of Court is necessary before initiating a prosecution, 29 Cr. L.J. 1028=112 Ind. Cas. 356. An order under this section can be passed on the basis of the evidence recorded under S. 202 2) supra, 45 A. 58; 24 Cr. L.J. 862=74 Ind. Cas. 1034. Under the amended section it is not necessary that proceedings in Court be judicial and the fact that no action could be taken before the amendment of the section and proceedings taken before was so dropped without any inquiry will not preclude action being taken afterwards, 26 Cr. L.J. 170=83 Ind. Cas. 730.

After such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary.—Preliminary inquiry is only optional with the Court, 18 Bom. L.R. 284. It may not be necessary to hold a preliminary inquiry. The language of the section is 'such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary'. If the Court can come to a finding on any materials which are before it, e.g., statements to the police under S. 162, supra, made to them in the course of their investigation of an alleged offence, other than the particular offence which is under consideration in the proceedings under this section, they can be used by the Court in arriving at a finding, 5 Ran. 26. Although the holding of a preliminary inquiry is discretionary yet when such an inquiry is held whether formal or informal, the Court should carry the investigation to completion so that the person affected may have a full opportunity of showing cause against his prosecution, 21 Cr. L.J. 718=58 Ind. Cas. 62. See also 21 Cr. L.J.
